

---

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

<https://books.google.com>

11473.34 (10-11)

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

FROM THE
Subscription Fund
BEGUN IN 1858

RECEIVED
MAY 21 1964

The Right Plesaunt and Goodly Historie
of
The Foure Sonnes of Amon.

---

Early English Text Society.

Extra Series. Nos. XLIV, XLV.

1884, 1885.

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie
of
The Foure Sonnes of Amon.

---

Early English Text Society.

Extra Series. Nos. XLIV, XLV.

1884, 1885.

BERLIN: ASHER & CO., 5, UNTER DEN LINDEN.
NEW YORK: C. SCRIBNER & CO.; LEYPOLDT & HOLT.
PHILADELPHIA: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.

617
42-14
11-2

THE
ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

---

PARTS X, XI.

---

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie
of the
Four Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISH FROM THE FRENCH BY
WILLIAM CAXTON,
AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1489.

EDITED FROM
THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER, with an Introduction,
BY OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY
BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCCLXXXV.

Subscription Fund

Extra Series,
XLIV, XLV.

---

R. CLAY AND SONS, CHAUCER PRESS, BUNGAY

Early English Text Society.

---

THE Eng. Lit. 1527

ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

---

PART X.

---

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie

of the Five Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISHT FROM THE FRENCH BY

WILLIAM CAXTON,

AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1480.

EDITED FROM THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE

POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER,

BY

OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

PART I.

LONDON:

PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY

BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCCLXXXIV.

Price Fifteen Shillings.

Digitized by Google

Subscription Index

Extra Series,
XLIV, XLV.

---

R. CLAY AND SONS, CHAUCER PRESS, BUNGAY

Early English Text Society.

---

THE Eng. lit. 1527
ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

---

PART X.

---

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie
of the Four Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISH FROM THE FRENCH BY
WILLIAM CAXTON,
AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1489.

EDITED FROM THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER,

BY
OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

PART I.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY
BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCLXXXIV.

Price Fifteen Shillings.

Digitized by Google

Early English Text Society.

Committee of Management :

Director : DR. FREDERICK J. FURNIVALL, M.A.

Treasurer : HENRY B. WHEATLEY, Esq.

Hon. Sec. : W. A. DALZIEL, Esq., 67 VICTORIA ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, N.

Hon. Sec. for America : PROF. F. J. CHILD, Harvard Coll., Cambr., Mass., U.S.A.

J. MEADOWS COWPER, Esq.	REV. DR. RICHARD MORRIS.
ALEXANDER J. ELLIS, B.A., F.R.S.	DR. J. A. H. MURRAY.
H. HUCKS GIBBS, M.A.	EDWARD B. PEACOCK, Esq.
S. J. HERRTAGE, B.A.	REV. PROF. WALTER W. SKEAT, LL.D.
S. L. LEE, B.A.	HENRY SWEET, M.A.
REV. PROF. J. RAWSON LUMBY, D.D.	DR. W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A.
REV. PROF. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A.	PROF. J. ZUPITZA, Ph. D.

(With power to add Workers to their number.)

Bankers : THE UNION BANK OF LONDON, 2, PRINCES STREET, E.C.

The Publications for 1866 (except Nos. 19, 20, and 21) are out of print. Subscribers who desire the issue for 1866 should send their guineas at once to the Hon. Secretary, in order that other Texts for 1866 may be sent to press.

The Publications for 1864 (21s.) are :—

1. Early English Alliterative Poems, ab. 1360 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 16s.
2. Arthur, ab. 1410, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A. 4s.
3. Lauder on the Dewtie of Kyngis, &c., 1556, ed. F. Hall, D.C.L. 4s.
4. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight, ab. 1360, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 10s.

The Publications for 1865 (21s.) are :—

5. Hume's Orthographie and Congruitie of Britan Tongue, ab. 1617, ed. H. B. Wheatley. 4s.
6. Lancelot of the Laik, ab. 1500, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat. 8s.
7. Genesis & Exodus, ab. 1250, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 8s.
8. Morte Arthur, ab. 1440, ed. E. Brock. 7s.
9. Thynne on Speght's ed. of Chaucer, A.D. 1599, ed. Dr. Kingsley and F. J. Furnivall. 10s.
10. Merlin, ab. 1440, Part I., ed. H. B. Wheatley. 2s. 6d.
11. Lyndesay's Monarchie, &c., 1552, Part I., ed. J. Small, M.A. 3s.
12. Wright's Chaaste Wife, ab. 1462, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A. 1s.

The Publications for 1866 (two guineas), out of print (except 19, 20 and 21), are :—

13. Seinte Marherete, 1200-1330, ed. Rev. O. Cockayne.
14. Kyng Horn, Floris and Blanchefour, &c., ed. Rev. J. R. Lumby, B.D.
15. Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. F. J. Furnivall.
16. The Book of Quinte Essence, ab. 1460-70, ed. F. J. Furnivall.
17. Parallel Extracts from 45 MSS. of Piers the Plowman, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat. 1s.
18. Hali Meidenhad, ab. 1200, ed. Rev. O. Cockayne.
19. Lyndesay's Monarchie, &c., Part II., ed. J. Small, M.A. 3s. 6d.
20. Hampole's English Prose Treatises, ed. Rev. G. G. Perry. 1s.
21. Merlin, Part II., ed. H. B. Wheatley. 4s.
22. Partenay or Lusignen, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.
23. Dan Michel's Aysenbite of Inwyt, 1340, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 10s. 6d.

The Publications for 1867 (one guinea, less No. 24, 26, out of print) are :—

24. Hymns to the Virgin and Christ : the Parliament of Devils, &c., ab. 1430, ed. F. J. Furnivall. 3s.
25. The Stations of Rome, the Pilgrims' Sea-voyage, with Clene Maydenhod, ed. F. J. Furnivall. 1s.
26. Religious Pieces in Prose and Verse, from R. Thornton's MS. (ab. 1440), ed. Rev. G. G. Perry. 2s.
27. Levine's Manipulus Vocabulorum, a ryming Dictionary, 1570, ed. H. B. Wheatley. 12s.
28. William's Vision of Piers the Plowman, 1362 A.D.; Text A, Part I., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat. 6s.
29. Early English Homilies (ab. 1220-30 A.D.). Part I. Edited by Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 7s.
30. Pierce the Ploughmans Crede, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat. 2s.

The Publications for 1868 (one guinea) are :—

31. Myrc's Duties of a Parish Priest, in Verse, ab. 1420 A.D., ed. E. Peacock. 4s.
32. Early English Meals and Manners : the Boke of Nourture of John Russell, the Bokes of Keruyng, Curtause, and Demeonor, the Babees Book, Urbanitatis, &c., ed. F. J. Furnivall. 12s.
33. The Knight de la Tour Landry, ab. 1440 A.D., A Book for Daughters, ed. T. Wright, M.A. 8s.
34. Early English Homilies (before 1300 A.D.). Part II., ed. R. Morris, LL.D. 8s.
35. Lyndesay's Works, Part III. : The Historie and Testament of Squyer Meldrum, ed. P. Hall. 2s.

The Publications for 1869 (one guinea) are :—

36. Merlin, Part III. Ed. H. B. Wheatley. On Arthurian Localities, by J. S. Stuart Glennie. 12s.
37. Sir David Lyndesay's Works, Part IV., Ane Satyre of the Three Estais. Ed. F. Hall, D.C.L. 4s.
38. William's Vision of Piers the Plowman, Part II. Text B. Ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 10s. 6d.
39. Alliterative Romance of the Destruction of Troy. Ed. D. Donaldson and G. A. Panton. Part I. 10s. 6d.

The Publications for 1870 (one guinea) are :—

40. English Gilds, their Statutes and Customs, 1380 A.D. Edit. Toulmin Smith and Lucy T. Smith, with an Essay on Gilds and Trades-Unions, by Dr. L. Brentano. 21s.
41. William Lauder's Minor Poems. Ed. F. J. Furnivall. 3s.
42. Bernardus De Cura Rei Familiaris, Early Scottish Prophecies, &c., Ed. J. R. Lumby, M.A. 2s.
43. Ratis Raving, and other Moral and Religious Pieces. Ed. J. R. Lumby, M.A. 3s.

THE
ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

M-422

PART X.

The Eight Pleasant and Goodly Historie
of the Goune Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISHT FROM THE FRENCH BY
WILLIAM CAXTON,
AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1489.

EDITED FROM THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER,

BY
OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

PART I.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY
BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCLXXXIV.

~~Eng. Ret. 1522~~

11473.34

1885, Nov. 5;

Subscription Fund

Extra Series.

XI.IV.

---

R. CLAY AND SONS, CHAUCER PRESS, BUNGAY.

INTRODUCTION.

CAXTON'S "right pleasant and goodly historie of the Four Sons of Aymon" is english from the French prose romance "Les Quatre Filz Aymon," which is a rendering more or less free of an ancient chanson de geste bearing the same name, though more often entitled "Renaud de Montauban." The earliest extant text of the chanson is a remaniment of the end of the 12th century.<sup>1</sup>

The conversion of the poem into prose was not accomplished before the close of the 14th century. None of the prose manuscripts are earlier than the 15th century. Of them the British Museum has three MSS., all in writing of the 15th century. In one,<sup>2</sup> a large vellum folio, about 1445 A.D., the story is illustrated by nine miniatures; in the borders of the first appear the arms of John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, and those of Henry VI. and his Queen Margaret of Anjou empaled. It is similar to the usual printed edition, from the third chapter of that edition to the end. Another manuscript, a vellum folio of the 15th century, is also a prose version, to which is prefixed a fragment of a metrical version of the story, the text of which closely resembles that published by Bekker in his Introduction to "Fierbras"; another metrical fragment is added at the conclusion of the prose tale, which contains the adventures of Maugis, how he became Pope under the name of Innocent, hears Charlemagne's confession, and is stifled by the Emperor in a cave near Naples.

<sup>1</sup> For the history of the chanson de geste see Histoire Littéraire de la France, vol. xxii. pp. 667-700; Renaud de Montauban, edited by H. V. Michelant Stuttgart, 1843; and M. Longnon's paper in Romania, for 1878. The general introduction to this series might also be examined together with M. Gaston Paris' Histoire Poétique de Charlemagne, pp. 19, 139, 298.

<sup>2</sup> Cat. of Romances, Brit. Museum, J. H. Ward, pp. 619—622.

The third manuscript at the British Museum contains a much briefer text than that of the printed editions, and is imperfect at the end.

The French prose rendering of this romance is much inferior to the poem in every sense, and cannot properly be deemed a direct reproduction of it, although it follows the thread of the narrative throughout, sometimes closely enough, at others wandering to a considerable distance; but even while following, it robs the original of half its beauties through its prosaic rendering. The valuable historical allusions are for the most part cast to the winds, the names abstracted, the circumstances altered, the speeches shortened or omitted, the sequence of the story being frequently unsettled.

The palm for superior dramatic treatment must also be given to the chanson's version of the chess-murder, on which the mincing of the prose version has a damaging effect. The toning down of the ferocity of the chanson destroys the prose relation completely as a picture of old time. The story also can ill afford the omission made in the prose of the curse with which Foulques of Morillon is first introduced—

" En France ot i linage cui Dame Dex mal dont ; Ce fu Grif d'Autefueille et son fil Guenelon, Béranger et Hardré et Hervi de Lion, Antiaumes li felon, Fouques de Morillon." <sup>1</sup>

The curse has an important bearing on the events which follow, and gives, in fact, a key to the venom with which Foulques is pursued throughout the story.

The prose loses much by its rejection of the first embassy of Charlemagne to Beuves d'Aigremont. The murder of Enguerran, which precedes that of the second ambassador, Lohier, the king's son, lays a far broader basis for the Emperor's revenge, on which the story is built, than the single murder of Lohier in the prose version.

In connection with this, it may be well to notice the omission of another striking passage from the prose, in which Charlemagne swears vengeance on the murderers of his son and nephew—

<sup>1</sup> Renaus de Montauban, p. 39, ed. Michelant.

“ Il jure Dame Deu qui tot a à jugier, Qu'il ne s'en tornera por Mars ne por Fevrier, Tant Kara pris Renaut qu'il ne puet avoir irer ;
 As forches iert pendus, nus nel puet respitier.
 Richars sera detrais à keue de somier,
 Ki ocist Loois à l'espée d'acier Et Renaus, Bertelai au pesaut eschekier,” p. 57.

The circumstance, which we know from history, of Charlemagne having had a son who died young, gives an interest to this passage, which should have pleaded for its preservation, and for that of several others which allude to the same murder. The exclusion of many such passages of historical interest is a matter of regret. One passage may be instanced in which mention is made of the monastic foundations of Gerard de Roussillon, to which pious works the name of Doon de Nanteuil is joined with that of his brother. Of them it says—

“ Il des confrent Karle lui et ses compaignons ; J'en estora saint Pere de Cluigni le baron Et puis la charité et vezelai selone, Saint Beneoit sor Loire, là où si moine sont,” p. 156.

Of the early printed editions of the French prose romance, which are numerous, the British Museum possesses four, two of Paris and two of Lyons. One alone of these editions is dated, that of Lyons, 1539. The general catalogue of the Museum gives as probable dates to the others, 1480, 1520, 1525 respectively. The edition said to be of Lyons, with the supposed date of 1480 attached to it, is a folio volume whose typography is singularly beautiful. The letters all stand out distinctly, the type is large, and the words are amply spaced. Ornamental capitals head the paragraphs throughout. Caxton's translation of Les Quatre Fils Aymon, which he undertook “at the desire of John Erle of Oxenforde,” seems to have been undoubtedly made from this edition, as in portions of the story where these various editions differ from each other, that of the 1480 edition is invariably adopted by Caxton. In his translation of this work, Caxton shows himself piously literal. Words and phrases, both foreign and unusual, he transferred bodily to his text; nothing ever deterred him, simply because it was French; he wandered along every winding of the sentences he was rendering, and brought them over with all their sinuosities into the English. In consequence, his translation is perhaps one of the most literal that has ever been produced in the English language, and though to some extent stilted and even awkward, yet it is impossible not to admire his faithfulness to his original; and the very quaintness of those peculiarities of language sometimes adds a charm to his composition.

The few instances where Caxton has differed from the French will be seen by the collations which have occasionally been marked in foot-notes on the pages of this work.

As a picture of the language of the time, his "Four Sons of Aymon" is highly curious and interesting. He continues the use of double negatives—so common in Chaucer and other Early-English writers. That this was not merely an imitation from the French, is shown by Caxton making use of two where his original gives him warrant only for one. On p. 65, l. 24, "Charlemagne made Aymon to swere that he should never gyue no help to his children"; p. 18, l. 10, "for doubte of death shall not leue *nothyng*e unsayd of hys message to the duke benes." On p. 255, l. 27, "All my lymmes shaken for angre, nor I can not stande upon my feet." In the French there is but one negative. Ed. 1480. Caxton frequently omits the pronominal subject of a verb in the clauses of a sentence, which succeed the leading one, so that often the drift of the narrative alone leaves the reader to decide the subject of the verb thus omitted. This practice with him is generally an imitation of his original. On p. 238, l. 24, "The frenshemen had wounded hym wyth two speres well depe in to the flesshe and was taken for prysoner." The French is (Ed. 1480) "et lavoient naure de deux espees bien parfond en la cher et fut prins pour prisonnier."

Caxton uses many words in the plural which are now allowed only in the singular, this also is usually in obedience to his original. On p. 262, l. 29, "armed with his own armures"; on p. 235, l. 32, "But their corages were never the lesse therfore." Occasionally a word occurs in the singular where a plural is now used: on p. 182, l. 31, the troops are ordered to come, "well garysshed of vytaylle for the space of vii. yeres." The Midland plural in en occurs frequently: on p. 3, l. 16, "virtues which ben digne"; p. 5, l. 2, “chapytres whiche speaken of many faire matters”; p. 13, l. 27, “Bayard is yit a lyve in the forest of Ardeyne as men sayen.” The Southern plural in eth also occurs: on p. 70, l. 26, “thise ben the folke of themperour Charlemayn that goeth to Ardeyn.” Sometimes the plural form now used is found in the singular: on p. 75, l. 32, “Themperour Charlemayn of fraunce lete you wyte by us that ye sende to hym Guycharde.”

The possessive case of nouns in Caxton is made, as usual, by the addition of s or es: thus on p. 77, l. 19, “Charlemayn’s folke”; p. 13, l. 17, “for goddes sake”; though it is sometimes made in is, p. 25, l. 8, “Bayardis back.” On p. 283, l. 1, there is a singular example, “his face towarde the horse taylle.”

Caxton almost invariably uses ye for the nominative and you for the objective case of the pronoun. There is an exception on p. 172, l. 31, due possibly to the compositor setting the MS. ‘y’ = thou, as ‘you’:—“I wote not what you sayste thou arte more like a foole than a bysshop.” Also on p. 142, l. 7, “I praye the for the love that you haste to thy god, that thou gyve me trewes.”

Which is constantly used for persons, and so used is generally preceded by the definite article. That and that that are frequently used instead of what, whose occurrence is rare in comparison with these substitutes: on p. 70, l. 32, “I conne you nother thank nor grace of that that ye saye.” This (= pl. thise) is frequently used for these: on p. 184, l. 20, “I will departe the londe of Gascoyn to this yonge knyghtes for theyr herytage.” Other is invariably used for others, and self for selves: on p. 98, l. 28, “Reynawde mounted upon Bayarde and the other also lighted upon theyr horses.” A very common use in Caxton—as in many other writers—is that of the past participle losing its final n, and assuming an infinitive form after an auxiliary verb. On p. 3, l. 12, “the clerkes haue had great knowledge by innumerable volumes of bookes which haue be made”; p. 14, l. 3, “Iherusalem was take agayne of the Christen.” A great many old or peculiar forms of the past tenses and participles occur: on p. 137, l. 20, “he hewe”; p. 79, l. 11, “flancardes all to-brosten”; p. 176, l. 22, “Euery man putted hymself for to renne.” The word conne, to be able, is constantly used; and a similar use is made of may, on p. 227, l. 16, "For wyte that yf I telled you not, ye sholde not maye knowe it." The form move of this verb sometimes occurs: on p. 167, l. 25, "ye shall move know the beste horse of your royame." Giving a future auxiliary to the verb will is curious. On p. 64, l. 21, "il vous rendra au roy" is translated, "he shall wyll yelde you to the kyng." A striking feature of Caxton's English is the number of reflective verbs with which it abounds. On p. 4, l. 11, "Whyche booke I haue endevoorde me to accomplyshe." P. 236, l. 18, "Yet shall I selle me full dere or I deye." An example may be given of verbs completed by prepositions: p. 6, l. 30, "and gaue them of havoyre so much, that they myghte well make war with agenst the king." Caxton has many substitutes for present participles, which reduces their use considerably, as on p. 70, l. 27, "These ben the folke of themperour that goeth to Ardeyn"; p. 74, l. 32, "sende a messenger to Reynawde for to tell hym that he yelde you Guycharde."

He makes use also of a great many particles needless in modern English, by the omission of many others in places where they are now deemed indispensable. A few characteristic sentences will illustrate his practice in this respect. On p. 154, l. 30, "ioye began to be grete in the castell as god had descended there"; p. 87, l. 10, "So he swere god"; p. 109, l. 3, "he was so wery he myghte no more."

The adverb very had hardly come into use: it has many fore-runners, such as full, sore, right, etc.

Nother is constantly used for neither; sith and syn for the later since. Ne is sometimes used for nor, in second alternatives, as on p. 317, l. 31, "I saw neuer nether crysten man, nother sarrasyn, soo goodly a prynce, ne soo curteys as ye be one."

An-angered is an intensitive by which Caxton translates the French 'enragé.' But yf is another old expression continued by him for unless: on p. 101, l. 9, "it sholde hurte hym sore but yf he myghte take them."

The use of doo with the infinitive—'doo make' = cannot be made,—is another continuation by Caxton of an older usage, and is a great contrast to modern English: on p. 18, l. 28, "I shall doo hange"; p. 7, l. 21, "And dyd doo make the castell of Montawban." Sometimes the verb make is substituted for do, in its sense of 'perform,' as on p. 84, l. 4, "the grete fayttes of armes that he made there."

Caxton makes use largely of articles where they are now omitted, and omits them frequently in places where they are always used, as on p. 6, l. 5, "it bare a great dommage to the realme"; p. 8, l. 32, "Mawgys broughte suche a succourses."

The order of words in sentences is frequently changed in Caxton's text, as in earlier English: on p. 87, l. 18, Reynawde "wente to chaise in woodes & in ryvers as often as hym playsted" = it pleased him; on p. 117, l. 23, "euerybody had of it pyte."

The original edition of Caxton's "Four Sons of Aymon" has neither title-page, printer's name, place, nor date. It is a folio volume, and the fortunate possessor of the only copy known is Earl Spencer. The celebrated founder of the Althorp Library, Earl George, acquired it by purchase in the year 1822. Of its previous history we can discover nothing. The date assigned to it by Blades, in his life of Caxton, is 1489, and has been adopted from the circumstance, that the works issued from Caxton's fount No. 6 range from 1489 to 1493. Although Earl Spencer's copy is unique, it is not perfect. It lacks Caxton's prologue and colophon. To its owner I return the warm thanks of the Society and myself for generously sending his treasure to the British Museum for so many months for our use. The General Catalogue of the British Museum mistakingly represents that institution as the possessor of two leaves of another copy of Caxton's "Four Sons of Aymon." Unfortunately, however, there is really only one leaf, for the second is apparently an extract from some work of devotion or popular theology, and though resembling in both type and style the leaf to which it is attached by the compiler of the Catalogue, has no connection with it. The genuine leaf is the beginning of chapter xxv, and is similar to the corresponding leaf in Copland's edition. Even the vignette which heads the leaf is the same, and is a repetition from the block used for chapter ix. Four leaves of the same edition were discovered by Mr. Blades to be in the possession of Mr. Green of Bishops Stortford in 1882. They are portions of signature E, and do not therefore supply the defects of the Althorp copy.

A second edition, as we learn from the colophon of the third edition, was "Imprinted at London by Wynken de Worde, the viiii. daye of Maye, and the yere of our lorde. M.cccc.iiii." One leaf only of this edition is known to be extant. It was discovered in 1882 in a volume of early-printed fragments by Mr. Henry Bradshaw, and is now in the Cambridge University Library.

Copland's third edition was issued on 6th May 1554; the colophon describes it as printed for Thomas Petit, not for Robert Toye, as asserted by the Catalogue of the Harleian Library. It was no doubt printed for both these and other booksellers, as the 'trade' editions of Chaucer were. The prologue to this edition is undoubtedly a literal reprint of Caxton's original preface, and it thus supplies one of the chief defects of the Althorp copy.<sup>1</sup> Although no edition later than Copland's is now known, entries in the Stationers' Registers point to the conclusion that the romance was twice reprinted before the close of the century. Licences to reissue it were granted in March 1582 (Arber's Transcript, ii. 408), and in February 1598-9 (ibid. iii. 137). On 22nd Feb. 1598-9 a printer was licensed to print "the last part of the ffowre sons of Aymon" (ibid. iii. 139).<sup>2</sup>

The success of the story of the Sons of Aymon gave birth to many and various editions. The name and adventures of Renaud were a passport to success of which poets availed themselves, and on all sides there are testimonies to the universal fame of Bayard. His namesake, "sans peur et sans reproche," is said when besieged in Mezières, recalling the feats of the noble steed through the identity of their names, to have answered the summons to surrender, sent him by Prince Henry of Nassau, with the proud reply, "A Bayard of France will never yield to a cart-stallion of Germany." The noble Bayard carried the Sons of Aymon everywhere, and all lands were eager to possess them and offer them a home. Horse and riders were depicted upon the walls of castles and convents. "On the walls," says Roquefort, "of the nunnery of St. Reynold in Cologne, is a painting of four Paladins, mounted upon Bayard, and Reynold is distinguished among them by an aureole, the sign of saintship."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For the bibliography of the romance, see two letters by Mr. W. Blades, and one by Mr. S. L. Lee, Athenæum, Aug. 19, 26, and Sept. 9, 1882.

<sup>2</sup> In Arber's Transcript, iv. 459, is an assignment of 'The four sonnys of Aymon' by Wm. Stansby, and his widow Elizabeth after his death, to Master Bishop, on 4 March, 1639.

It is well known that the mediæval romance of France became the property of cultivated Europe. From its source was supplied the fuel of the worldly imagination, and Renaud taking a prominent part was translated universally, and imitated in all fashions. In the 13th century Maerland could speak of having read the history of the Four Sons of Aymon in his native Flemish, "Hiemskindre, dat ic las."<sup>2</sup> This translation is said to be due to Nicholas Vesboschten, and it became the source of a German translation of the 13th century.<sup>3</sup>

Through what channel the story of the Sons of Aymon found passage to Iceland is uncertain. It is still a question whether the Icelandic versions originated from French manuscripts brought into Norway, which were read by the Scandinavian reciters, or whether they were learnt in France and brought over orally. The numerous manuscript copies testify to its popularity, the oldest of which may be referred to the middle of the 13th century. Here the story has acquired a new name. The Saga of Earl Magus adopts altogether a strange character, it knows nothing at all of the sojourn of the Sons of Aymon in Mountauban, mingles the story with that of Gerard, in whom some recognize the hero of Vienne, brings Charlemagne to live at Worms, and makes the chateau of Aymon Buslaraborg in Germany, giving that of Strasburg to Magus. The Saga was published for popular reading at Reikavick in 1858.

In Italy Renaud shone as the hero of every style of poetry, whether chivalrous, amorous, or comic. The "Quatre Fils d'Aymon" formed one of the volumes of the 13th century "Reali di Francia." Renaud is one of Pulci's heroes; in Boiardo the Emperor Gradasse is obliged to raise 150,000 men to conquer Bayard; and Renaud, side by side with Roland, divides the honours of the famous

<sup>1</sup> Poésie Française dans les xij. et xiiij. Siècles, p. 141. Roquefort.

<sup>2</sup> Reiffenberg, Philippe Mouskes, vol. ii. ccciv.

<sup>3</sup> Hist. poet. de Charl., G. Paris, p. 139.

"Orlando Innamorata" of Ariosto. Tasso's "Rinaldo" is based immediately on the French romance of the Four Sons.

Outside the world of letters altogether, the story has left its trace in the popular traditions of certain portions of France, Belgium, and Germany, chiefly in the neighbourhood of the Ardennes. The name of the Four Sons of Aymon still clings tenaciously to the ruins of the rock-built Chateau of Ambleve, as does that of Bayard to a chateau at Dhuy. The whole North of France is associated with the story, and the neighing of Bayard is still believed to be distinctly heard through the valleys of the Ardennes. In the beginning of the 18th century the presses of Troyes found full employment in its reproduction. To this day Chateau-Renaud, surrounded by the waters of the Meuse, is still believed to be the neighbourhood of the retreat of Maugis and Bayard, and the Castle of Renout's Steen, in the Province of Liege, is freely abandoned to them in the surrounding universe of popular tradition. In Brittany, a rude dramatization of the original Epic witnesses to the popularity of the story at the present day. During the celebration of the Kermesse, a Belgium popular feast, which is said to date back to the year 891, an enormous horse bearing four knights, and decorated with their escutcheons, paraded the streets of Louvain in 1490, behind the corps of the University. "As late as the year 1825," says Reiffenberg, "Bayard repaired to Mechlin, to crown a feast framed on the oldest models which was held there; and at Dortmund, in Westphalia, Renaud is still held in heroic and saintly esteem." M. Léon Gautier also calls our attention to the pictures decorating the chimneys of the peasant in France, where, by the side of rude representations of the battle of Austerlitz and the Wandering Jew, is seen that of the Four Sons of Aymon.

Proofs of the popularity of the English translation of the romance are not far to seek. We know not only (as we have shown) that reprints of it were numerous, but that the reprints were widely read and appreciated during the later years of the 16th century. The book is one of those which Cox, the Quixotic old captain of Coventry, who took prominent part in the Kenilworth festivities of 1575, had at his fingers' end. Francis Meres, in the Palladis

Tamia, 1598 (p. 268*b*), mentions the work among others as "no lesse hurtfull to youth then the workes of Machiavell to age." Wherever, in fact, in Elizabethan literature romances are under discussion, the "Four Sons of Aymon" is brought into court, and receives some sort of tribute to its popularity. The least equivocal of its commendations is the mention in "Henslowe's Diary" of the fact that the story was dramatized, and arrangements made for its production on the stage at the time that Shakespeare and his companions were proving the potentialities of the English drama. The entries in the theatrical manager's diary runs as follows:—

"Layd owt for the componye, the 10 of desembr 1602 unto Robarte Shawe for a boocke of the 4 sonnes of Amon the some of ... .. xl." <sup>1</sup>

"Memorandum that I Robert Shaa have receaved of Mr. Phillip Henslowe the some of forty shellinges upon a booke called the fower sonnes of Aymon, which booke, if it be not played by the Company of the Fortune nor noe other company by my leaue, I doe then bynd my selfe by theis presentes to repay the sayd some of forty shillinges upon the delivery of my booke att Christmas next, which shall be in the yeare of our Lord God 1603 and in the xlvjth yeare of the Raigne of the Queene.
per me ROBT. SHAA." <sup>2</sup>

Proof is extant of the production of the play by a company of English actors at Amsterdam, but nothing is known of Robert Shaw or Shaa beyond the facts that he was an actor at Philip Henslowe's theatre, received many small loans from his employer, and occasionally assisted him in the management (Henslowe's Diary, pp. 96 et seq.). It does not appear that the play was published.

Thomas Heywood, in his Apology for Actors, 1612 (repr. in Somers' Tracts (1810), iii. 574—600), the Third Booke, argues that, among the benefits of plays, they "haue benee the discouersers of many notorious murders, long concealed from the eyes of the world" (sign. G, bk. ; Somers, iii. 598). And after citing an instance of this 'at Lin in Norfolke,' and another of marauding Spaniards at 'a place called Perin [i. e. Penryn] in Cornwall,' being frightened into flight by a battle on the stage, he goes on with the following case of the play of the Four Sons of Aymon and Renaud's murder (sign. G 2; Somers, iii. 599).

<sup>1</sup> p. 230.

<sup>2</sup> p. 233.

"Another of the like wonder happened at Amsterdam in Holland: A company of our English Comedians (well knowne) <sup>A strange accident happening at a play.</sup> trauellling those Countreyes, as they were before the Burghers, and other the chiefe inhabitants, acting the last part of the 4 sons of Aymon, towards the last act of the history, where penitent Renaldo, like a common labourer, liued in disguise, vowing, as his last pennance, to labour & carry burdens to the structure of a goodly Church there to be erected, whose diligence the labourers enuyng, since, by reason of his stature and strength, hee did vsually perfect more worke in a day, then a dozen of the best, (hee working for his conscience, they for their luces,) wherevpon, by reason his industry had so much disparaged their liuing, conspired amongst themselves to kill him, waiting some opportunity to finde him asleepe, which they might easily doe, since the sorest labourers are the soundest sleepers, and industry is the best preparatiue to rest. Hauing spy'd their opportunity, they droue a naile into his temples, of which wound immediately he dyed.

"As the Actors handled this, the audience might on a sodaine vnderstand an out-cry and loud shriek in a remote gallery; and pressing about the place, they might perceiue a woman of great grauity, strangely amazed, who, with a distracted & troubled braine, oft sighed out these words: 'Oh, my husband, my husband!' The play without further interruption proceeded; the woman was to her owne house conducted, without any apparent suspition, euery one coniecturing as their fancies led them. In this agony shee some few daies languished; and on a time, as certaine of her well-disposed neighbours came to comfort her, one amongst the rest being Churchwarden, to him the Sexton posts, to tell him of a strange thing happening him in the ripping vp of a graue: 'See here (quoth he) what I haue found!' and shewes them a faire skull, with a great nayle pierst quite through the braine-pan; 'but we cannot coniecture to whom it should belong, nor how long it hath laine in the earth, the graue being confused, and the flesh consumed.' At the report of this accident, the woman, out of the trouble of her afflicted conscience, discovered a former murder. For 12 years ago, by driuing that nayle into that skull, being the head of her husband, she had trecherously slaine him. This being publickly confest, she was arraigned, condemned, adiudged, and burned.

"But I draw my subject to greater length then I purposed: these, therefore, out of other infinites, I haue collected both for their familiarnesse and latenesse of memory."

SKETCH OF THE STORY.

THE story opens with an account of the Court of Charlemagne at Paris, where nearly all the powerful Barons of the land are assembled, and among them the Duke Aymon of Dordon, with his four sons, Renaud, Alard, Guichard, and Richard. Duke Beuves of Aigremont, brother to Aymon, is absent from the court, and the Emperor is so enraged by this insult, that he vows to besiege Aigremont, unless Beuves promises to serve him next summer with a powerful army. Duke Naymes advises Charlemagne to send a messenger to Aigremont, and after some discussion, Lohier, the eldest son of the Emperor, is sent there with a hundred knights.<sup>1</sup> He delivers his message insolently to Duke Beuves, who answers him with equal warmth, and a fight ensues, in which Lohier is slain by Duke Beuves; his body is conveyed to Charlemagne by the few survivors of his company and buried at Saint-Germain. The Emperor vows to revenge the death of his son by besieging Aigremont.

Meanwhile the Sons of Aymon have been created knights by Charlemagne, and Renaud has been presented with the wonderful horse Bayard.

When Aymon hears of the death of Lohier, he departs with his sons in haste to Dordon for fear of the Emperor's wrath.<sup>2</sup> Great preparations are made at Paris for the campaign against Duke Beuves; while the army are on their way to Aigremont, a messenger informs them that Beuves is at Troyes, and is besieging that city with the assistance of his brothers, Doon of Nantueil and Gerard of

<sup>1</sup> In the original chanson Enguerrand, the nephew of the Emperor, is first sent to Aigremont, he is slain, and Lohier then undertakes the message and shares the same fate. A knight called Enguerrard of Peronne is killed at Troyes by Beuves in this prose version.

<sup>2</sup> In the chanson Aymon is banished by Charlemagne before the death of Lohier, and is received again into favour when the preparations for the attack on Aigremont are being carried out; his sons are then created knights.

Roussillon;<sup>1</sup> the inhabitants therefore implore the help of Charlemagne.

The fact of Beuves having summoned his brother Gerard of Roussillon to Aigremont, in order to march upon Troyes, has enlightened us as to the situation of Aigremont. M. Paris says :

“Le château Roussillon devait être plus éloigné de Troyes que l'autre, puisque c'est le duc Girart qui va trouver son frère pour marcher d'Aigremont sur Troyes. . . . La situation d'un village voisin de Chablis en Bourgoyne, encore aujourd'hui nommé Aigremont, semble répondre aux indices que nous offre le texte des deux (romances) de Girart et des quatre fils Aimon.”

The French army arrives at Troyes, where a battle takes place, and lasts until sundown ; the armies then cease fighting, neither side having gained the victory. Next day Beuves and his chief Barons appear barefoot before the Emperor, and crave his pardon ; which having been granted to them, peace is proclaimed.

Beuves promises to serve the Emperor at Paris on the feast of St. John next summer. On the way thither he is treacherously slain by Earl Guenes, who has obtained Charlemagne's permission to murder him.

At the next assembly of the Barons at Paris, Aymon and his four sons appear again.

Renaud plays chess with Bertholais, the nephew of Charlemagne, in the palace ; they quarrel over the game, and Renaud, seizing the chess-board, deals Bertholais a blow with it which causes his death.<sup>2</sup> A great tumult thereupon arises in the palace, and the sons escape with much difficulty to Dordon, where they are received by their mother. They are soon obliged to quit Dordon for fear of the

<sup>1</sup> This includes Aymon in the chanson, but no mention is made of his being present at the siege of Troyes in the prose version ; he is supposed to be still at Dordon until after the death of Beuves.

<sup>2</sup> This incident is differently related in the chanson. Renaud and Bertholais quarrel during their game of chess, and Bertholais strikes Renaud, who complains of this insult to the Emperor. Charlemagne takes his nephew's part, which causes Renaud to reply wrathfully to the Emperor, accusing him of the murder of his uncle, Duke Beuves. Charlemagne then deals Renaud a blow ; the latter retires, meets Bertholais, and slays him with the chess-board.

This scene seems to be an imitation of the death of Baldwin (a son of Ogier), who is killed by Charlot (Charlemagne's son) with a chess-board, in the chanson of “Ogier le Danois.”

Emperor's wrath and take refuge in the forest of Ardennes, where they build a castle, called Mountaynford (Montessor), and conceal themselves for several years. M. Paris says :

“ Il existe encore au-dessus de Sedan et de Mezières un village nommé Château-Renaud situé sur le penchant d'une haute montagne enfermée par les eaux de la Meuse vers le midi l'est et l'ouest. On distingue aujourd'hui difficilement sur la roche quelques ruines d'une forteresse, mais ces ruines avaient, il y a deux ans, plus de caractère, quand Malherbe notre grand poète écrivait au savant antiquaire Peiresc. 'La principauté de Madame la princesse de Conti s'appelle Chasteau-Renaud, à deux lieues de Sedan et autant ruiné, ou l'on voit encore la tour de Maugis et l'estable de Bayard.' ”

Charlemagne, as soon as he hears of the Sons' retreat, collects an army and besieges the castle ;<sup>1</sup> the old Duke Aymon fights against his children, as he has sworn to defend the Emperor's cause. Terms of peace are offered to Renaud if he will deliver up his brother Guichard, which he indignantly refuses to accept. The three gates of the castle are then surrounded by the Frenchmen, but this does not prevent the Sons from hunting daily in the forest. After the siege has lasted 14 months, Hernyer of Seveyne<sup>2</sup> promises to take Renaud and his brother's prisoners, if Charlemagne will give him the castle as a reward. He then approaches the castle and begs Renaud to grant him shelter as an enemy of the Emperor's ; Renaud believes his story, and allows him to sleep in the castle ; when all have retired to rest, Hernyer lets down the drawbridge and signals to his men to enter. Fortunately for the Sons, Alard's horse wakes Renaud, who rouses his brothers, and they fight their enemies valiantly ; Charlemagne sets a portion of the castle on fire ; in the tumult Hernyer and his followers are slain by Renaud, who afterwards escapes on Bayard with his brothers into the Forest of Ardennes. They are pursued for some distance, but their enemies cannot overtake them. Duke Naymes advises Charlemagne to give up the campaign and disband his army. This being done the Emperor returns to Paris.

<sup>1</sup> No mention is made here of the Espans pass, supposed to be inhabited by fairies. In the chanson Charlemagne warns his men against the dangers they may encounter in this ravine.

<sup>2</sup> Hernyer of Lausanne ; he is promised the town of Laon as well as the castle. The Espans pass is again alluded to when the Sons are chased from Montfort in the chanson.

Aymon on his way to Dordon, meets his Sons encamping in the Forest, when Renaud begs him to grant them peace, but Aymon only reproaches him for his conduct; they fight, and lose heavily on both sides, and the Sons with but 14 of their men are only saved by crossing a small river.

Aymon departs for Paris, taking with him the body of Esmenroi, a favourite knight of Charlemagne's, who has been slain by Renaud. He gives the Emperor a full account of the battle, but he is not believed to have fought against his sons, and is received coldly by Charlemagne; he therefore leaves Paris and arrives at Dordon, where the Duchess blames him severely for his conduct towards his children.

Renaud and his brothers wander in the forest until they are nearly famished, and all their horses die, except Bayard, who thrives on roots; at last they determine to go to Dordon and entreat their mother to receive them. They are not recognised in the streets of the city as they pass through, and even their mother does not know who they are at first; but she discovers Renaud by a scar on his face, and welcomes them joyfully. They sit down to supper,<sup>1</sup> and while they are relating their adventures, Aymon enters the castle. He is furious with his Sons at first, but soon afterwards repents of his conduct towards them, and allows the Duchess to give them food and money; nevertheless, he will not break his promise to Charlemagne, so he retires into the forest while his Sons inhabit the palace.

Next day they depart from Dordon, and on their way meet Maug's returning from the Court of Charlemagne, where he has managed to steal a quantity of gold, which he divides with Renaud and joins their company.

Their journey towards Bordeaux, and from the description of the journey it is possible to determine the situation of Dordon, which is, as M. Paris says:

“La ville actuelle de Dourdon effectivement située dans cette partie de la Brie Française nommée le Hurepois, et d'où l'on doit passer dans le Gâtinais puis dans l'Orléanais, pour se rendre en Aquitaine.”

<sup>1</sup> In the chanson the four brothers enter the palace and sit down to supper before their mother recognises them.

On arriving at Bordeaux they offer their services to King John of Gascony, who is at war with the Saracen King Bege (Borgons); John willingly accepts their aid, and Renaud conducts the war so successfully, that Bege is taken prisoner and peace proclaimed. Renaud is then allowed to build the Castle of Montauban, and is soon afterwards married to King John's sister Clare; the wedding being solemnised with great ceremony at Montauban.

The Emperor on his way to Galicia passes Bordeaux, he looks over the river Garonne, and marvels at the beauty and strength of the castle newly built there. On discovering that it belongs to Renaud, he sends Ogier to demand the four sons from John; when this request is refused, Charlemagne wishes to besiege the castle, but his Barons demur, as they are tired of war. At this juncture Roland<sup>1</sup> arrives, and undertakes a campaign against the Saracens<sup>2</sup> on his uncle Charlemagne's behalf. He besieges Cologne, takes the Saracen chief prisoner, and returns to the Emperor.

All Roland now requires is a good horse; for this reason Charlemagne proclaims a horse-race at Paris, and the best steed is to be bought for Roland. Renaud determines to race Bayard, so he and Maugis set out for their journey to Paris. Maugis, in order that they may not be recognised, changes Bayard from a black into a white horse, and makes Renaud look like a boy of fifteen.

Four miles outside Paris they meet Ogier and Naymes, whom the Emperor has sent to guard the way; the Barons, however, do not recognise them, and allow them to proceed.<sup>3</sup> They arrive at Paris, and lodge in a shoemaker's house; but from some hints dropped by Renaud, the man discovers their secret, and vows to inform the Emperor, whereupon he is instantly slain by Renaud, who escapes with Maugis from the house. Bayard has his feet tied by Maugis, in order that he may appear to be lame until after the other horses have started, when he is unbound, and wins the race easily. Renaud seizes Charlemagne's crown, which is exhibited as a prize, and telling the Emperor that he may look elsewhere for a horse for Roland, rides hastily from the city, and swimming over the river Seine, joins Maugis. They arrive at Melun, where they meet the other three Sons, and ride through Orleans to Montauban.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> When Roland arrives at the Emperor's palace, he tells Charlemagne, "I am called Rowland of Bretagne, and I am the son of your suster and of the duke Myllon." These words accord with the history which makes Roland governor "des marches de Bretagne."

<sup>2</sup> Saxons in the chanson.

<sup>3</sup> This incident is omitted in the chanson.

The Emperor, determined to be revenged upon Renaud,<sup>2</sup> assembles a mighty army at Paris, during Eastertide, and marches towards the Castle of Montauban,<sup>3</sup> where they encamp. Roland and Oliver pitch their tent at Balencon, near the river, and go hawking one day, thinking they may leave the camp in safety, but Renaud discovers their absence, goes forth against Charlemagne's army, which he surprises, and finally, having captured the golden dragon from Roland's tent, returns to his castle with much plunder.<sup>4</sup>

The Emperor, in despair of ever taking the castle, despatches a messenger<sup>5</sup> to ask King John to deliver up to him the four Sons; after a long discussion with his Barons<sup>6</sup> John consents to betray them, which he does by sending them unarmed to the plain of Vaucouleurs, where the Barons of Charlemagne await to take them prisoners. The Sons discover the treachery of King John when they

<sup>1</sup> In the chanson Renaud joins Maugis at Champeaux, they reach Monthery, and then journey through Poitiers and Orleans to Montauban.

<sup>2</sup> It is on the Emperor's return from an expedition against the Saxons, where he has killed the chief Guitechim, that he collects an army to besiege Montauban in the chanson. This incident is omitted in the prose version.

<sup>3</sup> In the chanson Charlemagne marches first to Montbendel, which he surrounds with his immense army: he admires the strength of the castle, which, he says, is finer than Roche Guyon, Paris, or Orleans; "that is nothing," says Ogier, "Montauban is a hundred times stronger." Charlemagne subdues the Castle of Montbendel, he hopes to conquer all Gascony in the same manner without bloodshed. The siege is then directed towards Montauban.

<sup>4</sup> This incident is not mentioned in the chanson.

<sup>5</sup> The name of Girard the Spaniard, who advises Charlemagne to demand the surrender of the Sons, and of Gainemark, who undertakes the message, are mentioned in the chanson. When the messenger arrives, King John attempts to strike him, threatening to have him hung; his barons interfere. John then consents to consider Charlemagne's proposals, and keeps the messenger three days for his answer. This incident is very differently related in the prose version, where John receives the herald courteously, and tells him, "ye must tari here a seven night" for his answer.

<sup>6</sup> Among the Barons who argue with John for the deliverance of the Sons to Charlemagne is the Lord of Montbendel, who in speech mentions the surrender of his castle, referring to that portion of the siege by Charlemagne which is omitted in the prose version.

arrive at Vaucouleurs, but they nevertheless fight bravely against an enormous host of adversaries, and finally gain a respite through the kindness of Ogier. Meanwhile Maugis, who is at Montauban, hears from King John's secretary of the plot against his cousins, and sets off for Vaucouleurs, where he arrives in time to rescue them. King John on receiving the news of their rescue, flies to an abbey in the wood of the Serpent, where he seeks refuge for a time, but is discovered by Roland, who takes him prisoner. John, in terror of his life, contrives to send a messenger to Renaud, who is now at Montauban, beseeching him to come to his assistance. Renaud and his brothers ride forth to meet Roland, and a battle ensues, in which Renaud is victorious, and rescues King John, but Richard remains a prisoner in the hands of Roland. Maugis, in order to save Richard from the cruelty of Charlemagne, departs for the Emperor's tent disguised as a poor pilgrim, and arrives before Roland has returned with Richard. Maugis completely deceives the Emperor, who orders food to be given to him as a holy man.<sup>1</sup> Roland then enters the tent, and presents Richard to Charlemagne, who declares that he shall be hung without delay. Richard recognises Maugis, and is therefore certain of escape from the hands of the Emperor. Maugis then leaves the tent, and retires hastily to Montauban; he orders Renaud and his two brothers to arm themselves, and with an army to proceed to the tent of Charlemagne.

Renaud willingly consents, and proceeds to Monfaucon with his folk, where they encamp in a wood near the gallows which are being prepared for Richard, but unfortunately they fall asleep from extreme weariness. Meanwhile Charlemagne commands the execution of Richard, and orders several of his Barons to perform the deed, but they all refuse on various pretexts, until Ripus of Riplemond undertakes the duty. Richard is led before the gallows, and believing that there is no chance of escape for him, begs for time in which to pray, and confesses to a priest. Just as he has finished his confession, and is prepared for death, his brothers (who have been awakened by the sagacious Bayard) appear, and a fight ensues, in which Ripus is killed by Renaud, who gives his armour to Richard; the latter, with four hundred men, presents himself before Ogier, who is rejoiced over the victory of the Sons. Richard afterwards meets Charlemagne, they fight, Renaud and his men join in the battle, and after a prolonged skirmish, the Sons enter the Emperor's pavilion with three thousand men, and bear away the golden eagle, which Renaud conveys to Montauban. Maugis is left alone with the Emperor's army, and fights bravely for his liberty, but is overpowered by Oliver, who presents him to Charlemagne, just as the latter is complaining of his subjects' infidelity to him in allowing the Sons of Aymon to escape. The Emperor vows to slay Maugis without delay. The Sons meanwhile have returned to Montauban, where they discover the absence of their cousin. Renaud, in great anxiety for his fate, mounts Bayard, and goes to the river Balencon; he meets there two pages from the Emperor's camp, who tell him that Maugis is in Charlemagne's hands. Renaud vows to rescue him next day.

<sup>1</sup> When Maugis appears before the Emperor, and craves for food, he asks Charlemagne to put it in his mouth, as a dream has led him to believe that thereby he will be saved from all his sufferings. Charlemagne consents to this; no mention is made of the palmer's staff in the chanson.

The Emperor commands his Barons to prepare a gallows on which to hang Maugis; but Naymes begs him to delay the execution until the following day, and Charlemagne consents to this, on condition that Maugis will promise not to escape. The twelve peers give their pledges for his safety, and prepare to watch over him all night; but Maugis, who has been put in irons, nevertheless contrives to charm all his guardians to sleep, and then departs, taking with him the Emperor's sword, and those of Roland and Oliver, with much treasure to Montauban. On the way thither he meets Renaud at the river-side of Balencon, and the cousins journey together to the castle, where much feasting and rejoicing takes place. Richard shows Maugis the golden eagle which they have captured, and it is set up on the high tower of the castle. Naymes and Ogier are sent to Montauban by Charlemagne to demand the surrender of his sword, in return for which a truce shall be granted them for two years. Renaud consents to these conditions, and, moreover, goes back with the Barons to the Emperor's camp. He is conducted before Charlemagne, who vows he shall be slain, but a compromise is effected, in which Renaud and Roland are doomed to fight a duel on the morrow. At Monfaucon the battle begins, but the final contest between the heroes is prevented by the appearance of a miraculous cloud, and Roland goes with Renaud to Montauban as his prisoner.

Charlemagne besieges the castle, but in the night Maugis, through the medium of a charm, carries the Emperor asleep to Montauban; he then leaves the castle, and goes over the river Dordogne into a hermitage, where he lives poorly, doing penance for his sins. The Sons discover the presence of the Emperor in Montauban still asleep, they search for Maugis, but are bitterly afflicted when they hear he has left them. Charlemagne will not consent to peace unless Maugis is given up to him, but Renaud allows him to return to his tent unharmed with the Barons. Charlemagne, vowing he will starve the Sons into submission, has the castle surrounded by his men, and although Renaud several times repulses the enemy, he can gain no advantage over them. Great famine prevails in Montauban, and all the horses, except Bayard, are slain for food. Renaud, as a last resource, goes to the tent of Duke Aymon and implores him to give his starving children food. Aymon finally consents, and sends provisions into the castle by means of the engines used in the assaults on Montauban, which he fills with food instead of stones. The Emperor discovers that Aymon has been befriending his children, and dismisses him from his army for this offence.

The Sons are again reduced to starvation, but are finally saved by an old man in the castle, who shows Renaud a secret passage from Montauban into the wood of the Serpent. All the people abandon the castle and go to the monastery, where Renaud's friend Bernard dwells; and after obtaining food and wine from him they depart for Arden (or Dordon, in the French prose version), where they are joyfully received by the people of the town.<sup>1</sup>

Charlemagne quickly discovers the flight of the Sons from Montauban and the secret passage; he immediately orders his army to besiege Arden (Dordon). As they hasten towards the castle, Renaud

<sup>1</sup> In the chanson the Sons are said to go to Tremogne, not Arden or Dordon. This Tremogne is the ancient name for Dortmund in Westphalia, which position would account for the fact that Charlemagne passes Liege to go to Paris; from Dordon this would be impossible.

perceives their approach, and at once orders a number of his knights to arm and accompany him in his attack upon the Emperor. Renaud and his army are obliged, however, to retreat after a fierce skirmish with the enemy; and having captured Duke Richard of Normandy, they take him prisoner into the castle. The Peers all implore Charlemagne to make peace with the Sons for fear they should slay Duke Richard; but the Emperor is still persistent in his refusal. King John at this time dies in the castle. Maugis within his hermitage has a dream of the distress of his kinsmen, and he sets forth towards Arden. On the way he encounters two merchants, who have been robbed by thieves in the wood; Maugis slays the robbers and gives back the plunder to the merchants, and he hears from them of the condition of the Sons, and hastens towards their castle, which he enters in the guise of a pilgrim, and is served with food as a stranger. Renaud towards night recognises him, and great joy is made over his arrival. Next day he departs for the Holy Land. Renaud causes a gallows to be erected on the walls of his castle, in order to hang Duke Richard; seeing this Charlemagne is persuaded by his Barons to send Duke Naymes to the castle with terms of peace; the conditions being that Renaud should give up Bayard to the Emperor and depart to the Holy Land in poor array, begging his bread as a pilgrim, while his brothers keep all his lands during his absence. Renaud accepts these conditions, and after clothing himself poorly and commending his wife and children to the protection of Duke Richard, departs from his castle. Charlemagne takes possession of Bayard, and on his way to Paris stays at Liege, where he orders the horse to be thrown into the river Meuse, with a millstone round his neck. This command is carried out, but Bayard contrives to break the stone, and swimming to land, gallops away unharmed into the forest of Ardennes.

Renaud arrives at Constantinople and lodges with a holy woman, who tells him there is another pilgrim in the house lying sick; Renaud goes to see the pilgrim, and finds his cousin Maugis. They meet joyfully, and after feasting together set forth for Jerusalem. They find a large army surrounding the Holy City; on inquiring the cause of this, they are told that the Admiral of Persia has taken the city by treason, and it is being besieged by the Christians. Renaud and Maugis pass through the Christian encampment, and set up a small tent for themselves. Next morning the enemy advances towards their tent, which in the confusion of battle is overthrown. Renaud<sup>1</sup> mounts a wall near by, and with a large fork or tent pole defends the way, and assisted by Maugis, slays numbers of the enemy. Earl Rames<sup>2</sup> approaches the two pilgrims, and on learning their history welcomes them with delight; he provides them with rich clothing and armour, giving the command of his army to Renaud. King Thomas,<sup>3</sup> who is a prisoner within Jerusalem, wonders why so much feasting and rejoicing is taking place amidst his army. Next day the Admiral renews his attack on the Christians, the Saracen King Margary is slain by Renaud, and after a fierce battle the Saracens are discomfited, and fly towards the city pursued by Earl Rames. Renaud contrives by placing a large beam under the portcullis to keep open the gate into Jerusalem, and the Christian army enters and takes possession of the city. The Admiral vows to slay King Thomas unless Renaud will grant him terms of peace, and allow of his safe conduct back to Persia; to these conditions Renaud consents, and peace is concluded amidst general rejoicings. King Thomas prepares a ship, which he fits out for Renaud and Maugis, in order that they may return to France. After eight months at sea they arrive at Palermo.<sup>4</sup> King Simon of that town receives them gladly, and tells them how his lands are daily wasted by the Persian Admiral. Renaud and Maugis vow to assist him against his enemy. They encounter the Admiral and rout his forces, compelling him to retire utterly discomfited. Soon after this Renaud and Maugis take leave of King Simon and journey by sea to Rome, <sup>1</sup> In the chanson Renaud mounts a mule and pursues the enemy, while Maugis showers stones upon the Saracens.

<sup>2</sup> Geffroi, orig.

<sup>3</sup> No mention is made of King Thomas in the chanson; Geffroi of Nazareth is in command of the Christian army, and is subsequently made King of Jerusalem at the conclusion of the war. When Renaud enters Jerusalem he goes straight to the Holy Sepulchre, where he and Maugis offer their devotions.

<sup>4</sup> In the chanson this incident of Renaud's encounter with the Persian Admiral is entirely omitted. They take ship at Acre and go straight to Brindisi, whence Renaud journeys to France, and arrives at Tremogne (Dortmund) in Westphalia. Maugis retires to his hermitage.

where they confess to the Pope, and having received his benediction depart for France. They are joyfully received at Arden by the three brothers, and from them Renaud hears of the death of his wife Clarisse. He takes his two children and Maugis to Montalban, where the people of that town welcome them gladly. Maugis then takes leave of Renaud and departs for his hermitage, where thirteen years afterwards he dies. Renaud prepares his two sons for their journey to Paris to be presented to Charlemagne, and sends them to the Court with an escort of five hundred knights.<sup>1</sup> They arrive there, and are graciously received by Charlemagne, who confers on them the honour of knighthood, and raises them to the post of carvers at his table. This rouses the jealousy of Constant and Rohart, the two sons of Foulques, whose father was slain at Vaucouleurs by Renaud, and they determine to insult Aymonet and Yon, in order to raise a quarrel. One day Charlemagne presents Yon with a valuable knife; after receiving this gift Yon chances to push Constant with his elbow as he passes him; and Constant, seizing this opportunity to quarrel, calls him the son of a traitor, and challenges him to fight.<sup>2</sup> The Emperor endeavours to prevent the combat, and orders Constant to ask pardon of Yon; but the sons of Renaud both implore him to grant them the satisfaction of a duel. Charlemagne consents, and orders the fight to take place on the Isle of our Lady, within Paris. He also sends word to Renaud to appear at Court, in order to witness the battle between his sons and the sons of Foulques. Renaud arrives at Paris on the appointed day with his three brothers and a large company of knights. Griffon of Auteville lies in ambush near the battle-field ready to help the sons of Foulques in case of their discomfiture. This plot is revealed to Renaud, who commands Richard to take his men to the Isle to protect his sons in case of treachery on the part of Griffon.

The Emperor and his Peers witness the battle, which lasts until all the four champions are grievously wounded; Aymonet finally compels Constant to yield himself prisoner, and presents him to the Emperor. Yon slays Rohart, and his brother Constant is hung by command of the Emperor.

<sup>1</sup> In the chanson Renaud accompanies his sons to Paris.

<sup>2</sup> This incident is differently related in the chanson. Charlemagne calls Aymonet and Yon to bring him wine; during the meal Constant and Rohart throw down Yon and break the Emperor's cup; in the uproar the sons of Foulques challenge the sons of Renaud.

After Aymonet and Yon are healed of their wounds, they take leave of Charlemagne, and return with their father to Montauban. Renaud divides his possessions between his two children, and clothed as a pilgrim departs from Montauban never to return again. After wandering in the woods for many days he arrives at Cologne, where the Church of St. Peter is being built. He works there as a labourer, and through his wonderful strength gains the approbation of the chief mason. The other labourers are so jealous of him that they vow to kill him, and one day as Renaud is asleep under an archway they slay him and throw his body into the river Rhine in a sack, and answer the questions of the master mason as to Renaud's disappearance with jests. A wonderful miracle is then manifested: the fish of the river support the body of Renaud upon the surface of the water, torches appear round the body, and angels are heard singing in the night. The Archbishop with his clergy come to take the body out of the water, and on opening the sack they discover the corpse of the lost workman of St. Peter's Church. The labourers then confess their crime and pray for mercy: the Archbishop contents himself with dismissing them from his service unpunished.

The corpse is laid in a coffin to be buried, but it rises slowly and is borne by invisible hands out of the church into a cart, which passes out of Cologne and carries the body to a little town called Croine,<sup>1</sup> followed by the Archbishop and his clergy. There it is laid in a small chapel, and the Archbishop uncovers the face of Renaud, in order that he may be recognised by the people collected there.

A pilgrim appears before the brothers of Renaud, and tells them of the miracles at Cologne. They set forth for that city, and then go to Croine, where they discover the corpse of their brother; they reveal themselves to the Archbishop, who has the body of Renaud richly entombed at Cologne, where, as we are told, it rests unto this day—the memory of Renaud the Martyr being yearly commemorated by a service held in his honour.

<sup>1</sup> Tremogne in the chanson.

The right pleaunt and goodly

Historie of the foure sonnes of Amon the which for the excellent endyng of it, and for the notable prowes and great vertues that were in them: is no les pleasaunt to rede, then worthy to be knowen of all estates bothe hyghe and lowe,

¶

[Beginning of the four sones of Aymon,

taken

from Copland's edition (C. 12, i. 7), British Museum, London, 1554.

The Prologue.

As the philosopher, in the fyrst booke of hys metaphysyque, sayth, that every man / naturally desireth to know / and to con newe thynges : And ther-4 fore have the Clerkes / & people / of great vnderstand-ynges desyred and concite to lerned sciences, and to know vertues of thynges. Some by Phylosophy, other by Poetrye, and other by Historyes / and cronyikes / 8 of thynges passed. And vpon these three they have greatly laboured / in suche that thanked be God, by theyr good dylygence / and laboures, they have had greate knowledge by innumerable volumes of bookes, 12 whiche have be made / and compyled by great studye and payne / vnto thys day. And bycause that above all thynges, the princes & lordes of hie estate and entendement / desyre to see thystories / of the ryght noble and 16 hie vertues of the prodecessours / whiche ben digne, and worthy of remembraunce of perpetuall recommendation.
Therefore, late at y<sup>e</sup> request and commaundement of the ryght noble and vertus Erle Iohn, Erle of Oxeforde, 20 my good synguler / and especial lorde, I reduced and translated out of Frenche, into our maternall and Englyshe tongue, the lyfe of one of his predecessoures, named Robert, Erle of Oxeforde, tofore sayd, with Every man

desireth to know
newe thynges.

By command of Earl Iohn of Oxford

is this history
translated,

[diverse & many great myracles / whiche God shewed for him as wel in his lyfe / as after his death, as it is shewed all a longe in hys sayde booke. And also that my sayd Lorde / desyreth to have other Hystories of olde 4 tyme / passed of vertues chyvalry, reduced in lykewyse into our Englishe tongue : he late sent to me a booke in Frenche, conteynyng thactes / and faytes of warre / doone and made agaynst y<sup>e</sup> great Emperour and king 8 of Fraunce, Charlemagne, by y<sup>e</sup> .iiii. sonnes of Aymon, otherwyse named in Frenche, 'Les quatre fylz Aymon.' Whyche booke, accordynge to hys request, I have endevorde me to accomplyshe / and to reduce it into 12 our englyshe, to my great coste / and charges, as in the translatinge / as in enpryting of the same, hopyng & not doubtyng / but that hys good grace / shall rewarde me in suche wise that I shall have cause to pray for his 16 good and prosperus welfare. And besechyng his said noble good grace / to pardon me of y<sup>e</sup> rude, and this simple worke. For, accordynge to the cobby / whyche he sent to me, I have folowed as nigh as I can, and 20 where as, as any defaute shall be founde, I submyt me to the correction of them / that vnderstande the cronycle & history, besethyng them to correcte it & amende there / as they shall fynde faute. And I shall praye 24 almighty God for them that so doo, to rewarde them in suche wyse, that after this shorte / and transytory lyfe, we all may come to everlastyng lyfe in heven. Amen.

that God should reward those who correct and amend
it.

¶ Thus endeth the prologue : 28
Heere foloweth the Table of this presente booke.

Chap. I.

Who that wyll know the history of the foure noble and worthye knyghtes / named the foure sonnes of Aymon, wherof the fyrste was called 32 Reynawde, the seconde Alarde, the thyrde Guycharde, and fourthe Rycharde, let hym first reade this presente table folowyng / In whiche men shall fynde that thys

Names of the four
sons.

- [presente booke conteyneth .xxviii. chapytres, whiche spoken of many faire / and dyverse matters, whiche they that shall reade thys sayde chapytres, shall nowe 4 see the history all alonge. And ye shall see in this fyrst chapytre howe, that after kynge Charlemagne / was come agayne / from the partyes of Lombardy, where he had had great and merveyllouse battaylles / agenste the 8 sarasyns, he helde vpon whitsondaye, open courte / at Parys, where was a fayre felawshyp of Prynces / and Barons, as ye shall heare after alonge. And in the same chapitre / ye shall also see howe, the same daye /
 12 the duke Aymon of Ardeyne / broughte to the courte hys foure sonnes, that is to wit, Reynawde, Alarde, Guichard, and Richarde, and howe kynge Charlemagne / made theym knyghtes wyth his owne handes; also howe the 16 duke Benes of Aigremounce / slewe Lohier, the eldest sonne of kyng Charlemain (the duke benes was vnclie to the foure sonnes of Aymon); and after, how the duke Benes of aygremount / was slaine coming to 20 Paris, by the commaundemente of kinge Charlemagne, after that he had appointed, for the death of his sonne. And also in this first chapitre / men shal nowe see many other faire matters, whiche were to longe for to be 24 reherced / in this preamble of this present booke.
- The seconde Chapyter sheweth howe Gryllon of haultefelle, and Guenes, after that they had slayne the duke Benes of Aygremount, returned to Parys, 28 and recounted to kynge Charlemagne / the mortall treason that they had put to execucyon; wherof the kynge was ryghte glad; and syn after he was ryghte sorye for it. For after that, the two bretherne of the 32 duke Benes / made great warre agenst him, and so did Gerarde of Roussillon, and Dron, and Mawgys, the sonne of the duke Benes; and after, they made peace and accorded togyther. But the kinge Charlemain 36 accorded not with the foure sonnes of Aymon, nor to Charlemagne holds open Court at Paris.

Duke Aymon brings to Court his four sons, who are made knights by Charlemagne.

Duke Benes of Aygremount is slain by command of Charlemagne;

Chap. II.

his brethren therefore make war against the King.

Reynawde slays
the nephew of the King.

[their cosin Mawgys. Item howe Reynawde slew the newew of king Charlemagne with a chesse boorde, as they plaied togyther at the chesse, wherof the warre began, the whiche was so mortall / and lasted so longe, 4 that it bare a great dommage to the realme of Fraunce.

Chap. III.

Charlemagne besiegues the castle
of Mountenforde,

The thirde chapitre speaketh, how after that kynge Charlemagne hadde made all his barons to forsake the foure sonnes of aymon / He went and besyged 8 them at mountenforde, where he was dyscomfyted two tymes ; but the castelle of Mountenforde was taken, after that, by treason. And after, howe Reynawde and his bretherne avenged theim of the tray- 12 toures that betrayed theym, And after saved theym selfe wythin the forest of Ardeyne, Where theyr father found them / as he went from the syege / to warde his londe of Dordon. And howe, for to keep his othe that 16 he had made to kynge Charlemagne / He dyd assayle hys sonnes ; so that, of fyve hundred menne that they were, there abod on live with his sonnes but xvii. persones. But Reynawd and his brethern / had none 20 evil, but slew many of their fathers men.

and the four sons escape to the forest of Arden,

where their father fights them for his oath's sake to Charlemagne.

Chap. IV.

The sons dwell in Arden,

and then go to their father.

Mawgis joins
them,
and they go to fight.

The fourth chapytre sheweth how, after that the olde Aimon / had discomfyted his chyl dren, they went and dwelled in the depest of the forest of Ardeyne, 24 and abode there / tyll that they were al counterfayte blacke / and roughe / as wilde beastes, for the greate hungre that they had suffred ; and after, they went to Dordon / for to see their father, that made them good 28 chere, and feasted them greatly. And gave them of hauoyre so muche / that they myghte well make war with agenst the king ; and howe Mawgis their cosy n arryved, whan that they should have departed, whiche 32 went with theym in to the realme of Gascoygne / with fyve hundred knightes. And whan theyr mother sawe them departe, she was for it full sorye.

The fyfthe chaptre sheweth how, after that Reynawde / and hys brethern, with theyr cosyn mawgys, were departed from theyr mother / for to seeke their adventure / they went so longe tyll they came to the realme of Gascoygne. And howe / goynge thitherwarde, they made manye evylles in Fraunce. And howe the kynge of Gascoygn, whan they were come there / dyd receive them in his servise ryghte sweetly, in bourdeux vpon Gyronde, by cause / that than this king of Gascoigne, that was called Yon, had warre agenst a kyng sarasin / that was entred into Gascoyne, that had to name Portus, that helde Tholouse and all the londe aboute.

Chap. V.

The sons with Mawgis their cousin reach Gascoyne, and are well received by King John.

The VI chapter speaketh how Reinawde / and his bretherne / dystressed bourgous, a sarasyn that had destroyed the realme of Gascoygn, and had chased the kinge yon / to bordeaux vpon Gyronde, that durste not departe from thence, for feare of the sarasyns. And howe kyng Yon gave his sister Clare / vnto Reinawde / to be hys wyfe, for the greate servyse / that he hadde doon to hym. And dyd doo make for hym the castell of Mountawban.

Chap. VI.

King John gives his sister in marriage to Reynawde, and also the castle of Mountawban.

The seventh chapitre speaketh how Charlemagne, for a voyage that he made to saint Iames in Galyce, he knewe in his comynge agayne / howe Reynawde and his bretherne, that were his mortalle enemies, were in Gascoygne / with in a stronge castel, called Mountawban. And how he sente worde to kinge Yon, that he shoulde delyver to hym Reynawde and hys bretherne. And yf he refused to doo thys, he shoulde come and besyge hym in hys londe / afore X or XII moneths were passed; Wherof king Yon answered / that he shoulde not doo it. And howe, after that kynge Charlemagne / was returned to Parys, Rowlande, his newewes, arryved

Chap. VII.

Charlemagne sends word to John to deliver up Reynawde, which he refuses to do.

Rowlande arrives
at Paris.

[at Parys, whiche the kyng made knyght. And after sente him for to reyse a siege afore Coloyne / that a sarasyn had besyeged / that was called Estorfawde, the which was overcome by Rowland. And howe Reynawde wan the crowne of Charlemagne / for his well rennyng / vpon hys baye horse at Parys.

Chap. VIII.

Reynawde defeats Rowlande at Mountawban.

The .viii. chapitre speaketh / how Charlemagne went into Gascoygne / with his host, and besieged Reynawd 8 and his bretherne / within Mountawban ; and howe Reynawde wan the fyrst batail of the king, which Rowlande conduyted, with Olyver and the bishop Turpin ; wherof Charlemayne was so sore wrothe, that 12 he wende to have waxed mad for it / of the great shame that he had of it.

Chap. IX.

King John betrays the sons to Charlemagne,

but they escape.

The .ix. chapitre sheweth howe Reynawde / and his bretherne / were betrayed, and solde to king Charle- 16 magne by kinge Yon, that sent theym in to the playne of Walcoloures / all vnarmed, but onelye of their swerdes, ryding vpon mulettes / clothed with mantelles of scarlate / furred with ermynes. From the whyche 20 walle / they escaped worthilye, by the wyll of our lorde. But they were sore wounded. Of Charlemaines partye, abode there deade, Toulques of Moxillon, and many other barons, for whome the kynge was ryghte 24 sorye.

Chap. X.

Mawgis saves
them from death.

The .x. chapitre speaketh howe, after that Goodard, the secretarye of kynge yon, had be-wrayed all the treason to Mawgys / that the kynge Yon had doone 28 to hys cosyns, whiche he knewe well, For he had scene kynge Charlemagnes lettres, and had wrytten answer thervpon from kinge Yon, Mawgys brought to reynawde and hys / suche a succourses, that by his 32 wyt / they were kepte from death.

The .xi. chapitre speaketh howe, by the succours that Mawgis broughte to reynawde / and to his bretherne / into the playne of Walcoloures, they discomfited kyng 4 charlemagnes folke ; wherof Ogier had manye reproches of rowlande / for some goodnes / and favoure / that he had shewed to reynawde / and his bretherne / at roche mountbron, and was therefore called traitoure, wherof a 8 great inconvenience came therof afterwarde / afore king Charlemagne.

Chap. XI.

The sons by the help of Mawgis overcome the folk of Charlemagne.

The xii. chapitre sheweth howe, that after reynawde / and hys brethern / were whole of their woundes that they 12 had had in the playnes of Walcoloures, they retourned to Mountawban. But whan kyng Yon / knewe of theyr comynge agayn, he fledde awaye, and made hymselfe to be shorne a monke in a monastery / that was within the 16 woode of the serpente ; where rowlande and Ogyer the Dane / founde him, and wold have made him be hanged for the treason / that he had doone to reynawde / and to his brethern, yf Reynawde had not succoured hym.

Chap. XII.

The sons return to Mountawban.

King John is succoured by Reynawde.

The xiii. chapitre sheweth how, that after Reynawde had succoured kyng yon, was the same houre a merveyllouse battaylle / betweene / Reynawde and the frenshemen. For Rowlande was there sore beten, and 24 many other, wherof Ogyer was glad, by cause that Rowland had called hym traytoure. And also he knewe / that the foure sonnes of Aymon / were not for to be so lyghtelye overcomen, as men had sayde afore. And for 28 this cause / there had been a sore medle betweene Rowland and Ogyer,<sup>1</sup> yf it had not be the other barons that departed them ; and in this recountre Rycharde, the brother of Reynawde, abode for prisoner of Rowlande.

Chap. XIII.

Reynawde defeats Rowlande.

Richard remains a prisoner with Rowlande.

The .xiiii. chapitre sheweth how, after that Reynawde, Alarle, and Guycharde / were gone to warde 32

Chap. XIV.

<sup>1</sup> mais les autres baros les departirent, F. orig. 1480.

[Mountawban / after the battayle, and that they had made full greate sorowe for Rychard / theyr brother, which was in kinge Charlemagnes handes, The sayd Rychard / was delyvered by mawgys greate wysedome. 4

Chap. XV.

The sons with Mawgis capture the Golden Eagle from the King, who threatens to abandon the crown.

Oliver relates his capture of Mawgis, which reassures the King.

The .xv. chapitre speaketh how, after that Reynawde and hys brethern / and Mawgys / had discomfyted Charlemagne, they came and overthrewe downe his pavilyon, and bare a waye with theym the Egle of golde / 8 that was there vpon the pavilion ; wherof kynge Charlemagne was sore an angered, in so muche that he wolde yeelde vp his crowne vnto his barons, sayinge / that he wolde be no more kynge, for they had fayled hym and 12 habandonned, for the foure sonnes of Aymon ; and sayde to them / that they should crown Reinawd, that he might be theyr king, for they loved him much more than they dyd hym. Than Olyver sayde to kinge 16 Charlemagne, that he should take agayne the croun, and that he shoulde brynge to him Mawgys, that he had taken / whan he was aboute to pylle the pavyllion, for he abode alone. whan kynge Charlemagne hearde 20 the same, he tooke agayne his crowne, and was ryghte glad of the prise of mawgis.

Chap. XVI.

Charlemagne wishes to hang Mawgis,

but he escapes,

and goes to Mountawban with the crown and sword of the King.

The .xvi. chapitre speaketh how the kynge Charlemagne / wolde doo hange Mawgys, Incontyente that 24 Olyver had take hym to him. But by the meane of the Douseperes of Fraunce, that at the requeste of Mawgys, pledgyd hym for one nyght onelye. He made so muche that he escaped, to the honoure / and 28 acqytaunce / of hys sureties / and of hym, and bare a waye with hym to Mountawban / the crowne and the swerde / of kynge Charlemagne / the same nyghte ; wherof kynge Charlemagne was full sory. And ther- 32 fore he sende worde to Reynawde / that he shoulde sende to hym agayne his crowne / and his swerde, and [all that Mawgys had borne awaye with hym, and he shoulde grant hym his truce for two yeres. To the which thing Reynawde accorded hym; wherof happed 4 to hym, after that, many great evylles.

The .xvii. Chapytre sheweth how Reynawde faught with Rowland / which he overcame / by the wyl of god, And brought hym to mountawban, wherof kyng 8 Charlemagne was greatly wrothe. And also sheweth how Mawgys / brought king Charlemayne / into the castel of Mountawban / vpon bayarde all a slepe. And after tooke hym to Reinawd within his bed. And after 12 wente and arrayed hym selfe / in maner of an Hermyte / poorely clothed. And lefte all his kinnemen / and freendes, by cause that he wolde not let the peace of Reynawde / toward the kyng Charlemagne / for the 16 war had lasted to longe.

The .xviii. chapytre sheweth how, after that Mawgys had taken Charlemagne / in to the handes of Reinawde his good cosin, he went without leave in to a woode / 20 nyghe the ryver of Dordon, in to a hermitage, where he dyd dwelle as an Hermyte, lvyng poorely, for to save his soule.

The .xix. chapitre sheweth howe the barons of 24 Fraunce that were at Mountawban / made great sorowe by cause that they myghte not awake the kyng Charlemagne / that Mawgys by his crafte / had made to slepe, and broughte vnto Mountawban. But whan the 28 houre of the enchauntemente of Mawgys / was passed, kyng Charlemagne awaked. And whan he saw himselfe in Mountawban / he sware that he shoulde never make peace wyth Reynawde / as longe as that he were 32 prysoner. And so Reynawde dyd sende hym againe vpon his horse bayard, free and quite. Wherof he repented him sore afterwarde; for soone after this kyng

Chap. XVII.

Reynawde subdues Rowland, and brings him to Mountawban, and Mawgis also brings Charle-magne asleepe to the castle.

Chap. XVIII.

Mawgis dwells as a hermit.

Chap. XIX.

The hour of enchantment having passed, Charle-magne awakes, and is set free by Reynawde, whom he besieges

at Mountawban.

[Charlemagne made Mountawban to be besieged of so nyghe / that he famyshed Reynawd / and his bretherne, his wife, his children, and all the people / so that they dyed for hungre and thirst / the most parte. 4

Chap. XX.

The .xx. chapitre speaketh howe / after that Charlemaine had besieged Mountawban of so nyghe / that he dyd famysh all them that were wythin, knewe howe Reynawde was gone / and had habandonned Mountawban, and was gone his waye, he and his bretherne, hys wyfe and hys chylderne, by vnder the erthe, and were gone to Ardeyne, where kynge Charlemagne went and besieged them agayne. But afore that<sup>1</sup> he dyd set his syege / Reynawde and hys bretherne yssued oute agens hym. Whereby manye one loste their lyfe / of the one partie and of the other. And the duke Richarde of Normandye was taken there / which was one of the Douse peres of Fraunce / and a ryghte noble and a worthy knyght, preu and hardy ; wherfore kynge Charlemaine was ryghte sorye. 12 16

Reynawde escapes
and goes to Arden.

Charlemagne pursues
him,

and they fight.

Richarde of Normandy is taken prisoner.

Chap. XXI.

The .xxi. chapitre sheweth how Mawgys, beynge in his hermytage / came in his mynde a vysion, that he hadde by nyghte in his slepe, for to goe see Reynawde and his bretherne. Than in the mornynge he tooke hys waye / and founde two marchautes / the which had been<sup>2</sup> robbed by seven theeves in a wood. Of the whiche seven theeves / Mawgys slewe five of theym with his palster, and tooke again to the marchautes theyr marchaundyses / and all theyr havoyre. And than he went forth his waye toward Mountawban / for to see his cosyns and hys brethern. 20 24 28

Mawgis goes to Mountawban.

Chap. XXII.

The .xxii. Chapter sheweth, how Reynawde wolde have doon hange Richard / the duke of Normandye, 32

<sup>1</sup> Dordonne, F. orig. a. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> had been: 'he had be,' in original.

[by cause he myghte not have peace with the kinge Charlemagne. And howe / whan the Douse peeres of Fraunce knewe this, they came to kyng Charlemagne, 4 and prayed hym to make peace with Reynawde / for to have againe theyr felawe / the duke Rycharde of Normandye; to the whiche thyng, kyng Charlemagne answered, that he should not doo it; wherof they were 8 so sore an angred that they left him; but kyng Charlemaine dyd sende after theym / and sent theym worde that they shoulde returne agayne to hym, and that he shoulde make peace with Reynawde vnder this con- 12 dicyon / that Reinawd should goe beyonde the sea, beggyng his breade.

The peeres entreat Charlemagne to make peace with Reynawde;

he consents on condition that Reynawde should go beyond the sea, begging his bread.

The .xxiii. Chapytre sheweth howe, after that Reynawde was departed from Ardeyne / for to make hys 16 vyage beyonde the sea, poorely clothed as a pylgrim, seekyng hys breade for goddes sake / Rycharde of Normandye tooke Bayarde, and brought with him Alard, Guychard, and Rycharde, bretherne to Reynawde / and presented theym to Charlemagne, the whiche 20 he receyved ryghte honourablye by good love, and after brake his syege, and departed for to goe to Parys. But whan he was in the citye of Lyege, vpon the 24 brydge over the ryver Mewsethe / made Bayard to be cast into the water with a mille stone at the necke of hym; but bayarde the horse escaped, and is yet a lyve in the forest of Ardeyne / as men sayen.

Chap. XXIII.

Reynawde goes away as a pilgrim;

his brethren are brought to the King.

Bayarde is cast into the water, but escapes.

The .xxiiii. Chapytre sheweth howe, that after Reynawde was departed from Ardeyne, from hys bretherne, from his wife / and fro hys chyldrene, for to goe beyonde the sea for to accomplyshe hys voyage to the 32 holy grave, he found in Constantynople / hys cosyn Mawgis, and went both together vnto afore Iherusalem, that a kyng sarasyn / whiche was admyral of percie, Chap. XXIV.

Reynawde finds Mawgis at Constantinople, and they go together to Jerusalem.

[had taken by treason. but Reynawde and Mawgys dyd so muche wyth the folke of the lond, that the cytye was take agayne of the christen.

Chap. XXV.

Reynawde sends his sons to Paris to be made knyghts.

The .xxv. Chapytre sheweth how, that after Reynawde was come agayne from the holy londe, where he had doone merveyles, he sent Aimoner / and Yonnet, hys two sonnes / to kynge Charlemaine muche honourably, for to be made knyghtes of hys hande. For he taughte theym well in armes, in all good maners, and tooke to theym fyve hundred good men / well horsed, for to conduyte them towarde the kyng at Parys.

Chap. XXVI.

The sons fight with the kinsfolk of Toulques of Moxyllon, and discomfit them.

The .xxvi. Chapytre sheweth how, after that kyng Charlemagne had muche swetely receyved the chylden of Reynawde / and made theym knyghtes, they fought wyth ye sonnes of Toulques of Moxyllon / and discomfited theym in the feeld at Parys, whyche is called the ylle of our lady. Bicause that they had charged theyr father of treason, bycause he had slaine theyr father / Toulques of Moxyllon, in the playnes of Walcolours.

20

Chap. XXVII.

The brethren of Reynawde mourn for him.

The .xxvii. chapitre conteineth how, that after Reynawde was gone from Mountawban in maner of a pilgrime / never to have returned agayne, after that he had dealed his goodes to his children, his brethren and his sonne Aymanet / made great sorow whan they wyst that he was gone wythout theyr knowledge, all barefote, with a palster in his hande.

Chap. XXVIII.

Reynawde departs for Cologne, and there works as a labourer.

The .xxviii. chapitre sheweth how, after that Reynawde was departed fro Mountawban for to save his soule / he went to Coleine vpon the Rine, and founde that men builded the churche of saynt Peter. And there came to hym a wyll / and a devocyon / for to serve

32

[the masons / that wrought there, for the love that he had to our lorde. But at the laste, the other labourers had so great envye at hym / of that he was more loved 4 than they were of all the maysters, for the good service for jealousy the other workmen
 slay him,
 that he dyd / that they slew hym ; and after, they put hym in a sacke & caste hym into the water of the Ryne ; but by the wil of our lord, his corps appered 8 above ye watir, makyng so many fayre myracles, but for the miracles he wrought
 he is named a saint.
 healyng of sykenesses / so that he was named a saynte
 the daye of hys buryenge.

12 ¶ Here finyssheth the table, and consequently followeth the book heere after.

CHAPTER I.

Howe duke Aimon of Ardein brought to the courte his foure sonnes, that is to wit, Reynawde, 16 Alarde, Guichard, and Richarde, and howe kynge Charlemagne / made theym knyghtes wyth his owne handes ; also howe the duke Benes of Aigremounte slewe Lohier, the eldest sonne of kynge Charlemain.
 20 the duke benes was uncle / to the foure sonnes of Aimon ; and after, how the duke Benes of aygremount was slaine coming to Paris, by the commaunde-24 mente of kynge Charlemagn / after that he had appointed, for the death of his sonne. And also in this first chapitre men shall now see many other faire matters, 28 which were to longe for to be rehersed in the preamble of this present booke.

True we finde in the gestes & faites of the good kyngo Charlemagne / that vpon a time at a feast of Penthecoste, the sayde kyng Charlemagne kept a ryght great and solempne 4 court at Parys, after that he was come againe fro the partyes of Lombardy / where he had had a ryght great and mervaylous batayle agenst the Sarasyns,<sup>1</sup> and suche folke as were oute of the beleve, 8 wherof the cheef of the sayde Sarasins was named Guithelym the scsne. The whiche the said kyng Charlemagne / by hys prowesse and valyauntnes / had dyscomfyted & overcomen. At the which battaylle 12 and dyscomfyture, dyed greate noblenesses of kinges, princes, Dukes, Erles, barons, knyghtes, and squyers; as Salomon of bretayne / Huon, erle of Mauns, syr yves, syr yvoyre berenger, and Haton, syr Arnaulde of 16 Beaulande, syr Walleraunte of Bollon, and many valyaunte knyghtes. The Douse peres of Fraunce were come there / and many Almaynes, and Englyshemenne, Normans, Poeteuyns, Lombardes, and Barnyers. 20 And amonge other Dukes & princes, was come thyther the good and worthy duke Aymes of <sup>2</sup> Ardeyne. And in his felawshyp his foure<sup>3</sup> sonnes, that is to wyt, Reynawde, Alarde, Guycharde, and Rycharde, that 24 were wonderfull fayre, wytty, great, mightye, and valyaunte, specyally Reynawde / whiche was the greatest and the tallest manne that was founde at that tyme in al the worlde, for he had .xvi. feete of length and 28 more. Than at this assemble and feast stood the sayd kyng Charlemagne on his feete, amonge his prynces and barons, sayinge in this wyse, 'barons, my bretherne and freendes, ye knowe howe I have conquested and gotten 32 so manye greate londes / by youre helpe and succours. So many of the Sarasins and misbelevers brought to Charlemagne holds a solemn Court at Paris, after his victories over the Saracens.

Many great nobles are here assembled, amongst them, Aymon and his four sons.

The King addresses his barons.

<sup>1</sup> et mescreans, F. orig. b. i.      <sup>2</sup> Dordon, F. orig. b. i.

<sup>3</sup> beauh, F. orig. b. i.

[death, & in my subieccion ; how but late agoe ye have seene by ye paynym Guetelym, whiche I have dys-comfyted & overcomen / and reduced to the christen 4 faith. Not withstandynge we have loste there ryghte greate chevalry and noblenesse, and for faute of many of our vassaylles / and subjectes, that to vs dayneth not 8 the Duke Rycharde of Roussellon, the duke Dron of Nantuell / and the duke Benes of Aygremounte, that been all three bretherne Germayne. Wherof vnto you I complayne me and tell you, that yf it were not syr 12 Salamon, that worthylye came to succoure vs / with .xxx. thousande fyghtynge menne, and syr Lambreyght bernyer, and syr Geffraye of Bourdelle, with walleraunte of Bullon, that bare our baner / we were alle dyscomfyted 16 and lost, as ye all knowe well ; and this by the defaut of the said three bretherene, that dayned never to come to our sendynge, nor obey, and, above all, the duke Benes of Aygremounte. Ill be it that they be all oure 20 lyege menne / that ever owen to me servyce and fydelytie. Now I shall sende hym worde that he come to serve me at this nexte somer with all his power. And in case that he shall be refusynge to 24 obeye oure commaundementes / by saynt denys of fraunce, I shall sende for all my freendes and subjectes, and I shall goe besyege him at Aygremounte. And yf we can have him, I shall make hym to be shamefully 28 hanged / and his sonne Mawgis to be slaine all quycke, and shall do brenne his vncourteous wyfe ; and I shall sett all his londes in fyre.' Than the good duke Naymes of Bayere / rose vp dyligently, and said to 32 kynge Charlemagne in this wyse : 'Syr, me semeth that ye ought not to angre your selfe so sore ; and yf ye will beleve my counseyll, ye shal sende a messenger to the duke of Aygremount, which messenger shal be 36 well and honourably accompanied. And he muste be

The King complains of his subjects' infidelity,

especially of Duke Benes of Aygre-
 mounte.

[sage / and prudent / for to shewe wel to the Duke of Aygremounte all,<sup>1</sup> that ye shal charge hym and after whan ye shall know hys answer and his wyll ; ye shall than aduyse you what ye oughte for to doo.' <sup>4</sup> 'In good fayth,' sayde the kyng, 'ye counseyll me ryght well and wiselye.' Than thoughte Charlemagne what message he myght sende to him. And than he sayde all hyghe afore them all, complayninge him- <sup>8</sup> selfe ; 'who shall be he that shall doo thys message ; and for doubte of deathe shall not leve nothyng vnsayd of hys message / to the duke benes,' but there was none of them all that aughte answered, for manye <sup>12</sup> of them were of<sup>2</sup> Sybbe to hym / as the duke Aymon of<sup>3</sup> Ardeyne, that was his brother Germayne.

To whom he sends a message by

Thus were the foure brethern of one father and one mother. Than was kynge Charlemagne ryghte <sup>16</sup> wrothe and angrye, and sware by saynte denys / that the Duke benes should be wasted and destroyed ; and no manne shoulde be in the worlde that shoulde keep him therfro. Than he called high his eldest sonne <sup>20</sup> Lohier, saying in this maner, 'ye must doo this message, my dere sonne, and lede with you for your conduyt and suretye / an hundred knightes / armed and honourably arrayed. And ye shall saye to the duke benes of <sup>24</sup> Aygremounte, that yf he come not for to serve vs thys somer, aboute saynte Iohans daye nexte comynge, as I have saide afore / that I shall besyege Aygremounte, & shall dystroye all his lande ; and he and<sup>4</sup> his, I shall <sup>28</sup> doo hange or slea al quycke, and his wyfe to be brente.' 'Syr,' sayd Lohier, 'al at your pleasure I shall doo. And wit that it shall not be taryed / for feare of death, but that I shal tel him al alonge all that ye have <sup>32</sup>

his son Lohier.

<sup>1</sup> ce que luy ordonneres, et puis quant aurez sceu, F. orig. b. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> du parente du ait benes daigremôt, F. orig. b. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Dordon, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> son filz', F. orig. b. ii.

[charged me of. And I shall depart to morow in the mornynge, by the grace of God.]

Than should you have sene ye king weepe of pitie 4 T for his sonne Lohier; for he repented him that he had charged him / for to doo this message; but syn that he had so sayd, he must doo it. And the morne was come, Lohier & his noble companye / made them 8 redy, and after lept on horsbacke, and came afore ye kyng. Than sayd Lohier to the king, his father: 'Syr, here I am redye and all my folke / for to fulfill your wyll.' 'Fayre sonne,' sayd Charlemagne, 'I recom-12 mend thee vnto god, that on ye crosse suffred death and passion, and hym I besече to kepe and waraunt thee / & all thy felawshyp from evyl / and from any combraunce.' Than departed Lohier and his company; 16 wherof after warde / the kyng made great lamentacyon for his sonne Lohier, and not wyth out a cause; for he shal never see him quicke agayne, as ye shal vnderstand, yf ye wyll herken it. Now go the gentill messangers 20 streyght towarde Aygreount, sore thretenynge the duke Benes of Aygreount, saying / that they should take the head from the body of hym / yf he doo ought to them agaynst his devoyre. But it shall go all 24 other wyse with them; for it haped all contrary <sup>1</sup>to theyr myndes and purpose<sup>1</sup> / wherof afterward / many ladyes abode widowes withoute husbandes, & many gentil women without a lover; and so many churches 28 destroyed, and so many landes brente / and wasted, wherof it is yet pitie for to see. And thus, ridinge & thretenynge Benes of Aygreount, a spy heard all that they sayd, and came hastelye to Aygreount to 32 ward Benes / that was in his palays, and tolde hym how messangers were coming vnto hym from kyng Charlemagne, that sore thretened him, and that the sonne of kyng Charlemagne was there in person.

Lohier with an hundred knights departs for Aygreounte.

The King makes great lamentation
 for his son.

A spy overhears
 the messengers of Charlemagne on their way to Aygreounte,
 and tells the
 Duke Benes,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. ii.

[Than sayd the Duke to hys folke, wherof he had at that houre foi-son with him / in his palays, bicause of the feast of Penthecoste. ‘Lordes,’ sayde he, ‘the kynge Charlemagne setteth lytle by me, that will that 4 I shal go serve him with all my power and my puys- sance; and that wors is, he sendeth to me his eldest sonne for to tel me some message that threteneth me greatly; what counsell ye me therto, my bretherne & 8 freendes?’ Than spake a good knyght, that was called syr Simon, & sayd: ‘My lorde, I shall counsel you truly yf ye wyll herken and beleve me. Receyve honourably the messengers of the kynge Charlemagne / 12 for wel ye wote that he is your ryght-wyse lorde, and wit that who that warreth against hys soverayn Lorde, he doth agaynst god / & rayson / and have no regarde to your kynne, nor to thys, that your bretherne, Gyraule 16 of Roussyllon, and the duke of Nantuell, wolde not obey hym. For I advyse you wel that Charlemagn is myghty / and he shall distroye you of body and of goodes;<sup>1</sup> but yf that ye obey him, and yf ye amiablie 20 go to hym, he shall have mercy of you.’ Than answered the duke, that thus he wolde not doo, and that the sayd knight gave him evill counsell. ‘For yet,’ sayd he, ‘I am not so low brought but that I have three 24 brethern / that shall helpe to susteine / and beare out my warre agaynst Charlemagne, & also my foure newewes, the sonnes of my brother Aymes of Dordon, that ben full fayre knightes, worthy and well taught in faytes of 28 warre.’ ‘Alas,’ sayd than ye duchesse, ‘my good lorde, beleve your good counsell; for no man shall prayse you that ye make warre agaynst your right-wyse lorde / and wit it well that it is agaynst the com- 32 maundementes of God, & against all equitie. Wherefore, yf ye have misdoone any thing agaynst hym, doo so much that ye be accorded with him. And take who is advised by Sir Simon to receive them honourably.

The Duke refuses Sir Simon's counsel.

The Duchesse also pleads with him,

<sup>1</sup> Si ne luy obeisses, F. orig. b. iii. back.

[none heed to your brethern / as syr Symon dothe counsell you, for never good may come therof, for to be evyl in favoure with his soverayne Lorde.' Than 4 behelde the duke the duchesse in great wrathe, and bad her that she should holde her peace in ye devilles name, & that she should never more speake to hym of this mater / for in certayne he should not do for the 8 kyng Charlemagne the moutenance of a peny. So helde her peace y<sup>e</sup> duchesse, & sayd that she should speake nomore to hym therof.

12 Great was the noyse and the bruyte within the palayce of Aygremount, for some counselled the duke, that thus as the duchesse sayd he should doo; and many other sayd nay. Than sayd the duke vnto them that counselled him naye, and that he should 16 not accorde / nor make peace / with the kyng Charlemagne, that he could theym thanke. Muche longe they spake of this mater; and the messangers of the kyng Charlemagne duryng the same / have riden so 20 muche that they ben come to Aygremount. And the castell was set vpon a rocke ryght hye, and well envyroned with stronge walles / thycke, highe, and wel garnyshed with great towres, so that for the strength 24 and sytuacyon of the castell, it was imprenable, but only by famyshyng. Than sayd Lohier to ye lordes that were wyth hym: 'Lordes, nowe see what a fortesse is there / what walles! a ryver renneth at the 28 foote of it; I beleve verely that in al christendome is not her lyke. It can never betake by force, but yf it is by famysshyng.' Than spake a knight that was called Savary, and sayd to Lohier his lorde, 'syr,' sayde 32 he / 'it semeth me (spekyng vnder correction) that my lorde, the kyng Charlemagne, your father, hath enterprised a great foly, whan he troweth to come<sup>1</sup> to but in vain.

The Duke decides not to make peace with Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> a chief de ce duc, F. orig. b. iii. back.

[at an ende of this duke of Aygremount, for, in good sothe, he is right puissaunt; and I beleve that he shall make as mani men for to make the warre, as shall my lorde, your father / yf it cam there to that he 4 wolde make hym warre. It were a fayre thyng yf they myght be accorded together; <sup>1</sup>and, of my parte, I should counsell the same, yf it myght be doone.<sup>1</sup>

Sir Savary counsels Lohier to accord with Duke Benes.

‘But well I wot, that yf your father had hym, al ye 8 golde in Paris should not kepe hym, but that he should do hange hym / or els slea him quycke. So beseche I you, ryght deere syr, that ye speake humbly vnto the duke benes of Aygremount, for, in certayne, 12 he is ryght fyers / and outragious, & incontinent might have there a sore meddle betwene you and hym, wherof the losse should tourne vpon vs, for we ben to few folke.’ Than answered Lohier, and sayd to hym, 16 ‘that he sayd well and wysely; but alwayes,’ sayd he, ‘we doubt hym not of any thyng. We be here al redy an hondred knyghtes / well appoynted, and for sothe, yf he say vnto hys anye thyng vnto our dyspleasur, 20 he shal be the fyrst that shall repent and be sory for it.’ Than sayd the knight Savare al softly to hymself / that this were not wysely doone; ‘for wel I swere,’ said he, ‘vpon my fayth, that yf it hap you to say any thyng to 24 hym / that by any maner shall displease hym, he shall make you sorye, and shall wreke it vpon your bodye; and, happelye, we shall all be in a waye for to dy. Syr, advyse your selfe well / & wyll to procede prudently in 28 your message. For well I say vnto you that he is ryght cruell, and of greate worthynesse accomplysshed.’

Thus, spekyng of one thyng and of other / rode so longe the messangers, that they ben come to the 32 gate of the castel, which was sone shet by the porter. Then knocked the sayd knyghtes, and the porter

The messengers reach the castle.

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig. ed. 1480.

[answered to them, 'Lordes, what be you?' 'Freende,' answered Lohier / 'open to vs this gate presently, for we wyl speake to the Duke Benes of Aigremount from 4 the kinge Charlemayn.' 'Now abyde you a lytle, and hast you not,' sayd the porter, 'and I wyl goe speake redely to my lorde the Duka.' So went the sayde porter into the halle / where he sawe the Duke his 8 lorde. He kneeled incontynent afore him, & tolde him howe downe at the gate was a right great company of men of armes; and that they were well an hondred men or more, ryght well horsed, & well armed. 'And 12 with them is the eldest sonne of king charlemagne, that strongly threteneth you / and also your folke. My lorde,' sayde the porter, 'shall I open the gates vnto them?' 'Yea,' sayd ye duke, 'for I doubt them 16 nothyng, and we ben ynough for them; and many worthy knyghtes and esquyers / ben no where able for to defende vs all, were Charlemagne himself with them with his puissaunce.' So ran incontinent the 20 porter downe agayne / for to open vnto them the gate. Lohier & his felowes entred within, and mounted vp vnto the dongeon of the castell, where the duke was, that sayd to hys barons: 'Lordes, heere cometh the 24 eldest sonne of the kyng Charlemagne / for to tell me his message; but (bi that god that suffred death and passyon) yf he speake wysely to vs, he shal do as sage; and yf he sayth anything that shall dysplease vs,
 28 we shall soone / & without delaye, take vengeance therof.' So was the duke Benes well accompanied, & nobly of wel two hondred knyghtes and more. This was in the moneth of May, that all creatures humain 32 ought wel for to reioyce then, and that folke pren and worthy in armes / taken hert and hardinesse / for to defende them self wel, and warre agaynst theyr enemyes. And this during, Lohier, the sonne of king charlemagne, 36 entred into the halle of the Palays of Aigremount.

The porter announces their arrival to the Duke.

Lohier and his folk enter the castle.

The Duke Benes,
with his son Mawgis, and all his barons are here assembled.

[ryght nobly armed, and his folke also, and saw the halle ryght well garnysshed of fayre folke rychelye arrayed. And the duke sittynge right proudlye amonge his barons / and the duchesse, hys wyfe, next by him ; 4 and before hym his sonne Mawgys, that was a great mayster of the science of Nigromancy, that played afore his father of his art of nigromancy, wherin the Lordes that were there tooke great pleasure ; and wit it well 8 that in all the worlde / was not a worthyer chrysten, nor more able, than was the sayd Mawgys, except onlye hys cosyn]

<sup>1</sup> Renawde, one of the sones of Aymon / wherof 12
<sup>2</sup> R especyally treateth now this historye / Thenne marched fourthe Lohier, & wente in the firste of alle, and after hym his folke by goode conduyte / And salued the duke Benes of Aygreounte in this wyse / 16 wherby moche grete euylh happened to<sup>3</sup> hym at laste :
‘That god that created the firmamente, and made alle thynges<sup>4</sup> of noughte, for the people to susteyne / And in<sup>5</sup> the crosse suffred deth and passyon for alle soutes 20 to be redemed out of the peynes of helle, kepe and saue the / kynge Charlemayne, emperoure<sup>6</sup> of Almayne and kynge of Fraunce, and all his noble lynce / and confounde the<sup>7</sup> duke Benes of Aygreounte / My fader 24 the kynge by me expressly sendeth to the<sup>7</sup> worde, thou come Incontynente to Parys wyth fyue hundred knyghtes,<sup>8</sup> for to doo to hym ryghte and rayson of thys,

Lohier delivers
his speech,

<sup>1</sup> B. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Here begins Caxton's print. [14 leaves are out of Lord Spencer's unique copy. It begins at Fol. iii. col. 3, l. 24 of Copland's edition of 1554.]

<sup>3</sup> vnto, ed. 1554. Only a few collations are put, to show how slight are the changes of word in ed. 1554. The spelling varies somewhat.

<sup>4</sup> thyng. <sup>5</sup> on.

<sup>6</sup> ereperour in text orig. Emperour, 1554.

<sup>7</sup> thee.

<sup>8</sup> pour le servir la ou il luy plaira toy employer, et aussi pour, F. orig. b. iii. omitted in Caxton.

that thou were not wyth hym in armes in the partyes of Lombardy, for to fyghte ayenst the enmyes of the crysten feyth. Where, by thy fawte, were ded there, 4 Bawdoyn, lorde of Melanke / Greffroy of Bourdette / and many other grete dukes, prynces, knyghtes, and barons. And yf thou wylte not doo it / I telle the duke Benes that the kynge shaHe come vpon the<sup>1</sup> wyth 8 an hundred thousande men of armes. Soo shalte thou be take and brought in to Fraunce / And there thou shalt be Iudged as a theef and a false tratour to<sup>2</sup> thy souerayne lorde. for to be fleyen<sup>3</sup> and hanged aH 12 quycke, thy wiffe brente, and thi children dystroyed and banysshed. Do therefore this that I commaunde the in the kynges behalue / for thou knowest weH that thou arte his man, vaysaH, and subgette':

and threatens Duke Benes with
the wrath of
Charlemagne.

16 WHan the duke Benes of Aygremounte hadde herde Lohier<sup>4</sup> thus speke, Thenne,<sup>5</sup> yf ye hadde seen hym chaunge<sup>6</sup> his colour, pouff,<sup>7</sup> blowe / as a man cruell prowde and <sup>8</sup>owterageouse, and sayd to Lohier in 20 this maner, 'I shal not goo to kynge Charlemayne, nor noo thyng of his wylle I shaHe not fulfylle / For I holde nother casteHe ne fortresse of hym / But I shal goo vppon him wyth alle my puyssaunce / and shaHe 24 dystroye aHe the londe of Fraunce vnto Parys' / Thenne<sup>5</sup> sayd Lohier vnto duke Benes of Aygremounte, 'Vassaylle,' sayd he, 'how darest thou answerre thus?
And yf the kynge knewe now that thou threteneste 28 hym thus as thou dooste, he sholde come Incontiente vpon the,<sup>1</sup> and sholde vtterli dystroye the. WeH thou knoweste that thou arte his liege man / and that thou canne not saye ayenste hit / Comme then redeli, and 32 serue thy souerayne lorde, the kynge Charlemayne.
And byleue me, yf thou wyHte, saue thyne owne lyffe.

Duke Benes
refuses alligiance
to the King.

<sup>1</sup> thee.      <sup>2</sup> vnto.      <sup>3</sup> slayne.

<sup>4</sup> filz du roy Charlemagne, F. orig. b. iiiii. back.

<sup>5</sup> Than.      <sup>6</sup> changed.      <sup>7</sup> pouffe &.      <sup>8</sup> B. iii. back.

For yf thou doo it not, I make the<sup>1</sup> sure and certeyne / that yf he canne haue the by force, that he shalle make the<sup>1</sup> to be hanged there as the ayre and the wyndes wyth theyr grete blastes shaHe drye vppe the bones of 4 the.<sup>1</sup> Whan the duke herde Lohyer speke to hym in this manere, he stode vppe anone vppon his feete, And sayd that to his eueH chere he came there for make to hym his message. Thenne<sup>2</sup> came fourthe a 8 knyghte, named syre Water, that was a man of the duke of Aygremount, and sayd to the duke / 'My lorde! kepe, for goodys loue, that ye doo noo folie. lette Lohyer saye aHe his wyHe. For ye be neuer the 12 worse for his sayenge. And as ye weH knowe, kyng Charlemayne is ryght puyssaunte, and soo moche, that there is nother castell, cyte, nor towne neuer soo stronge / that can holde ayenst hym / Goo then to hym 16 by my counseyH. for ye be his man, his vassayH, and his subget / and of hym you holde your casteH of Aygremount, and aH your londes / And yf ye soo doo / ye shaHe doo as sage / and hit<sup>3</sup> shaHe be your prouf- 20 fytt, and also of aHe your lande. And for to werre ayenste your ryghtewys lorde, noo thyng but euyl can come to you therof.' Whan the duke had herde the wyse knyghte soo<sup>4</sup> speke, He coude to hym ryghte 24 goode thanke therefore; but alwayes aHe angry he sayd to hym, 'Holde your peas / For I shalle holde noo thyng of hym as longe that I shaHe maye<sup>5</sup> bere armes, and mounte a horsebake. I shaH sende for my dere 28 bretherne, Gerarde of Roussyllon, and Dron of Nant-ueH<sup>6</sup> / and Garnyer his sone. And thenne we shaHe goo vpon kyng Charlemayne / and yf I canne mete wyth hym in ony place, we shaH dystroye hym, and 32 shaHe doo of hym that he troweth to doo of me / Wene ye that I am a cowarde<sup>7</sup> / nay, by my feyth / For I

Sir Water en-treats the Duke
 to hear Lohyer,

reminding him of his vassalage to Charlemagne.

Renee bids him
 hold his peace,

and threatens to destroy the King.

<sup>1</sup> thee.    <sup>2</sup> Than.    <sup>3</sup> B. iiii.    <sup>4</sup> to.    <sup>5</sup> be able.
<sup>6</sup> Natuell.    <sup>7</sup> cowarde, 1554.    cowrade, Caxton.

sholde not take all y<sup>e</sup> golde in Parys / but that I sholde slee the messenger. EuyHe was to hym whan he durste soo threten me / And thenne<sup>1</sup> sayd Lohier, 'I nether 4 prayse you nor doubte you not.' Whan the duke Benes of Aygreounte vnderstode Lohier, he waxed for grete wrathe as redde as ony fyre in his face / And beganne to ryse vppe and to caHe / 'Now, barons!
8 vppon hym / brynge hym to me / For he shaHe neuer be warraunted<sup>2</sup> but that I shaHe make hym to deye shamefully.' And the barons durste not saye ayenst theyr lorde, but drewe alle theyr swerdes, and Incon-12 tynente dyde renne vppon Charlemayns folke / And Lohier called his baner; & thenne<sup>1</sup> beganne he and his folke to deffende theym selfe sharpely; And god knoweth how many heddes and armes were there cutte 16 of that daye / For atte the same owre beganne a thyng / wherof afterwarde soo many ladyes and damoysselles were wythoute husbondes and wythoute louers / Soo many of children faderles, and soo many 20 churches wasted and dystroyed that neuer syth were repayred. What shall <sup>3</sup>I telle you more / wyte it that they fought therein<sup>4</sup> soo longe wythin the halle of the palays, that the noyse wente thoroughe alle the 24 towne. Thenne<sup>1</sup> sholde ye haue seen the bourgeys, marchauntes, and men of crafte, wyth axes, swerdes, and other wepyns / And came to the castelle warde aboute vii thousande men and more / But the entre of 28 the palays of Aygreounte was narowe. And the frenshe men were wythin, that kepte theym weH, that they entred not in atte theyr ease. Alas! what ter-ryble and vnhappy a slaughter was there that daye / 32 For the folke of kynge Charlemayne were but a fewe to the regarde of theym of the other parte / And as ye maye knowe, suche assemble was ryght euyH / Soo

He calls on his barons to slay Lohier.

The fight lasts
so long that the citizens are aroused,

great slaughter
ensues.

<sup>1</sup> than.

<sup>2</sup> wraunted.

<sup>3</sup> B. liii. back.

<sup>4</sup> there.

The folk of Charlemagne are worsted by reason of their small number.

Lohier prays for
succour,

but is slain by
Duke Benes.

deffended theym selfe moche nobly and valyauntly the folke of kynge Charlemayne / And soo moche that Lohier, seenge that he and his folke hadde the worse / he smote a knyghte by fore duke Benes of Aygreounte 4 by suche a wyse that he ouerthrowe hym doun deed /
'For the,' sayd he, 'goddys curse haue thou' / And afterwarde he sayd pyteously in waylynge hym selfe, 'Lorde god, that wythin the holy wombe of the blessed vyr- 8 gyne Marye toke thy herbowrynge, and suffred dethe and passion for to redeme mankynde / whylte deffende me this daye from shamefuH dethe and from tour-mente / For I wote weH / but yf that your hyghe 12 dyuynyte socoure me this daye, I shaHe not see the kynge Charlemayne my fader nomore' / Thenne the duke called highe vpon hym, saynge, 'Lohier, soo helpe me god, this daye shalle be your laste' / 'It shaHe not 16 be so,' sayd Lohyer. <sup>1</sup>And wyth this he smote the duke vppon the hede; but his helme saued hym / And the stroke descended to the hele of hym, soo that the bloode ranne oute.<sup>2</sup> 'By god,' sayd Lohier, 'ye shaH 20 not escape' / Then<sup>3</sup>ne came the duke Benes of Aygre-mounte to hym as woode and sore an angred / saynge, 'I sholde prayse myselfe fuH lytyH yf I myghte not auenge me vppon the.' Soo heued vppe the duke his branke 24 of stele, and smote Lohier so harde vppon his bryghte helme that he cleued hym to the teeth / And Lohier felle deed afore hym / vpon the pauemente of the halle.
Ha, god, what grete damage hathe doon the duk 28 Benes of Aygreounte, to haue thus slayne Lohier, the eldest sone of the grete kynge Charlemayne / For afterwarde alle the oost of Fraunce was in moche grete and Innumerable tourmente therefore / and in ryght grete 32 peyne contynuaH / And the duke hym selfe deyed therfore fuH sorryly. That was the paymente that he hadde

<sup>1</sup> Il prit son bracdassier, F. orig. b. v.

<sup>2</sup> Parmi la salle.

<sup>3</sup> B. v. folio of Caxton.

for it, as ye here after shaſſe here yf peasibly ye wyſt here me :

4 NOW is owtrageously slayne the good Lohyer, the eldest sone of kynge Charlemayne / And the duke Benes of Aygremounte, full of cruelnes, toke the hede from the body of hym. And after that the folke of the sayd Lohier, the sone of the grete kynge Charle-
8 mayne, sawe theyr lorde ded, thynke ye they made no grete deffence / Always of a hundred that they were entred wythin the palays wyth theyr lorde Lohier, abode there on lyue but xx, wherof the duke inconty-12 nente made x of them to be slayne. And the other x he retheyned alyue. and to theym sayd / ' Yf ye wyſt promyse and swere to me vpon your othe and feyth of knyghthode that ye shaſt bere your lorde Lohyer to 16 his fader, the kyng Charlemayne, and saye to hym that I sende to hym his sone Lohyer in good arraye / and that in an euyſt houre he dyde sende hym to me for to telle me suche wordes : <sup>1</sup>I shaſt lete you goo quyte
20 & sauſ<sup>1</sup> / and to hym ye shaſt saye, that for hym <sup>2</sup>I shaſte not doo the mountenaunce of a peny / And that I shaſte goo vpon hym in this somer nexte comynge wyth<sup>3</sup> forty thousande men / And that I shaſt destroye
24 hym and alle his lande / They aunswered, ' sire, we shaſte doo that. that shaſte playse you to commaunde vs' / Thenne the duke dyde doo make redyly a byere / and made the corps of Lohier to be putte wythin the 28 sayd byere. And after he delyuerde hit to his x knyghtes that were lefte on lyue, and putte hit in a carte to drawe wyth two horses. And the duke conueyed theym throughe the towne / And whan they 32 were in the feeldes / the <sup>4</sup>x knyghtes byganne to wepe, and to make grete moone for theyr lorde Lohier, saynge / ' Alas, my lorde Lohier, what shaſte we nowe

Lohier's followers all slain except ten.

Duke Benes spares the lives of ten, on condition that they bear his defiance to Charlemagne.

The Duke delivers the body of Lohier to his ten followers, who have been spared.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. vi. back.      <sup>2</sup> B. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> trente, F. orig. b. vi. back.      <sup>4</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. vi.

They take Lohier's body back to Paris.

saye for you to the k[y]nge<sup>1</sup> your fader, that soo grete sorowe shaHe haue / whan he shaHe knowe your cruell deth. We may well be in certeyne that he shaHe make vs alle deye' / Thus wepyng and makyng theyr mone 4 for the loue of theyr lorde Lothyer / They roode on theyr waye streyghte to Parys /

¶ But now we shaHe here leue to speke of the messagers, and shaHe telle you of the kynge <sup>2</sup>Charle- 8 mayne that was atte Parys,<sup>2</sup>

Charlemagne at Paris, mentions to his barons his anxiety for the safety of Lohier.

CHarlemayne, that was atte Parys wyth a grete multitude of lordes that were there assembled. And there vpon a daye kynge Charlemayne sayd vnto his 12 lordys and barons / 'Lordes, I am moche wrothe and sory of my sone Lohyer, that I haue sente to Aygre-mounte / and I feere me sore that they haue taken debate wyth the duke Benes of Aygremounte, whiche 16 is felle and cruell, and I doubte me leste he hathe slayne my sone Lohyer / But by my crowne, yf he haue soo doone, or ony thyng that turneth to dysplasure or dommage to my sayd sone / I shaH go vpon <sup>3</sup>hym 20 with a hundred thousande men, & shaHe make him to be hanged at a gybet' / 'Syre,' sayd the goode duke Aymon offers Charlemagne his services and those of his four sons.

Aymes of dordon, 'I shall commende you ryghte sore yf he hathe offended agaynst you, that ye make punysson 24 thereof and wreke on hym grete vengauce. He ys your liege man, and oughte to serue / prayse / and honoure you, and to holde alle hys londe of you / Alwayes yf he hathe trespassed ayenst you in ony 28 manere / I am ryghte sory for hit. And yf ye haue a cause to be wrothe wyth hym, I haue here my foure sones; that is, to wytte, Reynawde, Alarde, Guycharde, and Rycharde, that ben ryghte valyaunte, as ye, syre, 32 welte knowe, whiche shaHe be trusty and true to you' / 'Aymon,' sayd the kynge Charlemayne, 'I conne you

<sup>1</sup> Kynge in text. <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. vi.

<sup>3</sup> B. vi.

grete thanke of the offre that now ye haue doon to me.
 And it is my wylle that ye make theym to come hether presently, to the ende that I make theym knyghtes / 4 And I shaſſe gyue to theym castelles, towres, and townes, and cytees ynoughe' / Thenne sente the duke Aymes incontynente for his children, and made theym to come afore kynge Charlemayne. And whan the 8 kynge Charlemayne sawe theym, they playsted hym moche. And Reynawde was the firste that spake, and sayd, 'Syre, if it playse you for to make vs knyghtes / we shaſſe be euer redy for to serue you and your noble 12 lordeshyppe' / Thenne the kynge Charlemayne called his stywarde, and sayd to hym, 'Brynge to me the armes that were the kynge Cedres, whiche I haue wyth my handes slayne in batayHe byfore Pampelune. And I 16 shaſſe gyue theym to the gentyHe Reynawde / as to hym that is as I were, the mooste valyaunte of alle.
 And of other goode armes I shaſſe gyue to the other three bretherne' / Soo broughte there the stywarde 20 the armes, that were full fayre and ryche; and <sup>1</sup>thenne were armed the foure gentyH bretherne, children to the goode Aymes of Dordonne / and Ogyer of Denmark, that was of their kynne, dyde on theyr spores to the 24 newe knyghte Reynawde. And the kynge Charle-mayne girde hym his swerde / And then he doubde hym to a knyghte, sayenge, 'God encrease in the<sup>2</sup> goodnes / honoure / and worthynes.' And thenne 28 mounted Reynawde on horsebacke vpon Bayarde / that was suche a horse that neuer was his like in alle the worlde, nor neuer shaſſe be, excepte Busifah, the horse of the grete kynge Alexandre; for as to haue ronne 32 <sup>3</sup> xxx myle togyder wolde neuer haue sweted. The sayde Bayarde, this horse, was growen in the Isle of Brousean / and Mawgis, the sone of the duke Benes of Aygreounte, hadde gyuen hit to his cosin Reynawde /

Charlemagne is Aymes present
 his sone,
 that he may knight them.

They are presented to him.

Reynawde and his three brothers knighted.

Reynawde's wonderful horse
 Bayarde.

<sup>1</sup> B. vi. back.    <sup>2</sup> thee.    <sup>3</sup> dix lieux F. orig. ed. 1480.

that after made the kynge Charlemayne full of wrothe and sory. As ye shaH nowe nere hereafter.

REynawde was a horsbak wyth a shelde paynted hanginge att his necke / and thwerled his swerde 4 by grete fyersnesse. And wytte weH that he was a fayr knyghte, vounderfull grete and weH founded. and of hym was a fayr sighte / for well he semed one of the most valyaunte knyghtes that men coude fynde in alle 8 the worlde. And the barons that were there, sayd / 'Ha, god, what a fayre knyghte is he / neuer was, nor shaH be, seen soo fayer a man of armes as Reynawde / god encrease to hym honoure and worthinesse, goode- 12 nesse and pryse!' And after, were moche honourabli and worthyly arayed and armed, the other three bretherne of Reynawde / and syth lyghte alle on horsebacke vnder saynte Vyctor, nyghe Parys / Thenne 16 made the kynge Charlemayne to sette vppe in the grounde a poste <sup>1</sup>ayenste whiche he made the newe knyghtes to assaye theym selfe / They Iousted moche worthyly / but Reynawde / iousted beste vpon hys 20 horse bayarde / And ryght weH lyked and were agreable to Charlemayne, the fayttes of the valyaunt knyghte Reynawde, to whom the kyng sayd, 'reynawde, from hens forth ye shaH come wyth vs in bataylle.' And 24 Reynawde answerde hym in thys manre / 'Syre, god yelde it you an hundred thousande tymes / and I promytte yow in goode feyth to obeye and serue you truly / nor neuer ye shaH fynde my selfe in noo 28 forfaytte, But yf it come of you.'

THemperoure Charlemayne, after the ioustyng doon, returned to his palays in Parys / Thenne he resoned wyth his prynces and barons / And there were 32 the duke Naymes of bauyres, Oger the dane / and the archebyssshop Turpyn / and sayd to theym in this wyse / 'Barons,' sayd he, 'I canne not merueyлле me to

<sup>1</sup> B. vii.

They Joust at St.
Vyctor, near
Paris.

moche of Lohier, my eldeste sone, that taryeth soo longe in hys message. I haue grete fere that some inconuenyence be happed vnto him. I dremed this 4 nighte in my slepe, that the thonder bolte felle vpon my sone Lohier<sup>1</sup> / and thenne came the duke Benes of Aygremounte vpon him, and smote his hede of / But by my berde, yf he haue doo soo, whiles he lyueth he 8 shaH neuer accorde wyth me / nor I shaH neuer haue ioye atte my herte ; for it is he that I loue best in this worlde.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'I byleue not suche thynges, nor to suche dremes ye shalle not gyue 12 noo credence' / 'Alwayes,' sayd the kynge, 'yf he haue doon soo / I shaH neuer leuer hym the value of a peny / for I shaH sende for the normans, the bernyggers, the flamynges / the champenoyes / the almayns, y<sup>o</sup> 16 banyers, & for englishemen ; so shaH I goo vpon hym, & shaH vtterly dystro<sup>2</sup>ye hym' / And Naymes sayd euer to hym, that he sholde not fraye hym selfe of noo thyngye tyll that he knewe the certente. And as they 20 spoke this, there came rydynge a messenger vpon a horse faueH, sore, seke and wery, and also sore wounded to the deth. He came to Parys afore the palays, where kynge Charlemayne was at the wyndowes. And whan 24 he sawe come the messenger, he came doun lyghtlye <sup>3</sup>from the palays haHe to the gate / and wyth hym, Naymes of Bauyre and Ogyer the dane / And whan the messenger sawe the kynge, he salued hym full softe, as 28 that he was ryght sory and sore wounded, and that wyth peyne myghte speke / And sayd in this manere / 'grete folye ye dyde, whan ye dyde sende my lorde, your sone, for to aske trybute and obeysaunce of the 32 duke Benes of Aygremounte, the whiche trybute your sone asked hym shamfully. But the duke, whiche is sore felle and cruell, whan he herde speke my sayd

Charlemagne tells his barons how he has dreamt that the Duke Benes has slain Lohier.

Duke Naymes bids him put no credence in the dream.

The King threatens Duke Benes with death if the dream is true.

A messenger rides up as they are speaking.

<sup>1</sup> si que il estoit tout pasme, F. orig. b. vii.    <sup>2</sup> B. vii. back.
<sup>3</sup> en bas du palays, F. orig. b. vii.

The messenger
announces the fight at Aygre-
mount,

and the death of Lohier.

The King's grief.

Duke Bauyre comforts the King.

Duke Naymes
advises him to bury Lohier at St. Germaine, and then march against Duke
Benes.

lorde, your sone / he commaunded to a meyne of knyghtes that were there, that he sholde be take, and that he sholde neuer retourne ayen to yow for to recounte hys message, nor what answeere he hadde 4 founde. To the whiche takynge, the medlee was grete and cruell / soo that your dere sone Lohier was ded there. And the duke Beynes of Aygremounte kyllled hym and alle your folke, excepte me and ix other, 8 that conduytte and brynge your sone in a byere. And I myselfe am sore hurte, as ye maye see.' And thenne the messenger coude speke nomore / but felle down in a swoune, of the grete gryeffe and sore that he felte, 12 bycause of his woundes / And whan the kynge hadde herde these wordes / he felle down vpon the grounde for the grete sorow that he toke therof, and wrange his handes / and pulled his berde / and tare alle his heres, 16 saynge, 'Ha, god that made heuen and erthe, ye haue brough<sup>1</sup>te me in grete sorowe and tournament irrecouerable, that neuer shaft ceasse wyth me / so requyre I to you the deth humbly / For neuer more desire I not 20 to lyue' / The goode duke of Bauyre began to recom-forte hym / saynge, 'For goddis loue, syre, tourmente not your selfe / but haue goode herte, and hope in god and recomforte your folke' / And this wolde saye the 24 duke Naymes for theym that he sawe wepe there for theyr kynnesmen and frendes that were ded wyth Lohier. 'And do,' saye he to the kyng, 'late your sone be worshyfully buryed atte saynte Germaine of the 28 medowes / And thenne ye shaft goo vpon the duke Benes of Aygremount, wyth alle your noble power and grete puyssaunce / and shaft dystroye hym and alle his lordes atte your playsure.' Thenne the kynge Charle- 32 mayne recomforted hym selfe / and well he knewe that Naymes counseyllled hym truly and lawfully / Thenne sayd the kyng / 'barons, make you redy / and we shall goo ayenste my dere sone Lohier' / And inconty-nente all the prynces and barons made theym selfe redy for to do the commaundement of the kynge / And 4 whan they were goon two myle oute of Parys, they Two miles outside Paris they meet

<sup>1</sup> B. viii.

 the body of Lohier.
 mette wyth the corps / And were there wyth the kynge, Naymes / Ogyer, Sampson of bourgoyne, and many other grete lordes / Thenne sayde the kyng 8 Charlemayne whan he sawe the body of his dere sone Lohier / 'Alas, how shamefully am I treated' / he descended from his horse a foote, and toke vppe the clothe that was vppon the byere, and byhelde his sone 12 Lohier. Thenne sawe he the hede that was smytten of from the body, and the face that was<sup>1</sup> aHe to hewen /
 'Ha, god,' sayd he / 'how well may I be madde now aHe quycke. WeH I oughte to hate that duke Benes 16 of Aygreounte, that thus hathe murdered my sone' / he thenne kyssed his childe aHe bloody<sup>2</sup> fuH often, and sayd in this wyse / 'Ha, fayre sone, ye were a taHe man and a gentyH knyghte; now praye I the 20 puyssaunte god of glorye, that he take your soule thys daye, yf it be his plesure, into his royaume of paradyse' / Grete sorowe made the kynge Charlemayne for the deth of his sone Lohier; But alwayes recomforted hym the 24 goode duk naymes. And thenne Ogyer the dane, and sampson of Bourgoyn,<sup>3</sup> toke hym vnder the armes,<sup>3</sup> and ledde hym vnto saynte Germayne of the medewes.
 And there the body of Lohier was buryed and en- The burial of Lohier at St.
 Germayne.
 28 noynted wyth balme, as it apperteyneth to alle the sones of kynges. Thus was he putte in his graue: god haue of his soule mercy!

32 WE shaHe leue here to speke of the goode kynge Charlemayne, that was moche sory of his sone Lohier / as ye haue herde / and shaH telH you of the goode duke Aymon, of Renawde his sone / and of hys

<sup>1</sup> tout detrauche, F. orig. b. viii.      <sup>1</sup> B. viii. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. viii.

thre bretherne that were at Parys / 'My chyldren,' sayd Aymon, 'ye knowe how the kyng Charlemayne is moche wroth, and not wythoute a cause, by cause that my broder, your vncler, hath slayne Lohier his 4 sone. And I wote weH that he shaH go vpon hym wyth all his puyssaunce / but verely we shaH not goo wyth hym / But rather shaHe we goo to Dordonne, and yf the kyng make werre ayenste hym / we shaH helpe 8 hym wyth aH our powre / Soo lyghted anone on horsebak the goode duke Aymon and the foure knyghtes his children, and bayted noo where tyH they came to Laon / and from thens they rode soo long tyH they 12 came to Dordonne. And whan the lady sawe her lorde and her foure children, she was ryght gladde, and wente agaynste theym for to welcome theym, and asked after tydynges, and yf Reynawde and his other chy- 16 dren were made knyghtes / Thenne the goode duk answered 'ye'; <sup>1</sup> and after, she asked whi they were departed for the kynges courte.<sup>2</sup> And thenne he rehersed vnto her worde by worde how his broder, the 20 duke Benes, had slayne Lohier, the sone of the kynge Charlemayn / wherof the goode lady Margerye was wonderfuH wroth and sory; for weH she knew that this deth of Lohier was the totalle dystruccioyn of the 24 duke Aymon her husbonde, of herselfe, and of her children, and of theyr londe. She herde Reynawde her eldest sone, that thretened Charlemayne the grete kyng / thenne sayd to hym the lady his moder / 'My 28 sone Reynawde, I praye the vnderstande me a lityH / Loue thy souerayne and thy natureH lorde / and drede hym aboue aH thyng; but bere hym honour and reuerence / and god shaH reward the for it / and ye, my 32 lorde Aymon, I am moche merueyelled of you, that are departed from Charlemayne wythoute leue of hym, that hath doon to you soo moche goode and soo grete

Aymon and his sons in fear go to Dordonne.

Aymon relates to his wife the death of Lohier.

Reynawde's
 mother counsels him to obey and reverence his
 King.

<sup>1</sup> C. i.      <sup>2</sup> dauecqs le roy Charlemagne, F. orig. b. viii.

worship, and hathe gyuen to your sones soo noble and soo ryche armes, and hathe made theym knyghtes wyth his owne handes / more grete honoure he myghte not 4 doo to you nor to your chyldren' / 'Lady,' sayd the duke, 'we be thus departed from kynge Charlemayne by cause that my broder hathe slayne his sone, as I haue tolde you afore' / 'Ha, god,' sayd the lady, 8 'that of the vyrgyn was borne in bedeleym, how hath y<sup>e</sup> euyl thys daye surmounted y<sup>e</sup> goode / For goddys loue, my lorde,' sayde the lady, 'medlee not wyth atte, for ye shaHe see this nexte somer that the kynge shaHe 12 goo vpon your broder / and by my counseyH serue the kynge, your ryght-wys lorde, nor faylle hym not for noo thyng / For yf ye doo otherwyse, ye shaH be vntrue and false towarde your souerayne and natureH lorde.' 16 'Lady,' sayd the duke, 'by god omnypotente I wolde leuer haue loste my castell & the halfe of my londe / than that my broder sholde haue <sup>1</sup>slayne Lohier. Now the wyll of god be doon therin, and none otherwyse.' 20 TO speke of the good duke Aymon of Dordowne, and of his wiff the duchesse, and of theyr sones / we shaH here leue, and shall retourne to speke of the kynge Charlemayne that was come again to Parys / 24 makynge grete sorow for his son Lohier. There had you seen many a gowne torne and broken / many a hande wrongen, and many heres of the hede pulled, soo that it was pyte & wonder for to see. <sup>2</sup>'Alas, my dere 28 sone,' sayd kynge Charlemayne<sup>2</sup> / 'he that hath slayn the soo crueHly, loued me but lityH. I shaH neuer be in quyete nor in rest tyH that I haue take vengeance of thy deth.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke Bauyere, 'haue mercy 32 of your selfe / For it behoueth not to soo grete a prince as ye be, for to make soo grete sorowe as ye doo' / And in the meane while came a messager afore

She upbraids Aymon for leaving Paris,

and bids him
serve his King.

<sup>1</sup> C. i. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> et le roy demenoit le roy qui . . . F. orig. c. i.

A messenger informs the King of the departure of Aymon and his sons to Dordonne.

the kyng / whiche shewed to hym how Aymon / the duke of Dordonne, & his foure sones, were go on in to theyr countree / wherof the kyng was sore an angred & wrothe, And sware god and saynt Denys, that afore 4 he sholde deye, that Aymon and his chylde[n] sholde aby[e] fuH sore for it, and that the duke Benes of Aygre-mount<sup>1</sup> shold not kepe them therfro. The dyner was redy, & they wysse their handes, and were sette at 8 dyner / but wyte it that the kyng[e] dyde ete but lityH / as he that was in grete malencolye ; and y<sup>e</sup> fayr Salamon serued that daye afore hym the coppe / & grete people was there. After dyner, temperoure 12 charlemayne dyde reyson wyth his barons, & sayd to theym : 'lorde[s],' sayde he, 'y<sup>e</sup> duke Benes of Aygre-mounte hath doon to me grete outrage, that soo shamfully hath slayne my sone lohier / But, & it playse 16 god, I shall go wreke it vpon hym this nexte somer, & I shaH dystroye aH his londe ; and yf I maye take hym, I shall not leue hym, <sup>2</sup>for the duke Aymon that shamfully is goon from me / nor for his foure sones 20 that I haue made knyghtes, wherof I me repente sore, but that I shaH make [t]hem to be hang[ed]' / 'Syre,' sayd thenne the duke Naymes, 'now here what I shall saye to you / your sone is ded by grete vnhappe, and weH 24 in an euyH oure was he put to deth, for neuer dethe was so sore solde ne so dere boughte as this shaH be / So sende now for your folke thrughe aH your londes, & thenne from hens towarde Aygre-mount take your 28 waye. And yf ye may take the duke Benes / lete the deth of your sone lohier be to hym fuH dere solde.'

Charlemagne threatens to invade Aygre-mount in the summer.

Duke Naymes counsels the King to summon his folk and march against Duke Benes.

'NAymes,' sayd the kyng, 'ye be a good man / 32 sage, curtois, & valyaunt. euy[n] thus shaH I doo / for weH wyselli ye haue counseyll[ed] me' / Thenne gaaf he leue to many of his barons and gentyH men

<sup>1</sup> ne ses freres ne ses e[fi]s, F. orig. c. i.

<sup>2</sup> C. ii.

that were in his courte at that tyme, and tolde theym that eche of theym sholde goo in to his countree for to make theymselfe redy, and that they sholde come ayen 4 to hym the nexte somer. Soo was it doon as the kyng had commaunded. And thus wente the barons & the gentyHmen <sup>1</sup>from the courte into their countrey,<sup>1</sup> and by theym were tydynges broughte thurgh e all the londes 8 vnto Rome / That kyng / Charlemayne made a grete assemble of men of armes, soo that the renomme therof floughe vnto the duke Benes of Aygremountes court / whiche of that other parte dyd sende for his kynsmen 12 & frendes / & in especyall he sente for his bredern Gerarde of roussyllon and Dron of nantueH / soo that they were whan they came togider weH foure score thousande fyghtyng men & moo / and as fayre folke as 16 euere were seen / whiche thenne sayd ' I byleue, yf the kyng beseege the castelle that the worsse shaffe re-tourne vnto hym ' / Thenne sayd the duke Benes of Aygremounte to Gerarde of Rous<sup>2</sup>sillon, ' Broder,' sayd 20 he, ' be not dyssmayd / for I hope to hurte the kyng soo sore yf he come vpon vs, that he shall be wery of his bargayn / but lete vs goo fourth towarde Troye <sup>3</sup>in champayne,<sup>3</sup> and / there we shall fyghte wyth the 24 kyng vygorously / for weH I wote that god shaH helpe vs ayenste hym ' / This was atte the begynnyng of the moneth of Maye, and Charlemayne was at Parys / that abode after his men that sholde come for to goo wyth 28 a grete puyssaunce vpon the duke Benes of Aygre-mounte. And bode not longe, that Rycharde of Normandy cam to the kyng with xxx thousande fyghtyng men. And of a nother side, came to hym the erle 32 Guy, that hadde wyth hym a ryght noble and a grete company of goode men. And<sup>4</sup> after hym came Salamon of bretayne, and the erle Huon ; and of all sides

The King allows many of his barons to go to their own lands till the summer.

Duke Benes, hearing of the intended invasion, summones his kinsmen Gerarde of Roussyllon and Dron of Nantuell to his aid.

Duke Benes sets out with his army to Troyes.

Richard of Normandy and Earl Guy and others join the King at Paris with large forces.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> C. ii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. ii.      <sup>4</sup> Amd in tert.

ye sholde haue seen come to the kyng Charlemayne, Poeteuyns, Gascoyns, Normans, Flemynges, Bernyers, & Bourgoyns / and so many other grete lordes that it was grete wonder for to see / whiche come all, & lodged 4 theym selfe in y<sup>e</sup> medowes of saynte Germaine.

THenne whan the kyng Charlemayne knewe that his folke was all arryued, he had of yt grete Ioye / and incontynente made his bataylles to departe / for to go to 8 his enterpryse ; and made of Rycharde of Normandy, of Walleran of bryllon, of Guydellon of banyere, of Yzacar of Nemours, of Oger the dane / and of Esconf the sone of Oedon, wyth theym xl thousande men, his forewarde / 12 There sholde ye haue seen a ryght noble companye, and many hardy men. They departed from nyghe Parys / and putte theym selfe to the waye streyghte towarde Aygremounte. And they thus rydyng after many 16 dayes Iourney, whiche I canne not telle, came there streyghte to Ogyer the dane, that was <sup>1</sup>in the forewarde, a messenger sore hastily rydyng / that asked to whom was this noble companye / And he answered to 20 hym, that they were kyng Charlemaynes folke. Thenne sayd, <sup>2</sup>Syr, the messenger, <sup>2</sup>that he wolde weþ speke wyth hym. Thenne went Oger the dane, and shewed hym to the kyng / And assoone as the messenger sawe hym, 24 he made hym due reuerence / and the kyng gaaf hym ayen his salute / and hym demaunded what he was and fro whens he come. And the messenger tolde hym that he was of Troye / and that vnto hym he was sent 28 from Aubrey, the lorde of Troye, that was his liego man, <sup>3</sup>whiche besoughte hym humbli for socoures, for the duk Benes of Aygremounte, and his two brederne, Gerarde of Roussyllon and Dron of nantuel, and wyth 32 theym an hundred thousande fyghtyng men, had beseged

They set out for Aygremount.

After many days marching a messenger rides forward and asks whither the army is bound.

The messenger, brought before the King, says he comes from Aubrey of Troyes to ask for aid against Duke Benes.

<sup>1</sup> C. iii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. ii.

<sup>3</sup> car il tenoit de luy Troye, F. orig. c. ii.

hym wythin Troye; and that yf he come not to helpe hym, he muste yelde vp the towne, and also the fayre towre that Julyus Cesar dyde buylde there.

4 WHan Charlemayne the emperour vnderstode that Troye was beseged by the duke Benes and his bretherne / he was full sory for hit. And he swore thenne by saynt Denys of Fraunce, that he sholde goo
 8 there wyth his army, and that yf he myghte holde the duke of Aygremounte, he sholde make hym deye a shamfuH deth. Soo called he the duke Naymes of Bauyere / Goodebew of Fryse / and the duk walleran, 12 and sayd to theym, 'Barons, ye vnderstond what this messenger sayth / lete vs ryde hastely towarde Troy or it be take.' And they answered to hym ryght gladly that they wolde doo it soo / Soo dyde they rydde a 16 goode paas till that they came nyghe Troye / And fyrste of aHe came the forewarde wyth the Oryflame / of the whiche were gouernours Oger the Dane / Rycharde of Normandye: and <sup>1</sup>the duke Walleran / and [with] theym
 20 fourty<sup>2</sup> thousande men / and the messenger of Troye that conduytted theym / And whan they were comen soo nyghe that they sawe Troye afore theym, a messenger came to Gerarde of Roussyllon that was afore Troye /
 24 saynge to hym that the kyng Charlemayne came vpon theym, for to socoure Aubrey wyth a ryght grete and puyssaunte companye / Thenne sayd Gerarde to his bretherne / That is to wyte, duke Benes of Aygre-
 28 mounte and the erle Dron of NantueH, 'that it were goode that they sholde goo ayenste kyng Charlemayne wyth aH theyr puyssaunce, and that eche of theym sholde preue hym selfe a goode man' / They dyde soo 32 as they hadde deuysed, and Gerarde of Roussyllon was the fyrste in the forewarde; and they roode soo longe tyH that the one partye sawe the other. Thenne sayd Oger the Dane to Rycharde of Normandye, whan he

The King marches to succour Aubrey at Troyes.

A messenger is sent to announce to Gerarde of Roussyllon the approach of the army.

Gerarde and his men ride forward.

<sup>1</sup> C. iii. back.    <sup>2</sup> trente, F. orig. c. ii.

sawe come Gerarde of Roussyllon / 'See,' sayd he, 'how Gerarde of Roussyllon weneth for to fare fowH wyth vs. But now lete vs thynke for to diffende vs weH, soo moche that the worshypppe abyde to the kynge Charle- 4 mayne / and to vs' / And thenne they lete renne theyr horses from one parte and from the other / And Gerarde of Roussyllon went and smote an Almayn wyth his spere soo moche, that he made it to entre thourghe the 8 body of hym, whiche felle anone deed to the grounde. And Gerarde toke his baner and cryed wyth an highe voys / 'Roussillon, Roussillon!'<sup>1</sup>

The battle begins,

THenne beganne the bataylle sore strong, felle, and 12 cruch. And when Oger the dane sawe thus his folke deye, he was woode and mad wyth hit / Soo wente he, and smote a knyghte named Ponson by suche a wyse, that he putte his spere thourghe the body of hym, 16 whiche felle down <sup>2</sup>deed afore him. And whan Gerarde hadde seen the same, he wente and smote one of Ogyers and rages fiercely. men / soo that aHle deed he cast hym afore hym / <sup>3</sup>And thenne he sayd,<sup>3</sup> 'Ye haue this for your maysters sake, 20 Ogyer' / Moche grete and merueyllouse was the stoure, and the bataiH soo fyers. For there sholde ye haue seen soo many of sheldes perced and clouen / and soo many a haubergeon broken / and salettes and helmes 24 vnboyled and sore beten / and soo many men lienge vpon thother deed, that aH the erthe was couered wyth the blood of the deed men, and of theym that were hurte there, soo that it was a grete pyte for to see. 28 And thenne came the duke Benes of Aygreounte, that spored hys horse terryble, and wente and smote Enguerran, lord of Peronne and of saynte Quynntyne, soo harde, that he ouerthrewe hym deed afore hym, and 32 thenne sayd, 'Now goo, goddys curse haue thou!' and cryed wyth an highe voys, 'Aygreounte' / And thenne

Duke Benes slays Enguerran, Lord of Peronne.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. iii. back.      <sup>2</sup> C. iiiii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. iii. back.

came to him his brother, the duke of Nantueff, wyth all his folke, and they wente all togyder vpon Charlemaynes folke. And of the other parte came wyth grete 4 puyssaunce Almayns, Poeteuyns, and Lombardes also, that were of the parte of kyng Charlemayne / So medled theymself the one partye among the other / And there was moche harde and horryble assemble / For there 8 were slayne many myghty and worthy knyghtes of bothe sydes / And Rycharde of Normandye shewed weff there his grete prowesse and worthynes / for he wente and smote a knyghte that Gerarde of Roussyllon loued 12 moche, by suche a streyngthe that he ouerthrewe hym deed from hys horse to the erthe afore the sayd Gerarde / whiche thenne sayd / ' Now am I weff sory and wrothe for hym that now ys deed, that I loued 16 soo sore. Certes, I shafl neuer haue Ioye atte my herte but that I be a'uenged therof shortely.' Thenne toke Gerarde of Roussyllon his baner in his fyste / but his broder of Nantueff came<sup>2</sup> anone to hym and sayd, 20 ' Broder, I counseythe you that ye tourne agayn / for here cometh Charlemayne wyth his folke, and weff I telle you, that yf we abyde hym / the losse shafl torne vpon vs.' And while they were spekyng thus, Wal-24 leron of Bollon smote the neuwe of Gerarde of Roussillon soo that he foyned atte hym wyth his swerde thurgh the body of hym, and felle down deed to the erthe. Thenne trowed Gerarde to haue goon oute of 28 his wytte / and sente<sup>3</sup> anone for the duke Benes his broder, that he sholde come soone to socoure hym /
 And he dyde soo as preu and valyaunte that he was.
 And of the other side assembled there the kyng and 32 his folke. ¶ Soo shafl you now here of a thyng mer-ueyllouse, of soo grete a noblesse, that at the same feelde were cruechly slayne / This was in the moneth of Maye,

The prowess of Richard of Normandy.

Walleron of Bollon kills
 Gerarde's nephew.

Gerarde sends to Duke Benes for aid.

<sup>1</sup> C. iiii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Promptement, F. orig. c. iii.
 querir, F. orig. c. iii.

vpon a mornynge, that kyng Charlemyne dide assemble his folke wyth the folke of the duke of Aygremounte and of his bretherne / to the whiche assemble ye sholde haue seen many fayr harneyses shynynge, for the sonne 4 that fayr and clere was that daye, the whiche assemblee was wonderfuH stronge / For there were so many feet and hedes smytten of, and so many good horses slayne, 1 and tho ther ranne thurgh the medowes, wherof the 8 maysters leye deed vpon the grasse.<sup>1</sup> And wyte it for trouthe, that there were deed that same daye of the one side and of the other, more than xl<sup>2</sup> thousande men.
 Ha, god, what slaughter! there was moche grete noblesse 12 deed. The duk Benes, sore angled, went and smote sire Walter, lorde of Pyerelee, in his shelde, soo that his spere wente thourgh the body of hym, and felle doun deed afore hym. Thenne cryed he wyth an highe 16 voys, 'his banere, <sup>3</sup> Aygremounte!'

Duke Benes kills
 Sir Walter, Lord
 of Pyerelee.

G Rete was the presse / and the bataylle fyers and merueyllouse. And there shewed Rycharde of Normandy moche worthyly his grete hardynes / For 20 he Iousted ayenste the duke of Aygremounte soo that he perced his sheelde, and dyde hurte hym ryght sore / And sayd to hym / 'By god, ye shaH not this daye escape detha. It was an euylH daye for you whan ye 24 dyde slee my lorde Lohyer' / And wyth that, he dyd drawe oute his swerde / And smote the duke agayne vpon his helme / in suche a wyse that yf it hadde not be the coyffe of stele that made his stroke to slyde / 28 the sayd benes hadde be deed that houre. And the stroke felle doun vpon the horse, and cutte the horse in two, as thoughe hit had be noo thyng; and thus felle the horse deed vnder his mayster / Thenne was the 32 duke Benes sore abasshed whan he thus founde hym-

Richard of Normandy jousts
 against Duke
 Benes.

Duke Benes' horse
 is killed.

<sup>1-1</sup> et les autres courir parmi les prez dont les maistres gisoiet mors par dessus lerbe.

<sup>2</sup> lx, in F. orig. c. iii.

<sup>3</sup> C. v.

selfe a grounde / But he stode vppe on his feete redyly, as he that was preu and valyaunte, holdyng hys swerde in his hande / And wente and smote a knyghte 4 named sire Symon, soo that he kylled hym sterke deed in the place / And thenne he called wyth an highe voys / Aygreounte his baner. Thenne came to hym his two bretherne / the duke of Roussyllon and of 8 Nantueſt / And of the side of kyng Charlemayne came Ogyer, Naymes, Walleran of Bollon, Huon lorde of Mauns, the erle Salamon, Leon of Fryse, the archebyshop Turpyn, and Escouf the sone of Oedon / And 12 thenne sholde ye haue seen there, at that assemble, moche grete and merueyllouse noblesse of knyghtes that leye deed vpon the erthe, the one vpon the other, that it was a pyetous sighte to be-holde.

He fights Sir
 Symon on foot
 and kills him.

16 TNO this inhumayn occysion was come themperoure Charlemayn,<sup>1</sup> cryeng, 'barons, yf they escape vs, we shal <sup>2</sup>neuer haue honoure' / and thenne he bare vppe his spere to the reest, and wente and smote in to 20 the shelde of Gerarde of roussyllon, so that he ouerthrewe bothe horse and man to the grounde / And there hadde be his last daye, yf hit hadde not be the duke Benes and Dron, his bretherne / that moche 24 worthyly, and wyth grete deligence, socoured hym.
 Of that other partye, came Ogyer the Dane, vpon his goode horse Broyforte, that smote a knyghte of the folke of Gerarde, duke of Roussyllon, called sire 28 Foulquet, soo that he cloue hym to the teeth, and felle down deed to the erth. And whan Gerarde of Roussillon sawe thus his knyghte slayne, he called to god and to our lady, sayng, 'Weſt haue I this daye loste my fayr 32 and goode knyghte.' And the duke of Aygreounte was sore abashed, and prayed god also full pyetously that it wolde playse hym to kepe hym from deth, and from fallyng into the handes of Charlemayne. Nyghe

Charlemagne
 overthrowes Gerarde,

but Duke Benes
 and Dron save
 him.

Duke Benes prays that his life may be spared.

<sup>1</sup> de France, F. orig. c. iv. back.      <sup>2</sup> C. v. back.

The battle ceases
at sundown.

Gerarde counsels
a renewal of the fight on the morrow.

Duke Nantuell
counsels that
Duke Benes
should make amends to Charlemagne for the death of Lohier.

was the sonne vnder, and it was well aboute complyn tyme / and the fyghters of the one parte and of the other were wery and sore chauffed / And soo wyth-drewē the thre bretherne abacke to their tentes wyth 4 moche wrathe / and in especyall Gerarde of Roussyllon, that hadde loste that daye Aymanoy his cosyn, and a hundred other of the beste Knyghtes of his company / And he sayd in this wyse / ‘An euyH houre it was 8 whan the sone of Charlemayne was slayne’ / Thenne came to hym the duke Benes of Aygremounte bledynge, as he that was horribly wounded / And whan Gerarde sawe hym / he began to sighe tenderly, saynge / ‘Fayr 12 brother, are ye wounded to dethe?’ ‘Nay,’ sayd he, ‘I shaH soone be hole.’ Thenne swore Gerarde the duke of Roussyllon, that to morowe atte the sonne rysyngē / He sholde begynne agayne the batayHe 16 ayenste kyngē Charlemayne and his <sup>1</sup>folke, wherfore xxx thousande shaH lose theyr lyues. ‘Alas, for god, nay,’ sayd his broder, the duke NantueH. ‘But yf ye wyH doo my counseyH we shaH sende xxx. of the 20 wysēst knyghtes that we haue, vnto kyng Charlemayne, and by our sayd knyghtes we shaH doo hym to wyte, and shewe humbli that he haue pyte and mercy of vs, and that the duke Benes our brother shaH amende hym 24 the deth of his sone Lohier, euen soo as it shaH be aduysed by the prynces and barons of his felaushyp and of ours / and ye knowe well aH redy that we ben his liege men, and that for to werre ayenste hym we 28 doo cruēH falshed / And yet more it is / that yf he had lost aH his folke that he<sup>2</sup> hath here wyth hym / or euer that it were a moneth passed he sholde haue recouered twys as many / soo maye we no thyng doo ayēst 32 hym / And therefore maye we noo thyng doo ayēst hym ; and therefore I praye you, my brethern, that ye

<sup>1</sup> C. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> qu'il amene sur nous, F. orig. c. iiii.

well doo thus' / And to hym answered his two brethern that they wolde doo it / syn that he counseyllid theym soo ; And concluded togyder that they sholde sende 4 thither as soone as it were daye. They made that nyghte good watche vnto the mornyng / and thenne they made redy theyr messagers for to sende to the kyng Charlemayne. And whan they were redy / 8 Gerarde of roussyllon sayd to theym / 'Lordes, saye well to kyng Charlemayne that we be sore dysplaysed of the deth of his sone Lohier, and that our brother, the duke Benes, repenteth hymselfe of it full sore, & 12 that yf it playse hym to haue mercy of vs, that we shall go and serue hym where it shall playse hym to sende vs, wyth x thousande fyghtyng men / And also ye shall saye to Naymes of bauyere, that we 16 praye hym that we he wyll employe hymselfe to-warde the kyng Charlemayne, that this accorde maye be hadde.'

Duke Nantuell's advice is taken.

Messengers sent to offer allegiance
 to the King.

20 After that the messagers hadde well alle alonge vnderstande what they sholde saye to the kyng Charlemayne from the thre bretherne dukes / They lyghted on horsebacke eche of theym / berynge braunches of olyue tree in their handes, In token of 24 peas / And ceassed not to ryde tyl that they were come afore the tente of the kyng Charlemayne / Thenne spake one of theym, whiche was named Steuyn / that salued the kyng in this manere / 28 'Syre, I praye<sup>2</sup> our lorde that of his grace gyue you goode lyfe and longe / And wyte, syre, that the duke Gerarde of Roussyllon, & the duke Benes of Aygremount, and Dron of Nantuell, ben comen hider, the 32 whiche crye you mercy / and byseche you ryght humbly that it playse you to pardone theym the dethe of your

The messengers
 deliver their message to the King, stating Gerarde, and Duke Benes, and Dron of Nantuell offer their allegiance to him.

<sup>1</sup> C. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> celluy dieu q' forma noz pere et mere adam, et eue createur de toutes choses, benoise vous roy Charlemagne, F. orig. c. v. back.

sone Lohyer / of the whiche they are wrothe and sory.
 And the duke of Aygremounte lete you wyte by vs / that yf hyt be your playsure to doo soo, that he and his bretherne shaHe be your liegemen,<sup>1</sup> And shalle come to 4 serue you wyth x thousande fyghtyng men in alle that shaHe be your playsure to employe theym / Syre, for godys sake, haue remembraunce that god forgaffe his dethe to Longys, that crueHy stycked hym to the 8 herte;<sup>2</sup> wherefore, syre, playse it you to pardone theym, and take theym to your goode grace. And of this right humbly they beseche you.'

WHan the kyng Charlemayne hadde thus herde 12 speke the messagers of the thre bretherne / He fromped his forhede, and knytted his browes, and loked ful angrely / And atte that owre he answered to theym noo thyng / And thenne soone after he beganne 16 to speke in this manere: 'By my feyth, Sir Steuyn,' sayd he, 'weH had the duke Benes lost his wyttes whan he soo shamfully slewe <sup>3</sup>my dere sone Lohier, the<sup>4</sup> whiche I loued soo tenderly. Now, is he my 20 man? wyH he or not?' 'Syre,' sayd Steuyn, 'I am certeyne that he shaHe doo to you alle rayson to the dyrectyon of your goode counseyHe' / Then sayde the kyng, 'of this we shaHe counseyHe vs' / And wyth- 24
 drewe hym a lityH a side / and called to hym duke Naymes, Ogyer the dane / sire Salamon, Huon of Mauns, Walleron of Boullon / Odet of Langres, and Leon of Fryse, and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, here ben 28
 the messagers of the duke Benes & of his brethern, that sende me worde that they wyH come to serue me where my wylle shaH be, wyth x thousande goode fyghtyng men / yf we wyH pardonne theym the 32 dethe of my sone Lohier; And they shaH be oure

The King takes counsel with his lords.

<sup>1</sup> Et luz et ses freres Gerart de Roussyllon et
 Dron de Natuel les quelz vous viedrot servir.

<sup>2</sup> de sa lauce, F. orig. c. v.      <sup>3</sup> C. vii.

<sup>4</sup> we in text.

vassaylles and treue liege men ; And of vs they shaHe holde theyr londes and theyr lordeshyppes' / 'Syre,' answered the duke Naymes, 'in this is noo thyng but 4 weH. Soo counseylle I you that ye pardoune theym /
 For<sup>1</sup> they be moche valyaunte / and of grete renowne ; wherfore pardoune theym, yf it playse you.'

Duke Naymes
 counsels the King
 to accept their allegiance.

8 THenne by the counseyffe of the duke Naymes of Bauyere, the kyng dyde pardoune the thre bretherne, and called to hym the thre<sup>2</sup> knyghtes / and sayd to theym / how he pardouned the thre dukes the dethe of his sone Lohier / by suche a condycyon that 12 the duke Benes of Aygremounte sholde come for to serue hym atte the feste of saynte Iohn<sup>3</sup> nexte comyng wyth ten thousande fyghtyng men weH arrayed.

The King pardons
 the three Dukes,

on condition that
 Duke Benes
 should serve him
 with ten thousand men at the feast of St. John.

'And ye shaHe telle to theym, that they surely come 16 now to me for to take of theym theyr othe and feyth, that they shaHe from hens fourthe / obeye and serue me truly ; And that of me they shaHe holde aHe theyr landes.' Thenne departed the knyghtes from afore

The messengers
 return and announce the King's decision.

20 kyng Charlemayn, & cam ayen to the dukes, and shewed to theym how they<sup>4</sup> had sped of their message wyth the kyng, wherof the thre bretherne thanked moche humbly oure lorde / Thenne sayde the duke

24 Rycharde<sup>5</sup> of Roussillon, 'it is rayson that we take of<sup>6</sup> oure goode gownes, and goo to the kyng naked, and crie hym mercy of this that we haue thus offended ayenst his highe puyssaunce and lordeshyppe' / And 28 the other two bretherne answered that weH they oughte

The Dukes and many knyghts go before the King naked and barefooted to offer
 their allegiance.

to doo soo / Soo toke the noble knyghtes theyr clothes of,<sup>6</sup> and alle naked, bare fote, and in poure estate, departed from theyr lodges / And well foure thousande 32 knyghtes wyth theym, aHe bare fote & in theyr shertes, and in suche estate as were theyr maysters. In thys

<sup>1</sup> car les troys ducs, F. orig. c. v.

<sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. v.

<sup>3</sup> baptiste, F. orig. c. v.

<sup>4</sup> C. vii. back.

<sup>5</sup> Girart de Roussillon a ses freres, c. v. F. orig.

<sup>6</sup> off.

wyse they came to fore the kyng Charlemayne, And wyte weH that in ryght grete humylite were sette the thre bretherne for to haue peas and accorde wyth the kyng Charlemayne, that was wrothe to theym, specy- 4 aH to the duke of Aygremounte / as more playnly ye shaH here hereafter.

WHan kyng Charlemayne sawe thus come the thre bretherne wyth theyr barons and knyghtes, 8 he called to hym the duke Naymes and many other barons / and sayd to theym / 'Canne not ye telle me what folke ye see yonder commynge?' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'it is duk Benes of Aygremounte 12 wyth his folke / that come for to requyre you of mercy' / This hangynge, the duke Benes of Aygre-mounte came afore the kyng, and caste hym selfe vpon his knee / and sayd to hym in this wyse / 'Syre, for god 16
I crye you mercy; we ben here comen by your commaundement / Yf I haue sleyne your ders<sup>1</sup> sone by my foly, I now (as your man) yelde me and my bretherne also, Gerarde of roussillon & Dron of nantuel, & wyH 20 be your liege men & serue you wyth aH our pussaunce where your plaisur <sup>2</sup>shaH be to sette vs vnto / and neuer dayes of our lyues we shaH faylle you / but yf it be longe of you' / 24

Benes asks the King's pardon for the death of Lohier.

Thenne whan the kyng sawe theym thus come humbli towarde his presence in theyr shertes, and barefoote, & had herde this that the duke of Aygre-mounte had sayd to hym / he had of them right grete 28 pyte / and pardouned theym the deth of his sone Lohier, & aH his euyH wyH / Thenne shold ye haue seen from one parte and from the other, kysse and colle eche other theyr kynsmen / and some wepte for 32 ioye, & thother for pyte.

Charlemagne has pity for him, and grants his request.

THenne were pleased the barons wyth the kyng Charlemayn by the counseyH of the good duke

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. vi. back.    <sup>2</sup> C. viii.

Naymes. thenne sware and promysed the thre brethern good fidelite <sup>1</sup>to the kyng Charlemayne<sup>1</sup> / and that they sholde serue hym at all tymes that he sholde calle 4 for theym / Soo toke they a glade leue from kyng Charlemayne; but the kyng charged the duke Benes of Aygremount that he sholde come to serue hym at the feste of seynt Iohn nexte comyng / And thenne 8 returned kyng charlemayne towarde Parys / and the bretherne wente ayen right glad, eche of theym towarde his place / for well they trowed to haue accorde the duke Benes of Aygremounte theyr broder towarde 12 Charlemayne / But other wyse it wente, & fuH lityft was worthe their accorde, for soone after deyed therof the duke Benes of Aygremounte by trason, and vnder the saufconduyt of the kyng Charlemayne, as ye<sup>2</sup> 16 shaH vnderstonde yf ye wylle here me. ¶ Ye shaH wyte that a lityl afore the feste of saynt Iohn baptiste that the kyng Charlemayne helde a grete court in Paris, & the duke Benes forgate not to goo thyder 20 as he had promysed / soo departed he fro Aygremounte wyth two hundred knyghtes, and toke his way for to come to Paris towarde the <sup>3</sup>kyng for to serue hym where he wolde put hym vnto. Now shaH ye here 24 how the kyng, beyng in Parys / came towarde hym the erle Guenes his neuewe, Aoryfoulquet of moryllon, Hardres and Berenger, whiche tolde hym how the duk Benes came for to serue hym wyth well two hundred 28 knyghtes / saynge by this maner / 'Syr, how maye ye loue nor well be serued of hym that soo cruely hath slayne your sone, oure cosin / yf your playsure were we sholde well avenge you of hym / For in goode soothe 32 we sholde slee hym.' 'Guenes,' sayd y<sup>e</sup> kyng, 'it were traizon, for we haue gyuen to hym tryewes. Always doo wyth it your wyH, so that the synne tourne not

Duke Benes
swears fidelity to
the King.

At the feast of St.
John, Benes goes towards Paris.

Earl Guenes, the nephew of the King, announces
the approach of
Duke Benes,

and begs leave to
slay him

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig. c. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> ye ye in text.

<sup>3</sup> C. viii. back.

vpon me, and kepe you. For in certeyn the duke of Aygremounte is ryght myghty, and of grete kynred / and weH ye myghte happe to haue a doo, yf ye fulfyll in this your owne entente.' 'Syre,' answered Guenes, 4 'care ye not therfore / for there nys soo ryche a man in aH the worlde that durste vndertake ony thyng ayenste me and my linage.' 'Syre,' sayd Guenelon, 'tomorowe erly we shaft departe wyth foure thousande fyghtyng 8 men / and take noo care for it / For we shaft delyuer this worlde of hym.' 'Certes,' sayd the kyng, 'it were trayson' / 'Care not therfor,' sayd Guenes, 'he slewe weH your sone Lohier by trayson, whiche was my 12 kynnesman, And therefore I wyH be auenged and<sup>1</sup> I can.
 'Now doo you therin,' sayd the kyng, 'protestyng alwayes that I am not therto consentynge.'

Although protesting, the King gives his sanction
 to the traitor Guenes.

WHan the mornyng came, departed weH erly from 16 Parys the sayd Guenelon and his felawes, and wyth theym weH foure thousande fyghtyng men / And neuer they taryed tyll that they came in the Valey of Soyssons / And there they recounted the duke Benes 20 wyth his puyssaunce; and whan the duk Benes sawe theym<sup>2</sup> come, he sayd to his <sup>3</sup>folke, 'Lordes, I trowe that yonder be som folke of the kingis, that retourne ayen from the court' / 'It is noo force<sup>4</sup>,' sayd one of his 24 knyghtes. 'I wote not what it maye be,' sayd the duke / 'For the kyng Charlemayne is sore vengable for to auenge hymselfe / And also he hath wyth hym a lynage of folke, the whiche be felle and crueH / Is it 28 Guenes, foulques of Moryllon, and certeyn other of his court / And in trouthe, to nyghte in my slepe I dremed that a gryffon came oute of the heuens, that perced my shelde and aH myn armes, soo that his nayles stacke in 32 to my lyuer and my mylte / and aH my men were therof in grete tourmente / and they aH were eten wyth

In the valley of Solssons they encounter the Duke and his knyghts.

On their approach Benes relates his fears of treachery
 on the part of Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> if.      <sup>2</sup> vit venir si noble copaignie, F. orig. c. vi.

<sup>3</sup> D. i.

<sup>4</sup> matter.

bore and of lions, and noone of theym scaped but one alone / And also me semed that oute of my mouth yssued a white douve' / Thenne sayd one of hys 4 knyghtes that it was aff but well / and that for cause of this dreame he oughte not to dysmaye hymselfe / 'I wote not,' sayd the duke, 'what god shaH sende me, but of this my herte dredeth' / Soo commaunded the 8 duk Benes that euery man shold arme hymselfe. And his knyghtes answered, that right gladly they wolde soo doo. Soo beganne eueriche of theym to seke his armes and habylmentes / Here shaHe you here of the harde 12 hewyng, and of a thyng heuy to be recounted, of the grete slaughter that made the traytour Guenellon of the goode duke Benes of Aygremounte.

The Duke commands every man
 to arm himself.

T[h]E erle Guenes rode wyth grete force, that was 16 wonderfull strong & fyers, and well accompanied.
 Thenne wente and mette wyth the duk Benes first, Foulquet of Moryllon, the whiche sayd to hym that he hadde doon ylle for to slee Lohyer the sone eldest 20 of the kyng Charlemayne / but or euer the euyne came he sholde haue a sory rewarde for it. Whan the duke vnderstode hym, he merueylled hym <sup>1</sup>selfe moche, and sayd / 'Ha god, how myght one kepe hym frome 24 traytours / Alas, I helde the kyng Charlemayne for a true prynce / and I see now the contrary; but afore that I deye, I shaH selle my deth ful dere' / Thenne wente they and fought, the one partye ayenst the other, 28 moche angrely. In so moche that Guenes smotte byfore the duke, hys cosyn Reyner, soo that he ouerthrewe hym doun deed to the erth afore his feete; and after, he cryed wyth an hie voys / 'smyte on, knyghtes, for he 32 slewe my good cosin Lohier / The duk Benes of Aygre-mount dayned not accorde wyth me / but now I shaHe selle it hym full dere.' So ranne Guenes & his folke vpon the duke Benes of Aygremounte / and the duke

The Duke bewails
 the treachery of Charlemaigne.

<sup>1</sup> D. i. back.

Guenes slays a knight, called Sir Fawcon.

ryght worthili deffended hym selfe, & smote a knyghte named sire Fawcon, so that he shoued his swerde in to the body of hym, and he felle deed afore hym. And after this the duke Benes of Aygre-mount toke hym 4 selfe for to wepe strongly / and wysshed moche after his two bretherne, and also after his neuwes. 'Alas,' said he, 'dere sone Mawgys! where be you now, that ye be not here for to socoure me / for wel I wote, yf ye 8 wyst this enterprise, ye sholde well socoure me / Ha, my dere broder, the duke of Dordonne & of NantueH, 1 & Gerarde of Roussyllon,<sup>1</sup> weH I know that ye shaH neuer see me alyue / Alas, that ye knowe not the false 12 enterpryse of Charlemayne and of the erle Guenellon / that soo cruehly and by grete trayson shaHe this daye make me Inhumaynly for to deye. WeH I wote that ryght worthily ye sholde come helpe me. Ha, my dere 16 neuwes, Reynawde, Alarde, Rycharde, and Guycharde, soo moche nede I haue this daye of you. Ha, my dere newew Reynawde, worthy knyghte / as thou arte / yf hit playse to god of hys benygne grace / that thou 20 myghte know the greuou tourmente and the sorowfuH matyere to the whi<sup>2</sup>che by trayson I am this day lyuered / well I wote that by the<sup>3</sup> I sholde haue socours / for in aH the worlde ys not thy peere of 24 beaulte, of goodnesse, of prowesse, and of worthynesse / Now maye not this daye socoure me aH my noble and worthy lynage / but that cruehly, and vnder the sauf-conduyt of Charlemayne, I shaH deye pyeteously.' 28

Duke Benes weeps for the absence of Mawgis, and the four sons.

The battle rages Berceley.

FYers was the batayH, and ryght harde to endure, but well ye maye wyte that the duke of Aygre-mounte myghte not resiste ayenste soo many folke; for he hadde not wyth hym but two hundred knyghtes / 32 and the<sup>4</sup> other were moo than four thousande: thus were they euyH matched / Thenne sholde ye haue seen

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. vii.    <sup>2</sup> D. ii.    <sup>3</sup> thee.

<sup>4</sup> traictres, F. orig. c. vii.

that daye soo moche braynes in the feelde / soo many feete and hedes smytten of / that it was a pyteouse thyng to beholde / After came yet ayen Guenes, that 4 smote Toyusselyne of Bloye soo that he casted hym ded to the erth / and he made sone to go backe the duk Benes folke of Aygremounte / Thenne was sore abashed the duke of Aygremounte / the whiche knewe 8 well that wythoute dethe he myghte not escape. Soo wente he, and smote one of Guenes folke soo grete a stroke, that he ouerthrewe hym deed / for noon otherwyse he coude doo / but deffende hymselfe as well as 12 he coude for to lengthe his lyffe / Ha, god, what a grete dommage it was to haue thus shamfully betrayed hym / for after, many chirches, many townes and castelles were therefore sette in a fyre<sup>1</sup> / and soo many grete nobles 16 full pyetously broughte to deth / Soo moche sped the traytour Guenes ayenst the goode duke of Aygremounte, that the folke of the duke were weke and almoste gon / For, of the two hundred that he hadde broughte, he 20 hadde noo moo wyth hym but<sup>2</sup> fourthi / 'Barons,' sayd the duke Benes of Aygremounte, 'ye see that we ben almoste <sup>3</sup>aH deed, yf we deffende vs not wyth grete herte and worthynes / and for goddis loue lete euery 24 of vs be worthe thre as longe as we shaH now be alyue.
 For ye see, that here pyetously we muste departe and breke felowshyp.' Thenne wente the duke agayn, and smote a knyghte named syre Helye, soo that he mad 28 hym to falle deed to the erthe. And thenne cryed wyth an hyghe voyce / 'Smyte well, barons.' The valey was fayre, and sounded of the noyse<sup>4</sup> that was made there / And atte that oure, one named Gryffoon of 32 Hautefelle / wente and smote the dukes horse in to the breste wyth his spere, soo that he ouerthrewe hym

Benes defends
 himself valiantly,

but of his two hundred folk only forty remain
 alive.

Gryffoon of Hautefelle kills
 the Duke's horse.

<sup>1</sup> et en flambe, F. orig. c. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> cinquante, F. orig. c. viii. back.      <sup>3</sup> D. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> des coups quilz donnoient sur les heaulmes, F. orig. c. viii. back.

vnder the horse / And the duke anoone arose<sup>1</sup> vppon his feete, and toke his swerde, wenyng to smyte the sayd Gryffon ; but the stroke felle vppon the horse, soo that he cutted hym asonder, as yt hadde ben noo thyng. 4

Duke Benes fights
on foot,

but is slain by Earl Guenes.

WHan the duke Benes of Aygremounte sawe hym selfe thus on foote he knewe weH that it was doon<sup>2</sup> of hym / but weH he sware that his dethe he sholde selle righte dere. But sodaynly came there vpon 8 hym the erle Guenes, that satte vppon a goode courser, the whiche smote the duke Benes of Aygremounte wyth his spere suche a stroke, that he shoued hym thorughe and thorughe his body, and thus fell down deed the 12 duke Benes of Aygremounte / And thenne the duke Gryffon, the fader of the sayd Guenes, cam to the duke Benes of Aygremounte that laye deed vppon the sande / and shoued his swerde in to his foundement.<sup>3</sup> 16 Thenne sayd the duke Gryffon, 'Now haste you thi rewarde, for my lorde Lohyers<sup>4</sup> deeth that thou late slew shamefully wythin thy palays. Now is the goode and worthy duke Benes of Aygremount deceased, god of his 20 soule haue mercy' / And the traytour Guenellon and the <sup>5</sup>lorde of Haultefelle, <sup>6</sup>that lyghted vpon a goode horse,<sup>6</sup> wente after the duke of Ayyremountes<sup>7</sup> folke <sup>8</sup>that fledde,<sup>8</sup> whiche were but x. a lyue of two hundred, and 24 yet these x. were soone ouertaken. And thenne the traytours made theym to swere and promytte that the body of the late duke, their mayster, they sholde bere to Aygremounte / lyke that he hadde doo brynge the 28 body of Lohier to Parys in a byere. And the sayd knyghtes promysed them for to doo so. So toke they the corps from the other bodies deed, wherof was there grete number, and put hym in a byere / and thenne 32

Guenellon pursues
the folk of Duke Benes, and slays
all but ten.

The ten knyghts carry the body of Benes to Agre-
mounte.

<sup>1</sup> moult vaillammēt, F. orig. c. viii.    <sup>2</sup> doon = all up with.

<sup>3</sup> si luy est lame du corps despartie, F. orig. c. viii. back.

<sup>4</sup> que tu as na gueres occis villainement, F. orig. c. viii. back.

<sup>5</sup> D. iii.    <sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. c. viii. back.

<sup>7</sup> Benes.    <sup>8-8</sup> omitted, F. orig.

wente on their waye wyth aH / And whan they were goon a lityH ferder / god knoweth what sorowe and lamentacyon<sup>1</sup> that they made for the dethe of theyr 4 mayster, sayeng, 'Ha, god, goode duke that soo worthy was, how now we are sory for the / Certaynly fuH euyH hath doon kyng Charlemayne, that vnder hys saufconduytte hath made the to be slayn in traizon' / 8 These soroufuH knyghtes went thus makyng theyr mone, beryng the body of the duke Benes, their mayster, vpon a byere that two horses<sup>2</sup> bare, whiche corps neuer stanchid of bledyng by the space of viii 12 myles. And how many dayes Iourney that thise knyghtes were wyth the body of theyr mayster by the waye, I can not telle you / but they wente soo longe that they cam nygh Aigremounte / and approched soo 16 moche that the tydynges cam to the towne, and to the duchesse, that her lorde hadde ben thus traytoursly slayne. Soo oughte not be asked of the grete sorow that the duchesse and her sone Mawgys made / They 20 yssued after oute of the towne wyth theym of the chirche, and wente ayenste the corps / Nor also oughte not to be asked yf there were made that daye grete wepynges and lamentacyons. For whan the duchesse 24 saw her lorde / and the <sup>3</sup>woundes that he hadde in hys body, more than thre tymes she felle down in a swoune vppon hym / and in thys wyse they bare the corps to the chieff chyrche / and the bysshop of the towne dyde 28 the seruyse, and thenne he was putte in his graue, and was ryght reuerently buried. Thenne sayd hys sone Mawgys, 'Good lorde, what a dompage is this, of suche a worthy lorde, to haue be thus slayne cruelly by 32 trayson; but and yf I lyue longe, Charlemayne & the traytours that this haue doon, shaH abyte for it fuH derely' / His lady moder he recomforted, and sayd to Tidings reach the duchess that her lord is slain.

The duchess
 swoons.

<sup>1</sup> et piteulx pleurs firent les ditz chevaliers, F. orig. c. viii.

<sup>2</sup> pallefroya, F. orig. c. viii.      <sup>3</sup> D. iii. back.

Mawgis comforts his mother, and vows vengeance on Charlemagne with the help of the four sons.

her / ' My dere moder, haue a lytyH pacyence ; for myn vnclcs, Gerarde of Roussyllon, Dron of NantueH / and my cosins, Reynaude, Alarde, Rycharde, and Guycharde shaH helpe me wel for to auenge the dethe of my lorde 4 my fader.' Now shaH we leue here to speke of theym of Aygremounte, that ben in grete lamentacyon and wepynges for the dethe of theyr lorde / and shaH re- 8 tourne to telle of the traytours Gryffon and of Guenes his sone, that wyth theyr folke were goon ayen to Parys.

CHAPTER II.

¶ How Gryffon of Haultefelle and Guenellon after that they hadde slayne the duke Benes 12 of Aygremounte they retourned to Parys, and recounted to the kyng Charlemayne the mortalle trayson that they hadde commysed and doon / wherof the kyng Charle- 16 mayne was glad / but afterwarde he was full wrothe and sory for it. For, after the duke of Aygremountes dethe, his two bretherne, Gerarde of Roussyllon and Dron of 20 Nantuell, werred sore agaynste hym<sup>1</sup> wyth their neuewe Mawgys / and thenne they made peas and accorded togyder. But the kyng Charlemayne apoynted not wyth the 24 foure sones of Aymon, nor to Mawgys theyr cosin / ¶ Item, sheweth also the same <sup>2</sup>chapytre, how Reynawde slewe the neuewe of kyng Charlemayne wyth a ches borde, 28 as they were playnge togyder at the chesses / wherof the werre began / the whiche was sore mortall / as ye shall now here here after, and lasted soo longe that it dyde grete dommage to the royaume of Fraunce.

<sup>1</sup> et aussi Mawgis son filz, F. orig. b. l. back.

<sup>2</sup> D. iiii.

4 ¶ Capytulum<sup>1</sup> / iiiii.

YE shaß now here & vnderstande from the hensfourthon a terryble and a pyetous songe, yf ye therafter liste to herken / This was atte the 8 feste of Penthecoste after the holy thursdaye / that the kyng Charlemayne helde a grete courte in Parys / after that he hadde accorded wyth the bretherne of the sayd duke Benes of Aygreounte / And to the sayd feste 12 came WyHiam the Englysse, Walleran of Bullon, xv / kynges and xxx dukes, and well lx erles were there atte that daye, for to crowne Charlemayne / and also was come there the duke Aymon of Dordonne, wyth 16 his foure<sup>2</sup> sones, that is to wyte, Reynawde, Alarde, Rycharde, and Guycharde / to the whiche Aymon the kinge sayd / 'Aymon,' sayd he, 'I loue you and your children weß. And wyte that I wiß make of the 20 fayre Reynawde, my stywarde / and the other shaß serue me for to bere my faucons and goo<sup>3</sup> wyth me.
'Syre,' sayd the good Aymon / 'I thanke you moche of the grete worshippe that ye doo to me and to my 24 chyldren / and wyt that they shaß serue you truly as your liege men. But weß I telle you, good kyng, that ye myspryed sore whan my brother the duk Benes of Aygreounte, vnder your saußconduyt, and 28 in treyson, ye made thus shamfully deye / And beleue that it greueth me full sore att herte / and yf we doubted not you soo moche, Certes, vengeance we sholde take therof / but sith that my broder Gerarde 32 hath pardoned it to you : I forgyue it you also.'
'Aymon,' sayd the kyng, 'ye knowe better than that

At the feast of Pentecost Charle-
mayne and all his barons are assembled at Paris,

also Aymon and his four sons.

Charlemayne
offers to make Reynawde his steward.
Aymon thanks
him,

but complains of his treason towards Duke
Benes.

<sup>1</sup> chap. ii. ca. iiiii. in Caxton.    <sup>2</sup> beaulx, F. orig. b. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> en gibier avecques moy, F. orig. b. i. back.    <sup>4</sup> D. iiiii. back.

The King cites the death of Lohier as his excuse.

ye saye ; for ye knowe weH the offence that your broder hadde doon to me, for to haue slayne soo cruely Lohier my eldeste sone, that I loued soo moche. Now sette the one agaynste the other, and lete be spoken nomore 4 therof' / 'Nomore we shall,' sayd duke Aymon / 'but weH I praye god to haue mercy of his soule, for he was a ryght worthy knyghte' / Thenne cam fourthe Reynawde, Alard, Guycharde, and Rycharde, whiche 8 raysoned wyth the kynge / saynge in this maner / 'Syr,' sayd Reynawde, 'the fayreste of aH knyghtes, and moost experte in faytes of knyghthode<sup>1</sup> / ye haue made me, and my bretherne that ben now here afore 12 you, knyghtes / but wyte it for veray certeyn, that we Reynawde confesses his hatred to the King.

The four sons come before the King.

loue you not, and that we haue towarde you a grete and a mortalle hate, for the dethe of oure vncler the duke Benes of Aygremounte / of the whiche dethe ye 16 haue not accorded wyth vs' / Whan the kynge vnderstode Reynawde, he loked grymly and fyersly in his vysage for grete wrath, and becam blacke as a cole / and smote his forhede for anger. And after sayde to 20

Charlemagne's anger is roused,

Reynawde / 'Thou yonge boye, voyde oute of my presence / for I swere the, by saynte Symon, and yf it were not the companye of the barons that be here, I sholde make y<sup>e</sup> to be put in suche a pryson that thou 24 sholdeste not see nother hande nor foote that thou hast.' 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'it were not rayson / but sith that it is soo ferre come that ye wyH not here vs, we shaH kepe our peas.' 28 and he tells Reynawde to go out of his sight.

Thus lefte the foure sones of Aymon the debate, and spake nomore to the kynge Charlemyne for that tyme of thys matere / Fayr was the courte, and the daye was fuH fayr and bryght / and fayr was the 32 company, as of xv. kynges / xxx dukes & lx erles / They wente to the chirche<sup>2</sup> for to here the fayr messe that was song ; & moche riche was the offeryng / And

All the assembly go to hear masse,

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig. b. i.      <sup>2</sup> D. v.

1 whan they had herde the messe,<sup>1</sup> they cam ayen to the palays, and asked after water for to wasse their handes ;
 and the dyner was redy, soo they wasshed & set theym 4 doun to dyner / And the xv kynges were aft set, excepte and then sit down to dinner.
 the kynges Salamon, that serued that daye wyth the duke Godfraye / But Reynawde, at this dyner myghte Reynawde must not eat, because of the King's rebuke.
 8 rebuked hym soo shamfully / 'Ha,' sayd Ryynawde to hym selfe / ' alas, how shaft I conne doo soo moche, that I maye auenge myselfe of Charlemany, for the deth of my vncl, that so moche was beloued / whiche 12 traytorsly & shamfully hath he slayn ; & yf I take no vengauce of it I shaft wexe mad.' In this wyse sorowed y<sup>e</sup> good renawde, & his bredern recumforted
 hym. The barons cam out after dyner for to plaie & 16 sporte hemself ; and berthelot, the newew of Charlemayn, called reynawde for to playe<sup>2</sup> with him / wherof Berthelot, the nephew of Charlemagne, calls Rey-
nawde to play
chess with him.
 grewe a gret myscheef / for afterwarde many a good knyghte deied therfor, & many a fayr chylde was 20 faderles, as here after ye shaft here / if ye herken well.
 Now was set Berthelot & the worthi reynawde for to playe at the ches, whiche were of yuori / wherof y<sup>e</sup> borde was of golde massy / & so long they playd 24 that debate feH bytwene them two, bi suche maner that They quarrel, berthelot called renaude 'hoursone' / & toke vp his hande, & smot reynawde in the vysage, so that the blood feH to the gronde / And whan reynawde sawe 28 hymself thus shamfully outraged, he was right wrothe & sore angred, & sware by god, hym shold yH betyd ; therfor thesne toke reynaude y<sup>e</sup> ches borde,<sup>3</sup> & smote and Reynawde slays Berthelot
with the chess
board.
 berthelot vpon his hede so harde, that he cloued hym 32 to the teeth / and thus berthelot feH doun deed to y<sup>e</sup> gronde afore hym / so began y<sup>e</sup> crie at that hour sore

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. i.

<sup>2</sup> jouer aux esches, F. orig. b. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> q' dor massis estoit, F. orig. b. ii. back.

strong in the<sup>1</sup> palays, that Reynawde, the sone of Aymon, hadde slayne Berthelot, the neuewe of Kyng Charle<sup>2</sup>mayne. Whan the kyng vnderstode thys, he wente nyghe out of his wytte / and called of heyghe, 4 ‘Barons! kepe weH that Reynawde scape not / for, by saynte Denys of Fraunce, he shaH not escape quycke yf we maye holde hym ; for he hath slayne oure neuewe Berthelot.’ Thenne ranne soone the knyghtes vpon 8
 Reynawde / and his kynsmen deffended hym nobly / and thus was there grete stryffe, and many heres pulled / and many gownes toren ; for suche a fraye was there neuer seen, as that daye was in the palays of Parys / 12
 Many strokes gaaff there Mawgys, the cosin of Reynawde / and sone to the duke Benes of Aygremounte / And while that this fraye was in the palays, Reinawde and his thre bretherne and their cosin Mawgys escaped 16 redyly oute of the palays, and came to theyr horses that soone were made redy. Soo lighted they on horsebacke, and rode soone oute of Parys, and fledde streyghte to Dordonne, towarde their lady moder. 20

Charlemagne commands his barons to slay Reynawde.

His kinsmen defend him, and escape on horseback to Dordonne.

The King sends his knights to follow them.

ANd whan the emperour Charlemayne wyst that Reynawde and his bretherne<sup>3</sup> were goon oute of Paris, he made to be redy, weH two thousande knyghtes for to folowe theym / Nowe kepe theym, our lorde, 24 that in the crosse suffred passyon ; for yf the kyng holde theym, they shaH deye wythoute remysyon. But Reynawde, on hym is noo care, for he was vppon his horse Bayarde, that gooeth as the wynde. Soo taryed 28 not the foure bretherne and theyr cosin, tyll that they came to Sawmore : and they bayted their horses of Alarde, Rycharde, and Guycharde / Thenne beganne Reynawde to make sorowe, sayenge / ‘Fayr god, that 32 suffred dethe and passyon, kepe thys daye my brethern and my cosin from the dethe, and from combrance, <sup>1</sup> la salle du palys, F. orig. b. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> D. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> et Mawgis, F. orig. b. ii.

and from fallynge in the handes of Charlemayne the crueH!' And of <sup>1</sup>thother' parte, chassed theym the frenshemen, brochyng wyth y<sup>e</sup> spore <sup>2</sup>as fast as theyr 4 horses myght renne<sup>2</sup> / somoche that a knyghte that was better horsed than the other were, ouertake Renawde, and sayd to hym, 'ye shaft abyde, ye vntrue knyghte, and I shaft bryng you to kyng Charlemayne' / And whan 8 Reynawde herde hym, he tourned Bayarde<sup>3</sup> ayenste hym, and smote the knyghte wyth his spere in his shelde, and rought hym wyth soo grete a myghte, that sterke deed he ouerthrew hym. Soo scaped Reynawde 12 the knyghtes horse, and toke hym to his broder Alarde, that lyghted anone vpon the backe of hym / And after that he was vpon this goode horse, he wente & smote a nother knyghte wyth his swerde, so that he made hym 16 fall aH deed afore hym / and so betoke this knyghtes horse to his broder Guycharde, that thanked hym moche for it / And a nother knyght of the kyng Charle-mayne came to theym / 'Glotons,' sayd the knyght, 20 'ye shaft come to the kyng, that shaft make you aH to be hanged' / 'Ha, by my feyth,' sayd Reynawde, 'thou shalte lie,' and wyth this, Reynawde tok vp his swerde & gaaf hym suche a stroke that he ouerthrew hym ded 24 at the grounde / Thenne toke Reynawde the hors by y<sup>e</sup> reyne, & gaaf him to his broder Richarde, that grete nede had of it. Now be the thre brethern newe horsed, & Reynawde is vpon bayarde, & his cosin Magis, that 28 he loued so weH, behinde hym / now they goo. god wyH lede theym & kepe theym from euyl / and Charlemayne pursued after theym / but for noughte he traueyllid; for they were neuer the rather<sup>4</sup> taken for 32 hym / Thenne was the sonne goon vnder, & the nyghte beganne to come / and the foure brethern & their cosyn were come into the towne of Soysson.

Reynawde kills one of the King's knights.

Reynawde slays
 three knyghte,
 and gives their horses to his three brethren.

<sup>1</sup> D. vi.           <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. ii.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. ii.   <sup>4</sup> Sooner.

SO moche rode Reynawde by nyght & by day vpon bayard, that bare hym and mawgis his cosin,<sup>1</sup> that they came to dordon. <sup>2</sup> There they mette wyth the duchesse, theyr moder / that ranne for to kysse theym <sup>4</sup> and colle theym / and sin<sup>3</sup> asked what thei had doon of theyr fader, and yf they were departed from the courte with wrathe. ‘Lady,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘ye / for I haue slayne Berthelot, the newew of kyng Charlemayne / The <sup>8</sup> reyson why I dyde soo / was by cause he called me ‘houre sone,’ and gaaff me wyth his fyst vpon my vysage, soo that the bloode ran oute of it’ / And whan the lady vnderstode hym, she felle doun aH in a swoune, and Rey- <sup>12</sup> nawde toke her vppe redely / And whan the goode lady was come ayen to her selfe, she sayd <sup>4</sup> to Reynawde<sup>4</sup> / ‘Fayr sone, how durst ye doo this that ye haue doon / for I promytte you ye shaH ones repente for it. And <sup>16</sup> your fader shaH be dystroyed therefore, and caste oute of his landes ; and yf ye scape on lyue, it shaH be grete merueyHe. Soo praye I you, aH my chyl dren, that ye flee awaye ; but take afore aH my tresour ; for yf your <sup>20</sup> fader come agayn from the courte, he shaH wyH yelde you to the kyng Charlemayne.’ ‘Lady,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘wene ye that our fader is so crueh and soo wrothe wyth vs, that he wolde take and delyuer vs in <sup>24</sup> to the handes<sup>5</sup> of the kyng Charlemayne / that is our grete enmye mortalle.’

Reynawde, his thre bretherne, and Mawgys, wolde make noone other soiournynge, but toke soo <sup>28</sup> moche of the hauoyre and treysour of theyr fader and moder, that they hadde Inoughe of hit / and thenne toke theyr leue of theyr lady moder / wherof there was grete pyte atte the departynge ; for the children wepte <sup>32</sup>

They reach Dordon, and Reynawde relates to the duchess how he slew Berthelot.

The duchess is sore grieved, and begs them to take all her treasure, and fly for fear of Charlemagne.

The knights take leave of their mother with much sorrow.

<sup>1</sup> Peu lon trouveroit aujourduy de tieulx cheualx par le mōde. Et tant ont cheuauche, F. orig. b. iii. back, omitted in Caxton.

<sup>2</sup> D. vi. back. <sup>3</sup> after.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. iii. back.

<sup>5</sup> de nostre ennemy mortel, F. orig. b. iii. back.

tenderly, and the moder also of thother side, whan she sawe that her chyldren that thus went fro her, and wyst not yf she sholde euer see them ayen. So departed the 4 newe knyghtes wyth their cosyn magys, & issued out of the towne, and entred in to y<sup>e</sup> grete forest of Ardeyne, They enter the forest of Arden, [1st streyght through the valeye of Feyry, and rode so much / that they came upon the ryuer of Muse, and 8 there they chose a faire grounde where they made to be buylded a faire castell / upon a fayre roche muche stronge, & at the foote of it passed the saide riuer of Muse. And whan that the castell was made up, they and build there a castle which they call Mountaynford. 12 called it Mountaynford, & as I trow there was not suche another of strengthe fro the said place unto Mountpeller.

FOr it was closed with great walles / & enuyronned 16 rounde about with dyches sore deep, & well garnished <sup>2</sup>with all maner of vittailles / & of all thinges benedeful to be had in a fortres; <sup>2</sup> now doubte the newe knyghtes nothings Charlemayn, yf he wrought not by treason. Charlemayn was at paris much angry for ye 20 deth of his newew Berthelot, <sup>3</sup> <sup>2</sup>the which Reinawd had slayne playing at the chesse / as it is sayde; <sup>2</sup> so made he to come afore hym the duke Aymon of dordonne / the father of the foure knyghtes, and made hym to 24 swere that he shoulde neuer gyue no help to his children, and that they shoulde neuer be the better of a peny by hym, & in what place that he shoulde them fynde, he should take them / and shoulde bringe them 28 to him, the which Aymon durste not saie ayenst hym, but sware that he should doo so; whereof afterwarde he was sore reпреued. And after that he had sworn thus / he departed oute of Parys / all wroth & angry 32 of this / that he muste chase thus his children, and came to Dordon. And whan the duches saw him / she Charlemaigne commands Aymon to war against his children, because of the death of Berthelot. Aymon dare not refuse, and goes in search of his sons towards Dordon.

<sup>1</sup> One sheet lost from Caxton, supplied from Copland's ed. 1554, in B. Mus. Fol. xvi.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. iii.

<sup>3</sup> D. iii. Copland.

Aymon asks the duchess where the sons have gone.

began to weep full sore; and the duke knewe wel what she yeelde. 'Lady,' said the duke, 'where be my sonnes gone?' 'Syr,' sayde the ladye, 'I cannot telle whether they are drawen, but why suffred you 4 that oure sonne Reynawde slewe Berthelot, the neuewe of kynge Charlemaine.' 'ladye,' said he, 'I coude not doo therto, & wit that oure sonne Reynawde is of so greate a strength / that neuer syth the incarnation of 8 oure lorde / was not seen so stronge<sup>1</sup> a knyghte as he is; Nor all the assemble that than was in the pallays at Parys / myghte not keep him, but that he slewe berthelot afore all the lordes that were there.' And 12 afore this our saide sonne Reynawde demaunded of kinge Charlemagne ryght and reason to be doone to him of the deathe of my brother, his uncle the duke Benes of Aygremount, wherupon the king ful sham- 16 fullye and outrageouslye answered to our said sonne, wherfore Reinawd was wrothe and sore angred, and ye cause why Reynawde slewe Berthelot was for to aueng him of the king Charlemaine; Not withstandynge that 20 Berthelot had Iniuryed oure sayde sonne ful sore at the playe of the chesse, And also he smote hym fyrste outrageously that the bloud came out of his face, so Reinawd for his great and hardy courage / might not 24 suffre this by no wise; And therefore the king hathe made me swere / that yf I can take my chyldren / that I shal brynge them to hym at Parys, and that no helpe they shal neuer haue of me nor succours, nor that 28 they shall not be the better a peny of all my hauoure, wherof I am wrothe and full sorye.'

Aymon excuses
his conduct
towards his sons,
because of his
oath to the king.

WE shall leaue heere to speake of the duke Aymon and of the duchesse / that ben ryght sory for 32 theyr children; And shal shew you how the worthye kynge Charlemaine made to seeke after the foure sonnes of Aymon thoroughe all his realme, but he myght not know nor understande no tidinges of them ; tyll that at last came to hym a messenger that recounted to hym howe he had founde them / in the forest of Ardeyne ; 4 In which they had edyfyed a fayre castell & sore stronge. And whan the kyngge understoode these tydinges / he sent worde incontinente to all his folke of armes that they should make ready themself, the 8 whiche dyd so without delaye.<sup>1]</sup>

<sup>1</sup> ne se vaillant cheualier, F. orig. d. iv. back.

CHAPTER III.

<sup>2</sup>¶ How, after that kyng Charlemayne hadde
<sup>3</sup>made the duke Aymon to forsake hys 12 sones,<sup>3</sup> he wente and beseged theym atte Mountaynforde / where he was d[i]scomy-fyted two tymes / But the castell of Mountaynforde was taken by trayson. And 16 how Reynawde and his bretherne auenged theym selfe of the traytours that had bytrayed theym ; and how they saued theym selfe after that, wythin the forest 20 of Ardeyne, where theyr fader fonde theym as he wente fro the siege towarde his cuntry / And how for to kepe his othe that he had made to kyng Charlemayn, 24 he dyde assaylle his sones, soo that of v / hundred men that they were, abode alyue with his sones but xvij. persones / but Reynawde and his bretherne had noo 28 hurte of theyr bodyes / how be it that they slewe many of theyr faders men.

Capitulum iii.

<sup>1</sup> Caxton begins again.    <sup>2</sup> D. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> suyuir a tous ses barons les quatre filz Aymon et mesimement au duc Aymon leur pere, . . . . F. orig. b. iv. back.

Now sayth the historye, that sithe the tyme of the kyng Alexandre, was none suche herde as this same is / And therfor, fayr lordes, playse you to here & vnderstande how it befell of the four sones of 4 Aymon, that were enmyes of the emperour Charle-mayne, kyng of Fraunce. For the same tyme kyng Charlemayne had banysshed them oute of the royaume of fraunce, and made all his barons, bothe yonge & 8 olde, to seke after them / And also made them swere that they sholde neuer helpe nor comferte them by noo maner of wyse. And the same othe had made wyth many other, the olde duke Aymon theyr fader, 12 as ye haue herde afore / wherof he was full sory afterwarde. It happed thenne that the kyng Charle-mayne helde a grete courte in Parys<sup>1</sup> / And as this courte was assembled, where all the barons of fraunce 16 were togyder / a messenger cam there bfore y<sup>e</sup> kyng<sup>2</sup> charlmayn, & kneled afore him & sayd / 'Sir, I bryng you<sup>3</sup> tydynges of that ye dyde sende me for ; wyte, syr, that I come from the grete forest of Ardeyne, where I 20 haue founde the foure sones of Aymon, that dwelle there wythin a strong castell, well sette vpon a rocke ;
 and yf ye wyll fynde them and be auenged of them, wite that ye maye weill ynoughe doo so, as I beleue for 24 certeyn' / Whan Charlemayne vnderstode this messenger, he began to merueylle hym selfe sore / and called his barons, and sayd to them, 'Fayr lordes, whan it is soo that ye be here, it apperteyneth not that I sholde sende 28 for you at your places. Soo I praye you and requyre, as to my liege men, that ye helpe me to be auenged of the foure sones of Aymon, that soo grete dommage haue doon to me, as ye knowe well.'<sup>4</sup> 32

Charlemagne
 sends his barons,
 both young and old, to seek after the sons of Aymon.

A messenger arrives with tidings,

that the sons are in Arden.

Charlemagne calls
 on his lords to avenge the death
 of Bertelot.

<sup>1</sup> moult plauiere, F. orig. b. iv.

<sup>2</sup> l'empereur, F. orig. b. iv.

<sup>3</sup> D. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Et quant il eust ce dit il se leua empiedz, d. iiii. F. orig., omitted in Caxton.

WHan the barons vnderstode the prayer that the emperour Charlemayne made to theym / they answered wyth one voyce: 'Syre, we shaßl doo your 4 commaundemente wythoute doubte / gyue vs leue, yf it playse you, that we maye goo in to our countreys for to make vs redy of harneys and of horses,' the whiche thyng the kyng graunted theym. And so departed aß 8 the barons from the courte, and wente in to their countreys / The whiche aboode not long, that they came ayen to Parys, aß arrayed and redy for to werre wyth theyr armye / And whan the kyng Charlemayne sawe 12 theym, he receyued theym gladly. And Incontynente wythoute ony tarieng he departed oute of Parys / and wente wyth all hys oost at Mountlyon, a towne of hys, and there he laye that nyggt. And at the 16 morowe, as sone as the day appyered, the kyng Charle-mayne departed from Montlyon, and wete on his way 1 wyth his ooste<sup>1</sup> / And ordeyned the forewarde to the erle Guy of Mountpeller, that wolde moche grete 20 harme to Reynawde. And whan they had sette theym selfe in the <sup>2</sup>waye / the emperour Charlemayne called to hym his goode vasseylles,<sup>3</sup> Renyer, Guyon of aubeforde, the erle Garner, Gefray, Langon, Oger the dane, 24 Rycharde of Normandy, and the duke Naymes of Bauiere / and sayd vnto theym alle, 'Lordes, ye know well what ye haue to do / I pray you that ye kepe weß your selfe from Reynawde, and goo not 28 to nyghe, but abyde aß togyder in suche a strong place that we may haue noo dommage / and let goode whatche be made euery nyghte / for my herte gyueth me that we shall dwelle there longe.' 32 THenne sayd the duke Naymes of Bauyere, 'Sire,<sup>4</sup> we shall doo soo.' Thenne made they the tronpettes to be blowen, and aß the ooste they made

The barons go
into the country
to prepare for war.

They return to Paris,

and Charlemagne leads them to Mountlyon.

The King charges
his vassals
to be cautious how they approach
Reynawde.

<sup>1-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. v.    <sup>2</sup> E. i.    <sup>3</sup> et, F. orig. d. v.

<sup>4</sup> vous dictes bien, F. orig. d. v.

They reach the castle of Mountaynforde, which the four sons and Mawgis had built.

to come togyder / And thus they rode soo moche that they cam to Myleyne, otherwysse called Aspes / And whan they were comen there, they saw the castell of Mountaynforde, that Reynawde and his brothern 4 and theyr cosin Mawgys had doo make / Euyne atte that owre that kyng Charlemayne and his oost were come to Aspes, the thre brethern of Reynawde were comyng fro the chasse oute of the woode of Ardeyne / 8 and Rycharde, y<sup>e</sup> yongest, bare a ryght riche horne, both fayr and good, the whiche Reynawde loued fuH dere. And in their felawshipp myghte be weH xx knyghtes and no moo. And as they returned to Mon- 12 tainforde, Rycharde behelde and sawe ouer the riuier of Muse, thoost of the kyng Charlemayne,<sup>1</sup> wherof he began to be sore merueyld / and called Guycharde his broder, & sayd to hym / 'Fayr broder, what folke 16 maye be they that I see yonder. I herde saye the other daye of a messenger, that tolde it to our broder Reynawde / that the emperour came for to besege vs wythin our castell.' 20

Richard calls his brother Guycharde to view the host of Charlemagne approach.

ANd after, whan Guycharde vnderstode his broder, he <sup>2</sup> behelde ouer the ryuer, and sawe the forewarde that Guyon conduted / and whan Guycharde<sup>3</sup> sawe them, he smote his horse wyth the spores / He & 24 his folke went ayenst Guyon, & sayd to him / 'Fair sir, what are these folke?' 'Sire,' sayd Guyon, 'thise ben the folke of themperour Charlemayn, that goeth to Ardeyn for to besege a castell that the foure sones 28 of Aymon haue do<sup>4</sup> made there; for their strengthe, they trayueyHe vs moche, god gyue them euyH rest' / 'Certes,' sayd Guycharde,<sup>3</sup> 'I am a sauldier with Reynawde / & I conne you nother thanke nor grace of 32 that that ye saye / for I am holden to deffende theym at my power' / and with this he spored his horse &

Guycharde and his folk approach Earl Guyon, who commands the vanguard of the King.

<sup>1</sup> de france, orig. d. v.      <sup>2</sup> E. i. back.
<sup>3</sup> Richart, F. orig. d. v.      <sup>4</sup> do = cause to be.

- smote the sayd Guyon<sup>1</sup> through his shelde so harde that he ouerthrewe hym deed to the grounde / And thenne he toke the horse of the sayd Guyon,<sup>1</sup> & toke hym
- 4 to one of his esquyers, and assembled aH the knyghtes togider of one parte & of y<sup>e</sup> other / They of fraunce cryed 'Mountioye saynt denys!' and the brethern of Reynawde cryed 'Mounteinforde' / Thenne sholde ye
- 8 haue seen a felt batayH & ryght cruell, the one ayenste the other, sheldes broken & helmes broken, som deed, & some sore wounded, soo moche that it was grete pyte to see. What shall I telle you? more, all the folke of
- 12 Guyon<sup>1</sup> that made the forwarde, were there slayne / This hangyng, cam a squier to the kyng, & shewed hym how his forewarde was vtterly dystroied / and that Guycharde,<sup>2</sup> the broder of Reynawde, had slayne
- 16 the erle Guyon.<sup>1</sup>
- 'O god,' sayd thenne themperour Charlemayne, Charlemagne grieues for the death of Guyon,
- 'haue I now lost Guyon?' of hym it is grete dommage / Now wote I not from hensforth on, how I
- 20 sholde wyn, sith that I haue loste the forwarde' / and thenne he called Oger the dane, & sayd to hym, 'Oger, and calls on Oger and Naymes to defend his folk.
- goo to the socours, you & Naymes, for guycharde bereth wyth him aH my hauoyr, & hath slayn aH my fol<sup>3</sup>ke.'
- 24 Thenne oger the dane abode not, but lighted on horsbacke, he and the duke Naymes, wyth weH thre hundred knyghtes weH armed & weH arayed, & went They pursue Guycharde, but too late, for he and all his men are safe within the castle.
- after Guycharde<sup>4</sup> / but their labour was nought worthe
- 28 to them / for guycharde & his men were aH redy wythin Mountainforde, wyth aH the hauoyr that they had wonne. Whan Reynawde sawe his broder com<sup>5</sup>
- wyth so grete hauoyre, he wente ayenst hym, & kissed
- 32 theym aH / and thenne he sayd to Guycharde, 'Fayr broder, where haue ye taken so grete hauoyre that ye

<sup>1</sup> Reynier, F. orig. d. v.      <sup>2</sup> Richart, F. orig. d. v.

<sup>3</sup> E. ii.

<sup>4</sup> Richart, F. orig. d. vi.

<sup>5</sup> a si grans gens, F. orig. d. vi.

bryng here.' 'Sire,' sayd Guycharde, 'I shaH telle you tidynges wherof ye shall be gretly merueyelled / Now wyte, that kyng Charlemayn commeth for to besege you wyth aH his oost, & hath so grete chyualrie 4 wyth him that it is wounder for to see / My bredern,<sup>1</sup> I com fro the chasse out of the wood of ardeyn, and we haue recounted the forwarde of Charlemayne, that therle Guy conduycted; there fought we togyder wyth 8 theim / but, god by thanked, & myn ennyes were discomfyted & ouerthrowen.<sup>2</sup> One parte we haue slayne, & thother fled awaye; soo haue we brought their hauoyr that ye se here. And there is deed,<sup>3</sup> therle 12 Guy & many other grete lordes, & aH their men' / Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'I ought to loue derly / whan ye can werre so weH that ye haue ouerthrowen your ennyes at y<sup>e</sup> firste comyng on' / and thenne he called 16 aH his brethern & his folke, & sayd to theym / 'Fayr lordes, now is the tyme come that eueriche of vs must preue hymselfe a good man / wherfore I praye you that euery man force hymself to do worthly his deuoyr, 20 that your worshyp & the oures be kepte / & that men maye not wyte<sup>4</sup> vs noo cowardnes, & lete vs<sup>5</sup> doo knowe<sup>5</sup> our prouesses to kyng Charlemayn, so that he hold vs not for feble & myschaunt' / Whan reynaude had 24 spoke to his bredern & to his folke / they answered to hym in this maner, 'My lorde, haue no<sup>6</sup> doubte of none of vs; but be sure that we shall neuer fayH you for<sup>7</sup> the hewyng of our limmes as long as we shaH lyue.' 28 And whan reynawde vnderstode the good wyll<sup>8</sup> of his folke, & namly<sup>9</sup> of his brethern / he began again to speke to theym, & sayd / 'Lete y<sup>e</sup> gate be shette, & drawe vp the brydge / and soo goo we to the 32 wyndowes, for to see this folke that com ayenste vs.'

Guycharde relates to Reynawde his victory

Reynawde charges his folk to prove themselves good knights.

They swear fidelity.

<sup>1</sup> et moy, F. orig. d. vi.      <sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. vi.

<sup>3</sup> le conte regnier, F. orig. d. vi.      <sup>4</sup> blame.

<sup>5-5</sup> cause to be known.      <sup>6</sup> E. ii. back.      <sup>7</sup> so far as.

<sup>8</sup> de ses freres, F. orig. d. vi.      <sup>9</sup> specially.

And thenne they wente there, as reynawde sayd ; & whan thei loked out of y<sup>e</sup> wyndowes, they sawe oger the dane comynge wyth a thousande men wyth hym /
 4 whiche, whan he sawe that Guycharde was entred in to y<sup>e</sup> casteH, he returned ayen, & sayd to the kyng how it was / and thenne he sayd / ‘Syr, I lete you wyte that the castell of mounteynforde is the fairest & the strong-
 8 est that euer ye sawe / for it is set vpon a hie roche of harde stone / and weH I tette you, for certeyn, that it shall not be taken so lightly as men wene, for suche folke doo kepe it, that well and worthily shaH deffende it.’

Oger and his men return to Charlemagne and tell him how strong and fair the castle is.

12 WHAN themperour Charlemayne herde speke oger the dane, he was of it so wroth that he wente nyghe oute of his wytte / & sware god that he sholde neuer retorne in to fraunce but that Ryynawde were 16 take ; & that yf he maye haue hym, aH the worlde shaH not saue hym, but that he shaH make hym to be hanged, & his broder Guycharde to be drawn at horsis taylles. ‘Sire,’ sayd oger, ‘weH ye ought to doo
 20 so / for they haue trauaylled you full often, & haue gyuen you grete labour & peyne’ / ‘Syre,’ sayd foulques of morillon, ‘haue no doubte, for shortly we shaH auenge you of theym. Make to be cried incontynente
 24 that your oost goo lodge lightly about mountenforde’ / ‘Certes,’ said the kyng, ‘ye saye well’ ; & thenne he made trompetes to be blowen of a heygthe, for to assemble togyder aH his men of armes / and com-
 28 maunded that aH the casteH of mountenforde sholde be enuyronned rounde aboute wyth folke, & that eue<sup>r</sup>y baron sholde do pyghte there his paulyon ; and they dyd so as the kyng had commaunded / Now wyH I 32 shew to you how noble the casteH was set. <sup>2</sup>The sayd castell was closed & sett vpon a hie roche ; & of the one side of it was betyng a grete riuer, called Muse / and of the other side it had eyn at hande a grete wood full

The King swears to avenge himself on Reynawde, and to have him hanged.

He commands his men to surround the castle.

<sup>1</sup> E. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Car il estoit, F. orig. b. iv.

playsant; of a nother side it<sup>1</sup> hath a fayr playne, & of that other side a full fayr medowe, grete & playsaunt to be holde / ¶ Whan the folke of the kyng Charlemayn were all lodged, themperour lighted on horsbak 4 wyth a few felawship for to see the strength of the castell / & whan he had well byholden it, & seen at his ease, he began to saye in hymself / 'ha god, how is this castell closed & set in a strong place! god, how 8 thise knyghtes knew well the craft of werre, not wythstandyng that they ben but yong folke / <sup>2</sup>Fayr lordes, thynke for to werre well / for we haue somewhat more to do theñne I wende.' Whan the pauyHyons & the 12 tentes of y<sup>e</sup> kyngis were dressed vp, he made to be set a charbokeH right riche all hie vpon his tente, whiche stone full precyous was shynyng as a torche that brenneth, & wyth the same a grete appeH of fyne 16 golde, of grete value / and whan the sayd tentes wer all spred & hanged, themperour entred wythin, & made the duke naymes to be armed, & charged hym that no man of werr so hardy for to light on horsbak of 20 eyhht dayes, but it were for to sporte hymself / For I wyH do knowe through all y<sup>e</sup> royame, that men bryng to vs vytaylles in grete habundance, afore that the castell of mounntenforde be by vs assaylled / and make my 24 chapel to be appareylled, to thende that we praye god that he wyH helpe vs to be auenged of the foure sones of Aymon / the whiche we shaH famysshe, or euer it be a moneth / For they shaH not come haue no vytaylles 28 from wythoute <sup>3</sup>by no waye.' Thenne sayd the duk Naymes to the kyng, <sup>4</sup>'Syr, ye maye do better, yf it be your playsur; sende a messenger to Reynawde, for to tell hym that he yelde to you Guycharde his broder, 32 & ye shall quyte hym all his londe / and yf he yelde

On the King's tent is set a precious carbuncle, which shines like a torch, and with it a golden apple.

Duke Naymes counsels Charlemagne to send a messenger to Reynawde to ask him to yield up his brother Guycharde.

<sup>1</sup> les plenez, F. orig. b. vi.

<sup>2</sup> Lors dist a ses gens, F. orig. d. vii.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. vii.

<sup>4</sup> E. iii. back.

hym to you / make hym to be byheded anone / & yf that reynawde refuse for to do this, he maye well be sure that werre shall not leue him as long as he shaft 4 be alyue' / Thenne answered Charlemayn, 'Ye saye well & ryght wysely / but certenly I wote not where to fynde a messenger to whom I myghte well trust.'
 'Sire,' sayd the duk naymes, 'yf it playse you / ogyer & 8 I shall do this message' / 'It playse me well,' sayd the kyng, ' & ryght grete thanke I shaft comye you for it / for ye neuer fayhed me at a nede' / Thenne wente naymes & oger, & made them redy. And whan they 12 were redy, they toke in their handes braunches of olyue tree for to shewe that they were messagers / & so went they both togyder wythout ony other company. And whan Alays, that kept watche, sawe the two knyghtes 16 come, he wente & asked theym what they were that cam there. 'Syr,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'we ben messagers of the kyng Charlemayn, that hath sent vs heder for to speke wyth reynawde, the sone of Aymon' / 20 and incontynent the sayd alais wente to his lord, and tolde hym, how at the gate were two messagers of the kyng Charlemayn, that wolde speke wyth hym / Reynawde commaunded forthwyth that the gate sholde 24 be opened to theym, & that the drawe brydge sholde be lete down, for he wolde see the messagers & speke wyth theym / Thenne were the two barons let in,
 & were brought afore Reynawde; and whan reynawde 28 sawe them, he salued theym curtoysly, and after that they had salued eche other / they set theym aH<sup>1</sup> ther vpon a benche / And thenne began the duk Naymes to speke, & sayd thus / 'Reynawde,' sayd he, 32 'themperour Charlemayn of fraunce lete you wyte by vs / that ye sende to hym Guy<sup>2</sup>charde<sup>3</sup> your broder, for to make of hym his playsur and his wyH; and yf

Charlemagne consents, and sends Oger and Naymes
 to the castle.

They come before
 Reynawde and state their request.

<sup>1</sup> tous trois, F. orig. d. vii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. iiiii.

<sup>3</sup> Richart, F. orig. d. vii.

ye wyH not do soo, Charlemayn defyeth you, & sayth that neuer he shaH leue you, vnto the tyme that he shalle haue take you aH / And whan he shaH haue you<sup>1</sup> / he shaH make you aH to be drawen & hanged, 4 and deye an euyH deth wyth grete shame.'

WHan Reynawde vnderstode these wordes, he wexed aH red for angre / and thenne he sayd to the duk Naymes, 'By the feyth that I owe to 8 aH my frendes / yf it were not that I loue you / I sholde make you both to be hewen aH to peces; and ye haue weH deserued it / for you, naymes,<sup>2</sup> are my nyghe kynsman / and as me semeth, ye oughte weH to helpe 12 & defende me ayenst aH men / And ye now counseyH me to my grete dyshonour & ayenst myn honeste. Tell to Charlemayn, that he shaH not haue Guychard<sup>3</sup> my broder / and that he leue his thretenyng, & doo the 16 worste that he can / for we shaH not do for hym nor for his thretenynges the mountenance of a peny / And goo ye to telle hym in my behalue / that a fore that he take vs / he shaH haue a greter nede of helpe than he 20 wenethe / Now voyde from our sighte lightlye oute of our palays, for to see you thus here greureth me to sore.' Whan the duke Naymes & Ogyer vnderstode Reynawde / they made noo lenger dweHing, but 24 departed incontynente wythoute ony more spekyng / and are come to Charlemayne, & recounted to hym aH this that Reynawde had sayd.

Reynawde in great anger refuses them, and defies the King.

The messengers depart and recount all they have said to the King.

WHan themperour Charlemayne vnderstode this 28 answeere, he was so sore an angred that he went almost oute of his wytte / & thenne he commaunded that the casteH sholde be assaylled / to the whiche they saw but thre gates, wherof, was set 32 afore the masters gate, therle Renyer<sup>4</sup> & foulques of

<sup>1</sup> Il vous sera tous pendre, F. orig. d. vii.

<sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. vii.      <sup>3</sup> Richart, orig. d. viii.

<sup>4</sup> le conte Guy, F. orig. d. viii.

moryllon, therle of Neuers, & ogyer the dane / And 1 afore the seconde gate was the duk of bourgoyne & therle of alphas; and afore the iii gate was the olde 4 Aymon, the fader of reynawde, that was com to Charlemayn for to werre ayenst his sones, as thother / Now weneth the emperour to haue beseged weH reynawde & his bredern; but, & god kepe reynawde in good helth, 8 Charlemayne shaH lese there more than he shaH wyne / Reynawde & his brethern were suche knyghtes, & so sage, that they deffended weH their castell ayenst charlemayn / alwayes it was beseged wyth so grete 12 nombre of folke, as I haue sayd afore, that it was merueyHe to see / For there were bretons, flemynges, maunsealx, originers, englysshe, bourgoyns, the bauyers, & the frenchemen / but Reinawde made one thyng 16 that torned hym to a grete worshyp, for he sayd to his folke, 'Fayr lordes, I praye you that ye moun-te not vpon your horses tyH that ye here the trompetes blowe, for I see weH that Charlemayns folke ben 20 ryght sore traueylled; and now whyle they ben thus veri / it were no worship to vs for to renne theym vpon / but whan they shaH be a lityH eased of their werynes, we shaH thenne make dyligently & worthyli 24 our first yssue vpon them. And I praye you, & requyre you aH in generall, that euery man shewe thenne his prowesse & strengthe' / And wyte it that in the castell of mountenforde was a fawcebraye vpon a 28 roche, thrughe y<sup>e</sup> whiche reynawde & his bredern wente oute vnder couerte at aH tymes that they wolde, wythout daunger.<sup>2</sup>

32 WHan reynawde saw that it was tyme for to goo out vpon theyr ennyes, he called to hym Sampson of bourdelois / this was a knyght, a trusty man, that was com there for to helpe reynawde and his

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. liiii. back.

<sup>2</sup> quant Ilz vouloient aler en gibier, F. orig. d. viii.

bredern, and had wyth hym an hundred knyghtes / reynawde said to hym / 'Syr, it is now tyme that our enmyes knowe what we ben / for yf we tarre lon'ger, the kyng Charlemayne myghte<sup>2</sup> wyte vs of cowardnes.' 4 And whan he had sayd these wordes, he cam to his brother guycharde,<sup>3</sup> & sayd to hym / 'Fayr brother guichard,<sup>4</sup> leue not for to be alwayes bolde and hardy as longe that I am man on lyue, for I loue you as moche as 8 I doo my owne body, and it is rayson that I do so / for ye & I are brethern,<sup>5</sup> bothe of fader & of moder<sup>5</sup> / And also I beleue that ye be the best knyghte of my lynage.'
 And then he taketh hym bytwene his armes, and kisseth 12 hym by grete loue / and whan he had doon thus, he sayd / 'Broder, make the trompettes to blowe vp of heyghth, and let vs make redy ourselve for to yssue out, for to showe to Charlemayne what folke that we ben / 16 yf god wyH that we myghte take the erle of Estampes, I sholde be therof right gladde / for it is the man / among aH oure enmyes, that worste dooth to vs, that more hath hurted vs; hapy he shaH not scape vs / for 20 he is alwayes in the forwarde / whan these wordes were fynysshed, aH the foure brethern, and aH theym of theyr companye arayed them selfe and yssued oute of the casteH atte the fawcebraye, wythout to make any noyse 24 nor crye / and soo go vpon the oost of Charlemayne by soo grete wrathe that it was merueyH, and beganne to make soo grete dystrectyon of folke, and to caste bothe tentes & pauyHyons agrounde, that it was woun- 28 der & pite for to see / and who had seen the<sup>ne</sup> reynawde the worthy knyght,<sup>5</sup> vpon his horse bayarde, & the faittes of armes that he made<sup>5</sup> vpon his enmyes,<sup>5</sup> sholde haue grete merueyH for to loke vpon hym; for 32 that man that he recounted,<sup>6</sup> myght weH saye that he was Reynawde has the trumpets blown, and when his men are arrayed, they issue out of the castle, and make great havoc among the folk of Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. v.

<sup>2</sup> accuse.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. b. viii.

<sup>4</sup> Richart, F. orig. d. viii.

<sup>5-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. viii.

<sup>6</sup> met.

born in an enyH houre / for to saye y<sup>e</sup> trouthe, reinawd smote no knyght so that his strokes cam right / but that he cleued hym as lightly as they hadde not ben armed, 4 & whan y<sup>e</sup> folke of charlemayn saw their enmyes, they ranne incontynent to their herneis; & whan they were armed, they ranne vpon Reynawde <sup>1</sup> & his folke. And thenne began the batayH so cruell that it was pite for 8 to see / for ye sholde haue seen many speres broken, and sheldes bresten & clouen asondre / and many a goode haubergen vnmayled / <sup>2</sup> corsettes & flancardes all to-brosten & sore beten,<sup>3</sup> and so many a goodly man 12 and noble knyghtes deyeng full myserably vpon the erthe / Whan the olde Aymon herde the crye, he mounted on horsebacke also, sone as he myghte, he & his folke, and com to the batayH ayenste his sones / 16 and whan Reynawde apperceyued there his fader he was right sory for it / and sayd to his bredern / ‘see, here is a grete merueyHe / for here is our fader / and by my counseyH we shaft make hym rounge; for I 20 wolde not for nothyng that none of vs sholde sette vpon hym.’ And then they tornd at another side of the batayH / but Aymon, theyr fader, cam there ayenst them, & began to sette sore hande vpon theym & 24 theyr folke / and whan Reynawde sawe that his fader leyd sore vpon theym, & bare theym grete dommage of theyr men / he sayd to hym all angred / ‘Ha, fader, what doo you / certeynly ye doo grete synne / for ye 28 sholde helpe defende & kepe vs, and ye do to vs worse than thother doo; now I see well that ye loue vs sore lityH, & that ye be dysplaysed that we ben so pru<sup>3</sup> & so good men of armes ayenst Charlemayn / for yf ye 32 haue forbanysshed vs / well we know it, & that we shaft neuer haue no thyng of your herytage / and we haue made this lith castelH for to kepe our selfe therin /

The battle rageth fiercely.

Aymon perceives
the fear of his
and does much evil to their folk.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. v. back.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. d. viii.

<sup>3</sup> valiant.

Reynawde threatens to slay his father if he will not leave them.

Aymon withdraws, and lets his sons pass him without harm.

and yet ye come heder for to helpe it to be dystroyed : it is no faders work, but it is operacyon of the deuyH. Yf ye wyll doo vs noo good / at lest do vs no harme ; for I swere you, vpon all sayntes that yf ye com ony 4 fender ayenst vs<sup>1</sup> I shaH forbere you no lenger / but I shaH gyve you wyth my swerd suche a stroke, that ye shall haue no leiser for to repente you of <sup>2</sup>the folie that ye doo' / Whan Aymon vnderstode the wordes of his 8 sone Reynawde,<sup>3</sup> he toke therof so grete angre at his herte, that it laked lytil but that he feH down in a swoune to the erthe / for he knew weH that Reynawde tolde hym trouthe ; but he coude do none otherwyse, 12 for feere of Charlemayn, but alwayes he wythdrewe hymselfe abacke, and suffered his sones to passe by hym<sup>4</sup> harmles atte that tyme / the whiche wente and dommaged ryght sore the folke of kyng Charlemayne.<sup>5</sup> 16

DUrynge the tyme that Reynawde spake thus to his fader Aymon, cam Charlemayn and Aulbery, Ogyer & the erle Henry, and Fougues of MoryHon. And whan Reynawde sawe theym come, he made his 20 trompettes to be blowen for to brynge his folke togyder agen ; and when they were assembled of one parte and of the other / a knyghte of Charlemayn, that was called Thiery, made his horse to renne ayenste the folke of 24 Reynawde / and when Alarde saw hym com he spored his horse, and cam ayenst hym, and smote hym so harde in his shelde, that he shoued a grete hauberke that he bare, thrughe his body of hym, soo that the sayd Tyery 28 fel deed down to therth / and whan kyng Charlemayn saw falle deed his knyght thyerry, he was therefore so sore an angred, that almost he loste his wytte & his vnderstandyng / Thenne beganne he to crye wyth a hie 32 voys, <sup>6</sup>sayenge in thys manere<sup>6</sup> / ' Lordes and barons, <sup>1</sup> et se ne seray plus honteux, F. orig. e. i.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. vi.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. i.      <sup>4</sup> outre part celle fois, F. orig. e. i.

<sup>5</sup> tout que cestoit merueilles, F. orig. e. i.

<sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. i.

delyuer you for to auenge me of thise glotons that leden our folke so cursedly. See that that they ben weñ punysshed & sharply' / whan the olde aymon
 4 herde Charlemayn speke thus, for doubte to be blamed he spored his horse, and wente & smote one of his sones knyghtes that was named amaney so crueHy wyth his braunk of stele, that he smote his hede clene of<sup>1</sup> fro y<sup>e</sup>
 8 sholders of hym / 'fader,' cryed<sup>2</sup> Reynawde to hym, 'ye do yll when so crueHy ye slee my men, but by the feyth that I owe to<sup>3</sup> god, yf I trowed not to hurte therby my honour, I shold take therof cruel vengeance
 12 of you.' And thenne sayd ayen the valyaunt Reynawde / 'ha, lady moder, how shold ye be sori yf ye knewe the grete werkes & the grete harme that our fader doeth to vs this daye.'

Charlemagne calls on his barons to deliver him,' and Aymon slays one of his son's knights.

16 WHan Foulques of Moryllon sawe that the folke of Reynawde mayntened theymselve so worthily ayenst theym, he began to crye, 'Syr emperoure & kyng, what meaneth this / I beleue that ye be for-20 gotten / sende for many of yore folke, & commaunde theym that they take incontynent y<sup>e</sup> traytours that now feyne themselfe ayenst your enemyes, and wythout delaye make them to be hanged & flayen aH quyk.'
 24 When the frensmen vnderstode this that foulques sayd to Charlemayn / they made none other abydyng / but spored their horses, & smote vpon the folke of Reynawde soo harde, that they made them to recule bak, wolde
 28 they or not / when alarde sawe his folke goo bak / he was ryght sory for it, and toke his swerde, & began wyth his folke to make so grete a fors of armes, that the frenshemen were all abashed of it / What shaH I 32 telle you more of this batayH / wyte it, that it was so mereueyllous & crueH, that it was pyte for to see, for euery one made the worste that he coude / the one ayenst thother. And wyte, that the foure sones of

The Frenchmen fight vallyantly, and make their enemies recoil;

<sup>1</sup> off.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. vi. back.    <sup>3</sup> a saint pol, F. orig. e. i.

but the sons' feats of arms are so wonderful that they cannot be overcome.

King John overthrows a knight
called Guyon;

but is slain by Richard, who brings his horse

to Reynawde.

Aymon made so grete occysion of men & of horses, that none durst come afore theym / but none myght compare wyth Reynawde for to do weþ; for he made there so grete merueyH of armes, that the frensmen durst 4 not com forth for fere of hym; for to saye the trouth, Reynawde smote no stroke a ryght, but that he slewe hym wherupon it lighted. What wyH ye that I telle you more / wyte that, in this batayH, kynsmen nor 8 parents <sup>1</sup>spared not eche other, for they slewe the one thother, as domm bestes / There sholde ye haue seen comyng thurgh the batayH the kyng Yon of saynt Omars, that rode vpon a good horse that ranne well / 12 & ayenst hym cam a knyght called guyon / & Yon smote guyon suche a stroke that he ouerthrewe bothe hors & man to therth / and whan Reynawde sawe this, he was right wroth for it. And thenne he toke his 16 baner, & sayd to his folke / 'doo so moche that I haue that good horse; for yf he goth awaye, I shaH neuer haue Ioye at my hert, for I wyH that he kepe felow-ship to bayarde.' And whan rycharde<sup>2</sup> his broder, that 20 was so worthy a knyght and so gentyH, vnderstode his broder that so spake / he made no tarryeng, but spored his horse, & smote yon of seynt Omars so harde, that his shelde nor his harneys myght not kepe / but that 24 he shoued his glayue thurgh the brest, & ouerthrewe hym deed to therth / and thenne Rycharde<sup>3</sup> toke the hors by the brydeH, & led him to reynawde, & sayd to hym, 'sire, we haue the horse that ye haue called after 28 so sore / now may you light vpon hym whan it playse you.' 'Broder,' seyde reynawde, 'gramercy of this present / for weH ye haue serued me therof / now haue we two horses to whom we may trust weH vpon.' 32
'Now light atons<sup>4</sup> upon hym,' sayde reinawde / & whan rycharde<sup>2</sup> vnderstode the commaundement of his broder /

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. vii.      <sup>2</sup> Guichart, F. orig. e. ii.

<sup>3</sup> il, F. orig. e. ii.      <sup>4</sup> at once.

he lighted lightly vpon the horse, and toke his owne for to kepe to a good knyght /

4 ANd whan reynawde cam agen to the batayH, he sawe yet his fader / & whan he sawe hym, he was ryght sory for it so that he lost almost his wyt for the same, and cam & sayd to hym by a maner of reproche, 'By my fayth, fader, ye are gretly to blame, 8 ye myght well kepe your selfe that ye com not so often to see vs / and for to doo vs harme / we wyll shewe to you that ye be oure fader / not goode <sup>1</sup>but euyH; for ye shewe to vs harde frenshyp & a sowre loue. At 12 crystmasse and at ester, men ought to go vysit and see his good frende, for to feste hym and to do hym goode, & ete wyth hym whan the dyner is redy; but this ye do not; for ye com to see vs in a hote werre / & wyth 16 the poynt of y<sup>e</sup> swerde ye chere vs / it is no loue of a natureH fader, but it is rigoure of a stepfader<sup>2</sup> / thenne answered the duk aymon, 'I wil that ye kepe your selfe well, for yf Charlemayn can take you, aH the 20 worlde shall not kepe you / but that he wyH fleye & hange you, <sup>3</sup>or otherwyse make you to deye a shamfull deth'<sup>3</sup> / 'Fader,' sayd Reynawde, 'lete that alone, & come & helpe vs / so shaH the kyng be dyscomfyted.' 24 'go forth ! glotton, goddis curse haue thou,' sayd Aymon <sup>3</sup>to his sone reynawde<sup>3</sup> / 'For I am to olde for to do trayson' / 'Fader,' sayd Reynawde, 'lityH ye loue vs, I see it weH, but kepe your selfe weH / for I shaH shew 28 you whether I can do any thyng wyth the spere and of the swerde;' and whan he had that sayd, he spored bayarde, & wente & smote a squyer that was called guyner, so that he ouerthrewe hym deed from his horse 32 to the grounde / Whan Charlemeyn saw his esquier deed, he spored his courser wyth an angry chere, & had in his hande a staffe of yron. for he wolde parte y<sup>e</sup>

Reynawde again
rebukes his father,
whom he meets in the battle.

Aymon threatens Reynawde with
the wrath of
Charlemagne,

and says he will not be traitor to
the King.

: <sup>1</sup> Fol. E. vii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Ribauld, F. orig. e. ii.
<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. ii.

batail a sonder; by cause he sawe well that his folke had the worse, and that they myght not resiste ayenst the grete strokes of reynawde in no wyse, for it was merueyllouse for to see the grete fayttes of armes that 4 he made there / for he ouerthrewe doun dede bothe horses & men <sup>1</sup>by grete strength /<sup>1</sup>

Charlemagne wills that his men depart from the battle.

CHarlemayn is come to the frensshe men / & commaunded them for to wythdrawe theym selfe / 8 for it was tyme for to departe fro the batayll. & as they wolde haue goon awaye, cam there thrughe batayll Berarde the bourgoyner, & smote Simon of bremoys so fiersly that he fell doun dede to the <sup>2</sup>grounde; when 12 the foure sonnes of Aymon sawe Symon deede, they were ryght sory for hym, And spored their horses wyth the spores, & cam at that side, & brake the presse for to auenge Symons dethe. and wyte it, when Reynawde 16

Reynawde slays three hundred knights with his own sword.

was com there, it was knowen ryght weel / for he wyth his swerde brought to deth weel iij hundred knyghtes of the best men that kyng Charlemayne had in his companye. Wherof the kyng was ryght sory <sup>3</sup>& sore 20 an angred<sup>3</sup> / this hangyng, Alarde wente thrughe the presse; so cam he, & iousted ayenst therle of Estampes / & for his shelde he lette not / but he shoued his spere thrughe the body of hym. and thus was by hym 24 slayne the sayd erle / whan Reynawde sawe that stroke, he cam to alarde his brother, and kyssed hym vpon his helme, and bowed hym selfe towarde hym & sayd / 'Fayr broder, blessed be the wombe that bare the / for 28 ye haue auenged vs of the gretest foo that we had, and whan he had sayd this word, he made his trompettes to be blowen, for to call his men togyder.

Alarde slays the Earl of Estampes.

Whan temperour Charlemayne sawe this grete 32 dommage that the foure sonnes of Aymon dyd to hym, he cryed with a hie voys / 'Lordes & barons,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. ii.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. viii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. iii.

wythdrawe your selfe abacke / for our enmyes<sup>1</sup> be to good knyghtes for vs. / now is this to vs grete dishonour & grete myshappe ; lete vs retourne ayen to our 4 pauyllyons, I praye you. For I swere vpon aH sayntes, that ther castell shall neuer be taken but by famysshing, for they ben ouer good knyghtes, preu & wyse, & well aduysed of the werre.' Whan the barons of Charle- 8 mayn herde his commaundemente, they sayd to hym, 'Sire, we shall do your wyH,' and as they wolde haue departed / came Reynawde sporyng his horse, & his brethern, & wente & smote vpon the folke of the em- 12 perour soo sharply, that he departed theym so well / that they must nedes flee, and take theyr<sup>2</sup> pauyllyons / and soo bode wyth theym prysoners, Anthony Guynemault, the erle of Neners, and Thiery of Normandye / 16 for no man myght endure ayenste Reynawde and his bretherne / And whan Reynawde sawe the dyscomfyture, & the folke of the emperour that fledde, he made his trompettes to be blowen for to wythdrawe his folke. 20 And whan they were assembled, Reynawde<sup>3</sup> and his bretherne<sup>3</sup> returned gladely into theyr<sup>4</sup> castell / and was alwayes the hyndermost man for to kepe hys folke the better, that led prisoners afore. Thenne cam Aymon 24 theyr fader afresshe vpon theym, and began to make theym grete combraunce / and whan Reynawde saw his fader, he wende to haue wexed madd for angre. soo returned he Bayarde, and smote the horse of his fader 28 soo harde that he fell down deed to the erth / For as to his fader, he wolde not touche / and whan Aymon sawe hymself a grounde, he rose vp quyckely vpon his feete, and toke his swerde in his hande / and began ryght 32 well to deffende hymselfe. But his deffence sholde haue ben but lytyH worth to hym / for his chyl dren sholde haue take hym for their prysoner, yf it hadde

Charlemagne orders his men to withdraw;

the barons obey his command.

Reynawde puts the folk of the Emperor to flight, and takes prisoner Anthony Guynemault, the Earle of Neners, and Thiery of Normandy.

Reynawde assembles his men and returns to his castle.

Aymon attacks Reynawde, and is overthrown.

<sup>1</sup> enmyrs in text.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. viii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. iii.

<sup>4</sup> son, F. orig. e. iii.

Ogyer the Dane
succours him.

not be Ogyer the Dane that came and socoured hym. And thenne sayd to hym, the sayd Oger / 'Syr, what semeth you of your chyl dren / they be right cheualrouse and hardy, as ye may see and knowe.' 4

Aymon pursues
his children.

WHan Aymon was horsed agayn, he pursuyd his chyl dren as a man wrothe and oute of his wyte / and sayd to his folke / 'Now goo we after the glotons! for yf they lyue long they shaft doo vs harme 8 and dommage soo grete that wyth peyne it shaft be reserued.' Whan Reynawde saw his fader that folowed them so sharply / he torned bayarde, and wente and smote amonge the thyckest of his faders folke, & be- 12 ganne to hurte them so sore wyth the helpe of his bredern, 2that he putte them to flight, magre their teeth / for they myghte no lenger endure the grete magre 3 that Reynawde bare to them / for to say the 16 trouth, noo harneys was naughte worthe ayenst the swerde of Reynawde. For he cleued all that he roughte.

Reynawde turns back and smites
his father's folk till they are put to flight.

4[W]han the emperoure Charlemayne saw this hie 20 prouesse that Reynawde made / he blessed hym selfe of the grete meruayH that he had thereof / and soo stronge he spored his horse, that he wente ayenste Reynawde, and thenne he said to hym / 'Reynawde, I for- 24 bede you that ye goo no ferther.' Whan Reynawde sawe the kyng he made to hym reuerence, and thenne wyth drewe hymselfe abacke / and sayd to his men / 'lete vs goo fourth, for here cometh the kyng. I wolde 28 not for noo thyng in this worlde that ony of you sholde laye hande vpon hym' / Whan the folke of Reynawde vnderstoode thise Wordes, they putte their swerdes in their sheethes, and wente agen to theyr castell, right 32 gladde of theyr fayne aventure that was happed to them that daye. And whan they were wythin theyr

Reynawde will not let his men lay hands upon
Charlemagne.

They return to their castle of Mountenforde.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. F. i.

<sup>3</sup> dommaige, F. orig. e. iii.      <sup>4</sup> the 2 line W is omitted.

castell of Mounntenforde, they made the brydge for to be drawen up / and wente & unarmed them, and fonde the souper redy, and soo they sette theym selfe atte the 4 table / And there was a grete many of prysoners / And when they had ete / Reynawde cam to his broder, & thanked hym moche wyth all his herte of that he hadde slayne the erle of Estampes.

8 And whan the emperour Charlemagne saw that Reynawde was wythin his castell, he lighted doun from his horse in to his tente / and sware god, that he sholde never departe thens unto the tyme that 12 he sholde have the foure sonnes of Aymon, or that the castell were take / What shall I telle you more ; the emperour Charlemagn laye well <sup>1</sup> XIV <sup>2</sup> monethes at eege afore the castell of mounntenforde, and there was no
16 weke but they had a batayll or a scarmysse ; and I tell you that Reynawde was not so sore beseged, but that he wente to chasse in woodes & in ryvers as often as hym playsed / And dyverse tymes it happed 20 that Reynawde spake wyth the frenshemen of traytte, the one to thother / sayeng thus to theym : 'Fayr lordes, I praye you that ye speke to themperour Charlemayn, & telle hym that he shall never take 24 us by no force, for our castell is right strong & well garnysshed / But knowe the kyng one thyng / that whiche he maye have by goodnes / he nede not make by force. He maye have the castell, & us also, yf
28 it playse hym, in suche maner as I shall telle you / Whan I shall put in his hande the castell of Mounntenforde, my brethern and my selfe, our goodes & bagage sauff, and that the werre take an ende, that hath 32 lasted so longe / <sup>3</sup> he may be well content.'<sup>3</sup> 'Reynarde,' sayd Ogyer the dane, 'ye saye well & wysely ; and I promytte you I shall shewe the same to the kyng, as Charlemagne swears he will never depart till he has taken the four sons of Aymon.

Charlemagne besieges the castle of Mounntenforde for fourteen months.

Reynawde offers to give up his castle if he may have his life and his goods safe.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> XIII F. orig. e. iii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. iv.

ye haue sayd / And yf ye wyll beleve my counselle / I ensure you I shall telle hym that he doo so, for ye are not folke for to be sette lityll by thus / nor for to be fro the court / for yf the kyng had you nyghe hym, he 4 should be the better for it.'

All thus as Reynarde & Oger spake togyder / there came Foulques of morylloy, that cryed to Reynaud, 'vassell, ye be but a foole. for certes I have 8 herde your wordes well. Ye shall leve us, mountenforde, for it is not your herytage, & your hedes in like Wyse' / 'Foulques,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye have reprevd me full often. I knowe well alle the harme that 12 themperour Charlemayne wyll to me / is by cause I have slayne Berthelot his newew wyth a ches borde / of whom god have mercy / Certes I coude not doo therto; but I was full <sup>1</sup>sory for it, god wote it. / It is 16 trouth whan we playd togyder, we hade some wordes, by the whiche, wythoute ony worde, he gaaff me suche a stroke upon my face that the bloode ranne me doune atte the grounde / And whan I sawe myselfe soo 20 arayed / I myghte not be so softe that I coude endure the grete owtrage that he hadde doon to me wythoute a cause / Soo deffended I my selfe to my power / for who letteth hym self to be slayne, his soule shall never 24 have pardonne / And thou knoweste well, Foulques, that<sup>2</sup> I dyde, was in my defendynge. But to this muste be made shorte wordes / and yf it playse you / ye shall telle to the kyng Charlemayn, that he taketh 28 us to mercy, and that we maye be frendes. And yf ye doo this ye shall doo your honoure. For assone maye ye be slayn there as a nother' / 'By god,' sayd Foulques, 'all this is noughte worthe to you / for ye shall deye 32 therfor, ye and your brederen' / 'Foulques,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye threten to moche / It apperteyneth not Foulques of Morylloy will not accept Reynawde's terms of peace.

Reynawde excuses his conduct, and asks Charlemagne to be friends with him again.

Foulques refuses,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F. ii.

<sup>2</sup> what.

to you for to threten knyghtes so moche that ben better than you. And yf ye haue ony thyng upon your herte, doo it wythout any more wordes / For 4 I tell you well that ye purchace your dethe' / And whan Reynawde hadde sayd thyse wordes / they wente agen to theyr pavyllyons. And thus abode the ooste unto thenne wythoute any fyghtyng. But the 8 frenshmen came agen, wolde they or not; wherfore the kyng Charlemayn was wrothe.

and they retire to their pavilions.

Thenne the emperour Charlemaigne sente for men thorughe all his londe / And whan they were all 12 come he<sup>1</sup> sayd to theym / 'Syres, I complayne me to you of the foure sonnes of Aymon, that hathe my londe dystroyed and wasted. And Mounteynfourde is soo stronge, that by strengthe it canne never be taken / but 16 by famysshyng. Now telle me what I oughte to doo / For I shall doo therin your counseyll' / <sup>1</sup>Whan the barons herde the complaynte that the kyng made to theym of the foure sones of Aymon / there was 20 none soo hardy that durste saye a worde, but the duke Naymes of Bavyere, that sayd to the kyng / 'Syre emperour, if ye wyll have goode counseylle, I shalle gyve you goode, yf ye wyll byleve me. Let us retourne
 24 into highe Fraunce, for we be to nyghe the wynter for to make werre / And whan the newe tyme shall be come, ye shall mow come agen to laye your siege afore Mounteynforde. For I doo you to wyte that Reynaude 28 is not sore pressed, but that he gooth in woodes and in ryvers atte all tymes that he wyll. And a man that maye goo oute and in atte his wyll, is not over sore byseged / And of the other parte, Reynawde and his 32 brethern are suche knyghtes that they shall not be lygthly over come. This is my counseyll, syre / Who knoweth a better, lete hym telle.'

Charlemaigne sends for more men to help him.

Charlemaigne asks counsel of his barons.

Naymes of Bavyere advises the Emperour to return to France till the winter is past.

<sup>1</sup> Le roy, orig. e. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. F. iii. back.

Hernyer of Seveyne promises to take Reynawde and his brethern prisoners, if the King will cede to him the castle.

Thenne spake Hernyer of Seveyne, and to hym sayd, 'Syre,<sup>1</sup> I shall gyve you a better counseyll yf ye wyll beleve me / gyve me the castell and alle the havoyr that is wythin, and the lordeshyp fyve myles 4 aboute it, and I shall yelde to you Reynawde and all his brethern for prysoners afore a moneth com to an ende. And thenne shall we go in to France, for to see oure wyves and children.' 'Hernyer,' sayd the kynge / 8 'ye have sayd well and wysely, yf ye maye doo this that ye have sayd / I graunte to you the castell, and all that ye have asked wyth the same' / 'Syre,' sayd Hernyer, 'I thanke you for it an hundred thousande 12 tymes. And I promytte you I shall delyver unto you Reynawde and his bredern as your prysoners, or ever a moneth be passed' / But knowe you, that Hernyer dyde mysse of his enterpryse, for he kepte not covenaunte to 16 the kyng as he had promysed hym, for Reynawde toke hym,<sup>2</sup> and made hym to be hewen all in peces; and<sup>3</sup> made all they that were wyth hym when he mathe trayson to be hanged & slayne, as more playnly ye 20 shall understonde / yf ye liste to herken.

Hernyer prepares knyghts to go upon the mountaine without noise.

Hernyor of Sayne made noon other taryeng / but he sayd to kyng Charlemayn in this maner / 'Syr, commaude ye Guyon of Bourgyne that he doo put 24 in arraye a thousande knyghtes well armed / and that to morowe, afore the daye, he goo upon the montagne fayr & softly wythout noyse<sup>4</sup> / And I shall put hym wythin the castell shortly' / Whan he had sayd this / 28 he wente into his tente / and made hymselfe to be armed / And whan he was armed, he lighted a horsebacke / and rode to the gate of the castell,<sup>5</sup> and sayd to them that kepte warde / 'Alas, for god, fayr lordes, 32

<sup>1</sup> droit empereur, F. orig. e. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> luy couppa la teste a peu de temps, F. orig. e. v.

<sup>3</sup> Car il en mourut luy et toutes ses gens, F. orig. e. v.

<sup>4</sup> et bruyt, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> de mountenfort, F. orig.

have mercy of me ; yf it playse you lete me com inne, or elles I am but deed / for the emperour Charlemayn maketh to folowe & seke me alle about, for to make 4 me deye, by cause I have sayd to hym moche good of Reynawde ; and also I telle you well, that I shall shewe to Reynawde a thyng wherof he shall be ryght glad, <sup>1</sup>yf his playsur is to here me.<sup>1</sup>

Hernyer begs Reynawde to let him into the castle, because Charlemagne
 would slay him.

8 When they that were above upon the gate, herde hym speke thus / they wythout long taryenge lete goo doun ye drawe brydge, & made hym come in,
 and dysarmed hym, and dyde to hym grete honoure / 12 But the false traytour rewarded theym full ylle for it after that / This hangynge, Charlemagne comaunded Guyon to make hym redy, and a thousande knyghtes wyth hym / And sente theym upon the hylle, wythoute 16 makynge of ony bruyt, tyll that the daye were come.
 And wyte, that Guyon hadde wyth hym of the beste knyghtes of Charlemagne.

After a parley
 they let the traitor into the castle.

Charlemagne
 sende Guyon and a thousand knyghts upon the hill without noise.

<sup>2</sup>Now is Hernyer the traytour wythin the castell of 20 Mounteynfourde, to whom men made goode chere ; and whan Reynawde wyste that a knyghte of Charlemagne was come / He sayd that he wolde speke wyth hym / And soo he was broughte afore 24 hym / And whan he saw hym, he sayd to hym / ' What be you, fayre knyghte, that are come hyder ? ' / And he answered, ' Syre, my name ys Hernyer of Saveyne / and I have anged kynge Charlemagne for the love of 28 you / And for this cause I am come hyther, praynge that ye have me for recommaunded / For I wote not wether to goo now.' ' Goode frende,' sayd Reynawde /
 ' sythe that ye saye that ye be oure frende, ye be ryght 32 wellcome to me ; for of suche goodes that god hathe sente me, ye shall not faylle / Now telle me, I praye you, how doothe the ooste of the emperoure ? Have Hernyer tells Reynawde that he has angered

 Charlemagne,
 and begs for shelter.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. v.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. F. iii.

He tells Reynawde that Charlemagne will retire within forty days.

Reynawde is comforted,

and they all sup gladly.

When all are asleep Hernyer arms himself, lets down the drawbridge, and slays the watch.

He opens the gates,

they any grete plente of vytayles!' / 'Syre,' sayd Hernyer, 'they ben scarce wyth theym. But I telle you for veraye certain, that they shall goo theyr wayes wythin this fourthy dayes / For noone of the barons 4 wyll no lenger abyde there. Wherefore the kyng Charlemagne is sore an-angred wyth theym / And I promytte you, yf the ooste wente awaye ye myghte hurte theym ryghte sore / and gete moche goode, yf ye 8 wyll sette thenne upon the taylle of theym.' 'Frende,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye have comforted me well / yf it is soo as ye saye / For yf the kynge be ones overthrowen, he shall not come a nother tyme upon us wyth soo 12 goode a wyll / as he dooth now.' And Reynawde hadde hym wyth hym to hys brethern, that made to him good chere;<sup>1</sup> and whan the soper was redy Reynawde and his bretherne sette theym down to theyr 16 mete, and sopped gladly. And in theyr companye was the traytour Hernyer / to whom they made good chere. After souper <sup>2</sup>[all the knyghtes wente to slepe, for they were wery of bearing of theyr harneys, and they had 20 not ceased to fyght all that day. And wit / that Hernier was well and honestly brought to bed, for Reynawde had so commaunded. And whan all the knyghtes were fast aslepe, Hernier, as the false Iudas, slepte 24 not. But he rose and tooke hys harneys, and armed hymselfe. And whan he was well armed at his ease, he came to the drawebridge, and cut the cordes / that kept it vp, and let the drawbrydge go downe; and 28 than he went vpon the walles, where he found him that made the watche, and slew him. And whan he had doone this, he came to the gate / and opened it, for he had taken the keyes / from hym that he had slayne, 32 whyche had them in his keepyng.

<sup>1</sup> et luy demandoient comment se portoit lost de Charlemagne, oltre chose ne fut alors, F. orig. e. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> Two sheets lost from Caxton, supplied from Copland's ed. 1554 in B. Mus., Fol. xxv.

Than whan Guyon of Bourgoyne saw the gate open, he made no taryng, but came and entred into the castell, and al hys folke with hym, and began to kyll 4 and slea all them that they found.

*Guyon enters,
and slays all he can find.*

Now shall ye heare of the fayre adventure, how that Reynawde & his brethern / were saved from this mortall slawghter. Wyt, that whan the yemen of 8 the stable had supped, thei were dronke, and went to theyr bed; & whan they were a slepe, the horse of Alarde / that was somewhat proude, began to make noyse agaynst the other. And Alarde and Richarde heard 12 the noyse of the horses; they rose vp, and saw y<sup>e</sup> doore of the halle open, and perceyved out of it the harneys that glystered agaynst the moone, that shone full bryght.

The horse of Alarde wakes the brothers Alarde and Richard.

Than went they to the bedde where they had brought the false Hernyer / whyche they found not there, wherof they were ryght sore abashed. And than was Reynawde awaked, and asked 'who was there that' 20 maketh thys noyse? Let our knyghtes take theyr rest, that have so sore travayled all the day; it is evyl doone for to go thus stampyng at this houre.' Than cryed Alarde to Reinawde, and sayd, 'Fayre brother, we ben 24 betrayed! / for Hernyer, that false knyght, hath put the folke of Charlemagne / within thys castell, the whiche kyll and slea your folke, and put them to a greate marter.' Whan Reynawde vnderstode this, he made 28 no taryng, but he arose and armed hymself quickly, and cried vnto his brethern / and to his men, 'Now, my freendes, let us beare our selfe worthly; we had never so great need.' And wyt, that Reynawde had with hym 32 but .xxx knyghtes within the dongeon of that fortresse, for all the other were within y<sup>e</sup> base courte, whiche was as it had ben a lytle towne well peopled, where as Guyon of Bourgoyne & his folke slew them.

*They cry to Reynawde that Her-
nyer has betrayed
the castle.*

Reynawde prepares to defend himself right well.

<sup>1</sup> qui ales a ceste heure, F. orig. e. vi.

This hanging: Reynawde & his brethern / had armed themselfe right wel, hopynge for to defende theymselfe well.

Reynawde defendes
the gate.

Than came Hernyer the traytour, steryng aboute 4 throughe the maystres strete, & with him well an hundred knightes. Than sayd Reinawde to hys brethern, 'fayre Lordes, come forth! for yf god helpe vs not, we are all lost.' & than Reynawde and his 8 bretherne / came to the gate, & defended so well / that none durst passe but he was slayne; what shall I tell you more? the base courte began to be sore moved, and the crye was so great, for al them of the dongeon 12 defended themselfe valyantlye. Whan the folke of the Emperour Charlemagne / sawe that they that were within the dongeon defended themselfe so well, they set y<sup>e</sup> base court in a fire, and began to brenne and pul 16 down the houses, and al that they founde. And y<sup>e</sup> fyre was soone so great that it tooke the dongeon of the castell.

Charlemagne sets
the dongeon on fire.

Whan Reynawde saw that he was so taken wyth 20 fyre, he was sore angred, and sayd to hys brethern, 'what shall we doo here? for yf we tary any lenger, we shall all be brent or taken, and yf it were not the fyre / that thus warreth agaynst vs, I make 24 myne avowe to god, that we should yet caste this folke out of thys castell; but syn that the fyre is in it, we cannot kepe it no lenger.' And than he sayd to his bretherne, 'come all after me'; & they went to the 28 fausebray, that was allwayes open, and yssued out, he & his bretherne, & his folke with them; and whan they were out / than were they more abashed than they were afore, for they wyst not whether to goe.' 32

Reynawde and his
brethren issue out
of the castle,

Now heare how they dyd as worthy knightes: for whan they saw the castell brenne, they entred wythin a pyt that was there vnder the erthe / for feare

[of the fyre, & set the dore vpon them, & there they began to defend themselfe so strongly, that none entred therein / but he lost anon hys head. And whan Hernyer
 4 the traytour was aware of ye same, he tooke his folke with him, & came to ye pyt and began to assayle Reynawde sharply, and his brethern, and al they that were therin with them ; & wyt it, that there, at thentre
 8 of the sayd pyt, were made great faytes of armes, for they of within defended themself so wel / that none myght come in / <sup>1</sup>but he were dead anon.<sup>1</sup> ¶ Whyle that the foure sonnes of Aymon / were in ye pyt vnder
 12 therth, they hearde the crye that his men made, the whiche Hernyer made to be slayne. Than began Reynawde to sai to his brethern, ‘ Lordes, let vs go succour our folke, for, and they should thus dye, it were to 16 vs a great blame.’ ‘ Syr,’ sayd hys bretherne, ‘ goe in goddes name, whan it please you.’ And whan they were come out of the pitte, the batayle began to be there ful terryble ; for ye should have seen Reynawde 20 & his brethern / gyve there great strokes and manye. For Reynawde smote so mervyllouse strokes wyth hys sward Flamberge, the whyche did cut all that he rought. For Reynawde was all wrothe, and for great angre he 24 habandoned and Leoparded both lyfe and gooddes.

and enter into a pit, where they defend themselves strongly.

They leave the pit to succour their men.

And therefore he bare greate hurte and harme to hys enemyes, for he had cast hys sheelde over his backe, and helde his swerde Flamberge / wyth both his 28 handes, & made so great destruction of the folke of Charlemagne, that the place was al full of bloud. And whan Reynawde saw that theyr enemyes were sore abashed, and that they durste not abyde him / he sayd 32 to his brethern, ‘ It was to vs great cowardnes to hyde vs so.’ ‘ Syr,’ sayd Alarde, ‘ ye say trouthe.’ Than sayd Reynawde, ‘ My lordes, my brethern, let vs to doo well. For traitours ben good to overcom ; they shall Reynawde makes great destruction of the folk of Charlemagne.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. vii.

Reynawde finds the fire a little quenched, he shuts the gate of the dungeon, and has up the draw-bridge of the castle.

[not now endure longe agaynst vs.' And whan he had sayde these wordes, he came to y<sup>e</sup> gate of y<sup>e</sup> castel, and the fyre was a lytle quenched. and maugre al his enemyes, he shet the gate of that doungeon / and had 4 vp the drawbridge of the sayde castel. And whan he had doone this, he came agayne to the batayle, & found his brethern, that slewe and beate downe so many knyghtes, <sup>1</sup>and barre themselfe so worthelye<sup>1</sup> / that it 8 was marvayle for to see; for they smote no stroke but they slew a man.

Reynawde kills the folk of Charlemagne in the dungeon, and takes Hernier alive.

Than was Hernyer the traytour in the medle within the doungeon, wherof Reynawde had locked the 12 gate / and drawn the bridge; and the good Reynawde sawe that he was safe of the hoste of Charlemagne, and began to put hymselfe in the medle so sharpelye, that he dyd so muche / he and hys brethern, that of y<sup>e</sup> 16 folke of Charlemagne that were wythin the doungeon, abode of them alive but Hernier / and .xii.<sup>2</sup> other; and whan Reynawde saw that they were all dead, he and hys bretherne and hys folke tooke Hernyer] <sup>3</sup>and the 20 XII other / And thenne Reynawde dyde doo make a gybette upon one of the hygheste towres / And there he made to be hanged the XII men / And made Hernyer to be bound hys foure<sup>4</sup> membres, that is to wyte / feete 24 and handes, to foure horses taylles / And soo he was drawnen all quyck, and quartered in foure peces / as a traytoure oughte to be doon unto. And when Hernyer was deed, Reynawde dyde doo make a grete fyre / And 28 made hym to be caste therin / And as he was altogyder brente, he made the ashes of hym to be cast in the ayere to the wynde / And there ye maye see how the Hernyer is drawn and quartered,

his body burnt, and his ashes cast to the wind.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. vii.

<sup>2</sup> [xi] F. orig. <sup>3</sup> Caxton begins again, Fol. F. vi.

<sup>4</sup> a la cue dung cheual. Et puis fist tous montes Ilz frapperent des esperons, et les cheuault est oient fors et couraigeux, et commencerent a courir lunge a lautre la parmy la rue, tant que en pru de temps Ilz leurent tout des membra, F. orig. e. viii. back.

traytours<sup>1</sup> that wolde be-traye Reynawde,<sup>1</sup> were deed and slayne. For they were punysshed as they had deserved.

4 Thenne whan kynge Charlemagne wyste that his folke were thus deed, and that he sholde not have Reynawde nor his brethern, he was sore angry therefore, and sayd to hymself / 'Ha, goode god lorde, 8 how am I evyll dealed wyth all, by this foure knyghtes brethern. I dyde my selfe grete harme / whan ever I made theym knyghtes / And it is often sayd / That men make often a rodde<sup>2</sup> for theym selfe; and that 12 I maye well now take to me / for theyr uncle slewe my sone Lohier / and Reynawde my newewe Berthelot, <sup>3</sup>that I loved so derely.<sup>3</sup> And yet now he has hanged my men, and many of theym slayne<sup>4</sup> / Well I myghte 16 calle myselfe unhappy whan I, that am the moste pyussant of the worlde / canne not avenge me of the foure symple knyghtes / I shall never departe from hens tyll that I be avenged, or elles they shall overcom 20 me / and all my armye.' 'Syr,' sayd Foulques of Morylloy, 'ye have a goode cause why, and Reynawde is a foole that he fereth you not. For yf he hadde doubted you, he shold not have hanged your men / but 24 he has doon so in dispyte of you.' thenne sayd y<sup>e</sup> duk naimes of bavyere, <sup>5</sup>'hadde ye beleved me, ye sholde not have loste your men. Ye wolde beleve Hernyer / It is happed of it as ye see. Now beholde 28 your folke that ben shaken wyth the wynde' /

Charlemagne is angry that his folk are thus slain.

Naymes of Bavyere says that the King should not have believed Hernyer.

Whan the emperour Charlemagne understode this that the duke of Naymes sayd to hym / He knewe that he sayd trouth, and wyste not what he 32 sholde saye to it, but loked down all a shamed. This

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. e. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> dont son est bactu, F. orig. e. viii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> en grant marture et tourment, F. orig. c. viii.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. F. vii.

hangynge, Reynawde and his bredern are goon upon the walles, and loked about theym, & sawe that the basse-courte of the castell brenned there as their wytaylles were / Thenne began Reynawde to saye to his bredern / 4
 'Fayr lordes, the thyng gooeth well, sithe that we ben scaped, thanked be god, from soo peryllous and harde adventure / I laked lityll but that we were all deed by false trayson / but the worste that I see is, that we have 8 loste our store of vytaylles, so that we have noo thyng to lyve upon. And me semeth that yf we dwelle ony lenger here wythin, we doo not wysely ; but yf it seme you goode it is tyme that we departe hens' / 'Broder,' 12 sayd Alarde, 'ye speke well & wysely / and we shall doo as ye have sayd : for as longe as the liffe is inoure bodyes, we shall not leve you' / Whan the foure bredern were togyder accorded for to departe thens, they trussed 16 all their harneys / and taryed tyll that it was nyghte, and thenne they armed theym selfe / and lighted on horsebacke / And when they were redy / Reynawde sayd to theym / 'Lordes, how many men ben we' / 'We ben,' 20 answered a lorde, 'well V hundred' / 'It is ynoughe,' sayd Reynawde / 'But wote ye what we shall do? Lete us kepe ourselfe alwayes to gyder, wythoute makynge of ony affraye, & so goo thrughe y<sup>e</sup> londe of almayn<sup>1</sup> / & 24 yf y<sup>e</sup> folke of charlemagn hap to assaile us / thinke to defende ourselfe well, & smyte harde vpon theym, <sup>2</sup>so that we have to oure worshyp the better of theym' / Whan it was tyme to lighte on horsebacke, Reynawde 28 mounted vpon bayarde, and the other also lyghted vpon theyr horses. And whan thei were all horsed, they opened the gate and wente oute atte theyr leyser wythoute making any noyse : and whan they were all yssued 32 oute, Reynawde behelde and sawe the castell that brente. Wherof he toke grete pyte, and sayd, 'Ha, god ! goode castell ! it is grete dommage that ye be thus dystroyed Reynawde says he must leave the castle, for they have no victuals.

The four sons go out of the castle in the night without any noise.

<sup>1</sup> sans faire noise, F. orig. e. viii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. F. vii. back.

and wasted / goddys curse have he that betrayed this goode castell. It is ago seven yere that ye were made fyrste. Alas! we have hadde therin soo moche goode, 4 and soo mykyll worshyp, and now we leve you mawgre vs./ Certes ye were my truste after my brethern / And whan I muste lese you, there is none so sory for it as I am' / And as he spake thyse wordes, the teres felle 8 doun from his eyen / And he was soo taken wyth grete hevynes, that almoste he felle doune in a swoune / soo moche of sorowe he had atte his herte.

Reynawde grieves
 to leave his castle,

12 And whan Alarde sawe Reynawde so full of sorowe, he cam to hym and sayd / ' By my feyth, broder, ye be to blame to saie soo. Ye be not the man that shall com to myschyef, for all the knyghtes that ben a lyve are not worthe you ; and therefore I praye you 16 that ye wyll comforte yourselfe / for I swere you vpon all halowes, that a fore two yere be passed, ye shall have a castell that shall be worthe suche foure as this is /
 But now lete vs putte ourselfe to the way, for we have 20 noo nede to tary' / ' Broder,' sayd Reynawde, ' I have founde ever in you goode counseyll / Now goo we thenne oure waye / and take you and Guycharde the forewarde, and I and Rycharde shalle come behynde' / 24 ' Syre,' sayde Alarde, ' all shall be doon as ye saye' / And thenne toke Alarde his broder Guycharde wyth hym, and went afore wyth a C. <sup>1</sup>knyghtes wyth theym / and hadde forthe their caryage in the myddes of theym / 28 And Reynawde and Rycharde cam after wyth the residue of theyr folke / But they coude never make nor passe soo softly / but that the folke of the ooste <sup>2</sup>of the emperour<sup>2</sup> overtoke theym.

but Alarde con-
 soles him.

As they pass, the folk of the Emperor hear them.

32 Thenne whan Charlemagne knewe that Reynawde came, he was moche wrothe, and made his commaundement that every man sholde be armed. And thenne the ooste began to moeve, and wente inconty-

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F. viii.    <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. i. back.

The host of Charlemagne advance against the four sons.

nente and armed theym selfe. Whan Alarde and Guycharde, that went afore, saw that they myghte not passe / but that they muste medle / they spored their horses / and ranne vpon Charlemayns folke soo sharply 4 that they were all an-angred wyth it, for they overthrewe two knyghtes to the grounde, and incontynente<sup>1</sup> was there grete a doo / And whan Reynawde sawe that the ooste moeved / he called to hym XX. knyghtes, 8 and bad theym take and lede forthe the caryage afore oute of the ooste, and he sholde goo helpe his bredern / 'Syre,' sayd they, 'we shall doo your commaundemente' / And<sup>2</sup> thenne Reynawde spored bayarde and 12 entred among the thyckest, and began there to make soo grete merveylls of armes that all the folke of charlemagne wondred vpon / for he & his brederne overthrewe there deed soo many knyghtes, that noone 16 durste come afore theym but that he was slayne.

Reynawde and his brethren overthrow all who come before them.

What shall I telle you / wyte it that the folke of kynge Charlemagne was so discomfyted, for by cause that it was nyghte,<sup>3</sup> and myghte not well see what 20 nombre of folke the foure bretherne were<sup>3</sup> / that Reynawde and his companye passed, mawgre theym of the ooste / And also I tell you for certeyn that Reynawde and his bredern dyde soo grete harme to the folke of 24 Charlemagne that he was sory for it many dayes after. 4Whan Reynawde was passed, he fonde his sommeres and his caryage / and his knyghtes that conduytte theym / wherof he was gladd / Thenne he sayd to his 28 brethern / 'Syres, goo on your waye' / and they dyde his commaundement / And Reynawde wyth his broder Richarde<sup>5</sup> abode byhynde / And whan Charlemagne wyste that Reynawde wente awaye, he was gladd, by 32 cause he hadde lefte the castell <sup>6</sup>of Mounteynforde<sup>6</sup> /

The sons pass through in spite of the host of Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> entre eulx et leurs gens, F. orig. f. i.
<sup>2</sup> quant Renault eut ce fait, il, F. orig. f. i.
<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. F. viii. back.
<sup>5</sup> Guichart, F. orig.      <sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig.

And Incontynente he made hym to be followed / and also all the oost was redyly armed / And whan they were well arrayed, they toke theyr waye after the foure 4 sones <sup>1</sup>of Aymon.<sup>1</sup>

Now ben the foure knyghtes bretherne<sup>2</sup> ryght sory of that they have thus left theyr fayr castell of Mounteynforde / And wyte it that Charlemagne fol-8 lowed theym well of nyghe / and sayd that / it sholde hurte hym sore but yf he myghte take theym / But Reynawde the worthy knyghte is not abashed / but he taketh all his folke, and setteth theym afore hym, 12 and sayd<sup>3</sup> to his broder Alarde / 'Goode broder Alarde,<sup>4</sup> take kepe of this folke betwene you & Guycharde / and yf the folke of Charlemagne assaylle vs, we shall deffende us well' / 'Syr,' sayd Alarde, 'as ye have 16 sayd, soo shall it be doon' / And thenne they saw come Charlemagne and Oger the dane, duke Names of bauyere, Foulgues of Morylloy, & many other, & whan Charlemagne that cam afore well horsed, saw reynawde 20 & his folke, he cried to theym and sayd, 'Soo helpe me god, glotons, ye be now deed! thys is the daye that I shall make you all foure to be all hanged' / 'Syre,' answered Reynawde, 'it shall not be so as ye wene, and 24 it playse god; for that god gyve me <sup>5</sup>lyffe and <sup>5</sup>helth, and to my horse bayarde,<sup>6</sup> the pursuette shall sore dere be boughte, that ye nowe do' / And whan he had sayd the same, he tor<sup>7</sup>ned bayarde agenst Charlemagne for to 28 smyte hym / for he wende well to have slayne hym wythoute ony fawte / The kyng Charlemagne was in daunger to deye, yf Reynawde had raughte hym / But Dampe hughe wente bytwene the kyng and Reynawde 32 that cam wyth his spere in the reest, willynge for to

The King follows
the four brethren.

Reynawde sets his men in array against the folk of Charlemagne.

Reynawde would have slain Charlemagne, but Dampe Hughe
comes between
them.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Aymon, F. orig. f. i.

<sup>3</sup> a Alard, F. orig. f. ii. back.      <sup>4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>6</sup> sera compare et chier vendua ma mort, F. orig. f. ii. back.

<sup>7</sup> Fol. G. i.

Reynawde slays
Hughe, and goes
after his brethren.

doo grete harme / And at his comyng, he smote dampe hughe thrughe the shelde so harde, that he perced his herte wyth the yron of his spere, and soo he fell down deed afore the kynge / And whan Reynawde had gyven 4 that stroke, he wente his waye after his brethern.

Whan Charlemagne<sup>1</sup> sawe hughe fall deed, he cryed with an high voys / 'Now after, lordes, after / for yf thyse glotons scape vs, I shall never be mery' / 8 And Reynawde cam agen to hys folke, and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, doubte you not aslonge as I am a lyve, but be all assured, and soo ryde on hardely<sup>2</sup> & in good arraye.' What shall I telle you more / Wyte it 12 that XXIV<sup>3</sup> myle lasted the chasse, and there was never a myle but that they iusted togyder / and many knyghtes were there overthrowen & slayn / But Reynawde & hys folke bare theym selfe soo manly, that 16 they loste<sup>4</sup> but thre of theyr felawshyp at that tyme / but they rode so long tyll they cam to the ryver. The kyng called to hym his barons, and said to theym /
'Lordes, lete alone the chasse! it were folie from hens- 20 forth for to followe theym. For I see that all our horses maye no more. Lete theym go to a hundred thousand devils! for yf Reynawde wroughte wyth wytche crafte, he coude doo nomore than he dooth. 24 Late vs thynk for to lodge us here nyghe the ryver / for the contrey is goode and playsaunte as me semeth.
'Syre,' sayd the barons / 'lete it be doon as ye have commaunded.' Thenne they vncladed theyr sommeres, 28 and pyghte there theyr pavyllyons / and whan they were sette<sup>5</sup> up, the kyng made hym to be dysarmed.
And in the meane while the souper was made redy lightly; for of all the daye y<sup>c</sup> kyng had nother eten 32 nor dronken / nor none of his felawshyp / And Rey-

The King tells his barons to give up
the pursuit of the brothers.

<sup>1</sup> vit ce coup, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> et sans desroy, F. orig. f. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> XIII lieux, F. orig. f. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> ne perdirent riens, F. orig. f. ii. back.      <sup>5</sup> Fol. G. i. back.

nawde was passed over the ryver, he & his bredern & his folke, sauff & sounde, where as they wolde be bi the grace of our lorde / and whan Reynawde & his 4 bredern saw that the chasse was ceased and lefte, they wente all softly; and whan they had goon ferre from the oost of kynge Charlemagne, they fonde a fountayne fayr & clere / and aboute that fountayne was moche
 8 fayr grasse & thycke / Whan reynawde sawe the place was soo playsaunt, he sayd to his folke, ' here is a fayr grounde for to lodge us, & for our horses.' ' Syr,' sayd Alarde, ' ye saye trouth.' And thenne they vnloaded 12 theyr somers <sup>1</sup>& theyr cartes<sup>1</sup> / and wyte it, the horse were mery; but the poure knyghtes were evyll lodged / for they had there noo mete nor no drynke, but clere water / But wyte it, that Reynawde nor none of his
 16 knyghtes dysarmed theym not, but made good watche all the nyghte, one after another / And whan they sawe the day com / Reynawde made his harneys to be trussed, and they lighted on horsbacke, and toke their 20 waye through the<sup>2</sup> grete forest of Ardeyne / and whan they had rydden longe, they lighted down afore another fountayne, that they had watched the nyghte afore, sholde rest themselfe there.

24 Now myght well saye Charlemagne, that he can never hurte the foure sones of Aymon / And wyte, that he was lodged vpon the ryver, where he abode / whan he wolde no more folowe after Rey-
 28 nawde / And whan the daye was clere / he sayd to the duke of Naymes / ' What thynke ye what we ought to doo?' / ' Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, ' yf ye wyll beleve me, we shall tourne backe agayne / for to goo ony 32 <sup>3</sup>ferther this waye, it were but a foli; for this wood is to thyke, and the ryver over moche perillouse / and also

Reynawde finds his pursuers have ceased, and encamps near a clear fountain.

His knyghts watch all night in their armour.

Duke Naymes says it is folly to go after the four sons any further.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. ii.

<sup>2</sup> une forest grant et espesse moult des nōmable, F. orig. f. ii

<sup>3</sup> Fol. G. ii.

Reynawde & his bredern are suche knyghtes that they ben not for to be lightly overthrowen.' And while the kyng and the duke spake to gyder / there cam many knyghtes to hym ; and whan Charlemagne sawe theym / 4 he called Vydelon, Renyer, Oger the dane, & sayd to theym / 'Lordes, I wyll that ye com agen to Parys wyth me.' And when they vnderstode this, they were glad, & sayd to the kyng / 'Syre, it is the best coun- 8 seyll that ye can doo' / and after that they were so accorded / Charlemagne made to be cryed, that everi man sholde retorne agen in to his country / and that they shold kepe it well, & that he prayed theym so to 12 doo / 'Syr,' sayd the barons, 'we shall do your commaundement' / and when all was sayd, they made thooste to descende & take their waye / and the kyng went streyghte to Parys, & the barons in their coun- 16 treys. And whan Charlemagne was come to parys, he called afore hym his barons, & to theym sayd / 'fayr lordes, I am the most unhappy kyng of y<sup>e</sup> worlde, whan I have no power to avenge my self of the foure 20 sones of Aymon ; and they lede me, as ye knowe / I wene they shall retorne in to their countrey or to their castell / & it be so, I wyll that we goo there agen for to leye sege there' / 'Syr,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'that 24 shall they not do, for they are in Ardeyne ; and ye knowe that the foreste is soo grete, that they shall fynde some cheuysaunce' / 'That myghte well be,' sayd the kyng Charlemagne / 'but whersomever they goo / evyll 28 waye myghte they fynde' / And when he had sayd thys, he tourned towarde Ogyer / and sayd to hym / 'Take Gerarde, Foulgues the almayne, and Dron of Mondyd- 32 dyer, and gve leve to the frenshmen and to the other / 'Syr,' sayd Ogyer, 'well shall be doon your commaundemente.' <sup>1</sup>And thenne wente Ogyer to Foulgues, to Gerarde / and to Dron / and tolde theym

Charlemagne orders all his men to return to their own lands.

The King goes straight to Paris.

The King grieves that he has no power to avenge himself on the four sons.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. ii. back.

that / that Charlemagne had commaunded / And after came to the frenshmen / and tolde to the other knyghtes / and gaaff theym leve / And whan the 4 kynges folke hadde leve, every man wente to hys cuntrye / not the ryght waye / but traversynge the mountaynes. And thus as Aymon wente traversynge the lande towarde his cuntrye, it happed to hym soo 8 that he came by the fountayne where his sones dwelled.
 Whan Aymon sawe hys chyldren / he was abashed, and ryght sory for it / And thenne he sayd to his barons, 'Lordes, counseyll me, I praye you, what I oughte to 12 doo agenst my children / for, and I assayle theym / and that they ben slayn or taken, I shall never have Ioye / and yf I lete theym goo / I shall be forsworne to Charlemagne' / Whan his barons herde hym speke 16 soo / there was never one that answered any worde /
 And whan Aymon saw that he was counseyllled of noo man / he sayd agayn to theym, 'Syth it is soo that ye wyll gyve me noo counseylle / I shall doo after my 20 owne wyll / for god forbede that it be layd unto me, that I have founde theym here, and have not foughte wyth theym / but well I telle you, that it is for my synne that I have founde them here. But from hens-24 forthe it shall be doon therin as it playseth <sup>1</sup>god and <sup>1</sup> fortune.' 'Syr,' sayd Esmenfray, 'yf ye assaylle your chyldren, ye do not amys / for ye sware it to the kyng Charlemagne / Kepe, syr Aymon, that ye be not for-28 sworne / for a man of your age shoulde rather deye than he sholde doo ony treyson.' 'Goode frende, ye saye well,' sayd Aymon / 'and I shall soo doo that I shalle not be blamed' / And thenne he called two of his 32 knyghtes, and sayd to theym / 'Goo toward Reynawde and his bretherne, and defye theym in my behalve.'
 'Syre,' sayd the <sup>2</sup>knyghtes, 'it is a harde thyng for to be doon / but sith it playse you, we shall doo as ye have

Aymon in passing to his own lands
 meets his sons.

Duke Aymon
 sends two knyghts
 to defy Reynawde
 and his brethren.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G. iii.

commaunded.' And thenne they went to warde Reynawde, that was sore abashed / for he knewe well that they were of his faders folke. Werof he was full sory for it / and after he sayd to his bredern / 'Lordes, now 4 arme yourselfe / for a man that is well garnysshed is not of lighte overthrowe / And of the other side, I knowe soo moche the hardenes of my fader, that he shall not feyne to be fyght us.' 'Broder,' sayd Rycharde, 'ye 8 saye trouthe' / This hangying, came the two knyghtes afore hym, and whan Reynawde sawe theym come nyghe hym, he wente agenst theym, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, what ye be, and what wynde dryveth you 12 hyther' / Thenne spake one of the knyghtes, and sayd to Reynawde / 'Syre, we ben knyghtes of my lorde, your fader, that sendeth to you by vs a defyaunce.' 'Lordes,' sayd Reynawde, 'I wyst it well <sup>1</sup>assone as I 16 dyde see yow of ferre<sup>1</sup> / but goo agayn and telle to our fader, that it will playse hym to gyve vs triews / for he shall not do well for to befyghte vs that are his natureyll chyl dren.' 'Syre,' sayd the knyghte, 'of folie 20 ye speke / but thynke to defende your selfe well, for he shalle assayll you withoute doubt' / Whan they hadde sayd these wordes, they retourned agayne for to reherse to Aymon their message, and how they had 24 defyed his children / Whan the olde Aymon understode theym, he made none other tarienge, but spored his horse wyth the spores, and ran the formeste vpon / vpon his sones. And whan Reynawde saw his fader 28 come, he come agenst hym and sayd, 'Ha, fader, what doo you / we have none soo grete a foo as ye be to vs / and I have grete mervyllle that ye come alwayes vpon us. Ye doo yll and grete synne for to doo soo. Atte 32 the leste, yf ye wyll bi noo wyse helpe vs / be not to us contrary ne enmye, <sup>2</sup>yf it <sup>3</sup>playse you<sup>2</sup> / 'Thou theeff!'

Reynawde asks
 his father to grant
 them a truce.

Reynawde does not wish to fight
 his father,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. iii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. iv. back.      <sup>3</sup> Fol. G. iii. back.

sayd Aymon, 'ye shall never doo goode, sythe that ye begynne to preche. Goo to the wode! soo shall ye be come wyld bestes / evyll daye gyve you, god; for ye 4 ben not worth an hanfull of strawe. Now thynke to defende yourselfe; for yf ye ben taken, ye shall be putte to a grete tourmente.' 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye doo vs wronge / I shalle defende me, sythe that I 8 maye none other wyse doo / for yf I sholde lette my-selfe to be slayne, my soule solde be putte to peyne and tourmente' / Whan Aymon saw that, he broughte his speere in the reeste, and putte hymselfe amonge his 12 chylde[n] / lyke as they hadde ben strangers / And whan Reynawde sawe that, he cryed to his men, and sayd / 'here is none other, but doo well now. Lordes, thynke to smyte well / for nede compelleth vs therto' / 16 And whan he hadde sayd that worde / he spored his horse wyth his spores / and putte hym selfe in the thyekest, and beganne to make soo grete effortes of armes, that all the folke of his fader merveyllled of it 20 gretely.

but Aymon attacks him.

What shall I saye? the bataylle beganne so felle and cruell / that pyte it was to see / For you sholde have seen, gyve and receyve, grete and horryble 24 strokes of the one parte and of the other. And many knyghtes and horses deye / many sheeldes brosten, and many white harneys broken / So many hedes smytten of, and soo many legges and armes broken, and sore 28 hurte. And thynke that this bataylle was sore stronge, and well helden of the one syde and of the other / But to saye the trouthe, Reynawde must loose atte that tyme / for his fader had thre<sup>1</sup> tymes as many folke as 32 he hadde / For of fyve hundred men that abode wyth Reynawde <sup>2</sup>after his castell was take / which were wyth hym atte thys bataylle,<sup>2</sup> were lefte on lyve / what

The battle begins

Both sides fight
 bravely, but Rey-
 nawde is beaten
 for want of more
 men.

<sup>1</sup> beaucoup plus gens, F. orig. f. iv.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. iv.

hurte and sounde, but fyfthy persones / But <sup>1</sup>I telle you well for certeyne, that Reynawde and his bretherne dyde soo grete harme to the folke of their fader / that they slewe well halfe of theym. But atte laste <sup>4</sup> Reynawde must loose, and flee away towarde the mountaynes / And Aymon chassed hym as well as he coude / for he wende well to have taken theym / And whan Reynawde sawe theymselfe vpon the toppe of <sup>8</sup> the mountayne, he sayd to hys bretherne / 'Lete vs not departe from hens / for this is a goode place for to deffende' / Wyte that there was grete scarmysshynge and Iustynges / made / and many a knyghte deed and <sup>12</sup> sore wounded. And there was slayne vnder Alarde, his goode horse / And whan Alarde sawe hym selfe a grounde, he lepte on his feete ryght quykely, and toke his swerde in his hande, and beganne to deffende <sup>16</sup> well hys bones / And whan Rycharde sawe his broder Alarde a fote, he torned towarde hym for to come helpe and socoure hym / And Aymon and his folke came there for to take hym. Soo beganne the bataylle <sup>20</sup> yet agen more cruell than it hadde be afore. And wyte that Alarde sholde have ben taken there / yf it had not bez the noble and worthy knyghte Reynawde that came to helpe hym. And whan he was come <sup>24</sup> there, he smote Bayarde wyth his spores / and wente in to the gretest presse / soo that he overthrewe Aymon his fader down to the erthe / and after, he sayd to hym, 'Fader, ye have pledged my broder Alarde, <sup>28</sup> for ye be now sette a foote as he is' / Thenne was Aymon sore angry, that he loste almoste his wyttes / And Reynawde sette his hande to his swerde / and beganne for to departe the presse in such a wyse / <sup>32</sup> that he broughte his brother Alarde oute of the presse. And after sayd to hym, 'Fayre brother, lepe behynde me <sup>2</sup>vpon Bayarde;<sup>2</sup> for to abyde here ony

The four sons flee towards the mountains, followed by Aymon.

Reynawde determines to defend the mountain.

Alarde is unhorsed.

Richard saves his brother Alarde from the folk of Aymon.

Reynawde overthrows his father Aymon, and brings Alarde out of the press and puts him on Bayard.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. iv.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. iv.

lenger, it were foly' / Whan Alarde vnderstode <sup>1</sup>his brother Reynawde, he was ryght glad, for he was so wery that he myghte no more / and soo he mounted 4 vpon bayarde behinde hys brother Reynawde. And whan Bayarde wyst hymselfe lade wyth two knyghtes, he strengthened hym selfe so strongly / that it semed to Reynawde that he was more ioyouse <sup>2</sup>& more mery<sup>2</sup> than 8 he had be of all the daye / Now wyt it, that Reynawde made fouer ioustes vpon his horse bayarde, wyth his brother Alarde behynde hym. Wherof he slewe foure knyghtes <sup>2</sup>of the folke of Charlemagne, that were come 12 wyth his fader Aymon / And all thus Reynawde toke Alarde oute of his enemyes handes, mawgre theyr teeth, and bare hym selfe ryght worthily the same daye / as here after ye shall mow more playnly vnder-16 stande.<sup>2</sup>

He slays four knyghts of Charle-
 magne,

Now ben the foure sones of Aymon recreaunte & almost wery / but onely Reynawde, that never was the weker for no thyng that he dyd in armes / 20 For as he went, he torned hym selfe at every pas that he made, and rebuked & kepte his enemyes abacke wyth his harde strokes that he gaaff to theym / soo that his folke wente afore hym all atte ther ease and leyser / 24 And whan he sawe that his folke were well ferre from theyr enemyes / he spored bayarde, and cam to his folke, hys brother Alarde behynde hym, as lightly as bayarde had be wythoute ony bridyll, and no saddle 28 vpon hym / for this horse was suche that he was never wery / And thus as Reynawde wente awaye, than cam and followed after hym Esmenfray / that was one of the most worthy knyghtes of Charlemagn, and was 32 vpon a horse ryght good and blacke, that Charlemagne had gyven to hym / And whan he was nygh Reynawde, he cryed to theym, 'Soo helpe me god,<sup>3</sup> ye ben deed or

and keeps his enemyes back,
 while his own
 men retreat.

Esmenfray follows after Rey-
 nawde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. iv. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. iv.

<sup>3</sup> gloutons, F. orig. f. v. back.

taken surely / I shall bryng you to Charlemagne' / And anone wente and smote Reynawd <sup>1</sup>in his sheelde / Wherof Reynawde was moche angry ; and Reynawde smote hym agen in suche a wyse, & wyth so grete a <sup>4</sup> strengthe / that nether for his sheelde nor for his goode armures of stele, he was not kepte / but that Reynawde overthrewe hym sterke deed to the grounde / And whan this knyghte was deed / Reynawde toke his <sup>8</sup> horse by the bridyll, & sayd to Alarde his broder, ' Holde, fayr broder, lighte vpon this blacke horse, whiche is good / for I gyve hym to you' / and gives his horse to Alarde.

Reynawde slays him,

And whan Alarde sawe the fayr present that his <sup>12</sup> brother Reynawde had doon to hym / he was as glad of y<sup>e</sup> same as thoughe he had wonne Parys / And thenne he made none other taryeng, but that / he lighted down from bayarde, and mounted vpon <sup>2</sup>Esmen- <sup>16</sup> frays blacke horse, that hys broder had gyven hym / and smote hym wyth the spores, & wente & iousted agenste a knyghte of his faders folk that was called Anfray, so harde that he overthrewe hym deed to <sup>20</sup> therthe. And shortly to speke, after that Alarde was in thys wyse sette agen on horsebacke, began the batayll of a freshe, sore harde & fell, in soo moche that at that owre were slayne <sup>XX</sup> of the best knyghtes that <sup>24</sup> Aymon had wyth hym. Whan Aymon sawe this, he was sore angry for it, and cryed to his folke, 'Ha lordes, yf they scape you, I shall never have ioye / for they have slayne Esmenfray, the good knyght that kyng <sup>28</sup> Charlemagne had gyven to me.' / Whan the folke of Aymon understode these wordes, and the wyll of their lorde / thenne they dyd renne vpon Alarde so moche, that they made hym to leve the place by force. And yf <sup>32</sup> it had not be the passage of a lityll ryver, that eased & holpe theym gretly, Reynawde & his brethern had had moche to doo. But I telle you wythout fawte, that

Alarde begins the battle again, and twenty of the knyghts of Aymon are slain.

A little river saves the four sons from the folk of Aymon.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. v.      <sup>2</sup> le moreau, F. orig. f. v.

Reynawde & his brethern made so grete occysion of the folk of their fader, that it was pyte for to <sup>1</sup> beholde, for there deyed well of theym XXV at the 4 passage of the ryver; and yf reynawde had had wyth hym a L knyghtes more than he had at the passage / he sholde have dyscomfyted his fader & all his folke / but for fawte of men, Reynawde must forsake the place, 8 & myght not save wyth hym but XIIIII knyghtes of his owne / Now see how sorowfull<sup>2</sup> was the batayll / for of V hundred knyghtes that Reynawde had wyth hym there / abode wyth hym alyve but XIIIII / and ye may 12 wel wyte that the olde Aymon had dommaged his children right sore / but that they passed over the ryver. For as it is sayd / they had lost all theyr men, wherof they were full sory & wrothe. /

Reynawde loses
all but fourteen knights in the battle.

16 Now hath Reynawde so fewe folke, that he wote no more what to do / but he myght not doo<sup>3</sup> therto.
Wherof the teeres fell down contynuelly from his eyen / and in lyke wyse wepte Aymon hys fader at that other 20 side, as thistory doth tell. And whan he had wepte ynough / he sayd in this maner / 'Ha, fair sone, prue and worthy, how sory am I / for I am thocccasion of your harme & <sup>4</sup>dommage / Now shall ye all goo as 24 exyled / for ye have noughte to lyve vpon, & I can not helpe you by ony wyse / Wherof I ensure you I am gretly dysplaysed <sup>5</sup>& sory for it.<sup>5</sup> The devyll take his soule that first began the striff! & soo shall he.' 28 Whan he had made his mone & lamentacyons longe ynoughe, he made incontynent all the deed bodyes to be taken for to be buryed / And they that were hurte /
he made to be brought wyth hym as well as he coude / 32 And made the body of Esmenfray to be put vpon a litter / & toke on his way towarde Ardeyne / where he bode but a nyght; and in the mornyng he made

Aymon and Reynawde both grieve
at the loss of their
men.

Aymon takes the body of Esmen-
fray with him to Paris.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. v. back.    <sup>2</sup> et pitouse, F. orig. f. v.    <sup>3</sup> add.
<sup>4</sup> grant, F. orig. f. v.    <sup>5-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. v.

He gives the King
an account of the battle.

the litter to be borne vpon two<sup>1</sup> horses, & went agen to Paris, & cam afore Charlemagn & said to hym / ' Sir, whan I wente now late towarde my cuntry,<sup>2</sup> wyte that as I was <sup>3</sup>on my waye, I fonde my children / and 4 <sup>4</sup>fyve hundred knyghtes wyth theym in the forest of Ardeyn, and <sup>5</sup>for thacquytaunse of myn othe,<sup>5</sup> I dyd sende to theym my dyffyaunce / and wolde have taken theym / for to have brought theym to you as prysoners / 8 but I myghte not / for they ben sore doubted / And that I assaylled theym, it hath cost me sore dere / for thei have borne vnto me soo grete harme & dompage that it cannot be estemed ; and I slewe all theyr folke 12 excepte XII<sup>6</sup> persones, that ben scaped wyth theym / but they have slayne your knyghte Esmenfray, but at the last they wente awaye dyscomfyted <sup>5</sup>and overthrowen<sup>5</sup> / And they sholde have ben taken, if it had 16 not be a ryver that they passed over / wherby they were saved' / Whan Charlemagn vnderstode these wordes / he was ryght sore an angred / soo moche that he lost almoste his wyte. And thenne he sayd to olde Aymon 20 in angre / ' By god, Aymon, ye escuse yourselfe falsly / for never raven ete his yonge byrdes / To a nother ye shall make this to beleve, but not to me.' Whan the olde Aymon vnderstode the kyng that speke thus, he 24 sayd to hym / ' Syr Emperour, wyte that I do telle you is trouthe / and I doo shewe it to the ende that my trouthe be knowen / & for none other cause / Soo bryng afore me your reliques <sup>5</sup>& hallowes,<sup>5</sup> that I shall 28
swere vpon the sayntes that ben in hevyn / that it was as I have recounted & sayd to you / and yf it playse you, ye shall beleve me / and yf ye wille not / ye maye chuse therof' / ' Aymon,' sayd Charlemagne, ' I knowe 32

Charlemagne will not beleve that Aymon fought against his own
sons.

<sup>1</sup> deux mulletz, F. orig. f. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> par vostre commandement, F. orig. f. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. G. vi.      <sup>4</sup> a tout cent, F. orig. f. vi. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. f. vi. back.

<sup>6</sup> XIII. F. orig.

well your hert, for yf it went all at your wyll, your sones sholde be lordes of all fraunce / and of all my empyre' / 'Sire,' sayd amon, 'ye be wroth of som other 4 thying, wherof I may not do therto; and yf ye have ony knyght in your courte that wyll make good this that it playse you for to saye / I shall prove it on hym, wyth my body, that he lieth falsely. But ever<sup>1</sup>more 8 ye have be suche, that ye never loved a true knyghte / but flaterers and lyers, wherof many evylles been happed, & shall happe' / And thenne Aymon came doun from the palays, and lighted vppon his horse 12 and wente agen to his cuntrye / Wythout ony leve that he toke of the kyng. And he rood soo longe oo daye after a nother, that he came to Ardeyne / And there he fonde the duchesse his wyff, that came agenste 16 hym, and receyved hym wyth a glad chere / and asked hym how he had doon.

Charlemagne is angry with Aymon,

who leaves the palace and goes to his own country.

Thenne sayd the duke Aymon / 'Full evyll have I doon / For I founde my foure sones in the wood of 20 Ardeyne / and soo I assaylled theym cruelly / Wenying to me for to have taken theym / whiche I coulde not doo / but I slewe and dyscomfyted all theyr folke /
 And they have doon to me soo grete harme of my 24 folke / and soo many they have slayne of theym, that I knowe not the numbre. And I telle you for veraye certeyn, but yf it had not ben the prowes and grete worthynes of oure sone Reynawde / I had taken 28 Alarde / For my men had slayne his horse / and had broughte hym so lowe that he myghte no more goo /
 But reynawde his broder came vpon us, and brake vs so sore that he broughte Alarde out of the preese, 32 mawgre us and our folke, and made hym sitte behynde hym vpon Bayarde / And I telle you that Reynawde fought soo sore, that never lyon nor noo bore foughte soo strongly agenste ony other best / as he dyde fyghte

Aymon tells his wife how he attacked his sons,

and nearly captured Alard,

but the prowess
 of Reynawde
 delivered him,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. vi. back.

and how Esmenfray was slain.

agenst our men / for at everi paas that he made forwarde, he tordned hymself agenst vs wyth Alarde behynde hym, that made vs so gretly abasshed that we myght not bere nor abyde his grete strokes / & at this 4 4 8 12
 16 20 24
 28 32
 36 40
 44
 48 52
 56
 60
 64
 68
 72
 76
 80
 84
 88 92
 96 100
 104
 108
 112
 116
 120
 124
 128
 132
 136
 140 144
 148
 152
 156
 160
 164
 168
 172
 176
 180
 184
 188
 192
 196
 200
 204
 208
 212 216
 220
 224
 228
 232
 236
 240
 244
 248
 252
 256
 260
 264
 268
 272
 276
 280
 284
 288
 292
 296
 300
 304
 308
 312
 316
 320
 324 328
 332
 336
 340
 344
 348
 352
 356
 360
 364 368
 372
 376
 380
 384
 388
 392
 396
 400
 404
 408
 412
 416
 420 424
 428
 432
 436
 440 444
 448
 452
 456
 460
 464
 468
 472
 476
 480
 484
 488
 492 496
 500 504
 508 512
 516 520
 524
 528
 532
 536 540
 544
 548
 552
 556
 560 564
 568
 572
 576
 580 584 588
 592
 596
 600
 604
 608
 612
 616
 620
 624
 628
 632
 636
 640
 644
 648
 652
 656
 660 664
 668
 672
 676
 680
 684
 688
 692
 696
 700
 704
 708
 712 716
 720
 724
 728
 732
 736
 740
 744
 748
 752
 756
 760
 764
 768
 772
 776
 780
 784
 788
 792
 796
 800 804 808
 812
 816
 820
 824
 828
 832
 836
 840
 844
 848
 852
 856
 860
 864
 868
 872
 876
 880
 884
 888
 892
 896
 900
 904
 908 912
 916
 920
 924
 928
 932
 936
 940
 944
 948
 952
 956
 960
 964 968
 972
 976
 980
 984
 988
 992
 996
 1000

The duchess blames Aymon for having fought against their own sons.

‘Ye have doon evyll,’ sayd the lady / ‘that ye have thus sore dommaged oure chyldren. Ye sholde defende theym agenste all men / and ye doo to theym 20 the worste that ye canne! be they not your sones naturell, commen of your owne flesshe? For sooth, my lorde, ye ought well to bere yourselfe better towarde theym than ye doo / for never soo ryche a bourdeyne 24 was borne in the wombe of a lady: blessed be the hour that they were begoten & norysshed / And soo helpe me god, my lorde, as I wolde that your chyldren and myn hadde taken you prysoner / to the ende that 28 ye sholde yelde to theym agayne all that they have lost by you / And I thanke god ryght highli that Charlemagne is wrothe wyth you / for evyll to doo maye noo goode come of. Ye assaylled your chyldren 32 agenst god and agenst all ryghtwysness / And yf harme is come to you therefore / thanked be god’ / Thenne sayd Aymon, ‘Lady, you saye me ryght, for I have

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G. vii.

<sup>2</sup> six F. orig.

doun grete wrong / And I promytte you that I never dyde thynge / wherof I repente me so sore, as I doo of this / <sup>1</sup>But truste me, I shall kepe me a nother tyme to

The Duke owne
 he has done
 wrong,
 and repents of his conduct.

4 doo theym any harme' /

But here levethe the historye to speke of Charlemagne and of the duke Aymon, & of the duchesse his wyff / and retorneth to speke of Reynawde and of 8 his bredern / that are in the wodes of Ardeyne.<sup>2</sup>

Here the history leaves Aymon to speake of Rey-
 nawde and his bredern.

CHAPTER IV.

<sup>3</sup>How after that the olde Aymon hadde dys-comfyted his chyldren / They wente and dwelled in the deppeste of the foreste of 12 Ardeyne soo longe that they were all countrefayte blacke and roughe as bestes, for the grete hongre that they had endured.
 After they went to Ardeyne to see their 16 moder, that fested 'and chered' theym gretly / and gaaf to theym soo grete goode that they mighte well enterteyne theymselfe
 'and their astate thervpon' agenst Charle-20 magn / And how Mawgys their cosin arryved whan they wolde departe, which wente wyth theym in to the royame of Gascoyn wyth fyve hundred knyghtes / 24 And of the sorowe that their lady modre made atte their departynge.

Capytulum IIII.

Ine this party the tale sayth / that after Reynaude 28 had slayn Esmenfray, & gyven his horse to his

<sup>1</sup> mais je vous prometz ma chiere Dame, F. orig. f. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> en Ardeyne, F. orig. F. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. G. vii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

The sons pass the river, and go into the forest of Arden.

They are in great distress for want of food, and dare not go into towns or castles for victuals.

All their folk die except Reynawde and his brethren.

Their horses nearly die of hunger, except Bayarde, who thrives on roots.

broder Alarde, they passed over the ryver, & wente in to the forest of Ardeyn, sore depe in it, by cause they wolde not be aperceyved. And whan they had ben there a lityll while, they began to kepe the wayes / and <sup>4</sup> all they that cam foreby theym, & that bare ony vytaylles, they were dystressed by theym,<sup>1</sup> and therof they lived / for they durst not goo to no townes nor to castelles for to bye ony vitayles; and therefore they <sup>8</sup> suffred grete nede & grete disease, for thei hadde nother mete nor drinke / but water. For the most parte they ete flesshe withoute ony brede / And knowe, that for cause of this grete suffraunse that they endured <sup>12</sup> thus, and also of the grete colde that they had for by cause of the snowes that were there, theyr folke began to dye / And abode nomoo lyve, but Reynawde and his thre brethren. And this was by cause of the grete <sup>16</sup> strengthe that was in their bodies. /

For noo traveylle myghte not hynder theym / <sup>2</sup>And wyte, that they hadde but eche of them foure an horse / that is to wyte, Bayarde and the thre other / <sup>20</sup> But they have nother ootes nor other corne for to gyve theym / <sup>3</sup>but they eete onoly suche as they myghte fynde in the foreste, of rotes and leves.<sup>3</sup> And for this cause theyr horses were so lene, that wyth peyne myghte <sup>24</sup> they stonde / sauff Bayarde, that was fatte and in good plighte, for he coude better fede and lyve wyth rotes / than the other sholde have doon wyth heye and otes / And wyte it well, that the foure sones of Aymon lyved <sup>28</sup> there this liffe soo longe, that every man that passed there as they were & kepte theym selfe / escaped not / but he was other slayne or dystressed <sup>4</sup>of suche vytaylles as he hadde,<sup>4</sup> soo that all the countrey aboute them <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1</sup> tous ceulx q portoient viures estoient destroussey, F. orig. f. vii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G. viii.

<sup>3-3</sup> fors que de racines de ble, F. orig. F. vii.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

was sore wasted by theym that it was merveylle / And atte the laste, the foure<sup>1</sup> knyghtes were soo sore apayred, that they that hadde seen theym afore sholde not have 4 knowe theym / For theyr harneys was all rousty, and theyr sadylls and brydelles all roten, soo that they hadde made theyr reynes wyth cordes / And theymselfe were become all blacke. And it was no merveylle, for 8 they wered alwayes theyr cote of mayle all rousty vpon theyr doubelettes / <sup>2</sup>and hadde nother sherte nor Iacket / but they were all roten.

The sore plight of the four knyghts,

whose harness
 becomes rusty,

and they themselves all black.

12 What shall I telle you more? Wyte that Reynawde was doubted and fered soo sore, that it was merveylle / For nyghe there as Reynawde haunted, was no man that durste abyde there / but onely wythin
 the fortresses. For whan Reynawde was mounted vpon 16 Bayarde, and his thre brethern upon there other thre horses / <sup>3</sup>all theyr rychese & power was wyth theym / and yet they wasted and dystroyed all the countrey all aboute theym / And soo the foure powre knyghtes 20 were soo sore dysfygured / that who had seen theym sholde not have knowe theym / For they were <sup>4</sup>as roughe as beres that ben famysshed, & were sore lene, that every body had of it pyte.

They waste all the countrey round
 them,

and yet they are nearly famished.

24 And whan Reynawde sawe hymselfe soo pooreli arayed, he called to hym his bredern, and sayd / 'Lordes, I merveylle myselfe moche that we take not some good counseyll what we have to doo; and me 28 semeth that we ben become yll / and that slougthe is amonge vs. For yf we were suche as I trowed / we sholde not suffre the martyrdome that we endure; and that we have endured soo long agoo, now knowe I

Reynawde asks
 counsel of his brethern what
 they shall do,

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> et aussi leurs auquectons estoient tous pourries, F. orig.
 f. vii.

<sup>3</sup> tout le monde les suquoit et si pastoient le pays, F. orig. f.
 viii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. G. viii. back.

that we ben but lityll worthe, to have lette reste our ennyes as we have. But one thyng I consider / we have but fewe horses<sup>1</sup> and lityll harneys / and no money at all, and yet we ben in suche a plyghte that 4 we ben more like bestes than folke / Soo praye I you all in generall, that ye wille tell me what we oughte to doo for the best / for I telle you for veraye certeyn, that I had moche lever deye as a knyghte, than for to deye 8 here for hunger and for dysease.'

and says he would rather die as a knight, than of hunger or disease in the forest.

Whan Alarde herde Reynawde speke thus, he sayd / 'Broder, soo helpe me god / It is long sith I dyde take hede to that ye saye now / but I fered 12 me full sore to telle you therof, lest ye wolde have ben dysplayseed wyth me for it / but sith that ye have opened the wordes / yf ye wyll byleve me / I shall gyve you good counseyll as me seemeth / Syr, we have suffred 16 here grete poverte a long tyme / & we maye not goo in to no cuntrye but we shall be take / For as ye knowe all the barons of fraunce / and namly,<sup>2</sup> our fader and all our kynsmen haten vs dedly. And yf ye wyll 20 beleve me / we shall goo streyghte to Ardeyne, towarde our moder / for she shall not faylle vs; and there we shall sojourne a lityll / And whan we shall have sojourned / we shall take wyth vs som company, and 24 shalle go serve some grete lorde / Where we <sup>3</sup>shall get som goode. For ye be not suche a man but that ye shall yet ones have grete plente of goodes; for I knowe no man in erthe that of worthynes & of strengthe maye 28 compare to you' / 'Broder,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye well and wysely, and I promyt you I shall doo soo' / Whan the two other knyghtes herde the counseyll that Alarde they breder had gyven to Reynawde / they 32 began to saye / 'Broder Alarde, we knowe well that Alard counsels him that they should go straight to their mother at Arden, and there sojourn a while.

Reynawde consents willingly,

<sup>1</sup> ne harnoys ne monnoye, F. orig. f. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> specially.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. H. i.

ye gyve goode counseyll<sup>1</sup> to our broder Reynawde<sup>1</sup> / and also the other Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'Sith that this counseyll two knyghts.
 semeth to you goode, we shall doo it to nyghte' / 4 Soo moche abode the foure sones of Aymon; that the nyghte cama. and whan it was come, they lighted on They depart that horsebacke, & put theymselfe to the waye soo well night, clothed & arrayed, as I have tolde you above, and in 8 suche wyse that theyr flesshe was seen naked in many places of theyr bodyes / And so longe they rode by and ride on till nyghte & by daye, that they came there as they were they approach the borne, that was nyghe the cyte of Ardeyne / and whan city.
 12 they were soo nyghe the cyte that they myght well see it / they loked vpon it; and thenne they remembered the grete ryches wherfrom they were caste & banysshed / and of the grete poverte that they had suffred longe<sup>2</sup> / 16 And as they approached nyghe the cyte, Reynawde sayd to his brethern, 'We have doon evyll that we Reynawde is have not taken surete of our fader, for ye knowe well sorry that they that he is soo cruell, that yf he maye take vs he shall have not taken 20 yelde vs prysoners to Charlemagne.' 'Broder,' sayd surety of their Richarde, 'ye saye well; but my herte gyveth me not father. that our fader wolde doo as ye have sayd. And yf he so dyde, yet have I lever deye afore Ardeyne, than for 24 grete dysease and hungre in the foreste. Late vs ryde surely, for I tell you that no body shall knowe vs.
 And of thother parte, yf we can sette our feete wythin Ardeyne / we shall be sauff ynough / for we be well 28 beloved / and my lady, <sup>3</sup>our moder, sholde never suffre that men doo to vs any harme ne dysplaysure.'
 'Certes, fayr brother,' <sup>4</sup>sayd Reynawde,<sup>4</sup> 'ye have sayd ryghte well and wysely / and moche ye 32 have recomforte me. Now late vs ryde in a good hour.' And whan he had sayd these wordes / they

<sup>1-1</sup> a Reynault. F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Ils sont tant dolent que peu sen faillit, quilz ne tomber-ent pasmez a terre. F. orig. f. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. H. i. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

They enter the chief street of Arden.

entred soone after wythin Ardeyne / and thei rode thurgh the maysters strete, that they were not knowen of noo body. And they went streyghte to the castell wythoute ony taryeng / And wyte, that whan they 4 passed thurgh the stretes, the folke that behelde theym marueylled moche of theym. For they wyst not what folke they were, and sayd the one to thother / 'See, what folke ben thyse / I trowe that they 8 ben not of our lawe / nor of our beleve' / Thenne they asked theym / 'What ben ye, lordes, that are soo countrefayt / are ye paynemes / or of what countrey ben ye?' 'Syres,' answered Reynawde, 'ye enquire 12 over moche; see ye not what folke we ben.' And whan they were com to the palays, they lighted doun a fote / and toke theyr horses to kepe to <sup>1</sup>their knyghtes that were com of late in their felawshyp / And thenne 16 the foure brethern wente vp to the hall, and met wyth noo bodi / For the olde Aymon theyr fader was a hawkyng vppon the ryver / and the duchesse <sup>2</sup>theyr moder was in her chambre, where she was contynuelly 20 pencyfull & sory by cause that she myghte not here noo tydynges of her children. Whan the foure brethern were entred wythin the hall, they fonde noo man to whom they sholde speke / wherof they were sore 24 merueylled /

The people do not know them, and ask to what country they belong.

They reach the palace, and leave their horses to three knights, who have lately joined their company.

The sons enter the hall, where they find no one to whom they can speak.

And / they sette themselfe doun / the one here / and the other there / And abode thus a longe while that noo body <sup>3</sup>[came] there / and whan they 28 hadde taryed longe ynough, [then]ne came the duchesse theyr moder oute of her chambre, [and] she loked a longe the halle, Where <sup>4</sup>she saw her son[nes thus] <sup>5</sup>coun<sup>5</sup>trefayte, whyche she knewe not / But merueylled 32

The Duchess comes from her chamber, but does not recognise her sons, <sup>1</sup> a troy's cheualliers. F. orig. g. i. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3-3</sup> [ ] from ed. 1554 corrected, as there was a piece cut out of Caxton.

<sup>4</sup> et elle veoir, F. orig. g. i.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. H. ii.

herselfe gretly what folke they were / And whan Alarde sawe his lady moder com / he sayd to his broder Reynawde and to his other brethern, 'yonder is our 4 moder that we sore desire for to see. Late vs goo agenst her, yf it playse you / and tell her our grete penurye and our nede' / 'Brother,' sayd Reynawde, 'we shall doo soo ; but we shall tary tyll she speke to vs or not.'<sup>1</sup> 8 And taryed thus the foure brethern tyll that theyr moder was com to theym. And whan she sawe theym so blacke and soo hidous / and pryncypally Reynawde, that was so grete & soo roughe, she toke soo grete fere 12 of them that she wolde have goon agen in to her chambre / But anon she assured herselfe, and sayd to theym, 'god save you, lordes / What be you, ne of what nacyon / are ye crysten or paynymes / or folke that 16 doth penaunce? Wyll ye not have some almesse, or some clothyng for to cover your body wyth / For I see ye have grete nede of it / and yf ye wyll have it, for goddys sake I shall gyve it you gladly, to the ende he 20 have mercy on my children, And that wyll kepe theym from ylle combraunce and fro pareyll, For it is wele seven yeres that I dyd not see theym.' And whan the duchesse hadde sayd this, she toke so grete pyte to 24 remembre her children that she beganne to wepe sore tenderly. And whan she hadde wepte a longe while, she sayd soo highe that her children vnderstode it,
 'Ha, good god ! when shall the daye come that I shall 28 see my chyldren / Alas, goode lorde, how fayne wolde
 I see theym ! Was there e[ver<sup>2</sup>] lady that bare soo ryche a bourden as I have / And that [were<sup>2</sup>] of it soo dyscomforted as I am ?
 32 And whan Reynawde sawe his lady moder soo so[row]full and sory, He hadde of hit grete pyte / And [the] teeres began to come atte his

and is frightened
by their rough
appearance.

She asks them
whether they are Christians or Pagans,
and out of pity
offers them
clothing.

The Duchess
weeps when she thinks of her absent sons.

Reynawde has so much pity for her, that he weeps.

<sup>1</sup> pour veoir se elle nous congnoustra ou non, F. orig. g. l.

<sup>2</sup> From ed. 1554. A piece cut out of the Caxton.

eyen / And wolde dyscovere <sup>1</sup>hymselfe / <sup>2</sup>But whan
 the duchesse behelde well his visage and his byhavoyr / and maner<sup>2</sup> / her blode ranne vppe to her face / and hevered wythin her body / and beganne to shake full 4 faste, soo that almoste she felle down in a swoune to the erthe, And was a grete while that she myghte not speke, her herte was soo close and soo sore pressed / and all her colour loste and goon / And whan she was 8 come agen to herselfe, she dyde caste her sighte agayn vpon Reynawde, and knewe hym ryght well by a wounde that he hadde in his face, whiche was doon to hym of a fall / whan he was in his tendre age / Thenne 12 she sayd to hym, as gladde as any moder may be,
 'Reynawde, my sone / whos peere is not amonge all the knyghtes of the worlde / How see I you soo sore appayred and chaunged? Where is goon your grete 16 beaulte / Why, my sone, doo ye hyde you towarde me / that loveth you more than my selfe' / And while that she sayd thysse wordes, she loked aboute her / and knewe her children / and anone she went towarde theym wyth 20 her armes spred abroad<sup>3</sup> / for to colle and kysse them, sore wepyng for grete pyte that they were soo sore apayred of theyr beaulte. And soo longe she kyssed one and thenne a nother / that at laste she felle down 24 in a swoune / And Reynawde toke her vp in his armes / where she abode a good while. And Reynawde and his bretherne ceassed not from weppyng, for grete pyte that they hadde of theyr moder. 28

The Duchesse
recognises him
by a scar in his face,

and embraces all
her children.

And whan the duchesse was come agen to herselfe, she toke her chyl dren, and made theym sitte down by her / And sayd to theym, 'How is it that I see you thus poure and dysfygured? Why is it that 32 ye have wyth you no knyghtes / nor none other company / Where have ye ben, that have endured so grete

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H. ii. back. <sup>2-2</sup> mais la duchesse le regarde, F. orig. g. i.

<sup>3</sup> comme forcensee, F. orig. g. i.

- poverte and soo grete dysease' / <sup>1</sup>Whan <sup>2</sup>the duchesse spake thus to her children, she dyd wepe styll sore tendrely / and fowndered all in teeres<sup>3</sup> / holdynge her <sup>4</sup>sone Reynawde bytwene her armes / and kyssed hym full swetly / 'Lady,' sayd Reynawde, 'we have wyth vs but thre knyghtes, that kepe our horses yonder wythoute / For our fader hathe slayn all our knyghtes and <sup>8</sup>all our folke. And also he sholde have slayne vs, if it hadde not be our lorde that kepte vs therfro thoroughe his pyte and mercy / Sore harde parentage dyd he shewe to vs, our naturell fader' / Whan the duchesse <sup>12</sup>vnderstode thise wordes, she was ryght sory for it, And called to her one of her servauntes, and sayd to hym /
 'Goo and make my sones horses to be in to a good stable / And that they be well tended. And brynge <sup>16</sup>hither the thre knyghtes that kepe the horses wythoute / For I wyll see them.' 'madame,' sayd her squyer,
 'it shall be doon Incontynente' / And thenne he wente to the thre knyghtes / and sayd to theym that the <sup>20</sup>duchesse wolde see theym, Which incontynente dyde as the lady hadde commaunded, and cam vp to the palays, where as Reynawde taryed for theym. 'Lordes,' sayd the duchesse to theym, 'ye be ryght welcome' / <sup>24</sup>'Madame,' sayd the knyghtes, 'god gyve <sup>5</sup>you goode lyffe and longe,<sup>3</sup> and Loye of your chilydren / For they ben the beste<sup>4</sup> and the moste worthy of all the worlde' /
 This hangynge, came there a yoman / that sayd to the <sup>28</sup>duchesse / 'Madame, yf it playse you to sitte atte the table, the meete is redy.' The lady toke Reynawde and the other wyth her / and ledde theym to dyner, & made theym sitte down all afore her / And theyr thre knyghtes <sup>32</sup><sup>5</sup>atte the lyfte syde of her<sup>5</sup> / There made goode chere the foure sones of Aymon, and ete at theyr ease and atte

She weeps for pity at her sons'
 woeful plight.

Reynawde relates to her how Duke Aymon slew all
 their folk.

The Duchess
 sends for the three knyghts
 who wait outside,

and welcomes
 them kindly.

A yeoman announces that the dinner is ready,

the duchess leads her sons to the table,
 and also the
 three knyghts.

<sup>1</sup> Saiches que quant la duchesse, F. orig. g. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H. iii. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> meilleurs du monde, F. orig. g. ii.

<sup>5-5</sup> aupres d'elle, F. orig. g. ii.

theyr owne wyll / For it was longe syth that they hadde ony goode mele, Where they myghte take <sup>1</sup>theyr naturell foode <sup>2</sup>atte theyr ease / And as they were atte the table, Thenne came theyr fader Aymon from hawkyng and <sup>4</sup> huntyng / whiche hadde taken foure hertes and two wylde bores, <sup>3</sup>and dyverse pertryches and feysautes <sup>3</sup> / Whan Aymon sawe theym / he knewe theym not / and he sayd to the duchesse / 'Lady, what are thyse <sup>8</sup> folke that ben thus countrefayte' / Whan the duchesse vnderstode her husbunde, she was sore agaste / and beganne to wepe, and sayd / 'Syre, thyse ben your chyldeyn and myn / that ye have traveyllid so moche, <sup>12</sup> and sore hunted as wylde bestes, The whiche have dwelled longe tyme in the foreste of Ardeyne <sup>4</sup> / Where as they have ben sore tournd, as ye now maye see.
 Now are they come to me, by cause I am ryght gladd <sup>16</sup> whan I see theym / For to you they ben not come, for they knowe well that ye love theym not. But I praye you for god, that for the love of me ye wyll lodge theym thys nyghte, For they shall departe to morowe erly. <sup>20</sup> And I wote not yf ever I shall see theym / wherfore of this I beseche you ryght humbly.'

Duke Aymon
 arrives from hawking and
 hunting,

and enquires of his wife who are these men.

The Duchesse
 tells him they are his sons,

and implores
 him to lodge
 them that night.

Aymon, in great anger, curses his children because they have neither
 folk nor money.

Reynawde excuses himself

Thenne whan Aymon vnderstode thyse wordes, he shoke all for angre, And tourned hymselfe to- <sup>24</sup> warde his sonnes / and made to theym evyll chere, and sayd to theym, 'Glotton, goddys curse have you / <sup>5</sup>For ye ben not worthe a strawe, For ye have nother folke nor money, nor noo prysoner that myghte paye to you <sup>28</sup> a grete havoyr.' 'Fader,' sayd Reynawde, 'by the feyth that I owe to you, yf your londe is in peas / the

<sup>1</sup> ung seule repas, F. orig. g. ii.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. H. iii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted. le quil entra en sa salle et trouva ses enfans qui memgeoient, et la duchesse leur mere qui les servoit, F. orig. g. ii.

<sup>4</sup> la grant forest la ou ilz sont aussi devenuz comme veoir pourres, F. orig. g. ii.

<sup>5</sup> Car vous ne valles riens, et comme garoons de neant estes, F. orig. g. ii.

other ben not soo / For ye myghte goo <sup>1</sup>six score myles that ye sholde not fynde nother ryche man nor poure.

because of the state of the country,

But that they kepe theymselfe wythin fortresses
 4 and in castelles / But ye doo grete wronge for to doo vs the worst that ye canne; ye toke fyrste frome vs our goode castell of Mountenforde / And after that ye hadde assaylled vs in the <sup>2</sup>wode of Ardeyne, and slewe
 8 all oure folke / so that of <sup>3</sup>fyve hundred knyghtes that I had, ye lefte a lyve with me but enlevyn / Wherof VIII ben deed, and thyse thre that ye see here are abyden a lyve / Now beholde well, fader, and thynke 12 how ye bare your selfe towarde vs / But sith it is thus that ye oughte to vs noo goode wyll, and that ye maye not see vs, Make vs the hedes to be smytten of / And soo shall you be beloved of Charlemagne / And hated of 16 God / and of all men.'

and blames his father for his cruel treatment of them.

And whan the olde Aymon vnderstode Reynawde thus speke, he knewe well he sayd truth / and beganne to fyghte sore atte his herte / And thenne he 20 sayd to his children / 'Myschaunt, your ledernes and slouth hath overcomen you. Ye were never my chyl-dren / For if ye were suche as men wene / ye sholde not have suffred the grete poverté that ye have endured soo 24 longe / But ye shulde have goon wynne vpon your enemyes / for to mayntene your selfe honestly / and make good werre to Charlemagne thorough all his londe. But ye are becom myschaunte; and therefore I telle you 28 that ye gete noo thyng of me / Now thenne, voyde oute soone my palays, and <sup>4</sup>goo begge where ye wyll atte a nother place.'<sup>4</sup> 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye that / that an evyll and an vnkynde fader oughte to 32 saye / For I telle you for veraye certeyne, that we have slayne soo many theves & brygauntes that I canne not

The Duke tells his sons to depart, and beg their bread where they will.

<sup>1</sup> quatre vings lieux, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H. iv.

<sup>3</sup> cent cheualliers, F. orig.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. g. iii.

number theym, Wherof I fele my selfe in grete synne / But for god we requyre you that you, wyll helpe vs to recoverye our londes of Charlemagne.

And yf ye wyll not do so, gyve to vs of your goodes, 4 & we shall goo ferre from you' / 'I wyll not,' sayd Aymon. 'Fader,' sayd Reynawde, 'here I see well your evyll wyll. I and my bretherne have doon soo moche, that we ben comen in to your place / that 8 we sholde fare the better for it; but I see well<sup>1</sup> ye wyll caste vs therfro wyth grete afray. And I swere to you, by the feyth that I owe to my lady moder, that yf I muste nedes departe fro you in suche a maner, ye shall 12 abye it full dere, yf ye cast vs thus oute of your londe.
For I have lever deye here by you / than to deye for hungre / Syth that it maye be none other wyse.'

Reynawde's anger is roused against
his father,

and he draws his sword,

but Alard interferes,

and begs him to remember that Aymon is their lord.

Thenne whan Reynawde sawe that his fader was 16 soo harde herted agenst hym & his brethern / he wexed red for angre / and began to chaung colour, and drewe his swerde halfe oute of the sheeth / And whan Alarde sawe his brother Reynawde chaunge colour, he 20 knewe well that he was wrothe / so ranne he & called hym, sayng, 'ha, fayr brother / for goddys love, angre not yourselfe so sore to our fader, for he is our lorde / And therefore, where<sup>2</sup> it is ryghte or wronge, he maye 24 saye to vs as yt playseth hym / and we oughte to doo nis commaundement / And yf he is cruell towarde vs / we oughte to be humble & playsaunte<sup>3</sup> towarde hym / Soo kepe your selfe for goddys love that ye sette not 28 hande vpon hym / For it were agenst the commaunde-ment of god' / 'Brother,' sayd Reynawde, 'it lacketh but lityll that I wexe madde all quycke / Whan I see afore me hym that sholde helpe vs, defende & love vs 32 as his chyl dren, and gyve vs his good counseyll to vs / and towarde all men. And he dooth all contrary the same / He hath made peas wyth Charlemagne for <sup>1</sup> Fol. H. iv. back.    <sup>2</sup> whether.    <sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

to dystre<sup>y</sup>e and undoo vs / I saw never so cruell a man agenste his sones. For he chasseth & putteth vs away from hym full shamefully / as though we were 4 strangers or sarrasins / I sholde not conne telle the harme and grete hurte that he hath doon to vs / nor the grete poverte that we have suffred for hym / I wolde never have doo so to hym / for rather I wolde 8 have lete me be slayn all quycke / But and yf I can ever go <sup>1</sup>from hens, I certyfy<sup>e</sup> you that I shall angr<sup>e</sup> hym, and shall so waste his londe that it shall doo hym but lytyll prouffyte, soo that it shall be spoken of it 12 perpetually.'

Reynawde
 threatens to waste
 all his father's land when he goes hence.

And whan Aymon herde Reynawde speke thus, his herte wexed softe, & began to wepe full sore / and sayd, 'Ha, god, how I am sory that I maye not 16 enioye the goode that god hath gyven to me largely / there sholde be no man in the worlde soo happy as I were / yf my chyldren had theyr peas with kynge Charlemagne. For I am sure that the kynge Pyramus 20 <sup>2</sup>of Troye<sup>2</sup> had never better men to his chyldren, nor more valyaunte <sup>2</sup>ne prue,<sup>2</sup> than I have. Ha, evyll herte, thou sholdest not take hede to none other agenst thy chyldren, But sholdest helpe theym & kepe theym 24 agenste all men, wherfore I ought well to hate the / evyll herte; thou hast made me hate that I oughte to love as myn owne selfe' / and whan he had thus spoken to hymselfe / he sayd to Reynawde, 'Fayr sone, ye are 28 ryght worthy and sage / For never Hector of Troye was worthe thou, <sup>3</sup>Nor in all the worlde is not founde your matche, And therefore I oughte well to doo your wyll' / Whan the duke Aymon had sayd this worde, he spake 32 <sup>4</sup>to his wyff the duchesse, and sayd / 'Lady, I goo yonder wythout, for I wyll not be forsworn agenst the

The Duke relents
 when he hears his son's defiance,

and says he will
 go forth because of his vow to Charlemagne,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H. v.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Il na cheuallier au monde qui te vaille, F. orig. G. iii.

<sup>4</sup> a la duchesse, F. orig. g. iii.

but the Duchesse may give to the sons all that they will take of his treasure. kyng charlemagne. Ye have wythin golde & sylver ynough / and mani horses and moche harneys / pal-freys & sommers / Now gyve to my chyldren all that they will take.' And whan he hadde sayd thus / he 4 toke his men wyth hym and wente his waye.

Reynawde thanks his father, and promises to go from Arden early next morning.

Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'we oughte to thanke you moche of that ye have now sayd. And we shall goo hens to morowe erly <sup>1</sup>wyth goddys grace<sup>1</sup> / To the 8 ende that ye ben not evyll at ease ; and yf it playse you, we shall <sup>2</sup>abyde for thys nyghte for to comforte our moder, <sup>3</sup>that hathe be so yll at ease for the love of vs<sup>3</sup> / And I promytte you, fader, we sholde not have come 12 yet, but it had be for her sake' / 'Reinawde, fayr sone,' sayd the duk,<sup>4</sup> 'you are full of grete wyt / wyte that whan berthelot<sup>5</sup> was deed, I durst not shewe me afore the kyng Charlemagn / by cause he sayd he had lever 16 have lost the halfe of his royaume / & thretened me for to hange or brenne and dystroye all my londe / and I dyd so moche by the counseyll of my frendes, that I made myn a-poyntement, and that I was oute of all 20 blame / And ye have not considered the othes that Charlemagn made me doo agenst you / as agenste all other that helde wyth you / and I am sore dysplayed of that I fonde you in the wodes of Ardeyn as I dyd / 24 But I was forced of myn honour to do as I dyd, for to be in peas wyth kyng Charlemagne / Your moder hath not forsworn you / & therefore she maye gyve you of our goodis at her wyll.' And whan the duke had sayd 28 these wordes, he yssued oute of his palays, and wente to the woode.

Aymon excuses his conduct to his children, because of his fear of the King, and issues out of his palace.

After whan the free duchesse herde that, that the duke Aymon gaaff her leve to doo wyth his 32 goodes at her wyll, she called her chyldren, and sayd

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H. v. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> pour lamour de nous a cause quelle nous auoit perdus, F. orig. G. iv. back. <sup>4</sup> aymon, F. orig. <sup>5</sup> artus, F. orig.

to them, 'Fayr chyldren, now be you sure, that sin your fader is<sup>1</sup> not wythin, ye shall be well tended vpon, and shall have all the chere that I can doo to you '2 / 4 And thenne she dyde doo make the bayns redy, and made them all to bayne honestly / And wyte, that in theyr bayne were many a swete herbe / And whan they were well clene, the good lady<sup>3</sup> made bryng lynnen & 8 other clothes for to chaunge, & to eche of them a man-telle of fyne scarlet furred with hermyns / and whan she had them well apareilled / she led them in a chambre where their<sup>4</sup> faders treysur was, and shewed it 12 to her chyldren. Whan reynaud sawe so riche<sup>5</sup> a tresur / he began to laughe, & sayd, 'lady moder, gramercy of so fayre a yefte as here is / For it mystreth me well' / & thenne he toke of that tresour at hys wyll. And 16 incontynente he sent messagers thoroughe all the countrey, for to gete hym sawdours<sup>2</sup> of the beste men of werre.<sup>3</sup> Wherof many one cam gladly to hym / the whiche Reynawde payed for an hole yere. What shall 20 I tell you more? Reynawde and hys brethern laye that nyghte wythin the castell of ther sayd fader. And the nexste mornynge after, or it was daye, they departed. & had wyth them V hundred men well horsed<sup>2</sup> & well 24 arayed<sup>2</sup> / And whan Reynawde and his brethern had take leve of theyr lady moder the duchesse, she sayd to them / 'Fayr sones, I wyll that ye draw towarde Spayn, for it is a plentuouse cuntrye.' And as they 28 wolde have departed / thenne cam Mawgis theyr cosyn, that cam oute of Fraunce, Where he had ben long tyme.
 A fter whan Mawgys was lighted / from his horse,
 he ranne to Reynawde / his arnes spred abrode, 32 and began to kysse hym / and<sup>6</sup> whan he had soo doon /

The Duchess
 attends to the comfort of her
 sons,

and clothes them
 in rich apparel.

Reynawde takes at his will of the rich treasure of
 his father,
 and sends messengers through the country to procure him
 soldiers.

As the Sons are departing,
 Mawgis arrives,

<sup>1</sup> est hors de seans, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> leur mere, F. orig. g. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> ou le tresoir estoif, et le monstrases enfans car pour aultre nestoit il amasse, F. orig. g. iv.      <sup>5</sup> Fol. H. vi.

<sup>6</sup> quant il eut baise il basse ses aultre freres, F. orig. g. iv.

he kyssed his other thre brethern<sup>1</sup> / and thenne he sayd to theym / 'Ha, fayr cosyngs, I am ryght glad to see you / And thanked be our lorde that he hath broughte me in to this coste.' 'Cosin,' sayd Reynawde, 'where 4 have you ben so longe, that we had never tydynges of yчу' / 'Cosyn,' sayd Mawgys, 'I come from the grete cyte of Parys, Where I have stolen thre horses laden wyth golde; and here they ben / the whiche Charle- 8 magne wende for to have hydde well. And I gyve you the halfe of it / for I myghte not bestowe theym better than to you' / 'Cosin,' sayd Reynawde, 'god thanke you.' And whan he had sayd soo <sup>1</sup>he wente 12 oute of Ardeyne wyth his bretherne & his folke / and fonde his fader, that cam fro the wode; & whan Reynawde sawe his fader, he made hym reverence, & bowed hymself to hym; & aymon <sup>2</sup>sayd to theym / 16
'fayr sones, now ben ye well garnyssed & honestly arrayed. I praye you that ye doo soo in Fraunce / that men speke of your prowes / And ye, my other children / I commaunde you that ye obeye Reynawde / 20 and kepe hym above all thyng. For as longe as he shall lyve, ye oughte not to be a ferde of noo harme.'

Thenne sayd Alarde, 'syre, we shall doo your commaundement / and we praye you for goddys love 24 <sup>3</sup>that ye wyll be evermore our good fader' / 'I wyll be soo, my chyldren,' <sup>4</sup>sayd Aymon. And thenne Reynawde toke leve of his fader and of his moder, <sup>4</sup>that conveyd theym oute of the towna. But the good 28 lady fell down in a swoune whan she sawe departe her chyldren. And all the towne began to make suche a sorowe that it was grete pyte<sup>5</sup> / And Reynawde & his and relates how he has stolen

three horses laden
with gold from Charlemagne,
half of which he presents to Reynawde.

The Sons, with Mawgis, depart
from Arden,
and find Aymon
coming from the wood.

They take leave
of their father
and mother,

to the great sorrow of all the people.

<sup>1</sup> il monte a cheval et sortit hors dardeyne, F. orig. g. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> que nous vous soions pour recommander, F. orig. g. iv.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> a veoir, F. orig. g. v. back.

brethern wente on theyr waye / <sup>1</sup>And whan the duchesse cam to herselfe<sup>1</sup> / and sawe heyr chyldren departe / She began to saye, 'Ha, poure herte myn! Why brekest 4 not thou / alas, yf I hadde deyed longe agoo, my soule were the better at ease / I am not a moder / but a stepmoder / <sup>2</sup>Alas, I see my ryche burden go to exyle / and yet I can not wythholde theym or helpe theym 8 that they abyde wyth me' / Thus as the duchesse made her mone to her wymen / Aymon cam & toke her bytwene his armes, and recomforted her / and sayd to her / 'Lady, dyscomforte not yourselfe so moche, for 12 my hert gyveth me that we shall yet see theym in grete prosperyte & honour / and grete Ioye & gladenes ye shall ones have of theym in short tyme.' Shortly to speke, the good Aymon recomforted so moche the 16 duchesse that she left her sorowe & wente agen to the palays wyth the duk Aymon. I leve here to speke of the duk Aymon and of the duchesse hys wyf, & retourne to speke of Reynawde & of hys brethern.<sup>3</sup>

The Duchesse
 grieves at the loss of her children,

but is comforted
 by the Duke.

20 CHAPTER V.

How after that reynawde, his brethern, & his cosin maugys <sup>4</sup>were departed oute of Dordoune from theyr moder, For to seke 24 theyr adventure, <sup>5</sup>they roode soo longe that they came in to the royaume of Gascoyn / ¶ And how by the waye thei made grete harme <sup>6</sup>to the royaume of Fraunce<sup>6</sup> / And 28 how the kynge of Gascoyn retheyned theym in his servyse.<sup>7</sup> ¶ Capitul[x]m V.

<sup>1-1</sup> vif ses filz qui sen aloient, elle commence a crier et a dire, F. orig. g. v. back. <sup>2</sup> quant je voy, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> les hardis cheualliers, F. orig. g. v. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. H. vii.

<sup>5</sup> Ils alerent tout par leur journees, F. orig. g. v. back.

<sup>6-4</sup> en france, F. orig. <sup>7</sup> moult doucement, F. orig.

Now sayth the tale, that after that Reynawde, Alarde, Guycharde, and Rycharle, and Mawgys theyr cosyn, were yssued oute of Ardeyn wyth all theyr fellowshyp, that was well of VI hundred men / Well 4 mounted and arrayed / they wente and passed thourghe Byheuse, and wasted all Fraunce / <sup>1</sup>And passed thourghe the countre of Gastynoyes / and so forthe to Orleauce / where they wente over the ryver of Loyre<sup>1</sup> / And wasted 8 all the londe vnto Poyters / And whan they were come to Poyters / they herde tydynges of the kyng Yon of Gascoyn, that was a puyssaunte prynce, was assaylled of the sarrasins / And whan Mawgys herde thyse 12 wordes, he cam to Reynawde, and said to hym / ‘Cosyn, the kyng Yon of gascoyn is a prynce of grete renomnee and of grete power / goo we to hym & serve hym, and suche servyse we shall mowe doo to hym / 16 <sup>2</sup>that Charlemagne shall not mow hynder vs by noo wayes’ / ‘Cosyn,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘lete vs thenne go there, sin that it semeth to you good’ / And whan they were hereto accorded, they toke theyr waye towarde 20 Gascoyn / and rode so longe by theyr iourneys that they cam to Bordews, a fayr cyte / Where they fonde kyng Yon wyth a grete company of knyghtes / and whan they were donn from ther horses, Reynawde sayd 24 to his folke, ‘go we lodge vs’ / ‘cosin,’ sayd mawgys, ‘we shall not do so, but we shall speke streight wyth kyng yon; & yf he reteyneth vs, in a good hour be it; & if he do not so / we shall serve borgoyns <sup>3</sup>the 28 sarrasin, whiche is ryght prue & sage, & hath all redy conquered almoste all the londe of kyng Yon / as Tholouse, Montpellier, Lyetary, and saynt Gyle Tara-soon / & Arles; & yf we faylle here / we shall not 32 faylle there’ / ‘Cosin,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘you speke

The Sons, with Mawgis and vi.
 hundred men,
 waste all France;

and come to Pottiers,
 where they hear
 now King John is assailed by the Saracens.

Mawgis advises
 Reynawde to join King John against his enemies;

they therefore hasten to Bordeaux,
 where they find
 the King.

<sup>1</sup>—1 et passerent parmy gastinois et orleans et passerent la riviere de loyre, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> que charlemagne ne nous prendra jamais, F. orig. g. v.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. H. vii. back.

well and wysely, and we shall do as ye have sayd.
 And thenne Reynawde toke wyth hym L. knyghtes, and his thre brethern, and Mawgys; and toke of his 4 armes, and clothed hym selfe honestly & rychely /
 And whan he was well arrayed / he wente to kyng Yons courte vpon a lytyll nagge. And whan he rode thorughe Bordeweys, all the peple ranne for to see hym / 8 by cause he was soo grete and soo well made / and soo fayr wyth all, and also his thre brethern, but they were not all eveyn soo grete. And whan they were come to the gate <sup>1</sup>of the kynges place,<sup>1</sup> Reynawde 12 lighted on foote / and wente vp to the palays, and founde the kyng atte the counseyll / <sup>2</sup>And whan the stywarde sawe Reynawde soo fayr a man / and soo goodly, and soo many folke wyth hym / he came hym 16 agenste, and sayd to hym, 'My lorde, ye be ryght welcom.' And Reynawde answered to hym / 'god gyve you good adventure! Now telle, and playse you, where is the kyng?' / 'My lorde,' sayd the stywarde / 20 'he holdeth now his counseyll / For Bourgons the sarasyn is entred in hys londe, and hath doon to hym grete harm / For he hath brente townes and castelles, abbeyes, hospytalles, <sup>1</sup>chirches<sup>1</sup> / and all other<sup>3</sup> monas-24 teryes / and now he is parforce wythin Tholouse <sup>1</sup>wyth a grete puyssaunce.'<sup>1</sup> 'Certes,' sayd Reynawde / 'This borgoyns ys of grete power as me semeth, and after that men sayen.' Thus as Reynawde and the stywarde 28 spake togyder, came kyng Yon <sup>1</sup>oute of the counseyll chambre.<sup>1</sup> And whan Reynawde sawe hym<sup>4</sup> / he toke his brethern & his cosin mawgys wyth hym, & went agenst the kyng, whiche Reynawde salued <sup>5</sup>ryght 32 humbly, and sayd to hym / 'Syr, I am com to you fro a ferre londe<sup>6</sup> wyth my thre brethern & my cosin, that

The Sons and Mawgis ride to
the palace;

all the people of Bordeaux marvel
at the beauty of Reynawde.

The steward of the palace welcomes Reynawde
gladly;

they talk until
the arrival of King John from the counsel
chamber.

Reynawde salutes
the King,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. <sup>2</sup> mais, F. orig. g. v. <sup>3</sup> orther, Text orig.

<sup>4</sup> il se dresse et prent ses freres, F. orig. g. vi. back.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. H. viii.

<sup>6</sup> et suis cheualliers moy et mes freres, F. orig.

and offers him
the services of his folk.

King John
receives his offer
graciously,

but enquires
whose folk they are.

Reynawde reveals to him their history,

and how Charlemagne had cast
them out of France,

and how they seek for a lord
whom they can serve.

The King rejoices
when he hears
they are the sons
of Aymon,

ye see here, for to doo you servyse, and our folke, yf it playse you; and we shall serve you in suche a maner that we wyll have nothyng of you. But & our servyse be agreable vnto you, Ye shall promyse me as 4 1 a kynge, yf it be your playsur<sup>1</sup> / that ye shall be my warrant & helpe agenst all other.' 'Good frende,' sayd the kyng Yon, 'ye be ryght welcom to me / And where ye saye ye be come for to serve me / <sup>2</sup>I thanke 8 you for it wyth all my hert<sup>2</sup> / but I wyll fyrst knowe what folke ye ben. For ye myghte be suche that I sholde defende you, or that I sholde be your enmye.'
'Syr,' sayd Reynawde, 'syth that it playse you to 12 knowe what we ben / I shall tell it to you / Wyte that my name is Reynawde, and am sone eldest to the duk Aymon of Ardeyn, and thise thre knyghtes ben my bredern: here is Alarde, Guycharde, & Rycharde<sup>3</sup> / 16 and here is Mawgis our cosin, one of the beste knyghtes of the worlde, & most wyse. Charlemagne hath caste vs out of Fraunce / and hath dysherytet vs / And our fader hath dysavowed vs for the love of 20 hym / and for this cause, sir, we goo seke about after a lorde that is good & true, that sholde helpe vs to deffende agenst Charlemagne / and we shall serve hym well & truly.' 24

Whan kyng Yon herde this that Reynawde sayd / he was ryght gladde of it that they were the foure sones of Aymon, the beste knyghtes of all the 28 worlde, & mooste doubted / and Mawgys, that was the moost subtyll of the worlde / that were com for to serve hym. He wolde not have been so gladde yf men hadde gyven to hym alle Parys; For he wyste that yf ever he sholde fynysse his werre / It sholde be by 32 theyr meane / Thenne he loked vppe towards heven /

1—1 comme roy que vous etes, F. orig.

2—2 Je vous mercie humblement, F. orig.

3 le combactant, F. orig. g. vi. back.

And thanked our lorde of the comyng of thyse <sup>1</sup>worthy knyghtes. And thenne he sayd to theym, 'Lordes, ye are reteyned of me / For ye ben not the men that 4 ought to be refused : I promitte you truly, and in feyth of a kynge / that I shall defende you wyth all my power agenste all men. Ye are dyssheryted, and I also ; therefore it is well rayson that we be togyder, and that 8 the one helpe the other of all his power.' 'Syr,' sayd Reynawde, 'we thanke you a thousande tymes / & I promyse you that we shall deye in your servyse, or elles your londe shall be recovered agayne' / The kyng
 12 called his stywarde, <sup>2</sup>and sayd to hym, and commaunded <sup>3</sup>that Reynawde & his felawshyp sholde be well lodged. Incontynente the stywarde toke Reynawde by the hande, and fulfylled the commaundement of the kynge.
 16 Now are the <sup>3</sup>foure <sup>3</sup>sones of Aymon acoynted wyth the kynge Yon <sup>3</sup>of Gascoyn <sup>3</sup>/ whiche wente to have doo well / but he repented hym soone after / ¶ But here we leve to speke of kyng Yon <sup>4</sup> / and of the foure sones 20 of Aymon / and retorne to speke of Burgoyns, that were at Tholouse, the whiche he had take by force of armes.

and willingly retains them in his service.

Reynawde thanks him, and promises to serve him well.

The Sons are therefore well lodged by the King.

CHAPTER VI.

¶ How Reynawde / his bredern, & Mawgys, 24 dystroyed Borgons the sarasin / that had dystroyed the royame of Gascoyn, & chassed the kyng Yon vnto Bordews vpon Gyronde, that durste not goo thens for feere of the sarasins / And after, how kyng Yon gaaff my lady Clare, his suster, to Reynawde, for to be hys wyff, for the grete servyse that

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H. viii. back.
<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2-3</sup> et luy commanda, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> de gascongne, F. orig. g. vi.

he hadde doon to hym / And how he made for hym the castell of Mountawban.

¶ Capytulum VI.

Bourgoyns, chief of the Saracens,
addresses his
people,

In this party showeth the historye, that after Bour- 4 goyns hadde taken Tholouse / he made a grete<sup>1</sup> parliamente to his folke / And sayd to theym / 'Lordes, ye knowe well / That whan the yron is well hooted, hit werketh the better / <sup>2</sup>Thys worde I have sayd afore 8 your lorde<sup>3</sup>shyppes for to gyve you to knowe that we oughte to doo. And therefore me semeth that we oughte to ryde nowe towarde Bourdews while the corne is in the eere / For our horses shall have mete ynoughe.' 12
'Syre,' sayd his folke / 'ye speke well and wysely ; lete it be doon as ye have devyded.'<sup>4</sup> & whan the morow cam / Bourgons departed out of tholouse wyth well XX thousande knyghtes well armed, And 16 ceased not for to ryde tyll that they cam afore Bourdews in IX dayes. And he sat all his folk in a bushement wythin a grete wode that was nyghe<sup>5</sup> / and abode there wyth theym, excepte foure hundred men, 20 that wente to the cyte, wastynge and brenynge all the country vnto the cyte of Bordews / And whan the daye watche that was vpon the gate of the cyte sawe the sarasyns com / he cryed wyth an highe voys / 24
'Arme you, knyghtes ! for here ben the paynymys, that com for to hurte you.' Whan the cyte vnderstode this, she began to be sore moeved.

and departs from Toulouse with
xx. thousand
knights ;
he arrives at Bordeaux,
and sets his folk
in ambuah in a
wood.

Thenne whan Reynawde sawe that it was tyme to 28
take his harneys on, he sayd to hys bredern, 'Goo make you all redy / and make our trompettes to

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> que quant il est froit, F. orig. g. vi.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. I. i.

<sup>4</sup> faictes que soyes demain prest comme pour mourir, F. orig. g. vi.

<sup>5</sup> prez de la citie manda bien quatre cens sarazins, des myeulx montez pour courir, et ceulx aloient tout ardant et gantant tout le pays au pres de la citie, F. orig.

be blowen, that all our folke put theym selfe in armes.' Reynawde calls Incontynent made his brethern his commaundement / on his folk to arm
 And whan they were all armed / Reynawde mounted themselves, 4 vpon bayarde / and cam to kynge Yon, and sayd to hym / 'Syr, be not abashed of noo thyng, but be sure and promises that god shall helpe vs this daye / Myselfe, my success to the brethern / and all our folke, we goo afore. And make King.
 8 your folke to be redy incontynente, for my herte gyveth me that this cursed sarasin shall be this daye dyscomfyted / and overcome wyth the helpe of god' /
 'Frende,' sayd the kyng, 'god be wyth you / and 12 I shall doo that ye telle me.' <sup>1</sup>And thus Reynawde wente out of Bordeux,<sup>1</sup> the formest of all his folke, agenst <sup>2</sup>the sarrasins, vpon hys horse Bayarde / the shelde atte his necke / and his swerde in his hande / 16 and ranne fyersly vpon his enmyes, and incontynent smote a paynym thrughe hys shelde, so that he over-threwe hym deed to the grounde; and forthwyth he cast a nother / god wote he helde well his swerde, For 20 he hewe the sarrasins<sup>3</sup> as they had ben wythoute harneys. And shortly to speke, after that Reynawde & his folke were assembled, the paynymes myght not endure / For Reynawde and his brethern slewe theym 24 as bestes, soo that they muste nedes flee towarde their bushement / And whan borgons sawe his folke<sup>4</sup> come thus, he yssued oute of the wode <sup>5</sup>wyth his companye,<sup>5</sup> and made bussynes & hornes to be blouen / and came 28 for to socoure his men. And whan Reynawde sawe so grete nombre of folke <sup>5</sup>comynge oute of the wode,<sup>5</sup> he was sore mervyllled, and tourned hymselfe towarde his brethern, & sayd to theym / 'Lordes, kepe that ye 32 be not dysmayed / for we shall gete a grete worshyp this daye; and I praye you that every man parforceth

Reynawde rides
 forth on Bayard foremost against the Saracens.

The Sons fight
 valiantly.

Bourgoyns comes from the wood
 with a great company.

<sup>1-1</sup> Quant Renault eut dit ses paroles il sen issit hors de bourdeaulx, F. orig. g. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> si legerement. F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> si desconfitz, F. orig.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. g. vii. back.

hym selfe to doo well' / 'brother,' sayd Rycharde /
 'we shall never be dysmayd as long as ye be vpon bayarde' / 'Broder,' sayd Reynawde, 'doo as goode men / for yf ye wyll parforce yourselfe a lityll, this 4 paynymes shall not holde afore vs' / Thus as Reynawde spake to his brethern / they sawe Borgons com, the spere in his reest, and smote a man of Reynawde by suche a strength that he shoued his spere thorughe 8 and thorughe his body / soo that he fell doun deed to the ertha. Whan Alarde sawe that, he was wroth, and spored hys horse, & ran vpon a paynym so harde that he felled hym sterke deed afore hym / And 12 shortly to speke, there was never seen suche a dystresse of folke / as Reynawde, his brethern, and Mawgys <sup>1</sup>his cosin,<sup>1</sup> made wyth soo fewe folke as they were, agenst Borgons the sarrasin / 16

and slays a man
of Reynawde.

King John comes to the succour of Reynawde,

<sup>2</sup>Thenne whan the kyng Yon, that cam to the socours of Reynawde, sawe the grete faytes of armes that he & his brethern made / and how hardly they dyd set vpon & overthrewe all that they recounted 20 afore theym / he blessed hymselfe of the mervyll that he had of theym / And thenne he sayd to his folke,
 'goo we socoure these worthy knyghtes / for it is tyme longe agoo' / and whan kyng Yon had sayd these 24 wordes, he spored his horse, & put hymselfe amonge the thyckest, & began to doo well; and dyd so moche that he brake the grete preesses / and cam where Reynawde / was / and whan Reynawde sawe the kyng Yon, he sayd 28 to hym, 'Syr, be sure and certeyn that the sarrasins are dy[s]comfyted' / thenne sayd the kyng, 'Reynawde, I am well assured that god shall doo me grace thurgh your highe prowesse; blessed be the hour that ye were 32 borne / and cam in to these marches' / To speke shortly, y<sup>e</sup> bataylles were assembled of one parte & of thother; but whan Borgons sawe the gret harme that

and gives him
great praise for his prowesse.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. I. ii.

Reynawde bare to him of his folke, he sayd to hys men / 'we ben overcome by the prowes of these five knyghtes. Late vs goo backe agen / for it is tyme' / 4 and whan he had sayd thise wordes / he & his folke began to flee / And whan Reynawde sawe Borgons, that fled / he smote bayarde wyth the spores & ranne after hym, & sayd to hymselfe, that Borgons sholde 8 abyde there, or elles it sholde cost hym his liff / 1 Wythin a short whyle Reynawde was ferre from his brethern / and ferre from his felawshyp, so that they wust not whiche waye he drew / Whan Alarde sawe 12 that he wust not where Reynawde was drawe / he sayd to hymselfe, 'Ha, god! whiche waye is my brother drawe to that I am not wyth hym?' and thenne cam there kyng Yon, that sayd to theym / 'Lodes & 16 knyghtes / well ye knowe, gramercy god that it ys not wysdome for to chasse overmoche <sup>2</sup>his enmyes, for often tymes cometh there a grete dommage / lete vs wythdrawe vs, I praye you.' 'Syr,' sayd Alarde, 20 'what saye ye / we have lost reynawde our broder, & wote not where he is, nor if he is deed or taken.' Whan kyng Yon vnderstode this worde, he was full sory & wrothe / and they wente & sought among y<sup>o</sup> 24 deed that laye vpon the feelde. And whan alarde sawe he coude not be founde, he made grete sorowe wyth guycharde, rycharde, & Mawgys also. And whan the folke of Reynawde saw that he was not founde, 28 they began to make so grete sorow that it was a pyte to see.

'Alas,' sayd Alarde, 'what shall I doo? I departed fro my londe poure & exyled / but I dyd not 32 care for it / for I wente wyth the beste knyght of the worlde, & trowed by the prowes of hym to have recovered honour & havoyre, myselfe & my brethern / and now I have lost hym thorough my defawte !

<sup>1</sup> Que vous diray je plus, F. orig. g. vii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. I. ii. back.

Bourgoyns and his folk fly from
 the battle,
 pursued by Rey-
 nawde.

Alarde, in great
 fear for his brother, tells

his grief to the King,

and they all search for him
 among the dead.

The poor knyghts
 make great sorrow for their brother.

Alas, myschaunt! what shall we doo frohens forth?
 For the erthe shall not mow susteyne vs no more / But that it shall fowndre vnder our feete' / and whan the kyng Yon sawe the grete sorowe that the poure 4 knyghtes made for theyr brother, he sayd to theym, 'Lordes & knyghtes, what is this that ye doo? sith that he is not deed, it oughte to suffyse you / For yf he be take, ye shall have hym agen, & shold cost me 8 all that I have in the worlde / And also we have soo many of theym prysoners / that Borgons shall not doo hym noo harme for no thyng.' 'Syre,' sayd alarde, 'lete vs goo after, for goddys sake / lete vs wyte where 12 he is becom.' 'Frende,' sayd y<sup>e</sup> kyng, 'I wyll doo so gladly.' and thenne they spored theyr horses, & went as fast as theyr horses myghte renne / and wyte that alarde, guycharde, rycharde, & mawgys, rode a good 16 pase, so moche that it semed that therthe sholde have cloven a sondre vnder theym / ¶ Now wyll I tell you of Reynawde, <sup>1</sup>that went after borgons so fast as yf the tempest had chassed hym; and he was goon so ferre 20 wythin a shorte while, that it is wonder for to here tell, for there was no best that wente afore bayarde his horse / and whan reynawde had overtaken borgons / he cryed vpon hym as hie as he myght do, 'Certes, 24 borgons, thy horse maye no more, I see it well / and therefore flee no ferder / but turne thyself towarde me;
 for yf thou deyed fleeng thou sholdest be shamed' / whan borgons herde reynawde speke thus to hym, he 28 retorned incontynent. And whan he sawe reynade, he knewe well that it was the good knyghte that had dy[s]comfyted all his folke, & sayd to hym / 'Syre knyght / goo backe agen, & marre not your horse about 32 noughte; for yf ye lese hym, ye shall never recover suche a nother.' & this he sayd for to abasshe the King John tries to comfort them.

Alard implores
the King that they should all ride in search of Reynawde.

Reynawde meantime has ridden so far that he over-
takes Bourgoyns,

and cries to him
to hold fast.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. I. iii.

good knyght reynawde / for he durste not iouste wyth hym by cause of the grete prowes that he had seen in hym. But reynawde was not the man that sholde be 4 made a ferde wyth wordes / <sup>1</sup>And thenne reynawde said agen to hym<sup>1</sup> / ‘borgons, thys worde mystre not to you for to saye, for ye must nedes defende yourselve’ /
 And thenne he spored incontynent bayarde / & whan 8 borgon saw that he myght not be delyvered of reynawde but by iustynge / he spored his horse & ranne vpon reynawde as harde as he myght, and smote reynawde so sharply that the spere went in peces. reynawd fell 12 not / but smote borgons suche a stroke that he over-threwe both horse and man to the grounde, & wounded borgons in hys brest full sore / And whan borgons sawe hymselfe atte the grounde, he rose vp lightly, 16 & toke his swerde in his hande / and cast his shelde vpon his hede / and whan reynawde perceyved the stroke that he had gyven hym in his brest, he cryed to hym, & sayd / ‘Certes it shall not be reproched to me 20 that ye fyghte me a fote, & I on horsbacke’ / and wyth this he lighted doun from bayarde, and drewe oute his swerde<sup>2</sup> & went <sup>3</sup>agenst borgons, and borgons agenst hym / and there began a sharpe batayll. and 24 whan the horse of the pagnym felte hym selfe from hys mayster, he began to renne awaye <sup>4</sup>over the feldes;<sup>4</sup> & whan bayarde sawe hym renne awaye / he went after & overtoke hym soone ynough / and thenne he toke 28 hym by the mane <sup>4</sup>wyth his teeth,<sup>4</sup> and drew hym wyth so grete myght that he broughte hym agen to his mayster, in the same place where the two <sup>4</sup>worthy<sup>4</sup> knyghtes fought togyder / and reynawde gaaf a stroke 32 to borgons wyth his swerde vpon his shelde, & all that the sworde roughthe he cut through, the flesshe, & well

Bourgoyns turns towards Rey-
 nawde,
 and they fight;

the Saracen is
 unhorsed.

Reynawde dis-
 mounts from Bayard,
 and fights on foot.

<sup>1-1</sup> si luy dist, F. orig. g. viii.

<sup>2</sup> hors du fonteau, F. orig. g. viii. <sup>3</sup> Fol. I. iii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

He wounds Bourgoyns so greatly an hundred mayles of his flankardes, and made hym a grete wounde in to the haunche.

that he begs for a truce,

Thenne whan borgons the sarasyn sawe the wonderfull strengthe of reynawde, & the grete strokes 4 that he gaaf to hym / he was sore afrayed, & fered leste he sholde deye; & so he wythdrewe hymself abacke,<sup>1</sup> & sayd to reynawde, 'Ha gentyll knyght, I praye the for the love that you haste to thy god, that thou gyve 8 me trewes / and I shall make the lord & sire of all that I have in this worlde' / 'certes,' sayd reynawde, 'I wyll not do so / for I have promysed to kyng Yon that I shall helpe hym agenst all men / and he in likewyse 12 hath promysed me; but & yf ye wyll make your selfe crysten, I shall do it gladly.' 'Syr,' sayd borgons, 'I wyll yelde me to you; for to no better knyght than ye be I can not yelde myselfe / yf ye wyll save my liff & 16 my membres' / 'Borgons,' sayd Reynawde, 'yf ye wyll yelde you to me, ye shall have no more harme than I shall' / 'wyll ye promyse me this?' sayd borgons / 'ye,' sayd reynawde. 'now holde my swerde,' sayd 20 borgons / '& I put my selfe all togyder in your hande.' And reynawde tooke his swerde, & assured hym that he shold not deye / and they two went togyder for to take theyr horses / and whan they had theym, they 24 light<sup>2</sup>ed vpon, and toke theyr waye towarde Bordews / and as they cam agen, they met wyth kyng Yon, that cam, & his folke, rennyng agenst hym as fast as they myght. Whan reynawde sawe the kyng / he thanked 28 hym moche that he was comyng after hym, & presented to hym borgons, that he had thus taken & conquered, as I have rehersed to you, & sayd to hym, 'Noble kyng of gascoyn, I beseche you that borgons 32 have no harme / for I have assured hym.' 'Good frende,' sayd kyng Yon, 'nomore he shall / but all honour for the love of you / & I praye to god that I and finally yields himself a prisoner.

They both remount, and take their way to Bordeaux; they meet King John, and Reynawde delivers Bourgoyns to him.

<sup>1</sup> ung peu, F. orig. h. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. iv.

maye do no thyng that is agenst your wyll' / And whan alarde, guycharde, richarde, & mawgys sawe reynawd, that brought borgons prysoner, they were 4 never so glad, for thei wende to have lost hym / so ranne they & kyssed hym full swetly, & made hym grete feste & grete honour / For they had ben in grete sorow for the love of hym.

The brethern
 and Mawgis rejoice greatly when they see Rey-
 nawde again.

8 'Brother,' sayd Alarde, 'in to a grete sorowe <sup>1</sup>& hevynes<sup>1</sup> ye had brought vs this daye, for we wonde that ye had be take; but sith that ye have taken borgons, the werre is doon / and blessed be 12 the hour that ye were borne, & the pappes that ye souked' / and whan they were well fested, they toke on their waye towarde bordews / where they led borgons as a prysoner / And whan the kyng yon was 16 at bordews, he lighted doun, and toke wyth hym reynawde & his brethern by the hande, & mawgis also, & wente vp to the palays, and founde his folke, that made grete fest / and he<sup>2</sup> called them to hym, & sayd, 20 'Lordes,<sup>3</sup> bere honour and worshyp more to this knyght than to me / for I am kynge of Gascoyn by theyr worthines & grete prowes; for yf they had not ben, I had be deed & overthrown; blessed be the good lorde 24 that dyd put in their myndes for to com into this coste, For they have quyted my londe, & have set all my royame in peas' / To speke shortly, the kyng made <sup>4</sup>the buty to be dealed, Wherof the most party he made 28 to be gyven to reynawde & his brethern. And reynawde wolde take no thyng of it / but gaff it all to his folke / and whan y<sup>4</sup> kinge sawe the grete largenes of reynawde, he loved hym more than he dyd afore / & 32 theene he sayd that he wolde make reynawde lorde over hym / and of all his londe /

King John takes
 the Sons and
 Mawgis,

and leads them to
 the palace,
 where they make
 a great feast;

and declares his love for Rey-
 nawde.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> le roy yon, F. orig. h. i.

<sup>3</sup> faictes honneur a ses cheualliers, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. I. iv. back.

The King has a fair sister, who enquires of a knight, who won chief honour in the battle.

The knight replies that Reynawde is the best knight in the world;

at these words the damsel is very glad.

Bourgoyns begs King John to accept his ransom, to which the King assents;

The kyng yon had a suster, the whiche was a ryght fayre damoyzell / whan she herde speke so moche good by reynawd, she called to her a knyghte that was called water, and sayd to hym / 'tell by your feyth / 4 who had the pryce of the batayll.' 'madame,' sayd water, 'I shall tell it you wyth a good wylle. Now wyte that reynawde is the best knyght of all his brethern, & of all the worlde, for he toke borgons the 8 sarrasin by force / wherby he hath brought the werre at an ende.' Whan the pucell vnderstode this worde she was right glad, & dyde thanke our lorde for it wyth all her hert. And y<sup>e</sup> kyng & his knyghtes 12 ceassed not to make ioye for the victory that god had sente to theym thurghle the grete prowes of the valyaunt reynawd / Whan borgons sawe hymselfe in pryson, he sente worde to kyng yon that he sholde 16 come speke wyth hym / And as sone that kyng yon wyst of it, he wente to hym / and whan borgons sawe hym, he salued hym, & after sayd to hym, 'Syr,<sup>1</sup> I am your prysoner, & also the moste party of my folke ; 20 and yf it playse you, ye shall put me to raunsome, and my men also, & I shall gyve you X. horses laden wyth golde, for me & for mi folke' / 'Borgons,' sayd the kyng, 'I shall doo it wyth a goode wyll, yf reynawde 24 counseyll me so, & noo otherwyse I wyll not doo' / And thenne the kyng yon sente for reynawde,<sup>2</sup> & for his brethern,<sup>2</sup> & all his other barons / And whan they were come, he helde his counseyll how he sholde doo for 28 the delyveraunce of borgons. Reynawde & his barons counseyllled the kyng<sup>3</sup> that he sholde put Borgons to raunsom. and whan the kyng sawe that his barons counseyled hym the same, he made borgons to be 32 called / and made his delyveraunce to be signyfyed vnto hym / And thus was borgons delyverde, & wente

<sup>1</sup> roy yon, F. orig. h. i.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. I. v.

wyth his folke into his countrey, and yelded Thoulouse agayn to kyng Yon, & sente to<sup>1</sup> hym X. sommers all laden wyth fyne golde, as he had promysed to hym / 4 And incontynent that the kyng Yon had received theym he gaaff them to reynawde & to his brethern ;
 but reynawde dyd as a worthy knyghte / For not a peny he wolde take of it, nor his brethern also.

8 It happed vpon a daye that Reynawde and his brethern wente in a forest that was not ferre thens / and toke foure wylde bestes / And as they were comynge homwarde, they founde themselfe vpon 12 the ryver of gyronde / and as they wente, Alarde loked over the ryver, & sawe a hyghe montayn, & all highe to the toppe of it was a fayr roche / And whan Alarde sawe soo fayr a grounde and so stronge, he 16 tourned hymselfe towarde Reynawde, and sayd to hym / <sup>2</sup>‘Brother, yonder vpon that highe mountayne is a fayr grounde and a stronge, I beleve that there hath ben somtyme a castell. And yf we myghte doo soo 20 moche to buylde there <sup>3</sup>a stronge place<sup>3</sup> for ourselfe, Charlemagne sholde never take vs there / And yf ye wyll beleve me, ye shall aske it of kynge Yon.
 And yf he gyveth it to you, Lets vs doo make there a 24 <sup>4</sup>‘stronge castell.’<sup>4</sup> ‘Cosyn,’ sayd Mawgys to Reynawde, ‘Alarde gyveth you good counseyll, And I praye you that ye wyll doo soo as he hath sayd’ / ‘Cosyn,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘I shall doo it, syth that ye counseyll me 28 soo’ / And whan they were accorded to the same / <sup>5</sup>they entred into a barge, & wente over Gyrounde /
 And whan they came a londe / they ceased never tyll that they came afore the kynge<sup>5</sup> / And presented hym and Bourgoyns

 and his folk go
 into the country.

The Sons go into the forest,

and find themselves on the river Gironde.

Alarde sees a fair
 rock on the top of a high mountain,

which he points
 out to Reynawde
 as a site where they might build
 a castle,

and counsels him
 to ask the King
 for leave to build
 thereon.

<sup>1</sup> au roy Yon, F. orig. h. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> beau frere, F. orig.

<sup>3-3</sup> ung chastel, F. orig. h. ii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> ung forteresse, F. orig. h. ii. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> Ils se mirent dedens gironde et passerent outre et ne finerent de chevaucher tant quilz sont venuz devant le roy, F. orig.

the bestes<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>that they hadde taken. And whan the kyng sawe theym he receyved theym curtoyusly, For he loved theym moche / And thenne the kyng embraced Reynawde in his armes. 4

The morowe nexte, after that the kyng hadde herde masse / Reynawde toke the kyng and drewe hym a lityll atte oo side / and sayd to hym, 'Syre, we have served you longe well and truly.' 'Certes,' sayd 8 the kyng, 'ye saye trouthe / and therefore I am holde to rewarde you well for it. Now loke yf I have in all my londe, cytes, townes, or castelles, or other thyng that ye wyll have, For ye shall have it Incontynente.' 12 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'I thanke you moche of your goode wyll. But here my wordes, yf it playse you' / 'saye on hardely,' sayd the kyng / 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'I and my bretherne were the other daye com- 16 yng from the chase / and as we came alonge by the syde of Gyronde and of Dordonne, and namely betwene thysse two ryveres / I sawe a mountayne sore hyghe; And yf it playse you, I wolde well buylde therevpon a castell 20 after my playsure / Wherfore, syre, and it playse you, <sup>3</sup>ye shall graunte to me this gyfte<sup>3</sup> / for all the servyse that ever I dyde to you.' Whan the kyng vnderstode thys worde, he was ryght gladde of it, and sayd to 24 Reynawde / 'I ryght gladly graunt this to you. And wyth the same, ye shall have of me X thousande marke every yere for to maynten your astate' / 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'gramercy' / and caste hym selfe to his feete. 28 And the kyng yon toke hym vp <sup>4</sup>anone curtoyusly,<sup>4</sup> & kyssed hym for grete love; & after, he sayd vnto hym / 'Noble knyght, I promyse you I shall make you a ryche man, <sup>5</sup>yf god spare me liffe.'<sup>5</sup> 'sir,' sayd reynawde, 'god yelde you, & we shall serve you truly' /

Reynawde tells the King how he and his brethren would build a castle on the mountain, should it please him to grant them this gift.

John gives his consent willingly.

<sup>1</sup> saulvaiges, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. v. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> vous le me donnez, F. orig. h. ii.

<sup>4-4</sup> incontinent, F. orig. h. ii.

<sup>5-5</sup> si je viz longuement, F. orig.

1 & thus they departed fro eche other.<sup>1</sup> The nexte daye, after whan the kyng was rysen oute of his bed, he made reynawde to com <sup>2</sup>afore hym / And after he toke
 4 XX. knyghtes wyth hym, and no more, and toke his barge vpon gyronde, and passed over the ryver, <sup>1</sup>reynawd & his brethern wyth hym<sup>1</sup> / and thei dyde so moche that they cam vpon the roche<sup>3</sup> / and whan they
 8 sawe the place so fayr & so playsaunt, the kyng was merveylled of it, & reynawde was ryght glad / For the grete strenghte that the place had / for yf he myght doo so moche to buylde there a castell, he sholde not
 12 doubt Charlemagne of a peny, nor none other persone of the worlde, whan vytaylles were in it, for vpon the highest of the montayn spronge oute a fayre fountayne, & plenteous ynoughe for X. thousande persones. Whan 16 the knyghtes that were wyth the kyng sawe the place so fayr & so playsaunt, & so strong wythall, they were gretly abasshed / a knyght thenne toke the kyng, & had hym a lityll aside, & tolde hym / 'Sir, what is 20 this that ye wyll doo / wyll ye have a lorde above you? wyll ye doo make here a fortresse / I tell you vpon my feyth, that yf reynawde set here a castell, he shall fere you lityll, nother you nor all other barons of gascoyn /
 24 for reynawde is suche a knyght as ye knowe, & also his brethern & their cosin mawgys / and also they be strangers / and soone they shall bere you grete harme yf they wyll; doo to hym some other good, yf ye wyll 28 beleve me, and lete this alone, For over grete harme myghte come to you therof.'

and the next day goes with the Sons and xx. knights to see the place.

One of the knights remonstrates with John for giving Reynawde so strong a position, saying he will do evil unto him in future.

Thenne whan kyng yon vnderstode suche wordes, he becam all abasshed of it, for he wyste well that 32 the knyghte sayd trouthe / and lityll it lacked that the werke of the castell cam not forthe. he began to thynke a lityll; & after, he sayd that he had promysed

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. vi.

<sup>3</sup> et monterent au dessus, F. orig. h. ii.

The King will not withdraw his promise to Reynawde, it to reynawde / <sup>1</sup>and thus he sayd to the knyght<sup>1</sup> that the castell sholde be made; so called he reynawde, and sayd to hym / 'My good frende, where will ye that the castell be made' / <sup>2</sup>'sir,' sayd reynaude, 'I 4 wyll yf it playse you that it be <sup>3</sup>set here in the same place vpon the roche.'<sup>2</sup> 'Certes,' sayd the kynge, 'I gyve it to you / Now hast you to see that it be made & buylded vp <sup>1</sup>as ye thynke best<sup>1</sup> / and thenne ye shall 8 doubte nother me nor my folke'<sup>4</sup> / 'sire,' sayd reynawd, 'lete be thise wordes, for it is no nede to speke therof / for I certyfye you as a true knyght, that I had moche lever deye an evyll deth amonge the turkes / than that 12 I sholde thinke treyson vpon you nor vpon no other / Syre, I am & have be take hederto, & holde for a true knyght / god gyve me grace that I doo not from hens forth, wherby I sholde other wyse be taken<sup>5</sup> / sire, 16 thinke you by cause I am enmye to charlemagn, my soverayn lord / that I sholde be therefore a traytour, & that I have doon agenst hym som treyson; wyt that whan I slewe berthelot his newew, alas, I dyd it in my 20 defence / for he drewe first blode vpon me wythoute reyson or cause why. But I swere to you vpon my feyth, that yf ony man doo ony wronge vnto you / I shall avenge you therof after my power; but & yf 24 ye have ony suspectyon vpon me, gyve me it not' / 'Good frende reynawde,' sayd the kyng, 'I dyd but iape wyth you, for I know well your trowth, & wel ye have shewed it vnto me; <sup>1</sup>god thanke you<sup>1</sup> / and 28 therefore I have graunted it vnto you / and yet I doo. And I wyll that ye be lorde above me, and of my londe.'

who swears, as a true knight, that he will never prove traitor to him.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2-2</sup> Sire je veul quil soit asses ici si vous plaist, F. orig. h. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. I, vi. back.

<sup>4</sup> mais je ne cuide mye que vous me veuillez querroyer moy ne mes barons de men pays, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> pour desloyal, F. orig.

And whan reynawde vnderstode the curtoysie & the goodnes of the kyng / he thanked hym ryght moche / and he sent thurgh all the londe / and made 4 com all the maysters masons, & carpenters, & many other crafty men in suche werke / so moche that they were well two<sup>1</sup> hundred, beside the labourers / and whan all his stuff was redy, he made theym to buylde there a 8 strong castell / wherof y<sup>e</sup> grete hall was first made, & after many chambres, & thenne the grete towre. And whan y<sup>e</sup> doungeon was well closed, reynawde made after, all y<sup>e</sup> castell to be closed rounde about wyth double walles, 12 hie & thick, <sup>2</sup>of harde stones, & many toures vpon, that it fered no sawtyng of no side of it; & made to this castell foure gates, & no more; & also he made y<sup>e</sup> portcolisse, fawesebrayes, & barbicanes well defensable, 16 so that it myght be no better / whan y<sup>e</sup> castell was accomplysshed / reynawde & his brethern were therof right glade / for it semed theym that they were assured from their enmyes / And whan kyng Yon knewe that 20 the castell was accomplysshed & full made, he went to see it / And whan reynawde wyst that the kyng cam / he went agenst hym, <sup>3</sup>& welcomed hym full honestly,<sup>3</sup> & made hym goo vp to the grete toure of the fortres, 24 by cause he shold see the compas of the castell rounde aboute at his ease / for, fro the grete toure, men myght see all. The kyng behelde well the fayr werke, that was so playsaunt & so strong wythall, & the fayr 28 fountayne that was in y<sup>e</sup> myddes of it / And thenne he called reynawde, & sayd to hym, 'Good frende reynawde, how shall this castell be called / for me semeth it ought well to have a noble name, for the grete 32 beaute wherof it is garnyshed' / 'sire,' sayd reynawde, 'it hath no name yet / and yf it playse you ye shall gyve it a name as it shall like you best' / 'certes,' Reynawde sende

for all the best men in the land
to build the
castle,

which is enclosed
with double walls,
and many towers
thereon of great
strength.

The King beholds
the fair work,

<sup>1</sup> deux cens et cinquante, F. orig. h. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

which he wills should be called Montalban; and sends word through his land that all who will dwell therein shall be free of duties for x. years.

So many people enter the town, that Montalban is well garnished.

The barons are envious of Reynawde, and counsel the King against him.

John assures them of the fidelity of Reynawde.

said the kyng, 'the place is praty and fayr / and I wyll that it be called Montalban' / and thenne the kyng made to be knowen thugh all his londe, that who wold come dwelle & enhabyte in the sayd castell, <sup>4</sup> <sup>1</sup> whiche was as grete as a towne<sup>1</sup> / he sholde be free of all maner of duytes the space of X yeres.

Thenne whan the folke of the countrey knewe the fredome of the castell / ye sholde have see come <sup>8</sup> there / knyghtes, gentylnen, burgeys, yonge & olde / yomen, <sup>2</sup> & folke of all maner of craftes<sup>2</sup> / so that this castell was pepled of all maner of folke / that in all y<sup>e</sup> countrey was no towne so wel pepled / for there <sup>12</sup> dwelled V hundred burgeys, all ryche men; & <sup>3</sup> there were well L. taverners, <sup>4</sup> and XVC. men of crafte, beside other folke<sup>4</sup> / And shortly to speke, montalban was so well garnysshed, and so riche wythin a lityll <sup>16</sup> while, that it was grete merveill for to see / and wyte it, that the kyng yon loved reynawde wyth so good a love, for by cause of the grete worthyness of hym, that he gaaf to hym valery & all the lordshype, that was <sup>20</sup> worthe a thousande marke of good rente well set / whan the barons sawe that the kyng loved reynawde soo well, they were wroth for it, <sup>1</sup> & had enuye vpon hym; <sup>1</sup> and thei cam to y<sup>e</sup> kyng & sayd to hym, 'sir, <sup>24</sup> take well good hede what ye doo / for montalban is ryght stronge, & so is reynawde suche a knyght, that none better is not in all the remenaunt of the worlde / and yf it happe by ony wyse that he be an <sup>28</sup> angred vpon you, he shall mowe lightly bere to you & to all your folke over grete dommage.' 'Lordes,' sayd the kyng, 'ye saye trowth / but reynawde <sup>5</sup> is so gentyll & so courtoys of hymself<sup>5</sup> that he shall never <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. h. iv. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> clers, villains et sergens, F. orig. <sup>3</sup> Fol. I. vii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> et cent hommes des glise, et y auoit bien plus de ceuz cens hommes de mestier, F. orig. h. iv. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> a si gentil cuer, F. orig. h. iv. back.

thynke vpon no treyson nor to no shame in no maner of wyse.' 'sire,' sayd thenne an olde knyght, that stode before the kyng, 'yf ye wyll beleve me, I shall 4 tell you how ye shall alwayes be lorde & mayster above reynawde all the tyme of your liff.' 'Frende,' sayd the kyng, 'tell me this I praye you.' 'Syr,' sayd the knyght, 'gyve hym your suster to his wyfe, so 8 shall he be well maryed, for reynawde is well a noble gentylman of all foure sides. And therby ye shall be assured that he shall never be angry ne wrothe wyth you' / 'frende,' sayd kyng Yon, 'ye gyve me good 12 counseyll / and I shall doo it as ye have counseyll me / but I praye you that ye purchace this matere.'
'sire,' sayd the olde knyght, 'sith that I knowe your wil in this behalfe / I shall doo my best for to bryng 16 the matere to a conclusion effectuell' / after these wordes thus sayd, the kyng retorned agen to Bordews wyth ioye, devysynge wyth y<sup>e</sup> olde knyght of the matier wherof they had spoken togyder.<sup>1</sup>

An old knight advises John to give his sister to Reynawde for his wife, so accord
may always exist
between them.

The King agrees,

and returns to Bordeaux with joy, devising how
the matter shall be speedily settled.

20 The first daye of the moneth of Maye, reynawde went from his castelle of Montalban, to bordews for to see kyng Yon, & toke alarde his broder wyth hym / And whan the kyng Yon wyst of it, he cam to 24 hym agenst, and receyved reynawde wyth grete ioye, and kyssed hym full swetely / And after, the kyng toke hym by y<sup>e</sup> hande, & went vp togyder to y<sup>e</sup> hall of the palays, <sup>2</sup>and so forth to the chambre of paremente, 28 whiche was hanged right rychely;<sup>3</sup> and thenne the kyng called for the chesse / for to playe at it wyth reynawde. And as they were playing togyder, there cam in the olde knyght, that had charge of the kyng 32 for to make the maryage of reynawde & of the kyngys suster, whiche knyghte was called godefraye of molyns / and whan he was come afore the kyng, he sayd,

<sup>1</sup> de la mectre n effect, F. orig. h. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. viii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

The old knight relates to the King and Reynawde a wonderful dream he had that night.

A doctor called Bernard expounds the dream, and says it portends the marriage of Reynawde and the King's sister.

'Here, Lordes, what I wyll tell you / To nyghte, as I was in my bed a slepe / me semed that I sawe Reynawde, the sone of Aymon, that was set hyghe in a chayre, & all the peple of this royaume enclined 4 theymselvf byfore hym. And the kyng gaaf to hym a sperhawke, mewed full fayr & good. & me semed also that thenne came a grete bore <sup>1</sup>out of the wodes,<sup>1</sup> that made an horryble noyse, so that no body durst not 8 approche nyghe hym / thre men assaylled hym / <sup>2</sup>but they coude not hurt hym, & passed by theym.<sup>2</sup> And whan Reynawde sawe that, he lighted vpon bayarde, & cam agenste hym, & faughte wyth hym, & hurted hym 12 sore / and thenne I woke out of my slepe' / and whan the olde knyghte had sayd so / thenne rose a doctour, that was called bernarde, the whyche was ryght wyse & a grete clerke, & sayd / 'fayr lordes, yf ye liste to 16 herken, I shall expowne and declare vnto you the signyfycasion of this dreme / Wyt it that the chaier where Reynawde sat, betokeneth the castell that he hath buylded / & the peple that bowed themself to- 20 warde hym, signyfyeth the folke that are come dwelle <sup>3</sup>there / And the yeste that the kyng gaaf to hym, betokeneth that the kyng yon shall gyve hym his suster to his wyff / that wylde bore signyfyeth som 24 grete prynce, crysten or pagnym, that shall come to assayll / kyng Yon / and the same is the sygnificacyoun of the dreme of Godfray; and I, indygne for to speke / sholde counseyll that the maryage sholde be doon of 28 reynawde & of the suster of kyng yon. For they shall be thus bothe ryght well <sup>4</sup>& rychely<sup>4</sup> weded' / And thenne the kyng answered, 'thou hast spoken well & wysely.' Whan the clerke had declared the betoken- 32 yng of the dreme of tholde knyght Godfray, the kyng yon sayd that, touchyng this maryage, the thyng was

<sup>1-1</sup> devers gironde, F. orig. h. iv.

<sup>2-2</sup> mais il passa tout aultre, F. orig. h. iv.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. I. viii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

well agreable vnto hym. And whan reynawde vnder-stode this worde, he sayd to the kyng / 'sir, gramercy of your fayr yefte that ye doo to me / but & yf it playse 4 you, ye shall have a lityll pacyence vnto the tyme that I have counseyllid wyth my brethern & my cosin Mawgys' / 'Broder,' sayd alarde, 'ye have sayd yll.
 What refuse you of the kyng so grete a yeft as he 8 gyveth you now; yf ye wyll beleve me, ye shall fulfill y<sup>e</sup> kinges wyll incontynente / for to me & to my brethern it shall playse well / And whan the kyng gaaff you not his suster / but a simple damoyzell, yet oughte 12 you to beleve hym & doo after his wyll' / 'brother,' sayd reynawde / 'it is not the firste tyme that ye have gyven to me good counseyll & true / and I promyse you I shall doo it, sith that ye doo counseyll me so' / and 16 thenne reynawde tornd hymself towarde the kyng, & sayd to hym / 'Sir, I am all togyder redy to doo all that<sup>1</sup> ye wyll' / and thenne reynawde rose vp, and the kyng toke hym by the hande / and made his suster to 20 be affiauzced vnto hym.

King John
 answers that the marriage is agreeable to him.

Reynawde with
 courtesy accepts,
 and is affianced
 to the King's sister.

Thenne whan the maryage was made accorded, and made sure of the one parte / & of thother, the kyng Yon cam<sup>2</sup> to the chamber of his suster / and fonde 24 her besi aboute a penouncell of a spere / that she made full fayr for the knyghte Reynawde, but she durst not tell it. The kyng salued her as sone as that he sawe her / and the noble mayd rose vp anone agenst her brother, 28 & made him due reverence ryght manerly. 'Fayr suster,' sayd the kyng, 'I have doo marye you well & highly.' whan the pucell vnderstode hym / she began to chaunge her colour, & bowed her body to hym, and 32 sayd no worde of a longe whyle / And whan she had the power for to speke, she sayd to the kyng her broder / 'Syr, to whom have you gyven me?' 'Fayr

John goes to his sister's chamber,

and announces
 the news to her.

<sup>1</sup> vostre vouloir et commandement, F. orig. h. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. K. i.

She is joyful
when she hears
that Reynawde
has been chosen for her husband.

suster,' sayd the kyng, 'I have gyven you vnto the best knyghte of the worlde. It is Reynawde / the sone of Aymon, the noble knyght & valyaunt' / Whan the noble damoyzell vnderstode that it was to Reynawde 4 to whom her brother had maryed her, she was ryght glad of it / For she loved Reynawde of a grete love, and sayd to y<sup>e</sup> kyng / <sup>1</sup>'Syr, I wyll doo wyth all my veraye herte your comaundemente & your wyll' <sup>1</sup> / 8 Thenne the kyng toke her by the hande and broughte her to the palays, and sayd to Reynawde afore all his barons, 'Holde here, worthy knyghte<sup>2</sup> Reynawde, I gyve you my suster to your wyff & spouse.' 'Syr,' sayd 12 Reynawde, 'a thousande gramercys of so fayr a yefte that ye gyve to me presently,<sup>3</sup> For it apperteyneth not so grete a yefte to so poure a knyghte as I am' / Thenne toke Reynawde the pucell, & fyaunced her / and sware. 16 And the kyng wolde make no taryenge therat, but toke the pucelle by the hande / and broughte her to the chyrche well honourably. And the bysshop of Bordews wedded them / and whan Reynawde had his wyff 20 espoused / <sup>4</sup>he sente for his brethern and for his cosin Mawgys, that were at <sup>5</sup>Mountalban, the whiche made grete Ioye / and made all mountalban for to be hanged wyth ryche tapyssery / And <sup>6</sup>thenne they mounted their 24 horses all covered wyth sendall, and wente to Bordews / and met wyth Reynawde and his wyff by the waye, <sup>7</sup>where as grete ioustynge was made afore the ladyes<sup>7</sup> / And after the ioustynge was doon, they came all to 28 Montalban / and whan they were com there, the ioye began to be grete in the castell, as god had descended there / For to saye trouth .viij dayes lasted the feste, and many grete yeftes were presented and gyven to the 32

Reynawde and
the damsel are married by the Bishop of Bordeaux.

After much feasting,
they come to
Montalban.

<sup>1-1</sup> Sire je vueil ce que vous plaist, F. orig. h. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. <sup>3</sup> a present, F. orig. h. v. back.

<sup>4</sup> il la mena a ses freres et a son cousin mawgis, F. orig. h. v.

<sup>5</sup> au chastel de Montauban, F. orig. h. v. <sup>6</sup> Fol. K. i. back.

<sup>7-7</sup> la ou lout faisoit moult belle joustes, F. orig. h. v.

lady / And whan the feste had endured as longe as I tell you / The kynge Yon wente agen to Bordews, right glad of the mariage / that he had made of Reynawde 4 and of his suster. For he thoughte well that Reynawde sholde helpe hym agenste all men : and he sayd trouthe / For after that the maryage was ones made, there was 8 yet there were some that wolde not<sup>1</sup> doo their devoyre to the kynge / but Reynawde made theym well come forth for to doo the kyngis comaundement accordynge to theyr ligeaunce, wolde they or not. For Reynawde 12 was both loved and doubted thurgh all y<sup>e</sup> londe of Gascoyn / ¶ But now leveth here the history to speke of Reynawde and of his bretherne & of Mawgys, And retorneth to speke of Charlemagne, that wente to 16 saynt Iames in Galyce for to doo penaunce for his synnes.

King John is glad of the marriage.

as Reynawde will now accord with him against his enemies.

CHAPTER VII.

¶ How the kynge Charlemagne made a vyage to saynte Iames in Galice / And how at his 20 comyng agen he knew how Reynawde and his bredern were in the royaume of gascoyn in a right strong castell called Montalban /
 And how Charlemagne sente worde to kynge 24 Yon of Gascoyn that he sholde yelde to hym his enmyes ; <sup>2</sup>that is to wyte, Reynawde, Alarde, Guycharde, & Rycharde, the sones of Aymon,<sup>2</sup> and in caas that he wolde not, 28 he sholde com besege hym in <sup>3</sup>his lande afore X monethes came atte an ende. Wherof the kynge Yon answered that he wolde doo

<sup>1</sup> nat, in text orig.

<sup>2-3</sup> cest assauoir regnault et ses freres, F. orig. h. v.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K. ii.

noo thyng for hym in this behalve / And how after that the kynge Charlemagne was retorneth to Parys <sup>1</sup>wyth his felawshyp<sup>1</sup> / Rowlande, his newew, arryved at Parys, the <sup>4</sup> whiche the kynge made knyghte / and after he sente hym to reyse a sege afore Coleyn, that a sarrasyn had beseged that was called Escoufrawde, y<sup>o</sup> whiche Rowlande con- <sup>8</sup> quered / And after sheweth how Reynawde won<sup>3</sup> the crowne of kynge Charlemagne / for the goode rennyng that his horse bayarde made at Parys. ¶ Capitul[u]m vij. 12

Charlemagne goes on a pilgrimage to Saint James in Galicia. Duke Naymes and Ogier the Dane accompany him.

Nowe sheweth the history that Charlemagne was at Parys, and cam to hym a devocyon for to goo in pylgrymage to saynt Iames in Gales. And soo he departed oute of Parys, and toke in his company Oger <sup>16</sup> the dane & the duk Naymes of bavyre, and many other barons and grete lordes / Whan they were vpon theyr waye, they dyde soo moche by there iourneys that they cam to saynt Iames in Galyce. And whan they <sup>20</sup> were arryved there / The kynge wente streyght to the chirche, & offred afore the aulter ten marke of fyne golde. And whan he had offred and doon his devocyon / he toke on his waye agayne, and came <sup>1</sup>wyth his <sup>24</sup> felawshyp<sup>1</sup> to Bordews / And in his comyng thider, he looked over the ryver of gyronde, <sup>1</sup>not ferre thens<sup>1</sup> / And sawe the castelle of Mountalban, that was vpon a roche, soo fayr & so well made, & so well shette wyth fayr <sup>28</sup> wallis, & thicke in the forme, as I have tolde you afore / And whan Charlemagne sawe it, he behelde well vpon it a longe while, and thenne sayd, 'Ha, good lord, yonder is a fayr castell, stronge and well set / I <sup>32</sup>

Charlemagne, in passing Bordeaux, sees the castle of Moutalban,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> wan, in text orig.

see well that the kyng Yon<sup>1</sup> hath made it of late / for it semeth yet to be all new ; and it can be none other <sup>2</sup>wyse, sith that he hath buylded it in suche a strong 4 place / but that he thynke to make werre to some body.' And thenne he called to hym a knyghte of the londe, & sayd to hym / 'tell me how ye calle that castell.' 'Syr,' sayd the knyghte, 'the name is Mount-8 alban' / He had grete luste to speke / for yf he had keped his peas there had ben none other thyng of it / But he sayd suche wordes that afterwarde bare grete harme to hym selfe and to many other. For he tolde 12 to the emperour that reynawde and his brethern, the sones of Aymon, had do make that castell / and was called Mountalban / And how the kyng Yyon had gyven to Reynawde his suster to his wyf.

and inquires of a knight the name
 of the castle.

The knight tells the Emperour how it belongs to the four Sons,
 and how Rey-
 nawde has married John's
 sister.

16 Whan Charlemagne vnderstode thyse wordes, he was ryght angry for it and wrothe, And wyste not what he sholde saye / and helde hym selfe a grete whyle that he spake not / and whan he had mused a 20 lityll / he sayd to his folke / 'fayre lordes, I shall telle you a wonder ; For I have founde my enemyes in this londe, that ben the foure sones of Aymon. Now vp, Ogyer, and you, duke Naymes / lighte on horsebacke 24 incontynente, and seke so moche kyng Yon that ye fynde hym, and telle hym in my behalve that he yelde to me agen the foure sones of Aymon, that ben myn enmyes, the whyche he hath wythdrawen and borne 28 oute agenste me. And that he fynde me knyghtes for to brynge them only into my londe / for I am delibered, sith that I have fonde them, for to hange them or fleye them quycke. And yf he wyll not do 32 soo / defye you hym on my behalfe, And telle hym that wythin this thre or foure monethes I shall be wythin his londe of Gascoyn wyth all my ooste / and I shall destroye and overthrowe all his townes and castelles,

Charlemagne, in wrath, sends Ogyer to tell King John to yield to him the four
 Sons.

or he will destroy
 all his land.

<sup>1</sup> de gascogne, F. orig. h. vi. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. K. ii. back.

and yf I maye take hym, I shall punyssh him wythoute ony mercy' / 'Syr,' sayd Ogyer, 'we shall doo your commaundemente, but we shall <sup>1</sup>take wyth vs Lances and Hostes, the whyche ben prue and sage' / <sup>4</sup> and Charlemagne sayd that he was contente; and incon-tynente they wente on theyr waye, And wente aboute for to vnderstode where kynge Yon was / And soo longe they asked after hym, that they founde hym atte <sup>8</sup> Montalban, evyn atte the foote of the roche / For the kynge Yon wente agen Bourdews, and Reynawde conveyed hym. When Ogyer sawe Reynawde and the kynge Yon, he knew theym well / And incontynente <sup>12</sup> he salued the kynge / and sayd to hym / 'Syre, god gyve you good liffe and longe' / And the kynge rendered to hym his salute, and after sayd to hym, 'Of whens be you?' <sup>2</sup>'syre,' said Ogyer, 'We ben of the swete <sup>16</sup> Fraunce / And also we be sente vnto you / And we are of Charlemagne folke. Now here vs, yf it playse you.' <sup>3</sup>'Syr,' sayd the kynge, 'ye be ryght welcome. Now telle on what ye wyll saye' / <sup>4</sup>'Sire,' sayd Ogyer, 'the <sup>20</sup> emperour Charlemagne sendeth to you worde by vs, that ye yelde agen vnto hym his enmyes y<sup>o</sup> whiche ye have wythdrawen in to your landes, and that ye sende to hym a hundred of your men for to conduytte and <sup>24</sup> brynge theym wyth hym vnto Fraunce. And yf ye refuse to doo this / <sup>5</sup>We, by his commaundemente, deffye you of his behalve<sup>5</sup> / And wythin thyse thre monethes he shall be in Gascoyn / and shall take all your londes, <sup>28</sup> and shall besege you wythin the cyte of Bordews / And yf he take you, he shall punyssh you in your body. Now have we sayd our message, And yf it playse you, ye shall gyve us an answer.' <sup>32</sup>

King John and Reynawde are together at Mont-
 alban when Ogyer arrives
 at the castle.

Ogyer delivers his message from the
 Emperor.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. iii.      <sup>2</sup> beau sire, F. orig. h. vi.

<sup>3</sup> seigneurs, F. orig. h. vi.      <sup>4</sup> doulx roy Yon, F. orig. h. vi.

<sup>5-6</sup> Il vous deffie de sa part, F. orig. h. vi.

‘Ogyer,’ sayd the kynge / ‘It is well trouth that I have reteyned the foure sones of Aymon, whiche ben worthy knyghtes ; and soo have I reteyned theym, 4 by cause they ben prue and valyaunte in armes, and also that they have <sup>1</sup>holpen and socoured me atte my grete nede / For I was dysherited <sup>2</sup>and vndoon for ever<sup>2</sup> yf they had not ben / And for the grete goode that they 8 have doon to me, I have gyven my suster germayne to Reynawde for his wyff / And therefore I sholde be to cruell, and eke well myschaunte, yf I sholde now take theym in to the handes of theyr enmyes mortalle, syth 12 that they have doon to me soo good servyse<sup>3</sup> / I have lever for to be dyshereted, and deye an evyll deth, than to yelde theym, or suffre that they have ony harme nor shame to my power / For namly the kynge Charle-16 magne sholde thenne holde me for a foole and well nyce / And therefore, Ogyer, yf it playse you, ye shall telle the emperour from my behalve, that I shal forsake firste all my londe and my royame, than I sholde 20 deliver theym in his handes / And this is myn answe’re’ /

King John
 declares that he will forsake his kingdom sooner than yield up the Sons to Charle-
 magne.

Thenne whan the kynge had sayd thus, Reynawde spake after and sayd, ‘Ogyer, I merveyll gretly 24 of the kynge Charlemagne, that wyll not leve vs in peas / He caste vs oute of Fraunce poure and dys-heryted, wherof I am ashamed / and as ye knowe, I wolde be reformed wyth rayson to the sayenge of his 28 barons ; but it playseth hym not / And soo he casted vs oute of Mountenfourde shamfully / so that we wyste not where we sholde go / And yet it suffyseth hym not, but he wyll cast vs oute of the londe of Gascoyn, 32 wherof he dooth grete synne. For yet am I redy for to doo his wyll in rayson and ryght / And I telle you well, that yf he refuce this by hys pryde, I wyll well

Reynawde complains of the injustice of the Emperor,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. iii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> et loyualment, F. orig. b. vii. back.

that he knowe that / I and my brethern are not suche that shall be taken as lyghtly as he weneth. And I promyse you, that or ever he hathe vs / I shall make hym more than ten tymes angry and wrothe / For this 4 that <sup>1</sup>he dooth / he dooth it but of pryde / Ogyer, I wyll well that kynge Charlemagne knowe, that the kyng <sup>2</sup>Yon of Gascoyn hath gyven to vs leve to buylde a castell that hath to name Montalban / the whiche is 8 stronge and imprenable, and yet I have knyghtes wyth me that shall not faylle me at my nede. And tell to kynge Charlemagne that sith I can not have noo peas nor accorde wyth hym, that I shall doo to hym all the 12 dommage and harme that shalle be to me possyble for to doo.'

and says he shall do to him all the harm that he cau.

Ogyer rebukes Reynawde for these words,

and says he will
 be sorry when all the host of Charlemagne
 assaile him.

'Reynawde,' sayd Ogyer, 'ye speke not wysely;
 wene ye to abasshe vs wyth wordes / ye shall 16 not so; but whan ye shall see the oost and the grete power of Charlemagne togyder, ye shall be sore abasshed, and atte the ende ye shall be full wrothe and sorry / <sup>3</sup>Ye knowe well that the emperour Charlemagne made 20 you knyghte, and ye slowe his nevew Berthelot / and therfore thynke not to fynde peas towarde hym / And ye wene to be assured by cause the kynge Yon hath made you to close a castell / but well I wyll that he 24 knowe that he shall repente for it full sore / For afore two monethes be paste we shall be in the myddes of his londe, and shall dystroye all his royame / And we shall brenne bothe castelles and townes.' 'Ogyer,' 28 sayd Reynawd, 'I swere to you on my feyth, that whan kynge Charlemagne <sup>4</sup>shall be wyth his oost in this londe, <sup>4</sup>he shall wyshe hym selfe soone agayne in Fraunce wyth his folke. And whan ye shall see the 32 harde ioustyng and sharpe werre that I and my brethern shall make agenste hym / he and ye shall be sore

<sup>1</sup> le roy, F. orig. h. vii. back. <sup>2</sup> Fol. K. iv. <sup>3</sup> Regnault, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup>— sera retourne en gascogne, F. orig. h. vii.

abashed of it; and some of you speketh now hye, that whan the dede shall come to preeff, he shall be full lowe' / 'Reynawde,' sayd then Ogyer, 'I wyll hide no 4 thynge from you / The kyng Charlemagne hath so grete a power / and is delibered for to besege Bordews / and yf he maye take you, he shall punyssh you cruelly / now doo as ye wyll. I have tolde you all <sup>1</sup>my message, 8 and I goo agen to kyng Charlemagne' / whan he had sayd these wordes, he retorned towarde kyng Charlemagne, & shewed vnto hym what kyng Yon & reynawde had sayd / And whan the kyng vnderstode<sup>2</sup> the same / he 12 shoke all for angre, & sayd / 'now shall it be seen how kyng Yon & Reynawde shall defende Gascoyn agenst me' / And thenne went forth charlemagne & passed the ryver of gyronde, and rode soo longe that he cam 16 to Paris; and the daye after, he called all his barons that they sholde com to him. And whan they were all com / the kyng helde hys counseyll, & sayd to theim, 'Lordes, I have sent for you to telle you the grete 20 shame that the kyng Yon of gascoyn dooth to me.
 For he holdeth the foure sones of Aymon, <sup>3</sup>my mortell enmyes,<sup>3</sup> in dyspyte of me, and ye knowe what dommage they have doon to me / for they slew my newew 24 Berthelot / I dyd banyssh theym oute of Fraunce; thenne made they the castell of Mounthenforde wythin my londe / and I chassed theym oute of it. Now ben they in Gascoyn wyth the kyng Yon, that sayth he 28 shall deffende theym agenste me, and he has gyven his suster to Reynawde / wherfore I praye you all that ye wyll helpe me that I be avenged.'

32 And whan Charlemagn had sayd this, there was none of the barons that answered to hym ony worde, for they were wery of the werre. that they had

Ogyer returns to the Emperour,
 and gives him
 the message from John and Rey-
 nawde.

Charlemagne
 holds a counsel of all his barons at Paris,

and asks their aid in taking vengeance on
 King John.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> ses parolles que le roy Yon et Regnault luy mandoient, F. orig. h. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. h. vii.

made soo long agenste Reynawde / <sup>1</sup> And Charlemagne sawe that no body answered to hym no thinge / he called to hym the duke naymes & ogier the dane / and the erle Guydellon / and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, 4 what counseyll doo you gyve to me in this matere?'
 'Sir,' sayd the duke Naymes / 'yf ye wyll beleve me, I shall gyve you goode counseyll / Suffre your ooste to reste this fyve yeres / By cause that your folke is wery 8 of the werre / so shall they reste them selfe a lityll / And whan thei shall be fresshe / thenne <sup>2</sup> shall ye mow make werre atte your wyll / for every man shall thenne com to it wyth good wyll.' And whan the emperour 12 vnderstode this counseyll he was sore an angred for it, that he wente almost oute of his wyt. And as he wolde have sayd agenst the duke Naymes, there cam a yonge gentelman of grete beaulte / and broughte in 16 his company XXX. fayr sqyers, well arrayed.<sup>3</sup> this yonglynge cam to the palays, & wente vp / and whan he cam afore the emperour, he made his obeysaunce to hym full courtoysly. 'Frende,' sayd the kyng, 'ye be 20 ryght welcom ; what wynde brought you hider, & what be you' / 'sire,' sayd the squyer, 'I am called Row-lande of bretayn, & I am the sone of your suster and of the duke Myllon.' 24

Duke Naymes
 asks Charlemagne
 to grant the host pence for 5 years,
 as they are all
 weary of war.

The Emperor is about to reply in anger, when a young gentleman
 enters the palace,

and salutes him,

saying he is his nephew Roland.

Charlemagne
 receives him with joy,

and says he shall
 knight him,
 and send him to assail the four
 Sons.

Thenne whan Charlemagne vnderstode Rowlande speke thus, he was right glad of hym, & toke hym by the hande & kyssed hym many tymes, & sayd to hym, 'ye be ryght welcom / I wyll that ye be made 28 a knyghte to morow in y<sup>e</sup> mornynge, & ye shall assaye yourself vpon Reynawde, the sone of Aymon.'
 'Syr,' sayd Rowlande, 'I shall doo your commaunde-ment, & I promyse you / Reynawde shall not be spared 32

<sup>1</sup> Et quant Charlemagne, F. orig. h. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. K. v.

<sup>3</sup> et vit le damoiseil emmy la court du palays et montre contremont les degrez. Et quant il fut au palays il sen vint devant lempireur charlemagne. F. orig. h. viii. back.

of me, and he shall not bere awaye no thyng of yours.
 He slewe my cosyne Berthelot, wherof I am right sory / and therefore I shall avenge his dethe, yf I maye by ony 4 manere / or elles Reynawde shall slee me' / And in the mornynge the kyng Charlemagne dowbed his newewe rowlande to a knyghte, wyth moche ioye and wyth grete honoure. and as the feste was a doynge / there 8 came a messenger that sayd to the emperour, <sup>1</sup> 'Most hie & moste puyssaunt prynce / your men of Cologne recomende theym ryght humbly to your goode grace, And they doo you to wyte that the sarrasyns have 12 <sup>2</sup> beseged theym, And have hurte theym ryght sore / For they have brente and dystroyed alle the contree / wherfore they beseche you ryght humbly, that ye com for to helpe and socoure theym yf it be your playsure / Or 16 elles they are but deed / and vtterly dystroyed.'

Roland says he shall willingly avenge the death
 of Berthelot.

A messenger
 arrives from Cologne,

and tells the Emperor that
 the Saracens
 besiege their city,

and they cry for
 succour.

And whan the emperour vnderstode thysse tydynges he bowed his [head] towards the erthe, and be-ganne to thynke a lityll / And whan Rowlande sawe 20 his vncler that mused thus in hym selfe / he sayd vnto hym / <sup>3</sup> 'Wherof be ye soo dysmayed / Gyve me some parte of your men, And I shall goo reyse the sege of Cologne' / And whan the emperour herde Rowlande 24 speke soo, he was ryght gladde of it, and embraced and kyssed hym full swetly, and sayd to hym / 'Fayr newew / blessyd be the hour that ever ye were borne /
 For I knowe for certeyn that ye shalle kepe me fro 28 peyne and travaylle, and in you shall be my rest and my comforte / And I wylle that ye goc there' / And thenne he gaaff hym XV. thousande men of armes well horsed <sup>4</sup> & well arrayed <sup>4</sup> / And whan they were well 32 appareylled / Rowlande lighted vpon his horse and sayd to his vncler 'the kyng <sup>4</sup> / 'Syre, I commende you to god.' 'Fayr newewe,' sayd Charlemagne, 'I have Roland volunteers

 to raise the sieg
 at Cologne,

and takes with him xx. thousand men well armed.

<sup>1-1</sup> Droit emperour, F. orig. h. viii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. K. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> Sire, F. orig.    <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

taken to you my men in your kepyng / I praye you that ye wyll kepe them well / and doo so moche that ye gete worshyp / and god be wyth you<sup>1</sup> / 'sire,' sayd Rowlande, 'be not dysmayed, for at my return, <sup>2</sup>yf it 4 playse god,<sup>2</sup> ye shall knowe how that we have doo.'
 And whan he had sayd this worde / he toke leve of nis vncl / and wente on his waye wyth his folke / and they rode so longe by theyr Iourneys that they 8 came to cologne all by nyghte / and put theyr busshe-ment nyghe the oost / And as thei were nyghe the oost they met wyth certen sarrasins that cam<sup>3</sup> agayn wyth a grete proye of oxen and shepe, and of men and 12 of wymen that were theyr prysoners / And made theym suffre grete martyrdom /

They arrive at Cologne,

and meet certain Saracens carrying away prisoners
and cattle.

Whan the frenshemen sawe theyr enmyes / They sayd in this maner / 'Lordes, our lorde hath 16 sente vs hyther. Here ben the traytours sarrasyns / <sup>4</sup>that soo sore we have desired for to fyghte wyth theym<sup>4</sup> / Now shall it be seen what we shall doo to theym / Putte vs amonge theym / for atte this hour they shall 20 be overthrowen' / Whan they hadde spoken ynoughe, they made none other taryenge / but spored their horses and ranne vpon the sarrasyns by grete streynghete, Soo that in a lityll while they had theym dyscom- 24 fyted soo sharpely, that they slewe theym all, And recovered all the prysoners and the bestes. ¶ And shortly to speke, Whan the ooste of the pagnymes herde the noyse of the frenshemen<sup>5</sup> they moved theym 28 selfe / and lighted vpon their horses / and vpon the frenshemen. And whan the frenshe men sawe theym come, they wente agayne to their busshemente aswell as they coude / <sup>6</sup>And beganne to chasse theym. 32

The French fall
upon them,

and slay them,
recovering all the prisoners and cattle.

The host of the
pagans fly,
pursued by the folk of Charle-
magne.

<sup>1</sup> amen, F. orig. h. viii.    <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. h. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> que tant avons defirez, F. orig. I. i. back.

<sup>5</sup> incontinent, F. orig.

<sup>6</sup> et les sarazins, F. orig. I. i. back.

Whan Rowlande sawe that it was tyme to set vpon / he yssued oute of his busschement wyth his folke, and wente and smote vpon the sarra-4 syns so harde that he casted to the erthe a grete parte of theym. ¶ And to speke shortely, the bataylle be-ganne soo cruell and soo fell that it was <sup>1</sup>pyte to see / For ye sholde have seen soo many speres broken / and 8 soo many sheeldes in two / and so many sarrasyns liynge deed on the grounde, soo that wyth peyne men myght go by fore the deed men that laye so thyck one vpon thoder / & Rowlande spored his horse wyth y° 12 spores, & went & smote<sup>2</sup> a sarrasin that was a kyng & the chyef of y° sarrasins oost, with so grete myght that Roland overthrows the chief
 of the Saracens,
 he overthrew him to erthe, <sup>3</sup>but he slewe hym not of that stroke / but taryed vpon hym, & gaaff to hym 16 suche a stroke wyth his swerde vpon hys helme, <sup>4</sup>that he made hym all a stonyed.<sup>4</sup> And whan Rowlande sawe hym so evyll arayed, he bowed hymselfe, and toke and takes him
 prisoner;
 hym for his prysoner, and dyd set hym agen vpon his 20 horse & brought hym wyth hym. and whan the sar-rasins sawe their lorde taken, & sawe y° woundre of armes that Rowlande made, & of the frenshmen / they putte theymselfe to flighte full shamfully. And whan the rest of his folk fly shame-
 fully.
 24 Rowlande sawe the sarrasins flee thus, he cryed wyth a highe voys / 'Lordes, goo after them / for they flee all / and yf they scape vs / it shall be to vs a grete blame towarde myn vncler the kyng Charlemagne, and 28 we shall beholden for cowardes / wherfore I praye you lete not one escape, for ye shall have theym lightly, sith that I holde in my handes theyr kyng' / Whan
 the frenshemen herde Rowlande speke thus, they sayd, 32 'free knyghte, be not dysmayed of no thyng / for we make noo doubte that none of theym shall scape, but <sup>1</sup> grant pitie, F. orig.<sup>2</sup> moult cruellement, F. orig. I. i. back. <sup>3</sup> Fol. K. vi. back.<sup>4</sup>—4 quil luy fist chauceleer les dens en la gorge, F. orig.

I. i. back.

The chief, whose name is Escor-fawde, entreats Roland not to slay his men, but to grant them a truce, and promises that he and all his folk shall submit to the Emperor.

The truce is granted, and the French with Escor-fawde, return to Paris.

Roland delivers the Saracen king to Charlemagne.

they shall be taken or slayn' / 'Lordes,' sayd there the kynge sarrasin that Rowlande had taken, that had to name Escor-fawde / 'They ben all myn / I praye you that ye kille theym not, for they ben all ynoughe 4 dyscomfyted / sith that ye have taken me, but gyve theym tryews. And have me to kyng Charlemagne, yf it playse you / And yf ye maye doo so moche that Charlemagne pardonne me the grete offence that I have 8 doon to hym, I shall holde from hensforthe all my herytage of hym, and yet all my lignage shall be obeys-saunte vnto his wyll, & of this ye maye beleve me.' 'By my hede,' sayd rowlande / 'ye speke curtoysly' / 12 '& by my feyth,' sayd Naymes, 'Escor-fawde sayth well, & we shall do so' / they gaaf tryews to y<sup>e</sup> sarasins, & toke their way agen to charlemagn, & brought escor-fawde wyth them, & so longe thei rode that they cam 16 to paris / and <sup>1</sup>whan the kynge Charlemagne knewe that his nevewe Rowlande was come agayne to Parys, and that he had dyscomfyted the sarrasins, and broughte prysoner wyth hym kynge Escor-fawde, he was ryght 20 glade of it / And anone he mounted on horsbacke, and came agenste his nevewe Rowlande / And whan Rowlande sawe hym, he lighted down from his horse / and wente & caste hym selfe to the feete of kyng 24 Charlemagne <sup>2</sup>his vncl<sup>e</sup>.<sup>2</sup> And anone he made hym to ryse vp / and kyssed hym swetly / And thenne Rou-lande sayd to hym, 'Syre, here I deliver vnto you the kynge Escor-fawde that we have taken. He hathe tolde 28 vs that he shall make hym selfe a crysten man / And that he and his lygnage shall holde theyr londes of you / yf ye wyll pardonne hym youre ylle wyll' / 'Nevewe,' sayd the kynge Charlemagne, 'there ys noo 32 truste in hym / And therefore I wyll kepe me from hym.' Thenne commaunded the emperour that / Escor-fawde sholde be broughte to pryson / and he sholde be well

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. vii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

kepte, And that he sholde have all his wyll of mete and drynke / And after, whan Escorfawde was put in pryson / The kynge Charlemagne dyde calle to hym 4 the duke Naymes, and sayd to hym, 'What thynke you by my newew Rowlande? What dyde he whan the batayll was assembled' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'of Rowlande nedeth not to speke. For ever / 8 sith that god was borne of the vyrgyne Marye, suche a knyghte was not seen / For he alone hath overcome the sarrasines<sup>1</sup> by his grete prowes / And yf he hadde a horse that myght bere hym whan he were armed / I 12 swere by my feyth that ye sholde never have enmye / but that he sholde brynge hym to your mercy by force of armes /<sup>2</sup>Soo moche he is prue and valyaunte.'<sup>3</sup> The kynge Charlemagne sware by his hede that he was 16 ryght gladde therof / 'But tell me,' sayd he to<sup>3</sup>the duke Naymes / 'where myght men fynde suche a good horse as ye speke of' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke, 'yf ye wyll beleve me / I shall gyve you goode counseyll / 20 Make to be cryed wyth a trompette vpon Mounte martyr, that ye wyll see renne all the horses of your ooste.
 And he that shall renne beste, shall wynne your crowne of golde, And fyve hundred marke of fyne silver, and 24 a hundred rolles of silke / And all thus ye shall mowe know the beste horse of your royame / And whan ye shall have seen hym / bye hym / & gyve hym to your newew Rowlande / And after, gyve leve to all your 28 barons vnto the feste of saynt Iohn the baptyste nexte comynge' / 'Duk Naymes,' sayd the emperour Charlemagne, 'ye gyve me goode counseyll / And I shall do thus as ye have devysed.' Thenne the kynge made 32 to be cryed vpon Mounte marter evyn thus as duk Naymes had devysed / And dyde make the lystes for the horses to renne in / And whan this was doon, he

The Emperor demands of Duke Naymes how Roland behaved in the battle.

Naymes declares that there is not his equal in prowess,

but that he lacketh a horse to bear him well.

Naymes counsels the Emperor to proclaim a race between all the horses of his host, the prize to be his crown of gold, and 500 marks of silver, and 100 rolls of silk, and the best horse to be bought for Roland.

<sup>1</sup> et desconfits par sa prouesse, F. orig. I. ii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K. vii. back.

A yeoman goes to Gascogne,

and tells Reynawde all the tidings from Paris,

and the price that Charlemagne had placed on the best horse.

made his crowne to be set atte the ende of the listes / and also the fyve hundred marke of sylver, and the hundred rolles of sylke / And this hangyng, a yoman wente to his countrey in gascoyn / and as he passed 4 thruge Montalban, he recounted to Reynawde & to Mawgys all the thyng that men wolde doo at Parys, And how Rowlande was come to the courte / And how he had dyscomfyted Escorfawde the kyng sarrasin, and 8 how y<sup>e</sup> kyng Charlemagn wolde have the best horse of all his royaume for to gyve hym to Rowlande, and shewed the sayd yoman the pryce that the kyng had set. And also how the emperour Charlemagne gadred 12 his ooste for to come to mountalban, And how the course of the horses sholde be made atte saynt Iohns tyme nexte comynge.

Reynawde declares his intention of running Bayard before
the King.

<sup>1</sup> Thenne whan reynawde vnderstode thys worde, he 16 began to laugh, & after sayd to maugis, ‘cosin, by all hallowes of god, Charlemagn ne shall see the beste torne of the worlde, but he shall not knowe that I shall have hys crowne. For I wyll go there vpon Bayarde, 20 to see how he shall prove hym selfe atte thys tyme’ / ‘Syre,’ sayd Mawgys, ‘ye shall not doo so yet; but yf ye wyll goo there, suffre that I bere you company / soo shall you be more sure / and have with vs knyghtes 24 well armed.’ ‘Gladly,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘syth that ye wyll soo.’ Whan it was tyme for to meve towarde Parys / Reynawde called to hym Alarde, Guycharde, and Rycharde <sup>2</sup>his bretherne,<sup>2</sup> and <sup>2</sup>Mawgys<sup>2</sup> his cosyn, 28 and sayd vnto theym / ‘It is tyme that we goo to Parys / Take knyghtes chosen, and putte our selfe in the waye.’ ‘Syre,’ sayd his bretherne, ‘your com-maundemente shall be doon’ / And whan they were 32 all appareylled / Reynawde came to his wyff, and sayd to her, ‘Lady, I praye you that ye doo kepe well my castell / and I shall come soone agen’ / ‘Syre,’ sayd

The Sons, with Mawgis and some chosen knyghts,
set out for Paris.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. viii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. ii.

she, 'commaunde knyghtes that they ben not oute of the waye / & I promyse you, yf the kyng Yon my broder cam hym selfe, he sholde not come inne / nor 4 none other, vnto the tyme that ye be come agen / Now goo god be wyth you' / Thenne toke Reynawde leue of hys wyff / and sette hym selfe towarde the waye, & his folke, and went to Parys. And whan they were 8 come to Orleauce, and hadde passed the ryver of Loyre, men asked theym of whens they were. And Mawgys, that spake for theym all, answered, 'Lordes, we ben Bournoys, that go to Parys for to assaye our horses for 12 to wynne the pryce that the kyng hath set vpon, yf god wyll so consente.' Thenne by fayre wordes they passed forth, & so longe they rode that thei came to Melym but they entred not wythin the towne, but <sup>1</sup>lodged 16 theymself in a grete valey, and there they sojourned theym selfe & theyr horses foure dayes.

When they reach Orleans, men
ask them from whence they came.

Mawgis replies,
they are Bour-noys, and are going to Paris
to run their horses there.

Thenne whan cam the evyn of saynt Iohn, Rey-nawd called Mawgis, & sayd to hym, 'What shall 20 we doo? to morowe shall be the courses of the horses / wherfore I saye that it is covenable that we goo lye to nyghte at Parys' / 'Cosin,' sayd / Mawgys, 'ye saye well <sup>2</sup>and wysely.<sup>2</sup> Now lete me doo a lityll & playse you.' 24 Thenne toke Mawgis an herbe, & stamped it vpon a stone wyth the pomell of his swerde / and tempered it wyth water, and rubbed bayarde therwyth, soo that anone he becam all white, in suche wyse that they that 28 had seen hym before, knewe hym not / and after he enoynted Reynawde wyth an noyntement that he bare alwayes wyth hym, & incontynent he becam to the age of <sup>3</sup>XX. yeres / And whan he had thus atorned Rey-32 nawde and his horse / he toke hym, & broughte hym afore <sup>4</sup>his brethern and afore the other knyghtes,<sup>4</sup> &

Mawgis takes a herb,

and rubs Bayard
with it, so that he becomes quite
white;

and also anoints
Reynawde with
an ointment,
which makes him
look like a youth.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K. viii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> quinze ans, F. orig. I. iii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> les autres cheualliers freres de Regnault, F. orig. I. iii. back.

sayd to theym / 'Lordes, telle me how thynke you; have I not well transfygured hym / shall not they maye com agen and not be knowen? Beholde bayarde, how he is wexen whyte, he shall lese the pryce for age.' 4

Thenne whan the barons sawe reynawde & bayarde so torned / they began to laughe, & were gretly merveyllled how Mawgys had thus dysfygured theym / Whan Mawgys had transfygured reynawde & bayarde, 8 and hymselfe also, Reynawde mounted vpon bayarde, & mawgys vpon morell, and toke leve of their folke / But reynawde atte his departyng sayd to his bretherne / 'have no feere for me, For I shall not be knowen, yf god 12 wyll' / <sup>1</sup>Thenne wente Reynawde on his waye; and his folke wepte for hym,<sup>1</sup> for Reynawd wente in such a place where he had many enmyes / For yf Charlemagne had come take hym, all the golde of the worlde had 16 <sup>2</sup>not saved hym / but he sholde have caused hym to be hanged / And whan they departed, Alarde sayd to Mawgys / 'I praye you for god that ye have my broder Reynawde for recomended / for yf it were not 20 for the truste that I have to you, I sholde not suffre that he sholde goo to Parys, for all the golde of spayne.' And thenne Reynawde and mawgys wente on theyr way. Now shall I leve a lityll to spoke of theym, 24 And shall retorne to the kyng Charlemayn, that was at Parys wyth his folke.

Charlemagne sawe his barons that were all com / and thenne he called the duke Naymes, Ogier 28 the dane, and Foulques of moryllon, and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, I praye you that ye take an hundred knyghtes well armed, & goo towarde the waye of Orleaus / and beware that none goo by, but that ye 32 knowe theyr names, & that they ben well advysed / for Reynawde and Mawgis take leve of their folk with much sorrow.

Alarde charges Mawgis that he should preserve Reynawde from all evil.

Charlemagne commands Naymes, Ogier and Foulques, that they take an hundred knyghtes, and keep the way from Orleaus, so that none may pass without their knowledge.

<sup>1-1</sup> Lors se mist a la wye tout en plourant et ses gens plourient aussi, F. orig. L. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. i.

I doubt me sore of Reynawde that he shall come /<sup>1</sup> for he weneth well hymselfe to be over subtyll<sup>1</sup> / and yf it cam in his hede, he sholde come soone hytherwarde / 4 'Syre,' sayd the barons, 'we shall doo gladly your commaundement; & yf reynawde be soo folissh that he come hitherwarde, he shall not scape vs / but he shall be deed or taken, & broughte a fore you' / And 8 thenne they toke leve of kynge Charlemagne, & wente to make theym redy in theyr horses / and after mounted on horse backe wyth an hundred knyghtes well armed, and rode the waye towarde Orleauce / and arrested 12 them selfe in the myddes of the waye, foure myles oute of Parys; and there they were a longe while that noo body passed by, and endured grete hungre and thurst.
 And whan the duke Naymes sawe that they were there 16 for noughte, he sayd to Ogyer, 'Syre ogyer, by my feyth the kyng Charlemagn maketh vs lyke fooles / and holdeth vs for nyce & musardes,<sup>2</sup> that he maketh vs to tari here aboute noughte.' 'Syre,' sayd Ogier, 'ye saye 20 trouth / And god confounde me yf I tary ony lenger' /
 And whan they wolde have comyn agayn aback, the duke Naymes<sup>3</sup> sawe com a ferre<sup>3</sup> Reynawde and Mawgys / Thenne sayd Naymes to Foulques of moryllon / 'yonder 24 I see comyng two men on horsbacke.' And whan Foulques sawe theym / he cryed wyth a highe voys /
 'by my feyth, here cometh reynaude / Now can he not scape by no maner / but he shall be hanged' / 'By my 28 feyth,' sayd the duke naymes, 'ye saye trouth / For the horse that cometh afore is moche like Bayarde, the horse of Reynawde, yf he were of a nother colour' / Whan foulques vnderstode thise wordes, he sette hande 32 to his swerde, and cam agenste Reynawde ryght nere;

The barons
 remain four miles
 out of Paris,
 where they suffer
 much hunger and thirst.

Duke Naymes
 sees Reynawde
 and Mawgis
 approach,

and marvels that the horse is so
 like Bayard,
 save for his colour.

1-1 Car vous scaues bien comment il est outreuideux, F. orig. I. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. i. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> regarde au long chemin et vit venir Reynault, F. orig.
 I. iii.

and whan he was well nyghe theym / he behelde theym / And whan he sawe that it was not Reynawde, he was all abasshed, & drewe hym selfe abacke. And Reynawde and Mawgys rode forthe their wayes. And 4 whan the duke Naymes sawe that they cam forth / he wente agenste theym, and called Mawgis, and sayd to hym, 'What ben ye / and whether goo ye?' 'Sire,' sayd Mawgys, 'I am borne of Peron / & my name is 8 Iousser.' 'Frende,' sayd the duke naymes, 'can not ye telle me noothyng of reynawde the sone of Aymon, the worthy knyghte?' 'Ye,' sayd Mawgys, 'by my feyth / he hath ryden wyth vs two dayes, and he is not passed 12 two myles behynde vs' / At that howr Reynawde spake not / thenne sayd naymes, 'what is he that is wyth you, that holdeth hym soo styll, and that sayth no worde / I beleve that he hath some evyll thoughte' / 16
 'sire,' sayd Mawgis, 'it is my sone / and he can not speke no frenshe / For he hath be norished in the grete Bretayn' / Whan the duke naymes vnderstode this / he sayd to Reynawde / 'tell me, vassall, knowest 20 thou noo tidynges of Reynawde, the sone<sup>1</sup> of Aymon?' and Reynawde answered to hym in this wyse: <sup>2</sup>'By my feyth, noo poynte frenshe, graunt Bretayne horse, a Parys cloyth ganera my.'<sup>2</sup> And contrefaytted thus his 24 langage / by cause the duke Naymes sholde not knowe hym.

Naymes demands of them what men
 they are.
 Mawgis answers
 that his name is Iousser,
 and that he was born in Peron;

and that Rey-
 nawde is his son,
 and cannot talk
 French.

Thenne whan the duke Naymes herde Reynawde speke thus evyll / he began to laughe / And after 28 sayd to hym agayn / 'a hundred devylles have well taught the to speke so good frenshe. <sup>3</sup>Vassayll, I wote not what you sayste, thou arte more like a foole than a bysshop.' And soo naymes lete hym in peas / And 32

Naymes lets
 them go in peace,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> ymy seay poin francoys en bretant, parler cheval a paris, couronne roy non draps horniz gaigner my, F. orig. I.
 iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> Sire, F. orig. I. iv. back.

thenne Reynawde and Mawgys rode so longe that they cam to Parys, <sup>1</sup>tyme ynoughe for to doo their enter-pryse<sup>1</sup> / And atte the entre of the towne / they mette 4 wyth an evyll rybawde / to whom god gyve yll adventure, For he knewe Reynawde / <sup>1</sup>And as sone as he sawe hym,<sup>1</sup> he beganne to crye wyth a highe voys, 'here come Reynawde y<sup>e</sup> sone of Aymon.' Whan the 8 folke vnderstode the crye / they wente that waye. And whan the yll<sup>1</sup> rybawde sawe com so many folke / he was yet more hardy than he was afore, and wente afore the other / and toke Reynawde by the brydell of Bayarde / 12 And whan Bayarde sawe that / he lifted his forfote and smote the Rybawde vpon the breste / that he braste the herte in hys bely / and casted hym all deed to the erth /
 And whan the peple sawe the stroke / they beganne all 16 to laughe / And Bayarde wente forthe, and Mawgys, after that they were not knowen, And passed thoroughe the towne to the olde market / And whan they were comen there afore the lodges / they founde all the 20 Innes full / wherof reynawde was merveyllid. And soo they lighted att a cordueners house / that was of the devylles syde / For by hym was almoste Reynawde and Mawgys taken / and delyvered to Charlemagne, 24 that hys bretherne sholde not have <sup>2</sup>holpen hym of noo thyng. Whan they were lighted and lodged where it is sayd / And that theyr horses were well dressed, Mawgys dyde doo make a bedde for Reynawde, 28 and toke a threde of sylke / and cered it well, and came to bayarde, and bounde hym the mowes of the feete there wyth all well streyghte. And the ooste behelde well this / and after sayd to hym / 'Why have 32 you thus bounde this horse / he shall not conne well goo / But telle me, what knyghte is he that oweth the horse / For yf he hadde of age more than he hath I sholde wene to knowe hym / For he is moche like and they arrive at Paris.

In the town a rascal recognises Reynawde, and cries out that here is the son of Aymon.

He seizes Bayard by the bridle;

the horse kills him with his fore foot.

Reynawde and Mawgis alight at the house of a shoemaker.

Mawgis binds the feet of Bayard with silk,

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. ii. back.

and tells the host
that he who rides
on him is his son.

Reynawd the sone of Aymon.' 'Syre,' sayd Mawgys,
'I have bounde this horse thus by cause he wyll fyghte / and the yoman that rydeth vpon hym is my sone / Nowe have I telled you that that ye have asked me.' 4
'Certes,' answered the ooste, 'your sone is a fayre felawe / but I / beleve ye mocke me.' ¶ Now here a grete mysadventure that happed to Reynawde & to mawgys. For thus as mawgys spake wyth his ooste, he 8 named reynawde. 'Ha, syre,' sayd thenne the ooste, 'Ye have sayd ynoughe / ye nede not for to hyde it any more. It ys Reynawde, wythoute ony doubtte, that slewe Berthelot, the newewe of the kynge, wyth a 12 chesse borde / I shall telle it to the kynge afore that I slepe.'

The host recognises Reynawde,
and says he will
tell the Emperor
that the son of Aymon is here.

And whan Reynawde vnderstode this / he shooke Alle for angre, And rose from his place, and toke 16 his swerde, and sayd, 'Hooste, ye have myssayed, For I never sawe Reynawde / nor I wote not what he is' /
'Holde your peas,' sayd the ooste, 'I knowe you well /
By my hede, ye are Reynawde the sone of Aymon' / 20
And whan he hadde sayd thys wordes, he wente oute of his howse / And whan Reynawde sawe that / he wente a goode paas after hys oost, And smote hym soo grete a stroke wyth his swerde vppon his <sup>1</sup> hede, that he 24 clove hym vnto the teeth. And whan mawgys sawe this, he was right sory for it / and sayd to Reynawde / 'What have you doon / have you loste your wytte? <sup>2</sup> but yf god thynke vppon vs, <sup>2</sup> we ben loste and ashamed.' 28
'I can not doo therto,' sayd Reynawde / 'But how somever it gooth, he hath his rewarde.' And thenne mawgys cam forthwyth to the stable, and sadled Bayarde, And made Reynawde to mounte vpon hym / 32
And after hymselfe lighted vppon morell / and wente oute of the lodges. And whan the wyffe and the Reynawde in anger slays the

host,

and he and Mawgis mount
their horses,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L. iiii.

<sup>2</sup> si dieu ne pence de nous, F. orig. I. iv.

- chylde[n] of the ooste sawe thys that Reynawde hadde doon / they beganne to crye. But Reynawde and mawgys were soone oute of theyr waye, soo that none
- 4 wyste where that they were become / And wente and put theymsel[se] amonge the other in the preece / and they were never knowen. But bayarde wente haltynge / and wente to the gate of saynte Martyne / and
- 8 there they bode all the nyghte. And whan it was daye, they wente wyth the other to the chirche, where the kynge herde hys<sup>1</sup> masse. And whan the servyse was doon, the kynge came oute of the chirche / and
- 12 mounted vpon his horse / and all the other barons wyth hym, and came vpon the ryver of Sayne in to the medowe. And Reynawde & Mawgys wente wyth theym / but bayarde wente ryghte sore haltynge.
- 16 And whan the kynge was come there / he commaunded that his crowne sholde be sette atte the ende of the lystes, And the fyve hundred marke of sylver, And also the C clothes of sylke / And incontynente the duke
- 20 Naymes and Ogyer dyde as the kynge hadde commaunded. And whan all was appareylled / Thenne sholde ye have seen knyghtes lepe a horse backe, For every man trowed to have goten the pryce. And the
- 24 kynge commaunded to the duke Naymes and Oger, to Guydelon of <sup>2</sup>Bourgogne, and to Rycharde of Normandy, that they sholde take a hundred knyghtes well armed, and that they sholde kepe well the feest, that
- 28 noo noyse nor noo stryffe were there made / and that none sholde wronge thother / And they dyde his commaundemente. And thenne the knyghtes that sholde renne, beganne to beholde Reynawde, that was
- 32 mounted vpon haltynge Bayarde<sup>3</sup> / And soo they began to laugh and scorne wyth hym, And sayd <sup>1</sup>in Iape<sup>1</sup> the

and mix themselves hastily with the other riders.

Charlemagne with his barons go into the meadow, where Reynawde and Mawgis follow.

All the knights mount their horses.

The Emperor commands that no noise and strife shall take place among the knights.

<sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. v. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. L. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> qui clochoit si fort comme je vous ay compte, F. orig. I. v. back.

The knights ridcule Reynawde
because Bayard
goes so lame,

one to the other / 'this felawe shall wynne the pryce And the crowne of golde' / and sayd, 'beware that his fote smyte you not.' and the other sayd, 'he shall wynne the devylle' / And a nother knyghte sayd to 4 Reynawde / 'ye have well doon, swete knyghte, for to have broughte your<sup>1</sup> horse here / And yf god destyneth hym, he shall wynne the pryse this daye' / Reynawde vnderstode full well the grete wordes that men sayd to 8 him, wherof his herte swelled hyghe / that yf it had not be for doute to have loste the pryce / he wolde have begonne the stryffe. And therefore he held his peas / and made nother noyse nor worde agenste it<sup>2</sup> / 12 for which the Emperor is wrath,

and commaunds
that they cease
their laughter.

Thenne whan themperour vnderstode y<sup>e</sup> grete wordes that the knyghtes sayd to Reynawde / he was wroth for it, And he sayd soo hyghe that it was well herde of all, 'I commaunde you, vpon peyne of my 16 grace, that ye saye noo shame nor yll worde to noo maner of knyghte; For yf ye doo, ye shall angre me sore.' But Reynawde cared not moche of that it was sayd to hym / Whan the duke Naymes and ogier sawe 20 that it was tyme for to renne / they made to sowne the trompettes. Thenne every man putted hymselfe for to renne / And whan Mawgys sawe that every man razne, he lyghted on foote, and vnbounde the foote of 24 Bayarde. But or ever he was vnbounde / the other were well ferre; <sup>3</sup>and whan Reynawde sawe that it was tyme for to renne after thother, he spored his horse / and sayd, 'Bayarde / we ben ferre behynde, ye myghte 28 well abyde / For yf ye be not soone afore ye shall be blamed.' whan bayarde herde <sup>4</sup>his mayster<sup>4</sup> speke thus, he vnderstode hym as well as thoughe he had ben a man / Thenne he grylled his nostrelles, and bare his 32

The trumpets
sound,
and all the horses
set off.

Mawgis unbinds Bayard's foot,

<sup>1</sup> bon cheval, F. orig. I. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> Car il ne luy chaloit de tout ce que ilz luy disoient, F.
orig. I. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. L. iv.

<sup>4-4</sup> Reynault, F. orig. I. v.

hede vp, and made a longe necke / and toke his cours so faste that it semed the erthe sholde have sonken vnder hym / and wythin a whyle he was passed all the 4 other horses <sup>1</sup>a ferre way,<sup>1</sup> so that men coude not see hym for duste that he reysed. And whan they that toke hede to the courses, sawe Bayarde renne thus, they were gretly abasshed wyth all, and sayd the one to thother, 8 'beholde that whyte horse <sup>2</sup>renneth faste & lighte<sup>2</sup> / and but late he halted sore / he is the best of all thother that ben here' / and he surpasses

 all the other horses in speed.

12 And whan themperour sawe this / he called to hym Rycharde of Normandy / and sayd to hym, 'sawe ye ever so many good horses togyder as here ben now? but the whyte passeth theym all / god, how is he well lik bayarde, the horse of Reynawde / yf he had 16 the heres of bayarde / I sholde saye that it were he hymself, and he that sitteth vpon hym is also lighte & prue.'

20 I Thus wyte it, that Reynawde hath doo soo moche that bayarde hath overronne all thother horses.
 And whan he was at the ende of the listes / he toke the crowne & put it on his arme / and the silver & the clothe he lefte alone / for he dayned not to take theym.
 24 And whan he had taken y<sup>e</sup> crowne, he retorned agen to-warde the kyng Charlemagne <sup>3</sup>al fayra and softe paas<sup>3</sup> / whan the kyng sawe hym com towarde hym / he sayd to hym all laughyng, 'Frende, abyde a litil I praye 28 you / for yf ye wyll have my crowne, ye shall have it ; & I shall gyve you for your horse so gret havoyr that ye shall never be poure.' 'By god,' sayd Reynawde, 'thise wordes shall <sup>4</sup>nought avaylle you ; now have I 32 well begyled you / for I go doo marchandyse elles where, & I holde you for a chylde / I have soo often Bayard finishes

 the course,

and Reynawde
 takes the crown,

and returns to
 Charlemagne.

<sup>1-1</sup> si grandement, F. orig. I. v.

<sup>2-2</sup> Il va roidement, F. orig. I. v.

<sup>3-3</sup> tout le beau petit pas, F. orig. i. v.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. L. iv. back.

He discloses
himself,
and tells the Emperor he may look elsewhere
for a horse for Roland;
and with this
he departs on Bayard.

The Emperor
in great wrath,
commands his knights to follow
Reynawde.

Charlemagne and his knights arrive at the river Seine,
and see Reynawde
on the other side;
the King begs
for his crown.

angred you, & of your men I have so many slayn / I am Reynawd, that bereth awaye your crowne! seke elles where for a nother horse that ye shall gyve to Rowlande for to overcom bayarde / for ye shall not have bayarde 4 nor also your crowne' / And assone that he had sayd this / he spored bayarde wyth his spores, & went so fast away that it semed that the tempest had chassed hym / And whan y<sup>o</sup> kyng charlemayn vnderstode this that 8 reynawde had sayd to hym, he was wode angry for it, that he wyste not <sup>1</sup> what he sholde doo, so that he myght not of a grete while speke a worde<sup>1</sup> / And whan he had recovered his speche, he began to crye wyth a highe 12 voys / ' now after, lordes, after / for it is my enmye reynawde, the sone of aymon <sup>2</sup> / And whan the knyghtes herde thus cri the kyng charlemayn, they spored their horses wyth the spores, & wente after reynawde; but 16 theyr goynge avaylled theym noughte, For baiarde was ferre from theym wythin a while, soo that they wyste not where he was becom. and reynawde cam to sayn, & passed over it all atte his ease wyth swymmynge / for 20 bayarde was well wonte therto / and also he had passed it afore wyth more grete hast / & whan reynawd <sup>3</sup> was thus passed the ryver of sayne / he lighted from bayarde at the banke of hit.<sup>3</sup> This hangyng, <sup>4</sup> the kyng 24 Charlemagn & his knyghtes that folowed after hym came to the ryver side<sup>4</sup> / and began to calle Reynaude, & sayd to hym, <sup>5</sup> 'Ha, true manson,<sup>5</sup> yelde me my crowne agen, & I shall gyve the ten tymes as moche as 28 it is worthe / and I shall gyve the tryews two yeres / soo that thiself & thy brethern shall mow goo in arde / yn to se your moder / the whiche desireth sore to see

<sup>1-1</sup> quil devoit faire dung grant pisse, F. orig. I. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> ung fier et dur couraige, F. orig. I. vi. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> fut oultre, il ce descend a la rive, F. orig. I. vi. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> Charlemaigne arriva de lautre quartier qui luy courroit apres, F. orig. I. vi. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> a filz de proudomme, F. orig. I. vi. back.

you / and there is no knyghte in my londe<sup>1</sup> that shall saye contrary to <sup>2</sup>it.' 'by god,' said reynawde, 'as for thysse wordes avaylle you nothyng / for ye shall never 4 have agen your crowne. I shall selle it, & pay my knyghtes wyth all / and the charboncle that thus shineth shall be set hie vpon my pavyllion, to thende that they that shall go to saynt Iames in Galis maye see it the 8 better / and ye shall be blamed of your knyghtes that ye have loste your crowne bi the horse bayarde.' Whan charlemayn herde hym speke thus, he wyste not what he sholde saye for angre, and kept hymself styll like as 12 he had ben deed. and whan reinawd had sayd so, he mounted agen vpon bayarde, & put hym selfe to the waye, but not the right waye / but rode thurgh a lityll pathe whiche he had passed afore tyme / 16 Now shall I telle you of mawgys, how he dyde for to com out of Parys, that was mounted vpon his horse morell. Whan he wyst that reynawde was passed sayn / he yssued out of Parys, <sup>3</sup>& passed the 20 ryver over the brydge<sup>3</sup> as soone as he myght. and whan he was without / <sup>4</sup>he began to loke after reynawde; & as he rode, he loked a traverse, & sawe Reynawde / <sup>4</sup>so called he after hym as hie as he coude / 24 'cosin, thynke to ryde fast, for to tary here no good shall com to vs' / 'Cosyn,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye well, & we shall doo so' / And so they toke their waye towarde myllon / and whan alarde saw his broder com 28 & mawgis, he sayd to his folke, 'Lordes, we maye well com oute of our bushement / For I see com my brother Reynawde & Mawgys.' 'alas,' sayd Rycharde,
 'I see theym com wyth grete hast; I fere me moche 32 that men chace theym / now lighte we all on horsbacke,

Reynawde says he shall never give it up,

but shall put the carbuncle that is in it, over his pavilion.

He mounts Bayard again, and rides away.

Mawgis leaves Paris on his black horse, and finds Reynawde on the way.

They arrive at Melun,

<sup>1</sup> si hardi, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. v.

<sup>3-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> Il commença a crier. Et aussi comme il sen aloit, il regarda a travers et vit Reynault venir, F. orig. I. vi.

& yf they have mystre of vs, Lete vs goo helpe & socoure theym / And they answered all, 'we ben all redy' / and whan they came out of their <sup>1</sup>bushemente, there cam Reynawde and Mawgys, that sayd to theym / 4 <sup>2</sup>'lordes, thynke to make hast / For the longe taryeng myght doo to vs harme, by cause that I bryng wyth me the crowne <sup>3</sup>of Charlemagne, <sup>3</sup>the whiche bayarde hath made me wyzne by his prowes.' and whan alarde 8 vnderstode his brother speke thus, he was so gretly in ioye that he wyste not what he sholde say, but colled & kyssed his broder Reynawde wyth grete ioye. And thenne incontynente they put theymselfe to the waye / 12 & so long thei rode that they cam to orleauce, & passed the ryver of loyre wyth all diligence / and after they made so moche bi their iorneyes, that they cam to montalban <sup>3</sup>hole & glad, thanked be god<sup>3</sup> / 16
Thenne whan they were at Mountalban, the lady came theym agenste, & receyved them ryght gladly / and made theym ryght grete chere / and all the folke of the castell were right glad of the comynge of 20 Reynawde & of his bretherne / and asked hym how he had doon in his vyage.<sup>4</sup> 'Lordes,' sayd Reynawde, 'well, god gramercy, I was knowen of myn oost, the whiche wolde have betrayed & acused me, but I solde 24 it to hym full dere, for I cloof his hede to the teeth / & went oute of his hous by nyght, & put vs in the presse of thother; but ye wyst never folke so well scorned as we were / for y<sup>e</sup> folke of charlemagne 28 mocked me & bayarde, wherof y<sup>e</sup> kyng was angry / and thus they lefte me in peas. And whan <sup>5</sup>the trompettes<sup>5</sup> began to blowe for to begynne the cours / they that shold ronne, departed incontynent, and I bode behynde 32 well the shotte of a bowe. And I tell you well for where they meet

the other three
sons.

They all ride to Orleans,

and from thence
to Montalban.

All the folk of the castle are joyful at the coming of the Sons and Mawgis.

Reynawde relates to them all his adventures,

<sup>1</sup> kushemente in Caxton.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. L. v. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. vi.

<sup>4</sup> pour quoy il estoit ale a paris, F. orig. I. vii. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> la trompette, F. orig.

certeyn, there were well twenty thowsande horses.
 And whan I sawe me behynde / I sayd to Bayarde that it sholde be grete shame to hym yf he abode behynde.
 4 But, god gramercy, and bayarde, I over ranne them all,
 And bare awaye the pryce / <sup>1</sup>and of it I have broughte and how he won the crown of Charlemagne.
 wyth me the crowne of Charlemagne, wherof he ys full sori' / whan they of mountalban vnderstode thise 8 wordes, they were right glad / But here I leve to speke of reynawd & of his brethern, & retorne to speke of the kyng charlemagn, that was at parys, right sori for his crowne that he hadde loste.

CHAPTER VIII.

12 ¶ How the kyng Charlemagne went in to Gascoyn with<sup>2</sup> his oost / And how he beseged reynawde & his brethern wythin y<sup>o</sup> castle of Montalban. And how rey-16 nawde wan the fyrst batayll of the kyng, the whiche Rowlande conduytted, & Olyver
 & the bysshop Turpyn.<sup>3</sup>

¶ Capitulum viij.

20 In this party sheweth the history, that whan reynawde<sup>4</sup> had wonne the crowne of kyng charlemagne, the kyng abode all wrothe & sore an angred / and he called all his barons, & sayd to theym / 'Lordes, I 24 praye you that ye counseille me how I shall<sup>5</sup> maye avenge me of reynawde the sone of Aymon / For ye knowe how he hath angred me / I promyse you, but that I maye have my crowne agen, I shall wexe maddo 28 all quycke; for my corage telleth me that he shall do breke it, & he shall put the carboncle that is theron

Charlemagne
 demands of his barons how he may regain his crown from
 Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L. vi.      <sup>2</sup> tout son ost, F. orig. I. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> dont le roy Charlemaigne cuida enraiger tout vif de honte qu'il en eust, F. orig. I. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> le filz aymon, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> be able.

vpon his pavyllion / by cause the folke that goo to saynt Iames shall see it, <sup>1</sup>to my grete vitupere & shame.<sup>1</sup> 'Syr,' sayd rowlande, 'if ye wyll avenge you well of reynawd / goo we vpon hym and we shall exyle & <sup>4</sup> distroye hym & his londe, and if the kyng Yon of Gascoyn maye be taken soo make iustyce of hym in suche wyse that it maye be remembred perpetuelly' / 'Nevew,' sayd the kyng, 'ye saye well and wysely, & it shall be <sup>8</sup> doon as ye have advysed me / & I promyse you that I shall never have ioye tyl that I be avenged at my wyll.'
 'Sir,' sayd y<sup>e</sup> duke naymes, 'leve this angre in peas / ye know how reynawd is your enmye, & prayseth you <sup>12</sup> no thing / but & ye wyll, I shall gyve <sup>2</sup>you suche counseill that reynawde shall be brought to dystruccion, & his brethern & mawgys also / syr, doo that your barons be redy atte candelmas nexte comynge / and <sup>16</sup> that every one of theym make good provysion of vitaylle for vij yere / and thenne abyde so longe afore Montalban tyll that ye take them / and after, ye shall avenge your selfe at your wyll vpon theym' / 20

Naymes counsels
 him to wait until next Candelmas,

and then besiege
 Montalban,
 and avenge himself on the Sons.

Thenne whan the kyng Charlemagn vnderstode the good counseyll that the duke Naymes had gyven vnto hym / he lifte vp his hede & sayd, 'Naymes, it is not the fyrste good counseyll that ye have gyven to <sup>24</sup> me / and I wyll that it be doon as ye saye.' And thenne the kyng Charlemagne dyd doo make his lettres, and sent theym thrughe all his empyre. In the whiche lettres was conteyned, that every man that was <sup>28</sup> acustomed to bere armes <sup>3</sup>and to goo to the werre,<sup>3</sup> sholde come to hym at the feest of candelmas nexte folowyng, well garnysshed of vytaylle for the space of VII yeres, for to abyde att sege afore Montalban / <sup>32</sup> whan the barons knewe the kynges wyll / every man

Charlemagne accepts the counsel
 of Naymes,

and sends letters
 through all his land summoning
 men for war.

<sup>1-1</sup> et quil me soit reproche de tous ceulx qui la verront, F. orig. I. vii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. vi. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. vii.

made hymself redy as well as he cowde, & cam to Parys, and presented them to kyng Charlemagne & to his nevewe Rowlande. and bycause of the grete 4 nombre of folke that were come there / they myght not lodge alle wythin Parys / but they lodged wythoute the townne, vpon the ryver of Sayne / Whan the kyng sawe that all his barons were com / he made theym all to 8 com byfore hym, & sayd to theym / ' Lordes, ye all know right wel, at the leste the most party of you / how I have overcom & subdued xl kynges <sup>1</sup>in my dayes<sup>1</sup> / the whiche are all to me obeyssaunt / except the kyng
 12 Yon of gascoyn, that hath wythdrawe in his londe my enmyes mortall, that ben the foure sones of aymon. ye knowe wel y<sup>e</sup> grete dishonour<sup>2</sup> thei have doon to me / <sup>3</sup>wherof I me complayne vnto you, & praye you &
 16 commaunde you, that ye come wyth me in to <sup>4</sup>gascoyn, for to helpe me that I be avenged of the grete harme & shame <sup>5</sup>that thyse foure sones of Aymon doo to me <sup>15</sup> For by your ooth / ye ben all beholden therunto.'

So many folk arrive at Paris that they have to lodge outside the town on the river Seine.

20 Thenne sayd the erle of Nantuell / ' Syre, we shall not goo there at this tyme.<sup>6</sup> Ye knowe well that we ben come oute of Spayne but late / wherof we ben yet all wery. And also in this felawship ben many 24 prynces and barons that have not ben yet in their cuntry, nor seen theyr wyves and chyl dren, and ye wyll that we goo in to Gascoyne vpon the kyng Yon / and vpon the foure sones of Aymon. And I telle you, 28 that the two woundes that I receyved in Spayne ben not yet hoole / and therefore we maye not goo <sup>7</sup>in to Gascoyne at thys tyme<sup>7</sup> / But <sup>7</sup>yf it playse you,<sup>7</sup> ye shall doo as a good kynge and a sage / and shall shewe that

The Earl of Nantuell begs Charlemagne to grant his soldiers rest, as they are all weary, and to let the barons go into the country to see their wives and children, <sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. L. vii.      <sup>2</sup> et dommaige, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> tous les jours dont a vous me complains, F. orig. L. viii. back.
<sup>4</sup> Fol. L. vii.
<sup>5-5</sup> le quel est moult grant, F. orig. I. viii. back.
<sup>6</sup> car nous ne pouvons, F. orig. I. viii. back.
<sup>7-7</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. viii. back.

until next Whitsuntide.

ye love your folke / For ye oughte to kepe theym as your selfe / Wythdrawe your ooste vnto whytsontyde nexte comyng / & gyve leve to alle your barons to goo to theyr places for to rest theym a while. And whan 4 the tyme shall be come, <sup>1</sup>and that your playsure is to calle theym / They shall be all freshe and redy to fulfyll your commaundement wyth all dilygence.<sup>1</sup>

The King in great anger, says
he will only take
the young men
with him,
and leave behind
those who are faint-hearted;

Whan the kyng vnderstode thyse wordes he was wroth, 8 and sware by saynte Denys of Fraunce / saynge in this maner: ' Yf I sholde be dysherytred, I sholde goo now in to Gascoyne / and I shall take wyth me alle the yonge folke of my ooste, the whyche I shall putte in 12 good arraye honestly / and I shall gyve theym all that they shall nede / thoughe ye shold abyde behynde, as weke men and feynte.' ' Syre,' sayd the duke and the land of Gasconne shall be divided amongst

them.

Naymes, ' ye saye well; For this yonge men shall be 16
ryghte glad for to assaye themselves.' ' Therefore wyll
I do it,' sayd kyng charlemagn, ' & so shall y<sup>e</sup> kyng Yon be distroyed; & whan I shall have reynawde & his bretherne / and Mawgys the <sup>2</sup>theff taken, I shall 20 departe the londe of gascoyn to this yonge knyghtes for theyr herytage.' This hangyng, that the kyng Charlemagne sayd thyse wordes / a spye that longed to

A spye of Rey-nawde's overhears
the King,
and departs for Montalban to tell his tidings.

Reynawde was in this companye, that vnderstode alle 24 that sayd ys / And whan the spye hadde herde all togyder well, he put hym selfe to the waye, And dyde soo moche by his Iourneys, that he came to Mountalban, where he founde Reynaude, his bretherne, and 28 Mawgys / And Incontynente that Reynawde sawe hym / he demaunded of hym, ' what tydynges bryng you from Parys and from the courte of kyng Charlemagne' / ' My lorde,' sayd the spye / ' Wyte it 32 that kyng Charlemagne is gretely wrothe wyth kyng

<sup>1-1</sup> Ilz vendront de bon gre et de bon vouloir pour aler en Gasconne avecques vous ou la ou vous les voulores mener, F. orig. I. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L. vii. back.

- Yon, and agenste you / & agenst your bretherne / and agenst mawgys / He hath sent for all his subjectes in his empyre / but none wolde have comen wyth hym 4 <sup>1</sup>in to Gascoyn<sup>1</sup> / And thenne he sware <sup>1</sup>seynte Denys that he sholde come in to thyse partyes<sup>1</sup> / and sholde brynge wyth hym none other but all yonge knyghtes /
 To the whyche he shall gyve all Gascoyn / And sayth 8 that he shall besege Mountalban / and shalle doo to be caste down the grete towre / and shall sette all Gascoyn in a fyre and flamme.' Thenne<sup>2</sup> sayd Reynawde to his folke / 'be not discouraged of no thyng, For I shall see 12 how Rowlande and Olyvere shall bere theym selfe agenste me and my bretherne.' And thenne wente Reynawde in to the halle / And founde his bretherne and Mawgys wyth hys knyghtes, and sayd to theym / 16 'Lordes, I brynge you tydynges / Now wyte that the kyng Charlemagn cometh to besege vs / and bryngeth wyth hym all the puyssaunce of fraunce / Now lete vs thynke to receyve hym well / for he shall have more to 20 do than he weneth' / 'broder,' sayd alarde, 'have no doubte / for they shall be well receyved / for as long that we shall <sup>3</sup>lyve, and shall see you ryde vpon Bayarde, we shall not faylle you / nor we shall not be a ferde to be 24 take / nor ylle handled ; For no man a lyve is worthe you / nother of goodnes nor of prowes' /

- This hangyng, Charlemagne was advysed and thoughte vpon the counseyll that the duke of 28 Nantuell hadde gyven to hym / And after, he called hys folke, & sayd to theym, 'Lordes, I gyve you leve, and lete you wyte that atte Ester I shall holde my counseyll generall / <sup>1</sup>and it playse god<sup>1</sup> / Now kepe 32 that ye faylle not to come thenne, well appareylled and redy. For I wolde not leve for noo thyng / but that I sholde goo see the kyng Yon. And yf he yelde me

The spy tells Reynawde how
 the Emperour is coming to besiege
 his castle,

and how he will give all Gascoyne
 to his young
 knyghtes,

Reynawde relates to his brethren
 and Mawgys how Charlemagne
 would besiege
 them.

Charlemagne
 gives leave to his folk to rest until Easter,

when he bids
 them come appar-
 relled for war.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. viii.    <sup>2</sup> He Dieu, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. L. viii.

not the foure sones of Aymon / I shall doo to hym wythoute doubte soo moche shame, that I shall make his berde to be cutte harde by the chynne. And also I shall take the crowne <sup>1</sup>of Gascoyn<sup>1</sup> from hys hede / 4 and I shall make hym come a foote after me, beggyng his brede.' And whan he had sayd thysse wordes / The barons toke leve of Charlemagne / and wente in to theyr countreys / But atte theyr departyng / Charle- 8 magne sayd to theym / 'Lordes, remembre well your selfe, that ye come atte the terme that I have sette / For I swere vnto you, that thooos that shall not come / yf I ever come agen from Gascoyn, <sup>2</sup>they shall repente 12 full sore.'<sup>2</sup> Shortly to speke, Rycharde wente in to hys duchye of normandy, Salamon in to bretayn / Godfroy in to aunyon, Hughe the olde & Dyssers in to spayne, and Bertons in to almayn / And all the other, everyche 16 in to hys owne countrey /

The barons depart
 for their homes,

Whan it was tyme for to come agen to the courte at y<sup>e</sup> terme that charlemagne had set / every man made hymself redy as well as he coude / for to 20 com to y<sup>e</sup> court, as thei were expressly charged they sholde doo / First came there Ry<sup>3</sup>[charde of Normandy, and brought wyth hym manye a noble knyght, and presented hym selfe to fore the kyng Charlemagne, 24 evyn at saynt Denys. After, came Salamon of Bretayne, and brought with him of hys barons a fayre companye, and presented hymselfe to the kyng at saynt Denys.
 After, came Dyssyers of Spayne, which brought with 28 him well X thousand knightes wel armed and well garnysshed of vytayles, For in all the hoste <sup>4</sup>of Charlemagne<sup>4</sup> was none so well arayed as they were of all and return again

 to the court at the appointed time,

<sup>1-1</sup> de son chief, F. orig. K. i. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> Il ne sera jamais jour quilz ne se plaignent de ma venue, F. orig. K. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> Two pages lost from Caxton. The following part is taken from the 1554 edition of The Foure Sonnes of Aymon.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. i. back.

[thynges, And presented him self in this maner at saynt Denys vnto the kyng Charlemagne. Than came Godfray the erle of Avynyon, and brought with him 4 all his power, and a fayre company, and foyson of vytayle, And presented hym and hys folke to the king Charlemagne. And after, came Ponthus out of Almayne, & brought wyth hym a fayre companye <sup>1</sup>of men of 8 armes.<sup>1</sup> For he had wyth him them of Illande and of Armony, <sup>2</sup>and wel three thousand archers,<sup>2</sup> the whych for no doubt of death wolde never flee from bataylle, And presented hym selfe and hys felawshyp to the 12 kyng charlemagne, the whyche he receyved ryght honourably. Than after came the good bisshop Turpin, and broughte wyth hym a fayre company, and well enewred to the warre, and presented himself to the 16 kyng Charlemagne, that was ryght glad of hys comyng, for the bysshop was a good true man. And y<sup>e</sup> king Charlemagne trusted mucche to hym for his great fydelitie, and also for the great prowes that was in 20 hym.

Bisshop Turpin,
 with a good company, presents
 himself to the
 Emperor.

Al the great Lordes that helde theyr landes of the kyng Charlemagne, came to Parys, & presented theymselfe and theyr men to y<sup>e</sup> kyng Charlemagne, 24 that receyved theym with great Ioye, and was glad to see aboute hym so fayre a companye <sup>3</sup>of good men of warre;<sup>3</sup> but I tel you, that whan the hoste was assembled at Parys, there was so great a derth that it was 28 great pitie, for the rasour of whete was solde for fourty shelynges and twenty pence; and yf the kyng had taried there any lenger, there should have ben so greate a derth that all the small people had ben all dead for 32 hungre. But the kyng Charlemagne began for to make hys mustres, for to know how much people that he

The host, when assembled at Paris, is so great that there is a sore dearth
 of provisions.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. i. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> et bien milles bon archiers, F. orig. K. i. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> que chescun avoit amenee, F. orig. K. i.

Charlemagne
numbers his troops,

[had. And whan the mustres were made, they found that they were well .XXX. thousande knyghtes that had theyr fyrst berdes, besyde the olde knyghtes that were well an hundred thousand. And whan that this 4 was doone, the Emperour Charlemayne called Rowland, <sup>1</sup>his newew,<sup>1</sup> afore him, and sayde to him, 'Fayre newew. I recomende to you myne hoste, and I praye you that ye wyll conduyte it by good maner.' 'Syr,' said 8 Rouland, 'I shal doo therin my devoyre after my power.' Than made to be take to hym the oryflambe, and departed out of Parys; and they dyd so muche by smal journeis, that they came to Bloye; and than 12 Charlemagne made to be cryed, that all the vytaylers of the land should goe wyth vitayle after the hoste. And yf that they brought that were worth a peny, they should have two for it. 16 and gives the command of them to Rowland.

The great army
reach Montalban.

<sup>2</sup> And whan that thys greate armye was come to Bloy, they passed over Gyronde, and wente afore the great castell of Mountawban.<sup>2</sup> And they lodged themselves there rounde about the place. And then the 20 Frenche men began to say the one to the other, 'by myne othe, there is a fayre castel and a stronge, and but yf wee get some other parte, heere shall we wynne but a lytle.' 24

And whan the batayles were ordeyned rounde aboute mountawban, Rowlande began for to say to the kynge Charlemagne, 'Syr, me semeth that wee should nowe gyve a sawte to Mountawban.' And the kynge 28 answered, 'I wyll] <sup>3</sup>not that my folke have ony dommage; but firste I wyll knowe yf the castell wyll holde or yelde vp / For yf he wyll be given vp / I <sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. i.

<sup>2-2</sup> Et dependant les nefz passerent aultre gironde qui passerent larmee. Et quant ilz furent oultre, ilz mirent les batailles en ordonnance, et puis sen vont a montawban, F. orig. K. i.

<sup>3</sup> Continuation from Caxton, Fol. M. i. back.

wolde not that ony bataylle shold be doon to it / And thenne incontynent he sente a knyghte mounted vpon a mewle all vnarmed / the whiche came to the gate of 4 the castell / and whan they that kept the gate sawe that it was a messenger, they open to hym the gate, and the knyghte entered in / And as he was come in / he fonde the stywarde with a hundred men, that wente aboute 8 vysitynge the watches & the wardes. Incontynente the knyghte salued hym, and the stywarde rendred hym agen his salute, & sayd to hym, 'What be ye, gentylman / and what seke you here wythin? I praye you 12 telle me what folke are yonder wythoute, soo fayr a company' / 'Sire,' sayd the knyghte, 'they ben the folke of the emperour Charlemagne, that is come for to besege the castell of Montalban / And I am one of 16 his knyghtes, that am com here for to speke wyth Reynawde from the kyng Charlemagne.' Thenne the styward toke the knyght by the hande, and ledde hym byfore Reynawde the sone of aymon / And whan the 20 knyghte sawe Reynawde, he made reverence to hym / and after sayd to hym, 'Reynawde, the emperour Charlemagne sendeth to you worde by me, that yf you wyl yelde your selfe to his merci / and gyve to hym 24 your brother Richarde, to doo his wylle of hym / he shall have merci of you / And yf ye wyll not doo soo / he shall doo sawte your castell / And yf he maye take you by force, he shall make you to be hanged / or deie 28 a cruel dethe' /

The Emperour
 sends a messenger
 to the castle to ask if the Sons will yield without a battie.

The messenger
 tells Reynawde
 how the Emperour
 wills that they should yield
 themselves to his mercy,
 and deliver to him
 Richard.

Thenne whan Reynawde vnderstode these tidynges that Charlemagne sente to hym, he beganne to smyle, and sayd, 'Frende, goo telle the kyng that I 32 am not the man that shall doo ony trayson / For if I sholde doo it / he hym self sholde <sup>1</sup>blame me for it.
 But and yf it playse hym, my brethern, mawgis / and my selfe, ben at his commaundement / and we shal gyve

Reynawde says
 he will not commit treason,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M. ii.

but will yield to the King if he will grant them truce.

Charlemagne determines to besiege the castle.

Duke Naymes counsels him to accord with the Sons;

our selfe to hym as to our soverayne lord / our lyves sauffe, and our membres / and we shall yelde to hym the castel all atte his wyll / And telle the kyng that he shall doo well & wysely to take suche fyve knyghtes 4 as we ben. And yf Charlemagne refuseth this / I have myn hope soo faste to our lorde god, that we shall not set moche by the kyng / nor of his grete ooste.' The messenger vnderstode well the answers that Reynawde 8 had doon to hym, and incontynente he retourned to Charlemagn / and shewed vnto hym all that Reinawd had sayd, worde bi worde<sup>1</sup> / whan the emperour vnderstode the wordes <sup>2</sup>of Reynawde<sup>2</sup> / he beganne to thynke 12 a goode while / for he knewe that Reynawde sayd but well. And thenne he sente for the duke Naymes and Ogier the dane, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, Reynawde sendeth me worde that he shall doo no thyng after 16 my wyll. And for this cause I wyll that y<sup>e</sup> castell be assaylled forthwyth' / 'Sire,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'me semeth, as I have vnderstonde, that Reynawde offreth to you fair / and yf ye wyll beleve me, ye shall 20 take hym to merci <sup>3</sup>wyth his brethern.<sup>3</sup> For ye knowe well that they ben folke that maye doo to you good servyse. And yf Reynawde be ones in peas wyth you, ye shall be the better beloved, and more dred therefore. 24 But sith that your wyll can not accorde to the same we maye not doo thereto / To assaylle the castell I counseylle it not; For ye see that the castell is fair and right stronge / And Reynawde hath wyth hym a good 28 company of good men / and he / & his brethern, and mawgis, ben suche knyghtes as ye knowe. yf ye doo assaille the castell, they shall yssue oute at the fauce posternes / and shal doo to you soo grete a dommage of 32 your folke, that ye shall be <sup>4</sup>wrothe<sup>5</sup> for it / but and yf

<sup>1</sup> Sans riens faillir, orig. K. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> que Reynault luy mandoit, F. orig. K. ii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. ii. <sup>4</sup> Fol. M. ii. back.

<sup>5</sup> et dolant F. orig. K. ii.

ye wyll beleve my counseyll, ye shall besege the castell nyghe that no man shall maye com out nor entre in but he shall be take, and thus ye shall mow have the castell 4 by famysshing / For by no sawte ye shall not have it.'

but, if he will not do so, he must take the castle by famyshing.

Charlemagne vnderstode well these wordes, and knew well that the duke Naymes spake well & wysely, & sayd to hym / 'I wyll that it be doon thus as ye 8 have devysed it.' And thenne he made crie thrughe all his oost, that every man sholde lodge hym selfe evyn nyghe by the castell ;<sup>1</sup> and he hymself comaunded that his pavyllion sholde be pighte as nyghe the gate 12 as cowde be doon / After this was cryed, ye sholde have seen wythin a lityll while moo than X thousande pavyllions round aboute <sup>2</sup>the castell<sup>2</sup> of Mountalban.
whan thooste was all lodged, Rowlande departed oute

The King agrees
to this,

16 of the oost well wyth two thousand knyghtes well armed & well horsed, & all yonge men of pryme berde / <sup>3</sup>whiche were very frenshe, borne of the douce fraunce /<sup>3</sup>

and more than X thousand pavillions are set round the castie.

and went atte the other syde of Montalban in a place 20 whiche is called Balencon, Where was a ryver grete and depe / in the whiche was fishe ynoughe<sup>4</sup> / and there he dyd pytche his pavylyon. And soo full he was of grete pride / that he had sette the dragon above vpon his 24 pavyllion, and dyd doo make the lodgys of his felawes rounde aboute hym / And they were in suche a grounde where as they myghte see from thens the wodes and the ryvers and all the contrey, and Mountalban that 28 was vpon the grete roche wel closed / and behelde the two grete<sup>5</sup> rivers, that is to wyte, Gyronde and Dor-donne / that envyrnned Mountalban.

Roland, with two thousand
knyghts, pitches
his tent at Balencon.

<sup>6</sup>Rowlande sawe the place soo stronge, that he mer-
32 veylled gretely, and sayd to his folke, 'Lordes,

<sup>1</sup> le plus que lon pourra, F. orig. K. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. ii.

<sup>3-5</sup> de la droicte france, F. orig. K. iii. back.

<sup>4</sup> a grant foison, F. orig. K. iii. back. <sup>5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. M. iii.

I merveylle me sore of this castell / And I merveylle not yf the foure sones of Aymon make werre agent myn vnclé Charlemagne, <sup>1</sup>syth that they have soo goode & soo stronge a place for to wythdrawe theymselfe; <sup>1</sup> 4 For I promyse you that Mountalban shall never be taken of vs' / 'Ye saye not well,' sayd Olyver / 'For we toke well by force Lezonne / <sup>2</sup>and also we overthrewe doun the grete towre and the dongeon of Sernoble<sup>2</sup> / 8 wherof I saye that we shall well have Mountalban. And yf Reynawde and his brethern come not and yelde theym selfe, they shall be in daunger of deth' / 'I promyse you,' sayd Rowlande, 'that they shall doo noo <sup>12</sup> thynge of that ye saye. For I promyse you that the gentyll Reynawde shall make vs soo sore a ferde, that the moste hardy wolde be atte Parys. Reynawde is prue and corageus / and his brethern in lyke wyse. 16
 And also they have wythin the castell many noble and worthy knyghtes / wherfore I saye, and I am of oppynyon / that as longe as they have vytaylle, they shall never be taken.' Whan the pavyllion of Rowlande <sup>20</sup> was dressed and pyghte vp / Rowlande behelde the ryver, and sawe that it was full of birdes. thenne he sayd to the bysshop Turpyn and to the other barons /
 'See how we are lodged in a goode place. Late vs goo <sup>24</sup> in these ryvers to lete flee our fawcones.' 'Sire,' sayd <sup>3</sup>the bysshop<sup>3</sup> Turpyn, 'goo in the name of god' / Thenne lighted Rowlande on horse backe, & toke wyth hym well xxx. knyghtes / and noo moo / And they toke <sup>28</sup> their hawkes, and rode the moost parte of theym vpon mewles, all vnarmed sauff their swerdes / and came and sported theym alonge the river side, and toke many birdes vpon the water / In soo grete quantyte that they <sup>32</sup> laded a horse wythall. <sup>4</sup>the bisshop turpyn and ogyer

Roland tells Oliver that he does not believe the castle will be taken.

Roland beholds
 the river,
 which is full of birds;

and sets forth
 with XXX<sup>thou-</sup> sand knyghts to hawk thereon.

<sup>1-1</sup> puis quilz ont si bon retraict, F. orig. K. iii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> et si abactismes de noble la grant tour et le donion, F. orig. K. iii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. iii. back.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. M. iii. back.

went not there, but abode behinde for to kepe the oost / and they were before the tentes, wher they made two auneynt knyghtes to recounte & telle how the 4 grete Troy was taken and dystroyed / this hangyng, was a spye in the ooste of kyng charlemagne that longed vnto Reynawde, the whiche he had sent there for to knowe what they wrought / and how they dyd, & all 8 the faytte of Rowlande. And incontynente the spye departed out of the ooste and wente to Reynawde / and shewed to hym how Olyver & Rowlande were goon to sportynge <sup>1</sup>wyth their hawkes vpon the ryver<sup>1</sup> / and 12 with them thyrty of the beste of the oost /

A spye informs Reynawde how Roland and Oliver have gone
 vpon the river.

Whan the spye had recounted these tydynges to reynawd / he was of it right glad / Thenne he called his brethern & Mawgys his cosin / and tolde 16 them how Rowlande and Olyver and XXX. of the beste barons of Charlemagne were goon to hawkyng vpon the ryvers in the plane of Balancon / 'What oughte we to doo?' sayd Reynawde. 'Cosin,' sayd 20 Mawgys, 'we may well kyl them yf we wyl, For they ben well proude and folyshe / Remembre ye not wele that a messenger told you a moneth agoo that Charlemyne had lefte all olde knyghtes of his royaume / 24 and had taken of the yonge / And that he had departed al Gascoyne to the yonge bachelers of Fraunce / And by this boban, Roulande and Olyver ben mounted in to so grete pride / that they trowe in all the worlde is 28 noo man <sup>1</sup>that dare assaylle them nor<sup>1</sup>loke vpon them angrely / But and yf ye wyll beleve me, I shall well tell you suche a thyng that shall make them wrothe and sory.' And thenne Reynawde made sowne his horne, 32 the whiche men never herde sowned But that it was nede / For whan men herde it / every man ranne to his armes for to arme hym. And incontynente, Rey<sup>2</sup>nawde and his bretherne and Mawgys made them selfe to Mawgis advises

 Reynawde to attack the host of Charlemagne.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. M. iv.

be armed. And whan they were all armed and well appareylled, Reynawde lighted vpon Bayarde, his good hors, and spored hym wyth his spores, soo that he made hym to lepe well thyrty foote of length / 'Ha, 4 goode horse,' sayd Reynawde / 'how ye make your selfe to be beloued / And how well I mystre you this daye / Lete vs goo assaylle these vnhappy folke of the kynge Charlemagne of Fraunce / And make we by 8 suche a manere that we nede not to retourne twyse / And therof I praye you all' /

They issue forth with IV thousand men, and arrive at Balencon. Bishop Turpin, who is left with the King's host,

And whan Reynawde sawe that his folke was well appareylled / he wente oute wyth his men atte a 12 fawce posterne / that they of the ooste coude not see theym / And they were well in his companye a boutte forester conduyted theym thorough the thickest of 16 the forest / And reynawde sayd to the foster, 'brynge me thou in to the ooste of Rowlande wythoute faylle' / the foster answerde to hym that he wolde do it gladly / Thenne broughte he theym streyghte to Balencon. 20 And whan Reynawde sawe the pavyllions, he shewed theym to his folke / to whom he sayd / 'Lordes, beholde what fayr gayne we have fonde here, yf we dare sette vpon theym' / 'Syr,' sayd his men / 'lete vs 24 goo to it hardly / For we durste well assaylle the devylle / whan ye be wyth vs' / ¶ Now shall I telle you of the bysshop Turpyn, that was abyden to kepe the ooste / wherof he had grete fere, be cause he wyste 28 well againste whom he had a doo / And had a grete suspectyon, And heved vppe his hede / and sawe thre ravens and the dawes flee aboute vpon the fortresse. And from thens they toke their flighte<sup>1</sup> over Rowlandes 32 pavylyon,<sup>1</sup> And made grete noyse; And soo was he a ferde. For he wende that it hadde<sup>2</sup> ben some evyll

<sup>1-1</sup> pardessus la fortresse, F. orig. k. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. M. iv. back.

- token / and he behelde towarde the woodes, that were grete / and sawe anone his enemyes / wherof he was perceives his enemyes approach;
 sore frayed, that almoste he was beside hym selfe / 4 Thenne he called Ogyer the dane, and sayd to hym, he calls Ogyer the Dane,
 'Free knyghte, for godys love goo arme yourself / and lete our folke be armed / for here comyn our enemyes.
 Now ben well Rowlande & Olyver goon for noughte, 8 that are goon to the chasse, and have lefte theyr ooste thus in grete daunger. I beleve that they shall not faylle / but they shall repente of it' / Whan Ogyer herde Turpyn speke in thys maner, he was wrothe; 12 soo went he in to his pavyllion, and made hym to be armed incontynente for to moeve the ooste / And whan and commands
 the Frenchmen
 to arm themselves.
 the frenshe men herde the trompettes blowe, they put theym selfe in ordenaunce nobly. This hangynge, 16 Ogyer was armed, and mounted vpon his horse brayforde, & fonde that a grete parte of them was armed and all redy / Thenne Oger sayd to theym / 'Lords, thynke to defende you well / for we ben assaylled.' 20 Reynawd was abashed when he sawe the oste that moved soo / and sayd to his folke / 'Lords, we ben dyscovered / nevertheles, lete vs goo to it and assaylle theym.' thei answered that they were all redy 24 to doo so. And whan Reynawde vnderstode thyse wordes, he sayd to Mawgys / 'Fayr cosin, take a thousande knyghtes, And abyde here wythin this Reynawde tells Mawgis to abide
 in the wood
 with his men,
 until the Sons
 want succour;
 wood / And yf ye see that we nede of helpe / come 28 thenne and socoure vs.' 'Gladly,' sayd mawgis, 'your commaundemente shall be doon' / And whan reynawde had sayd soo, he spored bayarde wyth his spores, and he sets spurs to Bayard,
 wente in to the ooste, and passed the playne of 32 Balancon; and the firste that he recounted, it was and recounts Earl Emery, whom he
 slays.
 Emery the erle of Nycoll / and smote hym soo that he shoved his spere thourghe the body of hym, and felle deed to therth / Thenne sayd reynawde,<sup>1</sup> 'ye shall abide <sup>1</sup> par saint Nycholas, F. orig. k. i.

the bargayn, <sup>1</sup>false gloton / Ye dyde a grete folye Whan ye came ever in to Gascoyne' / And whan he had sayd thus, he sette his hande to his swerde, And beganne to make soo grete occysion of knyghtes that noone canne 4 telle it / And whan Reynawde sawe his enmyes soo strongely abasshed, he beganne to saye, 'Where is Rowlande and Olyvere, that soo sore hath thretened me and my folke, And sayen that we ben traytours / But 8 and they sayen soo afore me / I sholde shewe to theym that they sayen not well nor trouthe' / whan the bysshop Turpyn vnderstode this that Reynawde sayd / He sayd to Reynawde / 'Ye nother saye well nor 12 trouthe.' And thenne he spored his horse wyth the spores / and wente agenste Reynawde / an gaaff eche other soo grete strokes thorughe theyr sheeldes that they brake bothe theyr speres all in peces / But nother 16 of theym felle down / And whan Reynawde hadde broken his sperre / he sette the hande to his swerde, and gaaffe soo <sup>2</sup>grete a stroke wyth it to the bysshope Turpyn vpon his helme, that he made bothe the man 20 and the horse to rele sore / And whan Reynawde sawe the bysshop in that plyghte / he sayd to hym / 'Fader, be ye the same Turpyn that prayseth your selfe soo sore? By my fayth, me semeth it were better for you 24 to be in some churche to synge some masse, than for to be here, wenyng to greve me.'

Thenne whan the bysshop Turpyn vnderstode the reproche that Reynaude made to hym / he 28 trowed wel to have goon oute of his mynde for it, And sette hande to his swerde / and wente vpon Reynawde. And thenne was the ooste moeved of one partye and of the <sup>3</sup>other. Shortely to speke, there were 32 soo many speres broken, soo many a knyghte overthrowen / and soo many horses deed, that it was grete pyte for to see. There was Ogyer the Dane, that

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M. v.    <sup>2</sup> sooo, orig.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. M. v. back.

Bishop Turpin
rides against
Reynawde;

they fight
furiously.

hadde his shelde afore his breste, And his swerde in his hande, & sat vpon Brayforde; the whiche smote Rycharde, the brother of Reynawde, soo grete a stroke 4 that his horse felle down to the erthe<sup>1</sup> / Whan Rycharde saw hym selfe a grounde / he rose vppe agayne quyckely / as a knyghte pru and valyant / And toke his swerde in hys hande. And Ogyer passed beyonde 8 for to folow his course, And beganne to crye the baner 'saynte Denys.' Whan Reynawde sawe his brother Rycharde cast on grounde / he was wrothe for it / Soo spored he his horse Bayarde, and wente 12 agenste Ogyer the dane / and Ogyer agenste hym / and gaaff eche other grete strokes vpon theyr sheldes / Reynawde smote Ogyer by soo grete force that the horses gyrthe nor the poytrell myghte not helpe, But 16 that Ogyer muste falle down, <sup>2</sup>sadell and all,<sup>2</sup> to the grounde /

Ogier, on his horse Brayford, overthrowes Richard.

Reynawde sees his brother on the ground, and goes after Ogyer, whom he throws off his horse;

Whan Reynawde sawe Ogyer atte the erthe, he toke Brayforde by the brydell / and sayd to 20 Ogyer / 'Ye have doon evyll for to have cast down my brother afore me / Ye knowe that ye be of my lynage / and my cosin nyghe; ye sholde helpe and deffende vs agenste all men / And ye doo worse than the other / 24 Wherof I saye it is no dede of a cosin, but of an enmye. Neverthelesse, take your horse agayne, vpon suche condycyon that ye shall doo to me a playsure at a nother tyme if I have nede / the whiche thyng god 28 forbede.' 'cosin,' sayd oger, 'ye speke as a good man; and I promyse you that if I faylle of this that ye saye, god punyssh me for it' / Rey<sup>3</sup>nawd yelded hym agayn his horse / & helde the styrop to Ogyer, 'whan he 32 lyghted agayne vppon his horse Brayforde.<sup>4</sup> And wyte it that Ogyer syth dyde moche for Reynawde, and he complains of Ogyer's infidelity to him as a kinsman, but gives him his horse again,

and helps him to remount.

<sup>1</sup> si que la coyffe de son heaulme tomba en la fablonniere, F. orig. k. v. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. v. back. <sup>3</sup> Fol. M. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> pour monter dessus, F. orig. k. v. back.

yelded hym agen his rewarde at the roche Mountbron, wherof he was rebuked of Charlemagne shamfully / Whan Ogyer was set on his horse agen / he set hande to his swerde, and entred amonge the thyckeste of the 4 gascoynes / and began to hew them so sore that he made them all to flee afore hym / Whan maugys sawe that all the bataylles were thus medled togyder / he cam<sup>1</sup> out of the wood,<sup>1</sup> and cam to balancon, and put 8 hym selfe and his folke amonge the gretest prees, and fights so valiantly that<sup>2</sup> & began to cleve and hewe so harde, hedes, legges, & armes,<sup>2</sup> that none durste abyde longe afore hym /
 And thenne the frenshemen were so sore and weri that 12 they myght no more, & were all dyscomfyted at the the Frenchmen are all discomfyted at the passage of the river; passage of the ryver<sup>3</sup> / whan they dyd put theymselfe to flyghte. And the gascoyns chassed theym alle betyng a long myle / and after returned to thooste / and toke 16 all the havoyr that they fonde there / And mawgis he captures the golden dragon of Roland, and much treasure, and returns to Montalban rejoicing. cam to y<sup>e</sup> pavyllion of Rowlande, & toke the dragon<sup>4</sup> of golde<sup>4</sup> that was set vpon the sayd pavyllion; and they passed thourghe Balancon / and soo returned to 20 Montalban wyth grete Ioye. And whan they were come there, they dysarmed theym selfe, and ete right well / For they hadde well myster therof. Whan they had eten at theyr ease / Reynawde made brynge y<sup>e</sup> boty 24 afore hym / And after dealed it among his folke, And kepte to hym not one penny / Whan Reynawde hadde thus departed all this goodes, Mawgys wente vpon the grete towre of Mountalban / And dyd sette the dragon 28 of Rowlande vpon the same / soo that the folke of the oost of both<sup>5</sup> sydes of the castell myght see it.<sup>5</sup> And whan Charle<sup>6</sup>mayne sawe the sayd dragon vpon the Mawgis sets the dragon on the great tower of the castle, so that the hosts on both sides of the castle may see it.

1—1 hors de son embuschement, F. orig. K. v. back.

2—2 omitted, F. orig. k. v. back.

3 moult oultraigeusement, F. orig. k. v. back.

4—4 omitted, F. orig. k. v. back.

5—5 que lost dune part et daultre le pouvient veoir, F. orig. k. v. back.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. M. vi. back.

towre of Montalban / He wende that Rowlande <sup>1</sup>his newewe<sup>1</sup> had taken mounthalban by force / but the thyng went well otherwyse, For of reynawde and his bretherne 4 had discomfyted all the folk of Rowlande, and had brought wyth theym <sup>1</sup>all theyr havoyre, and <sup>1</sup>the dragon of the sayd Rowlande they had set vpon the towre of mounthalban.

CHAPTER IX.

8 ¶ How Reynawde and his brethern were betrayed & solde to the kyng Charlemagne by the kyng Yon of Gascoyn, that sent them in the playne of Valcours all wyth-12 out armes but theyr swerdes / and were mounsted vpon mewles / & were clothed wyth mantelles of scarlet, furret wyth ermyn / Fro the whiche they escaped by 16 the wyll of god / but they suffred moche payne & grete traveylle / for they were gretly hurt & sore wounded. But of the kyng charlemagne party abode there deed 20 Foulques of Moryllon, & many other barons and worthy knyghtes, wherof the kyng charlemayn was wrothe and sory.

¶ Capitulum IX.

24 Now must we telle of Rowlande & of Olyver, that came agen fro hawkyng vpon the ryvers wyth their felawes, & besemyng they were right glad that they had so well chassed & taken a grete quantityte of 28 birdes / & thus as they cam agen / they met wyth damp Rambault, the free knyght / that tolde them by

Roland and Oliver return from hawking
 on the river,

and meet with the knight Rambault,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. v.

who upbraids Roland for forsaking his
host,

a grete angre / 'Ye have taken many birdes ; see that ye be good marchauntes, & selle your praye well, for I promyse you ye shall never selle your chasse and hauk-yng so dere as it hath coste you / And yf ye have taken 4 and tells him how the Sons have discomfited all

his folk.

byrdes / I lete you wyte that Reynawde & his bredern have taken knyghtes and horses / and whan ye see your dra<sup>l</sup>gon vpon the grete<sup>2</sup> towre of Montalban / ye oughte wel to be thenne glad, and thanke moche therof 8 the foure sones of Aymon. For all thoo that seen it set there of an heygth, they wene that ye have gotten the castell by force' / Whan rowlande understode thyse wordes, it lacked lityll that he wente oute of his 12 mynde / he lighted down from his mewle, And sette him selfe vpon a stone / and beganne to thynke & muse sore. And soo dyd Olyver in lyke wyse / And whan Roland in great sorrow seeks counsel of Turpin,

Ogier, and Richard of Normandy,

Rowlande had thoughte ynoughe / He called to hym 16
the bysshop Turpyn, Ogier the dane, and Richarde of Normandy, and sayd to theym, 'For god, fayr lordes, what counseyll gyve you me vpon this dede / For I dare never more fynde myselfe before my vncl, the 20 king Charlemagne ; for I fere me to sore of evyl reporte / and that men tell of me otherwyse than the trouthe' / And he sayd to the bysshop Turpyn / and asks leave of the Bishop to go into the Holy Land, and fight

no more aginast
Christian men.

'for goddis love, good fader in god, gyve me leve to 24 departe / for I wolde goo in to the holy londe to see the sepulture of our lorde, for to werre there agenste the sarrasins / For sith this mysshape is thus come to me,
I wyll no more bere armes agenste cristen men' / 28

Turpin consoles
Roland,

'Sire,' sayd the bysshop Turpyn, 'be not dismayed for no thyng / For this is but an vse of werre / suche a thyng befalleth often to many one / I promyse you that ye shall have, or thre dayes ben paste, as many of 32 the folke of Reynawde as he hath of yours' / 'Sire,' sayd Rowlande, 'ye gyve me good corage, and I promyse you that to your prudence I shall arreste and promises

him victory over
Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M. vii.

<sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. vi. back.

myselfe.' Whan Rowlande had said these wordes / the bysshop Turpyn and Ogier dyd so moche that they made hym lighte a horsbacke / and they wente toggyder 4 all towarde charlemagne. & wite that after rowlande, cam moo than a hundred yonge gentylnen all a fote, bi cause thei had lost their horses. & whan thei were come to thoste of charlemagne, they <sup>1</sup>wente streyghte 8 to the pavyllion of the duke Naymes / and whan Rowlande entred wythin, he was ashamed / and abode there two dayes that he cam not oute, and durst not goo to the courte, nor loke no man in the face, But 12 helde hym selfe <sup>2</sup>in the sayd pavyllion,<sup>2</sup> as a man all abashed of the grete sorow that he had at his herte<sup>3</sup> / Whan Rowlande and Olyver was thus abyden in the duke Naymes tente, This hangying, Turpyn cam to-16 ward kynge Charlemagne in his tente / where he entred wythin, and saluted the kyng ryght honourably / and the emperour rendred to hym his salute / and after sayd to hym, 'Damp bysshop, ye be welcom' / 'Syre,' 20 sayd Turpyn / 'god be your keper; and I besecho you to pardonne me / yf I telle you ony thyng that shall dysplayse you.' 'Now telle hardly,' sayd the kyng,
 'what ye wylle / For nothyng that ye canne telle can 24 not dysplayse me.' 'Syre,' sayd the byshop Turpyn, 'Wyte that the foure sones of Aymon have dyscomfited vs, And have taken wyth theym all that we had in our tentes, bothe horses & harneys / and all our 28 pavyllions / and namly the dragon of Rowlande, beside a grete many of prisoners<sup>4</sup> / And they have slayne the moste party of our folke' /

Thenne whan the emperour vnderstode this that 32 Turpyn had tolde hym, he was a long while as a mañ al fornced / And thenne he sware saynte Denys

They all mount
 their horses,
 and go towards
 the host of Charlemagne.

Roland is in such grief that he dare look no man
 in the face.

Turpin enters
 the tent of the Emperor,

and relates to him how the four Sons have defeated his folk,

and taken the dragon,
 and many prisoners.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M. vii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. K. vi.

<sup>3</sup> et ne disoit mot du monde, F. orig. k. vi.

<sup>4</sup> quilz en ont amene a montauban, F. orig. k. vi.

Charlemagne
summons all his lords and barons,

and shows them
how all the knights of Roland have been discomfited by
the Sons;

and asks his barons how he
may take the Castle of Mont-
alban.

by grete angre. And sayd / 'Now have ye fonde that ye went tellynge; & the grete pride that ye had, ye have well founde' / At this hour he dyd sende through all his oost by expresse wordes, that every lord and 4 baron sholde come incontynent<sup>1</sup> afore hym in his tente, for he wolde kepe parlyamente wyth them / whan y<sup>e</sup> prynces knew y<sup>e</sup> commaundement of y<sup>e</sup> kynge, ye shold have seen them com wyth gret hast towarde y<sup>e</sup> kynge / 8 & whan they wer al <sup>2</sup>assembled wythin the kynges pavyllion / he stode vpon his feete, & sayd to theym in this maner / 'Lordes, I have sent for you for to shewe vnto you that to vs is happed of newe. Now 12 wyte that the foure sones of Aymon have dyscomfited all our knyghtes that Rowlande my newew had wyth hym at balencon / wherof I am right wroth & sori. for I wolde I had lost a greter thyng, and that this were 16 not happed; but a thyng that can not be amended, must be suffred & borne as well as men may / I requyre & beseeche you all, my lordes and frendes, vpon the oothe that ye have made to me, that ye wyll counseyll 20 me truly how I shall be ruled in this mater, and how I might have this castell of Montalban' / Whan the kyng had thus spoken, there was none so hardy that ever durste saye one worde, but only the duke naymes 24 of bayyer, the prue and wyse knyght. 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'ye aske counseyll for to besege montalban. But no man that hath ony rayson in his hede ought not to counseyll you the same / for whi the 28 daunger is there grete, be cause that Guynarde the lorde of Berne knoweth of it, and so doothe Godfray the lord of Poycy, that are good knyghtes, & sore dred for their worthynes, and also the kyng yon<sup>3</sup> that is at 32 tholose the whiche shall come all to helpe & socoure reynawd / by cause they be of his aliaunce / And also

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. vi.                      <sup>2</sup> Fol. M. viii.

<sup>3</sup> de Gascongne, F. orig. k. vii. back.

they know that he is one of the beste knyghtes of the worlde / And they knowe well also that Reynawde gyveth to vs moche to doo. And soo I telle you, yf 4 they sette theym selfe togyder, they shall gyve you ynoughe to doo, And shall maye bere to you a grete dommage. ¶ But and ye wyll have goode counseyll and beleve me, I shall gyve it to you truly / Syre, 8 sende worde to kyng yon<sup>1</sup> / that he wythdrawe not nor kepe your enmyes<sup>1</sup> wythin his londe, but that he yelde theym in to your handes, for to doo wyth theym your playsur and your commaundement. And yf he wyll 12 not doo soo, ye shall dystroye all his londe, and no mercy ye shall have vpon hym.' 'Naymes,' sayd the kyng, 'now gyve you me good counseyll / and I wyll that ye have sayd be doon incontynente' / Thenne the 16 kyng made com an heraulde of his, and sayd to hym /
 'Now goo lightly to Tholouse / and telle kyng Yon on my behalve / that I am entred in to Gascoyn accom-20 panied of y<sup>e</sup> twelve douspyers of Fraunce, with a hundred thousande fyghtyng men / and wyth Rowlande & Olyver / and telle hym that, by saynt Denys of Fraunce, yf he yelde me not my enmyes, that ben the foure sones of Aymon / that I shall waste and dystroye all his 24 londe / nor to hym shall abyde nother cite nor castell / but it shalle be overthrowen to the erthe / and yf I can take hym / I shall take from hym his crowne / soo shall he be called kyng overthrowen' / 'Sire,' said the 28 heraulde, 'your commaundement I shall do wythout varienge of one worde / <sup>2</sup>evyn as your good grace playseth to comaunde me'<sup>2</sup> / and thus departed the herawde <sup>2</sup>from the oost of Charlemagne<sup>2</sup> / and toke his 32 waye towarde Tholouse / There he fonde the kyng Yon of Gascoyn in his palays / wyth a ryght fayr company / And assone that he sawe the kyng / he knewe hym well / so made he thenne to him the rever-

Naymes counsels
 the Emperor to send word to King John that he deliver to him
 the four Sons,

or his lands shall
 be wasted,
 and no mercy
 shown to him.

The King sends a herald forthwith
 to King John.

The herald arrives,
 and finds King
 John with a fair company in his palace;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M. viii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. vii.

he delivers his message.

ence / and sayd to hym in the emperours behalve the thyng worde by worde,<sup>1</sup> wherof he was sente there.

King John
desires him to remain seven nights,
and then he will tell him his answer.

And whan the kyng Yon vnderstode the herawde that spake soo / he bowed his hede toward the 4 erthe, and began to thynke a longe while / and sayd not a worde / And whan he had thus longe mused ynoughe / he sayd to the messager : ' Good frende, ye must tari <sup>2</sup> here a seven nyght, <sup>2</sup> I praye you / and thenne 8 <sup>3</sup> I shall telle you my wyll / and what I pur<sup>4</sup>pose to doo <sup>3</sup> / ' Sire,' sayd the herawde, ' I shall abide wyth a good will, sith that it playse you ' / Thenne wente the kyng Yon in to his chambre, & eyghte erles wyth hym, 12 and commaunded that the dores sholde be well shet / and thenne they set theym all vpon a benche. And whan they were all set, the kinge Yon toke the worde & sayd in this maner / ' Lordes, I besече & require, 16 vpon the feyth that ye owe to me, that ye gyve me good counseill to thonour<sup>5</sup> of me / not at my will, but bi rayson / Now wite it that y<sup>6</sup> kyng Charlemagne<sup>6</sup> is entred wyth in my londe with the xij peres of Fraunce, 20 & Rowlande & Olyver, wyth a hundred thousande men.
And he sendeth to me worde, but yf I deliver vnto hym the foure sones of Aymon, he shall not leve me nother cyte nor towne / but he shall cast all to therthe,<sup>7</sup> 24 & shall take the crowne fro my hed / and so shal I be called a kyng overthrowen / My fader helde never noo thyng of hym, & no more shall I / it is better to dey wyth grete worship than to lyve in grete shame.' 28

King John consults his barons
as to his reply to
the Emperor.

Thenne whan the kyng Yon had thus spoken, there rose vp a knyght named godfray, that was nevewe to kyng yon, and sayd to hym, ' Sire, I merueille me

A knight called Godfrey rebukes
the King for

<sup>1</sup> sans point varier en riens, F. orig. k. vii.

<sup>2-2</sup> par lespace de huit jours, F. orig. k. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> et puis vous respondray ma volente que direz au roy Charlemaigne, F. orig. k. vii.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. N. i.

<sup>5</sup> thonour, orig.

<sup>6</sup> le roy de france, F. orig. k. vii.

<sup>7</sup> Et si a jure que si je suis prins, quil me ostera ma couronne, F. orig. K, vii.

that ye aske counseyll for to betraye suche knyghtes as ben the foure sonnes of Aymon / Reynaude is your man & your carnall frende<sup>1</sup> / ye knowe what good he 4 hath doon to you & to your londe / It is not longe agoo that he dyscomfyted Marcyll the puyssaunt sarrasyn, & chassed hym well foure myle / and smote of his hede, & presented it to you / and ye have promysed 8 & sworne to hym that ye shall defende & kepe hym agenste all men. Myn vncl, yf ye thynke to faill hym, & wyll not holde that ye have promysed to hym / lete hym & his brethern goo oute of your londe in to 12 som other countrey to seke their adventure / And haply they shall serve some lord that shall doo to <sup>2</sup>theym more goode than ye wyll doo. And also I praye you, my dere lorde and vncl, <sup>3</sup>as moche as I can, <sup>3</sup>that ye 16 wyll doo noo thyng that torneth you to blame, nor to dishonour, nor that can be cast by maner of reproche towarde your frendes.' Thenne spake the olde erle of Ansom, and sayd, 'Sire, we wyll that we gyve you 20 counseyll / yf ye wylle doo that we shall counseille you, ye shall doo well for your selfe.' 'Now saye on hardely,' sayd the kyng, 'that semeth you best to be doon, for I wyll doo as ye shall counseille me' / 'Sire,' 24 sayd the erle, 'ye have well herde saye / and soo it was trouthe, that Benes slewe the erle Lohier; wherfore Charlemagne sente for hym and made his hede to be smyten of at Parys<sup>4</sup> / And at that tyme Reynawde & 28 his brethern were veri yonge; and of theym was none mencyon made / And afterwarde whan they were grete, the kyng wolde amende it vnto theym. For the thyng toucheth theym, but they had the herte so fell 32 that they wolde take none amendes, and lasted their his want of fidelity to the Sons in asking counsel for their betrayal,

and urges him to let the Sons
 depart from his land, and find some other lord
 to serve.

The Earl of Ansom argues in favour of peace
 with Charle-
 magne,

<sup>1</sup> car vous luy aues donne vostre seur a fenme devant vos barons et amys, F. orig. k. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. N. i. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. viii. back.

<sup>4</sup> par male intencion. Et puis en prist acordance a benes daigremont, F. orig. k. viii. back.

hate longe / wherof ever sith hath come grete harmes and evylles / For Reinawde slewe Berthelot, the neveve of the kyng, wyth a chesboorde / Sire, I knowe not why I sholde hide ony thyng fro your knowlege / 4 ye knowe well that Charlemagne is soo myghty a kyng that he never vndertoke werre, but he came to his above of it / Wherefore I doo gyve you counseille that ye yelde Reynawde & his brethern and Mawgis <sup>1</sup> to the 8 kyng Charlemagne; <sup>1</sup> and thus shall ye be deliverd of a grete thoughte, and of grete daunger' / And after this spake the erle of Mobandes, and sayd / 'syre, yf ye wyll doo this that the erle of Ansom counseilleth 12 you, ye & we shall be traytours / For Reynawde is your man / and so moche ye have loved hym that ye have gyven hym your suster to his wyf / And whan he cam in thise marches / he came not like a knave / but 16 he cam <sup>2</sup> to you as a noble knyght, pru and worthy / For he brought in his felawshyp foure thowsande men well armed & well horsed / <sup>3</sup> and sayd to you afore vs all, or ever he toke of his spores, that he had werre 20 wyth kyng Charlemagne / Netheles ye receyved hym wyth goode herte / and after made of hym at your wyll. And for you he conquested many bataylles / and dyde so moche that he delyvered you from the 24 handes of your enmyes / And therefore, syre, I telle you that ye be not worthy to calle yourselfe, <sup>4</sup> ne to bere the crowne vpon your hede, yf for fere of deth ye betraye suche knyghtes as are the four sones of 28 Aymon; For ye have not yet loste nother castell nor towne: and if ye doo it otherwyse / ye shall be taken and holden for a traytour. <sup>5</sup> After spake Anthony the olde erle / and sayd to the kyng / 'Syre, beleve not 32 this counseylle / for suche counseylle he gyveth you and advises King John to deliver the Sons into the Emperor's hands.

Earl Mobandes
says they will be traitors to follow
Ansom's counsel,

because of Rey-
nawde's fidelity
to him,

and that John
will be a traitor to deliver such a man to Charle-
magne.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. k. viii. back. <sup>2</sup> Fol. N. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Et quant il vint a vous il vois dist, F. orig. k. vii.

<sup>4</sup> roy, F. orig. k.

<sup>5</sup> et mys ou nombre de Judas, F. orig. k. viii.

- now, wherof ye shall be betrayed at the laste. For I knowe better thentente of Reynawde than any man that is here: Ye muste vnderstonde, syre, that Reynawde was sone to a man that had but one towne, and was soo prowde that he dayned to serve nor obeye his lorde the kyng of Fraunce; but slewe Berthelot by his grete pryde and owtrage / Wherfore kyng Charlemagne chassed hym oute of the royaume of Fraunce. Now it is happed soo that he is in Gascoyn, and ye have gyven to hym grete landes; and by cause he hath your suster to his wyffe / he is become soo prowde that none maye dure afore hym / And he setteth not a peny nother by you nor by your courte / Wherfore I swere to you by the hede that I bere / yf he may by ony wyse, he shall take the lyffe from you / for to have all the royaume to hymselfe. Wherfore I advyse to you by ryghtwys counseyll, that ye yelde hym and his bretherne to Charlemagne / And ye shall doo as a wyse<sup>1</sup> kyng; and so shall you pease the grete wrath of kyng Charlemagne of Fraunce' / After spake the duke Guymarde of Bayonne, and sayd<sup>2</sup> to the kyng<sup>2</sup> / 'Sire,<sup>3</sup> I tell you that the erle Anthony lieth falsly / and gyveth you evyll counseyll / For Reynawde is sone to the duke Aymon of Ardeyne, whiche is of right grete lynage / And Charlemagne made to slee the duke Benes of Aygremounte, their vncl, by grete wronge / and Reynawde toke therof vengeaunce vpon Berthelot by good rayson / and that more is, it was his body deffendynge / wherof I telle you that noo kyng is not worthy to bere ony crowne nor to have honoure, that wyll doo trayson for thuretynge of a nother lorde' / And after spake Humarde an olde knyghte, and sayd / 'By god,<sup>4</sup> Guymarde, I beleve that ye have lost your
- Earl Anthony says he knows Reynawde better than any man,
- and recounts how he slew Berthelot,
- and how his pride has since arisen, having married John's sister,
- and how he will take the King's realm if John does not yield him to the Emperor.
- Duke Guymarde says that Earl Anthony lies falsely,
- and defends Reynawde.
- Humarde, an old knight, tells Guymarde that he has

<sup>1</sup> Fol. N. ii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> roy de gascoyne, F. orig. l. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> damps Guymart, F. orig. l. i. back.

lost his wit to counsel thus the King.

wytte / to counseyll the kyng Yon for to bere oute Reynawde agenst <sup>1</sup>the grete kyng<sup>1</sup> Charlemagne, for to make all the londe of Gascoyn for to be dystroyed / Wherof ye sholde care but lityll / yf the royaume were <sup>4</sup> wasted, and the kynge broughte to shame / soo that ye had lawde and praysyng.' Thenne sayd Guymarde, 'Thou liest falsly / and yf we two were in a nother place than here, I sholde shewe the that thou were an <sup>8</sup> olde dooterd and a foole / For I wolde not counseyll the kyng Yon / but all thyng that concerneth his honour / and profyte also of his royaume.'

Guymarde defies him in anger.

After spake one named syr Hector / an ancyente <sup>12</sup> erle, and sayd to the kyng / 'Sire, ye aske counseyll of suche that canne not counseyl theymselfe / For it is all other wyse than Guymarde sayth / And I ensure you, that yf ye lose in this matere / he shall <sup>16</sup> lese therby noo thyng. Sire, ye knowe that Reinawde is a knyght good ynoughe. But by his grete pryde / he hath made werre wyth Charlemagne / For he slewe Berthelot his newewe by his owtrage. <sup>2</sup>now he is come <sup>20</sup> in Gascoyne / and ye have gyven hym your suster in marriage. Wherof ye dyde grete folie / and ye made hym the castel of Mountalban vpon the strengest grounde that is wythin your royaume / Now is come <sup>24</sup> the kyng Charlemagne that hath beseged him ; wherfore I counseyll you that ye accorde wyth the kyng Charlemagne, and delyver yourselfe of Reynawde assone as ye maye. For it is better that ye lese foure knyghtes <sup>28</sup> than all your royaume. take fro hym your suster, and gyve her to a nother that is a gretter gentilman than is Reynawde / and that have no suche enmyes as is Charlemagne / & fynde some meanes to yelde Rey- <sup>32</sup> nawde & his brethern to Charlemagne. And this ye shall well <sup>3</sup>may doo wythoute blame, yf ye wyll doo

Earl Hector says that Guymarde is wrong,

and condemns Reynawde for fighting against Charlemagne ;

he advises John
to take his sister
away,

and yield up the Sons without fail.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. N. iii.

<sup>3</sup> well may = be able.

that I shall counsell you.' 'Frende,' sayd the kyng yon / 'I am redy to doo that whiche ye shal counseille me,<sup>1</sup> above all other that ben here' /

4 Thenne whan the kyng yon of Gascoyn sawe that ye<sup>e</sup> mooste party of his counseylle accorded to that he sholde yelde Reynawde and his brethern to kyng Charlemagne, he beganne to wepe right tenderly / and 8 sayd in hymself, that no body cowde bere it. 'Bi god, Reynawde, I am sore charged for you / now shall departe my love fro you. For ye shall lese the body / and I shall lese therby the love of god and of his 12 moder. For I shall never fynde mercy in hym / for to betraye suche a knyghte as ye be' / But I telle you that god shewed that daye for Reynawde a fayr myracle.
for the chambre where the counseille was kepte that 16 was all white / chaunged colour and becam all blacke as a cole: 'Lordes,' sayd the kyng Yon, 'I see well that I muste yelde the foure sones of Aymon. syth that the moost parte of you accordeth therto. And I shall 20 doo it / syth that ye counseylle me soo / But I wote well that my soule shall never have therof noo par-donne: And <sup>2</sup>shall be therfore taken all my lyffe as a Iudas.' and thenne they lefte the counseylle. and 24 wente out of the chambre. And whan the kyng was come out of the chaumbre: he sette hym doun vpon a benche, and beganne to thynke sore / And as he was in this thoughte / he beganne to wepe sore for grete pyte 28 that he had / And whan he had thoughte and wepte ynoughe / he called his secretary, and sayd to hym:
'Come forth, syre Peter / and write a letter from me to the kinge Charlemagne, as I shall telle you: It is 32 that I sende hym salutacyon wyth goode love / And yf he wyll leve me my londe in peas, I promyse hym that a-fore ten dayes ben paste / I shall delyver vnto hym

John weeps when he finds that most of his barons
counsel him to yield up the Sons.

The chamber where they hold counsel, turns
black from white,
when Reynawde's
doom is fixed.

The king, after much sorrow,
calls his secretary,
and tells him to write to Charle-
magne,

<sup>1</sup> Car je voy et congnois que vous me donnez bon conseil, F. orig. l. i.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. N. iii. back.

and says he will send the Sons to Vaucouleurs, clothed in scarlet upon mules, so that men shall know them.

the foure sones of Aymon, and he shall fynde theym in the playne of Valcolours / clothed wyth scarlette / furred wyth ermynes, and ridynge vpon mewles / berynge in theyr handes flowres and roses for a token / 4 bycause that men shall better knowe theym. And I shall make them to be accompanied of eyghte erles of my royame / & yf they scape from hym, that he blame me not for it.' Thenne sayd the secretare, 'Sire, your 8 commaundemente shall be doon.' <sup>1</sup>the whiche toke anone penne and ynk<sup>1</sup>e, and wrote the lettres / worde for worde, as the kyng had devysed to hym. And whan they were writen and sealed. the kyng called 12 his stywarde, and sayd to hym / 'Now make you redy on horsbacke / and goo to the sege of Mountalban / and recomende me to kyng Charlemagne: and gyve hym thise lettres / And telle hym, yf he wyll quyte 16 my londe / I shall doo this that is of reason, and none otherwyse.' 'Syre,' sayd the stywarde, 'I shall gladly doo your commaundemente / doubtte not of it.' Thenne wente the stywarde in his house, and made hym redy 20 on horsbacke, and rode out of Tholouse, and toke the herawde of Charlemagne wyth hym / And whan <sup>2</sup>they were come to Mountalban, thei fonde the emperour in his pavyllion / where the stywarde lyghted down / and 24 wente wythin / and saluted the kyng Charlemagne fro the kyng Yon of Gascoyn / and presented hym the lettres fro his behalve, and sayd to hym; 'Ryght myghty emperour, the kyng Yon sendeth you worde 28 by me / that yf ye wyll ensure his londe, he shall fulfille the tenoure of this lettre / and otherwyse he wyll not.'

The Steward
departs for
Montalban,

where he finds the Emperor in his pavilion,

and presents
him with the letters.

Whan charlemagne vnderstode thise tydynges, he 32 was right gladde / he toke the lettre of the messenger / And called Rowlande to hym, and Olyver /

<sup>1-1</sup> Et lors sen entra en sa chambre . . . F. orig. l. il. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. N. iv.

the bysshop Turpyn / the duke Naymes / Ogyer the dane / and the xii peres <sup>1</sup>of Fraunce<sup>1</sup> / and sayd to them / 'Fayre lordes, be not dysplayd : goo out of 4 this pavyllion / for I wyll talke with this messenger pryvely.' 'Syre,' sayd they all, 'wyth a goode wylle' / And than they wente all oute of the pavyllion / and whan they were all goon / Charlemagne opened the 8 lettres, and red them all alonge / And he fonde therin that whiche he mooste desyred in this worlde / that was the trayson as it was ordeyned / Whan Charlemagne had red the lettre, he myghte be noo gladder 12 than he was. And of the grete Ioye that he had of it / he beganne to smyle / 'Syre,' sayd the stywarde, 'yf ye see ought in the lettre that playseth you not / blame not me for it / <sup>2</sup>For I knowe not yet what it is,'<sup>2</sup> 16 Thenne sayd Charlemagne to the stywarde / 'Your lorde, the kynge Yon, speketh full curtesly / and yf he doo that he dooth me to wyte / he shall be well my goode frende / And soo shall I doo to hym grete wor-20 shyp, and shall make hym a grete man / and also I shall defende hym agenst all men.' 'Syre,' sayd the stywarde, 'of this that ye saye / ye shall gyve me suretyes if it playse you.' Thenne sayd Charlemagne, 'I wyll 24 doo soo <sup>3</sup>gladly / This I swere vpon the sone of the vyrgyn Mary, and also vpon saynte Denys of Fraunce, whos man I am.' 'Syre, ye have sayd all ynoughe,' answered the messenger of kynge Yon / 'And noon other 28 surety I aske of you.'

Charlemagne
 with joy calls his barona,
 and tells them to leave him while he confers with
 the messenger.

The Emperor receives John's message gladly,

and says he will
 give him worship, and make him a
 great man ;

this he swears by the Virgin and
 St. Denis of France.

He calls then his chamberlain,

and dictates to him a letter for King John.

Thenne Charlemagne called hys chambrelayne, and sayd to hym / 'Make a lettre to kyng Yon of Gascoyne in my behalve / as I shall devyse it vnto 32 you. Wryte that I sende hym salutacyon and goode love / And that yf he dooth for me as he sayth, I shall encrease his royame wyth fourtene goode castelles /

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. i. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. N. iv. back.

and therof I gyve hym for surete our lorde and saynte Denys of Fraunce / and that I sende hym four mauntelles of scarlette furred wyth ermynes, for to clothe wythall the traytours, whan they shall goo to the 4 playne of Valcolours. And there they shall be hanged, yf god wyll. And I wyll not that ony other have harme, but oonly the foure sones of Aymon' / 'Syre,' sayd the chambrelayne / 'your commaundement shall 8 be well doon' / and thenne he made the lettres as themperour had devysed hym. And whan he had made theym, the emperour Charlemagne sealed theym / and after he called the messenger afore his presence, and 12 sayd to hym / 'Holde thise lettres, and take theym to kyng Yon from me, and recomende me moche to hym.' And thenne he dyde gyve hym x marke of golde / and a ryng that he toke of <sup>1</sup> his fynger / wherof 16 the messenger thanked hym moche humbly, and incontynente lyghted on horsback.<sup>2</sup> And whan he was arryved, he salved the kyng yon of Gascoyn from kyng Charlemagnes behalve. And toke hym the 20 lettres and the mauntelles, <sup>3</sup>as Charlemagne had commaunded hym.<sup>3</sup>

The Emperor gives the letters and scarlet mantels for the Sons to the messenger, and also X marks and a ring.

<sup>4</sup>Thenne whan the messenger of the kyng yon was goon / Charlemagne made come afore hym Foul- 24 ques of moryllon and Ogyer the dane / and sayd to theym, 'Lords, I have sente for you / For I wyll that ye knowe a lytyll of my secretes. But I telle you, vpon your feythe that none other shall knowe the 28 same, but oonly we, vs thre, unto the tyme that the dede be accomplysshed.' 'Sire,' sayd Ogyer, 'yf ye thynke that we sholde dyscovere your secrete, telle it vs not / And yf ye truste vs, declare hardely your 32 playsur.' 'Certes,' sayd the emperour to Ogyer, 'ye be well worthy to knowe all. For I knowe you for a Charlemagne then calls his barons again to tell them the news,

<sup>1</sup> off.      <sup>2</sup> et sen va vers thoulouse, F. orig. l. ii.
<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. N. v.

goode and a trusty knyghte.' 'Syre,' sayd Ogyer,
 'your goode gramercy. But I telle you that I wyll not knowe noo thyng therof / but that ye take firste 4 myn othe theropon' / 'Lordes,' sayd Charlemagne / 'I take it, Now shall ye goo to the playne of Valcolours wyth thre hundred knyghtes well armed / and whan ye shall come there, ye shall fynde the foure sones of 8 Aymon / And thus I commaunde you, that ye brynge them to me other deed or quycke.' 'Syre,' sayd Ogyer, 'I sawe them never but armed: How shall we knowe them' / 'Ogyer,' sayd Charlemagne, 'ye shall 12 well may knowe them / For eche of them shall be clothed wyth a mauntell of scarlette furred wyth ermynes / and shall bere roses in theyr handes.' 'Sire,' sayd Ogyer, 'that is a goode token / and we shall do 16 your commaundement.' They made none other taryeng, but departed from the ooste <sup>1</sup>of the kynge Charlemagne<sup>1</sup> as pryvely as they myghte doo / And rode to the playne of Valcolours / and put them selfe in a busschement 20 wythin a woode all of serpyn trees / vnto the tyme that the foure sones of Aymon came to the playne of Valcoloures / Ha, god! why knewe not Reynawde and his bretherne this <sup>2</sup>mortalle trayson, for they wolde not 24 have come there<sup>3</sup> vpon mewles. / But they sholde have come there vpon goode horses, and well armed, as prue and worthy knyghtes that they were / But, and god had not remedyed it / this Reynawde and his brethern 28 sholde have ben soone taken in a lityl space / for they were in daunger of deth. Whan Ogyer the dane and Foulques of Moryllon were in theyr bushemente /
 Foulques called his folke and sayd to them: 'Fayr 32 lordes, I oughte well to hate Reynawde / for he slewe myn vncler by grete wronge / Now am I come to the poynte that I shall be avenged on hym / and I shall

and commands
 Ogyer to go to Vaucouleurs with three hundred
 knyghts,

and bring to him
 the Sons, either
 dead or alive;

and says he shall
 know them by their clothes of scarlet, and the flowers they will bear in their hands.

Ogyer sets forth,

and puts his men
 in ambush at Vaucouleurs.

Foulques of Moryllon is also
 there, and begs

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. iii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. N. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> comme bricons, F. orig. l. iii. back.

his knights to prove their love for him by slaying
all the four Sons.

telle you now. Now wyte it that the kynge Yon of Gascoyn hath betrayed them;<sup>1</sup> and they shall come hider anone, all vnarmed sauf their swerdes / <sup>2</sup>And therfore<sup>2</sup> I praye you all that ye thynke to smyte well <sup>4</sup>vpon them / thenne shall I knowe who loveth me beste. Doo soo that none of them scape / and ye shall be well, my goode frendes. And I shall love you well.'

King John
receives his lett
from Charle-
magne.

Now shall we telle you of the kynge Yon that was 8 at Tholouse: when he had receyved the lettres of the kynge Charlemagne, he called to hym his secretary Godras, and sayd to hym, 'Loke what this lettre sayeth:' And the clerke brake incontynente the seale, 12 and behelde the tenoure of the lettre / and founde how Reynawde & his brethern sholde be betrayed / and lyvered to dethe / And whan the clerke had redde the letre, he beganne to wepe sore tenderly; and yf it had 16 not be for doubte of the kyng, he wolde gladly have vttered it. And whan kynge Yon sawe his secretary wepe, he sayd thus to hym: 'kepe well vpon your lyf that ye hide no thyng fro me, but telle me all that the 20 lettre conteyneth, and what the kynge Charlemagne wryteth <sup>3</sup>to me.' 'By my feyth,' sayd Godras / 'It is a sore thyng for to reherce' / 'Now lightly,' <sup>4</sup>sayd the kynge Yon: <sup>4</sup>'telle me what the kynge Charlemagne 24 sendeth me.' 'Syre,' sayd Godras, 'I shall telle it you gladly' / And thenne he beganne to shewe to kynge Yon how Charlemagne sende hym worde / that yf he wolde doo as he had wryten vnto hym, he sholde en- 28 crease his power of fourtene goode castelles more than he had.

The Clerk weeps
when he reads
their contents,

and signifies their meaning to the King.

For the surete wherof, he swereth it vnto you vpon our lord god / and saynte Denys of Fraunce, <sup>4</sup>his 32 patrone <sup>4</sup> / And he sendeth you four mauntelles of

<sup>1</sup> et les doit remectre a charlemaigne . . . F. orig. l. iii.

<sup>2-2</sup> Et pourtant quant ilz viendront . . . F. orig. l. iii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. N. vi. <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

scarlette furred wyth ermynes / that ye shall gyve to the foure sones of Aymon for to were theym / And thus they shall be knowen. For Charlemagne wyll not 4 that none take ony harme / but oonly the foure sones of Aymon / And he doth you to wyte, that his folke are wythin a busschement wythin a woode by the playn of Valcolours / that is to wyte, Foulques of Moryllon 8 and Ogyer the Dane, wyth thre hundred men well horsed and well armed, that abyden there the foure sones of Aymon / ye whiche ye sholde lyver in to theyr handes.' Whan the kyng Yon vnderstode the tenoure 12 of the lettre, He made haste for to fulfyll his promyse / And Incontynente he lyghted on horsbacke: and toke in his company a hundred men well arrayed / and toke his waye towarde Mountalban. And as soone as he 16 myghte / he came / and entred wythin atte the gate fletcher. And whan he was wythin, he made his folke to lodge theym in the borow / And he wente up to the palays, as he was wounte to doo whan he came there.
 20 Thenne whan hys suster, the wyffe of Reynawde, wyste of the comynge of the kyng yon her brother / she came agenst hym & toke hym by the hande, & wolde have kissed hym as she <sup>1</sup> was accustomed to do whan he 24 cam there, but the kyng, full of evyll trayson, tourned his face a syde / And sayd he had the tooth ache, and wolde not speke wyth her but lityll / But he sayd that men sholde make hym a bedde redy / For he wolde 28 reste hymselfe a lityll<sup>2</sup> / and whan he was layd, he beganne sore to thynke, and sayd to hym selfe, 'Ha, goode lorde / what have I wroughte agenste the beste knyghtes of the worlde that I have betrayed soo 32 falsely / Now shall they be honged to morowe wythoute fawte. I praye god to have mercy and pyte vpon theym / now may I well say that I shall be lykened to

King John, after hearing the letter,

sets forth immediately for Montalban with a
 hundred men;

he enters the palace, but will not embrace his sister, because of his treasonable
 purpose,

saying he has a toothache, and will rest awhile.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. N. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> pour myeux couvrir sa trahison, F. orig. l. iv. back.

Iudas from hens forthe. And I shall have loste the love of god / and of his moder / and also myn honour. But I muste nedes doo it, syth I have promysed it soo / And the wyлле of my barons is suche / for thus they 4 have counseyllled and have made me doo it. <sup>1</sup>Wherof I am full sore dysplayed.<sup>1</sup>

Reynawde and his brethren return from hunting,

Alle thus as the kyng yon thought in the grete treyson that was thus machyned vpon the four 8 sonnes of Aymon / there came in Reynawde from huntinge / and all hys bretherne wyth hym, and had taken foure wylde bores sore grete / and whan Reynawde was wythin Mountalban / he herde the noyse of the horses, 12 and wende that it had ben straunge knyghtes that were come vnto hym to take wages. <sup>2</sup>And thenne he<sup>2</sup> asked of a yoman, what folke were thees strangeres that were come in wythoute leve / 'Syre,' sayd the yoman, 'they 16 ben the folke of kyng yon, that is come wythin for to speke wyth you of some materes / But me seemeth by his folke that he is not well atte ease of his persone.'<sup>3</sup> and ask whose folk are in the castle.

A Yeoman says they are King John's men.

Thenne sayd <sup>5</sup>the goode<sup>5</sup> Reynawde / 'Ha, god / 20 why hath my lorde traveylled hym selfe soo moche for to come hyder, For I wolde wyth a goode wyll have goon to hym' / And after, whan he had that sayd, he called to hym a servaunte of his, and sayd to hym / 24 'Goo fette me my horne Boudyere / For I wyll make feest and Ioye for the comynge of my soverayne lorde.' and Incontynente it was broughte to hym / And Reynawde toke it / and sayd to his bretherne / 28 'Now take eche of you his owne, and lete vs make feeste for the love of kyng Yon.'<sup>6</sup> Thenne they toke eche of theym his horne, and beganne to sowne all foure at ons ryght hyghe. And made so grete noyse 32

Reynawde sends for his horn, and sounds it in welcome for his lord the King.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. iv. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> Reynault, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Car il semble a le veoir qu'il soit mal dispose, F. orig. l. iv.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. N. vii. <sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>6</sup> Sire dirent ilz nous le ferons tres volentiers, F. orig. l. iv.

that the castell sowned of it.<sup>1</sup> For they made so grete Ioye for the love of the kyng Yon, that it was merveyll. Whan the kyng Yon herde the trompettes, 4 that thus sowned soo sore<sup>2</sup> that the chambre where as he laye shoke of it,<sup>2</sup> he arose vp from the bed and came to the wyndowe / and sayd to hymselfe / 'Ha, what evyl have I wroughte agenste thyse knyghtes! Alas,
 8 how make ye Ioye agenste soo grete a combraunce, the whiche I have purchaced to you / I have betrayed you right falsely / as a wycked and vntrewe kyng that I am / For a man that betrayeth his frende, oughte never 12 to have honoure, nother in this worlde nor in the other / but oughte to be loste bothe body and soule / For he has forsaken god, and hath gyven hym selfe to the devyll.' And whan he had sayd that / he returned 16 agayne vpon his bedde, sore vexed atte the herte, and evyll at ease more than ony man myghte be. Thenne Reynawde and his brethern came vp to the palays, where they founde the kyng yon. & whan he sawe
 20 theym com, he rose agenst theym, and toke theym the hande, and sayd to Reynawde / 'Be<sup>3</sup> not merveyllled that I have not embraced nor kyssed you, for I am sore laden wyth grete evyll / And it is well<sup>4</sup> fourtene dayes
 24 goon that I cowde nother ete nor drynke<sup>5</sup> ony thyng that dyde me goode.'<sup>5</sup> Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'syre, ye be in a good place, where ye shall be tended vpon right well with goddis grace. And I and my bretherne 28 shall serve you to our power' / 'Gramercy,' sayd the kyng Yon / Thenne called he his stywarde, and sayd to hym, 'Goo and bryng me the mantelles of scarlette furred wyth ermynes / that I have doon make for my 32 dere frendes.' Incontynente the stywarde dyde the John hears the noise,

and goes to the window;
 he reproaches himself for his evil intent against these knights.

The Sons come into the palace and find the King, who excuses himself from kissing them, saying he has neither eaten nor drunk for 14 days;

he sends for the scarlet mantels,

<sup>1</sup> si que lon cuidoit que le clocher de la chapelle saint Nycholas en deust tomber par terre, F. orig. l. iv.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>3</sup> Fol. N. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> quinze jours, F. orig. l. iv.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. iv.

and puts them on
the Sons,
praying them to wear them for love of him.

commaundement of kynges yon. And assone that he was come agayne, the kyng made the foure bredern to putt the four mantelles vpon theym, and prayed theym to were theym for his love. 'Sire,' sayd Alarde, 'this 4 is a gladd presente / And we shall were theym for the love of you, wyth veri goode wyll' / Alas, yf they had knownen how the thyng was broughte aboute / they sholde not have borne theym, but they sholde have 8 doon all other wyse. Alas, and what sorowfulle harme they had of this, that they were thus clothed.
For that were the tokens & reconyssaunce wherof they were in daungeur of deth, yf god had not holpen theym 12 of his pyte and mercy. And whan the foure sonnes of Aymon had theyr mantelles on / the kyng Yon behelde theym / and had of theym grete pyte, and beganne to wepe. There was his stywarde, that the 16 trayson well wyste / that sayd not one worde for fere of the kyng Yon / And whan the mete was redy / Reynawde prayed moche the kyng that he wolde etc.
For he made hym to be served right well. Whan 20 they had eten, the kyng Yon rose vpon his feete / and toke Reynawde by the hande, and sayd to hym,
'My fayre broder & my goode frende / I wyll telle a counseyll that ye know not / Now <sup>1</sup>wyte that I 24 have ben atte Mountbenden, and I have spoken wyth kyng Charlemagne, the whiche charged me of treyson / by cause that I kepe you in my royaume / wherof I have presented my gage afore all his company; and no 28 man was there soo hardy that durste speke agenste that, that I sayd. After this we had many wordes togyder / emonge whiche we spake of goode accorde and of peas / wherof at the last the kyng Charlemagne 32 was contente for my love for to make peas wyth you / in the maner that foloweth. That is to wyte, that tomorowe erly ye shall goo to the playne of Valcoloures,

John takes Reynawde by the hand,

and relates to him how he has interviewed Charlemagne in their behalf,

and obtained his consent to make peace, if the Sons
will go to Vaucou-
lours unarmed,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. N. viii.

ye and your brethern, all vnarmed but of your swerdes / mounted vpon your mewles / and clothed wyth the mantelles that I have gyven to you ; and that ye shall 4 bere in your handes roses and floures. and I shalle sende wyth you eyghte of myn erles, for to goo more honourable / the whiche ben all of my lynage / And 8 there ye shall fynde the kynge Charlemagne / and the duke Naymes of bavyere / and Ogyer the dane, and all the xii peres of Fraunce / and there charlemagne shall gyve you suerte. And ye shall doo to hym reverence in suche manere that ye shall caste yourselfe to his 12 feete, and there he shall pardonne you / and he shall gyve you agayne all your londes entierly.'

clothed in scarlet,
upon mules;

and says they will find there
Charlemagne,
Ogyer, and Duke
Naymes.

Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'Sire, for god, mercy ; For I have grete doubte of the kynge Charlemagne, 16 by cause he hateth us to deth, as ye knowe / and I promyse you, yf he holdeth vs, he shall make vs to deye a shamfull dethe.' 'Goode frende,' sayd the traytour kyng Yon, 'have noo doubte atte all ; For he 20 hath sworne vnto me vpon his feyth afore all hys baronye' / 'Syre,' answerde Reynawde, 'we shall doo your commaundementes.' 'Ha god,' sayde Alarde /
 'What saye you, brother / ye knowe well that <sup>1</sup>Charle-24 magne hathe made his othe many tymes, that yf he maye take vs ones by ony maner of meane, he shall bryng vs to a shamfull dethe. Now I merveylle me gretly of you, fayr broder / how ye wyll accorde for to 28 goo put yourselfe and vs into his handes all vnarmed, as a poure myschaunte / Never have god mercy vpon my soule yf I goo there wythoute myn armes, nor wythout to be as it apperteyneth !' 'broder,' sayd 32 Reynaude, 'ye saye not wele / God forbede that I sholde mystruste my lorde, the kynge Yon, of ony thyng that he telleth me.' And thenne he tourned hym towarde the kynge Yon, and sayd to hym / 'Sire,

Reynawde con-
sents to do the command of
the King.
Alard upbraids
his brother for trusting Charle-
magne,

and says he will
not go.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. N. viii. back.

Reynawde tells
John he shall go
there to-morrow
without fail,

and then goes to the chamber of
his lady,

and tells her all King John has said, and how they will make peace with the
Emperor.

The lady enquires
where the treaty
shall be made.

wythoute ony fawte we shall be there to morowe erly in the mornynge, What soever happeth of it.' 'Fayre lordes,' sayd Reynawde, 'god hath holpen vs well, that we have peas wyth the kynge Charlemagne, to whom 4 we have made soo longe tyme so mortall a werre; but syth that my lorde, the kynge Yon, hath made this peas, I am contente to doo to hym as moche reverence as to me is possible / For I am delibered to goo naked 8 in my smalle lynen clothes to the mount saynte Mychaell.' And whan Reynawde had sayd this worde, he toke leve of kynge Yon; and wente in to the chambre of the fayr lady his wyff, and fonde there his 12 <sup>1</sup>other two brethern,<sup>1</sup> that were wyth her / And whan the lady sawe her husbonde com / she came agenst hym,<sup>2</sup> and toke hym betwyx bothe her armes by grete love,<sup>2</sup> & kyssed hym / 'Lady,' sayd Reynawde, 'I 16 oughte well to love you by grete rayson / For your broder, the kynge Yon, hath traveyled hymselfe ryght sore for me; and hath ben sore blamed atte the courte of charlemagne for me, but he hath doon soo moche, 20 blessed be god, that he hath made my peas wyth the kynge Charlemagne; And that Rowlande and Olyver, nor all the twelve peres of Fraunce myghte never make, <sup>3</sup>he hath graunted vs agen all our londes / And all thus 24 we shall be riche / and shall lyve all our liffe in rest & peas / and so shall we mowe helpe / and gyve the havoyre that we have, to the powre knyghtes that have served vs all their liff 'truly and well.'<sup>4</sup> 28

Thenne sayd the lady, 'I thanke god gretly therof with all my herte / But telle me where the concordauns shall be made, and hide it not from me, if it playse you' / 'Ladi,' sayd Reynawde, 'I shall telle 32 it you wythout ony fawte / Wyte that tomorowe we

<sup>1-1</sup> tous ses freres, F. orig. l. v.

<sup>2-2</sup> et lebrasse par grant amour, F. orig. l. v.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. O. i.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

muste ride to the playne of Valcoloures, and there the peas shall be made; but I and my brethern muste goo thedir wythoute armes but oonly our swerdes, and 4 vpon mewles / berynge roses in our handes / And there we shall fynde the duke Naymes of bavyere, & Ogier the dane, and all the xii. peres of Fraunce, that shall receyve our othes.' Whan the lady vnderstode 8 these wordes / she was soo sore an angred therof that almoste she had loste her wytte / and sayd to Reynawde / 'Sir, yf ye wyll beleve me, ye shall not go one fote there / For the playnes of Valcoloures are soo 12 dangerous / for there is a roche right highe, and there ben foure grete woodes rounde aboute.<sup>1</sup> yf ye wyll bileve me, ye shall take a daye for to speke wyth Charlemagne here in the medowes of Mountalban; 16 and ye shall goo there mounted vpon bayarde, and your brethern wyth you / and there ye maye conferme your peas / or elles contynue your werre. and take two thowsande knyghtes, & gyve theym to maugys 20 your cosin, whiche shall kepe them in a busschement vpon the ryvage, yf it happe you to have nede; for I doubte me sore of trayson. wherfore I praye you that ye kepe your selfe well sure / For I dyd dreme to 24 nyghte a dreme, that was ferefull and merveyllous.
 For me semed that I was atte the wyndowes of the grete <sup>2</sup>palays, & sawe com oute of the grete wood of Ardeyn well a thousande wylde bores / that had grete 28 & horryble teeth; the whiche slewe you / <sup>3</sup>and rented your body all in peces; <sup>3</sup>and also I sawe that the grete towre of Mountalban fell down to grounde / and,
 moreover, I sawe a shot of adventure / that smote your 32 broder Alarde so harde that it perced his body thugh and thrughe / and that the chapell of saynt Nycolas, whiche is wythin this castell, felle down to therthe,

Reynawde tells
her of the conditions made by Charlemagne.

She implores Reynawde not to go, as the plains of Vaucouleurs
are so dangerous,

and wishes him
to speak with the Emperor at Mountalban.

She relates her terrible dream to Reynawde, in which a thousand bores came from the forest of Arden, and rented
his body in pieces,

and slew Alarde;

<sup>1</sup> Dont la maindre dure bien dix lieues, F. orig. l. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. O. i. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. vi. back.

and how two angels hung Richard to an apple tree.

and all the ymages that ben in it wepte for grete pyte. And that two angeles came doun from hevyn, that hanged your broder Richarde at an apull tree / and thenne the sayd Rycharde cryed wyth an hyghe 4 voyce / Fayr broder Reynawde, come and heipe me! and Incontynente ye wente there vpon your horse Bayarde, but he felle doun by the waye vnder you wherfore ye myghte not come tyme ynoughe / wherof 8 ye were full sory. And therefore, <sup>1</sup>good syre,<sup>1</sup> I counseylle you that ye goo not there.'

Reynawde will not listen or believe in the dream.

'Lady,' sayd Reynawde, 'holde your peas; For who that beleveth over moche in dremes / he 12 dooth agenste the commaundemente of god.' Thenne sayd Alarde, 'by the feyth that I owe to god / I shall never sette foote there.' 'nor I nother,' sayd Richarde / 'Alas,' sayd thenne Guycharde / 'yf we muste goo 16 there, lete vs not departe thyderwarde as men of counseille, but lete vs goo there like as prue and worthy knyghtes / havynge eche of vs his armes vpon hym, & well a horsbacke, <sup>1</sup>and not vpon mewles;<sup>1</sup> and 20 that our broder Reynawde be well mounted vpon bayarde, whiche<sup>2</sup> shall maye bere vs all four at a nede' / 'by god,' sayd reynawd, 'ye shall say what ye wyll / but I shall goo there, as I have sayd: what soever 24 happeth' / And thenne he wente out of his chambre, & came to kyng Yon / and sayd to hym, 'By god, I mervyllle me moche of my bredern, that wyll not go wyth me, by cause <sup>3</sup>they have no horses wyth theym. 28 and yf it playse you, ye shall gyve vs leve to take eche of vs a horse, & ye shall kepe styll your eyghte erles wyth you / and we shall go there as ye have commaunded vs' / 'I wyll not doo it,' sayd the kyng yon / 32 'For the kyng Charlemagne doubteth you to sore, & your bredern, and your horses / and also I have gyven

The brethren all
counsel Reynawde
to go well armed,
and on horseback.

Reynawde says he will go alone if the brethren are afraid;

he asks the King
if they may take
their horses.

John will not allow it,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. vi.    <sup>2</sup> shall may = be able.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. O. ii.

hostages & suretes <sup>1</sup>that ye shall bere noo maner of harneys wyth you, but oonly your swerdes, as I have tolde you afore / and that ye shall ride vpon mewles, 4 and not vpon horses<sup>1</sup> / And yf ye goo there otherwyse arayed, Charlemagne shall thinke that I wil betraye hym, and so shall he dystroye all my londe / that shall be the payment that I shall have for you / I have 8 traveylled myselfe full sore for to brynge you <sup>2</sup>& your bredern<sup>2</sup> atte one wyth Charlemagne; and therefore, goo there yf ye wyll, and yf ye wyll not / leve it.'

Thene sayd Reynawde, 'Sir, syth that it is soo / 12 we shall goo there;' and thenne he wente from king yon in to his chambre agayne / and fonde his wyff, that noble lady, alarde<sup>3</sup> & Richarde / that asked hym how he had doon / and if they sholde have his 16 goode horse bayarde wyth theym.' 'By god,' sayd Reynawde, 'I canne not have leve to doo so; but, my bredern, doubte you not / for the kyng yon is as true a prynce; and yf he sholde betraye vs / he sholde be 20 sore blamed for it, for he shall make vs to be conduytted by eyght of the moost grete erles of his royaume / and god confounde me yf I sawe ever ony evyll doon by hym.' 'Syr,' sayd his bredern, 'we 24 shall goo gladly wyth you, sith that ye wyll have vs nedes to doo soo.' whan they were thus accorded herto / they wente to bed, & slepte vnto the daye appered / And whan Reynawde sawe the day, he rose vp, and 28 sayd to his bredern, 'Arise, syres, & make vs redy / for to goo there as we shold goo / for if Charlemagne be 'soner to the playnes of Valcolours than we / he shall haply be angry for it.' 'Syre,' sayd his bredern, 'we 32 shall soone be redy.' and whan they were all redy, they went to the chirche of saynt Nycolas for to here and says that he has given his word to Charlemagne that they shall go on mules.

Reynawde then
 determines to go.

and tells his wife
 that John would never betray
 them,
 and that he will send eight Earls
 with them for safe conduct.

<sup>1-1</sup> que vous ny pourterez armes ne ne serez montez sur voz cheuaulx, F. orig. l. vi.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Guichart, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. O. ii. back.

The Sons mount their mules, and,
accompanied by
the eight Earls,
depart from
Montalban.

masse / and whan [they] cam to the offrynge, Reynawde & his bredern offered many riche yestes / And after the masse was doon<sup>1</sup> / they asked after theyr mewles, & incontynent they mounted vpon / and in their felaw- 4 shyp were eyghte eles / the whiche knewe all the maner of trayson. and whan they were all mounted they toke on theyr way, but the foure sones of Aymon were good to knowe by thother / for they had on grete 8 mauntelles of scarlet furred with ermynes / and bare in theyr handes roses in token of peas, and also theyr swerdes / for <sup>2</sup>they wold not girde theym.<sup>2</sup> <sup>3</sup>Now god be wyth theym<sup>3</sup> / for if he kepe theim not / they ben 12 in waye of perdicyon, and never to com agen to Montalban / Whan the kyng yon sawe theym thus goo, he felle down in a swoune more than four tymes, for the grete sorowe that he had atte his hert / <sup>4</sup>for how be it 16 that he had betrayed theym so / yet had he grete pite of theym<sup>4</sup> / but this that he had doon / evyll counseyll had made hym doo it / And thenne he began to make the grettest sorow in the worlde / and sayd / 'Ha, 20 good lord, what have I doon / dyde ever ony man so grete a trayson as I have doon, nay vereli; for I have betraied the best knyghtes of y<sup>e</sup> worlde / and the most worthy / <sup>5</sup>and true.'<sup>5</sup> 24

John sorrows over the Sons' departure because of his evil treason
against them.

His folk comfort him, saying that Reynawde is too
wise for harm to befall him.

Thenne sayd his folke / 'syre, ye doo not well to make suche a sorow, for Reynawde is / veri wyse;
and he shall perceyve it right soone.' 'Ha, god,' sayd the kyng Yon / 'were it as ye saye; for I sholde be 28 more glad than yf I had wonne X. of the best citees of Fraunce; for Reinawde is my frende & my broder.
Ha, Mawgys, how shall ye be sori, whan ye shall

<sup>1</sup> chante, F. orig. l. vii. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> Ilz ne les volurent oncques laisser, F. orig. l. vii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> or en pense nostre seigneur qui prit mort et passion en la croix, F. orig. P. vii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> Car non obstant quil les auoit ainsi trahiz Il en auoit peur, F. orig. l. vii.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

knowe this mater / Reynawd dyd grete foly / whan he toke <sup>1</sup>not your advyse in this thyng / for yf he had knownen of it ye sholde not have suffred hym [to] go 4 there' / 'Lordes,' sayd y<sup>e</sup> kynge yon, 'I, poure wretche / whether shall I becom, if the four sones of Aymon deye / for mawgis shall slee me wythout merci / and also it is well rayson / for who that betraieith a nother 8 & pryncipally his frende carnall ought not to lyve nor have ever ony worshyp'<sup>2</sup> / but his folke toke hym vp incontynente & began to recomforte hym by many grete raysons <sup>3</sup>that thei layde afore hym.<sup>3</sup>

John fears the wrath of Mawgis
should the Sons
be slain.

12 Nowe begynneth the piteouse histori of the four sones of aymon, that went to their dethe by the meanes of y<sup>e</sup> traytour kyng yon / And because of the trayson that he commytted agenst the four sones of 16 aymon / he loste the royame of gascoyn, the name & the dygnyte therof<sup>4</sup> / for never sin that tyme was no kyng crowned in gascoyn. Now shall I telle you of Reynawde & of his bredern<sup>5</sup> / thenne rode Reynawde & his 20 bredern towarde the playne of Valcolours / and as they rode thiderwarde, Alarde began to synge<sup>6</sup> right swetly & ioyfull<sup>6</sup> a new song / and Guycharde & Richarde dide in lykewyse / but I telle you that no instrument 24 of musike<sup>7</sup> sowned never so melodiously as the thre bredern dyd syngyng togider; alas, what pite was it of so noble & so worthy knyghtes that wente syngyng & making ioye to their deth; they were as the swan 28 that syngeth that yere that he shal deye / Reynaude went behynde theym sore thynkyng; his hede bowed doun towarde therthe / and behelde his brethern that

The three brothers sing sweetly as they ride towards Vaucouleurs.

Reynawde rides
behind, thinking
sadly,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. O. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Et quant Il eut ce dit, Il cheut tout pasme a terre, F. orig. l. vii., omitted in Caxton.

<sup>3-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. l. vii.

<sup>4</sup> de non jamais y auoir roy, F. orig. l. vii.

<sup>5</sup> que dieu vueille garder de mal et descombrier par sa pitie, F. orig. l. vii.

<sup>6-8</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>7</sup> ne psalterion, F. orig.

rode forth making grete ioye / and he sayd / 'O god, what knyghtes be my bredern, that there ben none suche<sup>1</sup> in all the worlde, nother so gracyous' / and whan he had sayd this, he set his handes togyder & heved <sup>4</sup> and weeping, them vp towarde hevyn, all wepyng / and sayd in this maner, 'Good lorde, by thy glorious & blessed name, <sup>2</sup>that dydest cast danyell out fro the lyons / and delyverest Ionas fro the fysshes beli / and saved saynt <sup>8</sup> peter whan he caste hymselfe in the see for to com to y<sup>o</sup>, and pardonned mari magdalene / and made y<sup>o</sup> blynde to see / and suffred passion and dethe vpon the crosse for our synnes / and pardonned lonugys<sup>3</sup> that <sup>12</sup> smote the wyth a spere <sup>4</sup>in to thy blessed side<sup>4</sup> / wherfro thy blessed blood fell in to his eyen; and incontynent he recovered his sighte therby / and by thy resurrectyon / kepe this daye my body (yf it playse the) fro <sup>16</sup> deth & fro prison; and also my bredern, for I wote not where we goo / but me semeth that we go in grete peryle' / And whan he had fynysshed his oroyson, his eyen wexed weete agen for pite that he had / leste his <sup>20</sup> brethern sholde have ony harme for love of hym / For it playsed them not well that they were so bare of their armes.

prays to God to protect him and his brethren from all evil.

Alarde enquires of him the cause of his grief,

Thenne whan alarde saw his broder Reynaude that <sup>24</sup> had his eyen full of teres, he sayd to hym, 'Ha, broder,<sup>5</sup> what eyleth you / I have seen you in right grete peryll, & a boutte a harde werke / but I sawe you never make so yll chere as ye doo now, for I have seen <sup>28</sup> you wepe at this owre / Wherof I merveyll me getly / for I wote well for certeyn that ye wepe not wythoute some grete occasion.' Thenne sayd Reynaud / 'fayr broder, me aylleth no thyng' / 'By the feyth that I <sup>32</sup> owe to you,' sayd alarde, 'ye wepe not for no thyng.

<sup>1</sup> si bons, F. orig. l. viii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. O. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Longius.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> beau sire Regnault, F. orig. l. viii. back.

This is the day that we sholde be attone wyth kyng Charlemagne; so praye I you for god, my dere broder, that ye leve this sorow / and lete vs goo forth merely, 4 & bere oute a good face as longe as we ben alyve / for after that a man is ones decessed / it is no more spoken of him. And thus I praye you, broder, that ye synge wyth vs; For ye have soo fayr a voyce, that it is a 8 grete playsure for to here you syng, whan ye be wyll-ynge to it.' 'Brother,' sayd Reynawde, 'wyth a goode [will,] syth <sup>1</sup>that it playseth you.' And thenne began Reynawde for to synge soo meledyously that it was 12 grete playsure for to here hym. Soo longe rode the four sones <sup>2</sup>of Aymon<sup>2</sup> the lityll pase of their mewles, syng-ynge & devysynge amonge theym selfe, that they came to the playne of Valcolours / Now wyll I telle you of 16 the facyon of the valey. For wyte, that yf I telled you not / ye sholde not maye<sup>3</sup> knowe it / There is a roche right hie and noyous to goo vp / and it is envyronned rounde aboute wyth four grete<sup>2</sup> forestes ryght grete & 20 thyck, for the leest is there a dayes journey to ryde thorughe it; and there ben four grete ryvers all aboute it sore depe / wherof y<sup>o</sup> gretest is named Gyrounde; the other is called Dordonne; the thirde is named 24 Nore / and the other Balancon; and there is nother castell nor towne<sup>4</sup> by XX myles nyghe aboute it. And therfore the trayson was there devyded / for this playne <sup>2</sup>of Valcolours<sup>2</sup> was ferre from all folke / and there was 28 a waye crossed in four / the one waye was towarde Fraunce, the other in to Spayne / <sup>5</sup>the other<sup>5</sup> in to Galyce, and the fourth in to Gascoyn. And at every one of thyse foure wayes was layde a busschement of 32 V hundred men well horsed <sup>2</sup>and armed,<sup>2</sup> for to take Reynawde & his bredern quycke or deed; for thus had and begs him to show a good face as long as they are alive.

Reynawde sings to gladden them, and thus they reach the plain of Vaucouleurs.

The valley is surrounded by four great forests, and there is no town within twenty miles;

the plain is crossed by four ways, and there are in ambush five hundred men at each of these ways, ready to slay the Sons.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. O. iv.    <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.
<sup>3</sup> be able.    <sup>4</sup> ne nulle habitacion, F. orig. l. viii.
<sup>5-5</sup> le tiers, F. orig. l. viii.

Ogyer, when he sees the Sons approach, tells his folk not to attack them;

so they pass without harm, and reach the middle of the plain, where they find no one.

Richard begins to suspect that they are betrayed, and asks Reynawde why they tarry here longer.

they sworne it, and promysed to kynge Charlemagne. Thenne cam there Reynawde & his bredern wyth theyr felawshyp of eyghte erles, that the kyng yon<sup>1</sup> of Gascoyn<sup>1</sup> had take to theym, the whiche wust well all the mys- 4 tery of this trayson. And incontynent Ogyer, the dane, sawe theym firste of all / the whiche was all abashed / and sayd to his folke, 'Fayr lordes, ye ben my men, my subgettes, & my frendes; ye knowe that Reynawde 8 is my cosin, & I oughte not to see his dethe nor his dommage. Wherfore I praye you all that ye wyll doo hym no harme at all, nor to none<sup>2</sup> of his bredern, <sup>1</sup>my cosyns'<sup>1</sup> / They answerd all, that they sholde doo his 12 commaundement wyth a goode wyll / This hangynge, Reynawde & his brethern passed by and wente in to the myddes of the playne.

Thenne whan Reynawde & his brethern were com 16 there, and fonde noo body / they were of it sore abashed / And after, whan Alarde saw this / he called his brother Rycharde, and sayd to hym / 'What is this, fayr brother, I see well that we ben betrayed / 20 for I see you chaunge your colour / how thynke ye?' 'Brother,' sayd Rycharde,<sup>3</sup> 'I doubte me sore for reynawde.' 'Have noo doubte,' sayd Alarde; 'for we shall have no thyng but goode' / 'My brother,' sayd 24 Rycharde,<sup>3</sup> 'I promyse you all, my herte shaketh / nor never in my dayes I had not soo grete feere; For all my heeres rise vp / Wherof I doubte me sore that we ben betrayed / And that more is, I sholde not be aferde 28 yf Reynawde were armed and set vpon bayarde, and we also; for thus as we ben now, we ben halfe discomfyted' / And whan he had sayd thus, he spake to Reynawde and sayd / 'Brother, why do we tarry here, sith 32 that we have founde noo body<sup>1</sup> wyth whom we sholde speke?<sup>1</sup> for yf xx knyghtes were here armed / they

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. O. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> Guichard, F. orig. m. i. back.

sholde have vs where they wolde, mawgre our teeth as bestes / seenge that we have so many enmyes in Fraunce. Ye wolde not beleve this that we tolde you / 4 and also your wyf at Mountalban / wherof I fere me sore that ye shall have no leysur for to repente you of it / For yf our cosyn mawgis had ben here wyth vs / and that ye had your goode horse bayarde / <sup>1</sup>we sholde 8 not doubte Charlemagne wyth all his puissaunce, of a strawe<sup>1</sup> / I praye you lete vs goo hens, for I promyse you it is foly for to abyde here long ; for I know well that charlemagne hath made vs for to com here as bestes 12 clothed with scarlet / nor I can not beleve none <sup>2</sup>other / but that the kyng Yon hath falsly <sup>3</sup>betrayed vs' /

' Certes, fayr brother, ye say trouth,' sayd Reynawde / 'and I perceyve me well of it / now 16 lete vs goo backe agen all fayr & softe / and as they wolde have retourned,' Reynawde hehelde a side & saw well a thousande knyghtes armed, comynge a grete paas agenst them / And foulques of morillon cam 20 afore all the other, well horsed, his shelde afore hys breste, & <sup>4</sup>his spere alowe in the reest, the grete valop agenste Reynawde ;<sup>4</sup> for he was that man in the worlde that he mooste hated. Whan Reynawd sawe com 24 foulques of morillon, he knewe hym well at his shelde, and was so an-angred for it that he wyste not what to
 doo. 'Ha, good lord, what shall we poure synners doo? I see well that we must deye this day withoute 28 doubte' / 'Broder,' sayd Alarde, 'what saye ye' / 'by my feyth,' sayd Reynawde, 'I see here grete sorow.
 Here cometh foulques of morillon for to slee vs ; and whan alarde had seen them comyng<sup>5</sup> / it lacked lityll 32 that he wexed madde, and fell doun almost for grete

Reynawde would have returned,
 but perceives
 Foulques of Morillon with a thousand knyghts
 approach,

and knows that they come to slay
 him.

<sup>1</sup>—1 nous ne doubterions Charlemaigne ung bouton, F. orig. m. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. O. v. <sup>3</sup> et mauvaisement, F. orig. m. i. back.

<sup>4</sup>—4 la lance baisse contre Regnault, F. orig. m. i.

<sup>5</sup> comyng, orig.

angre that he had of the same / and whan guycharde & Richarde sawe this, they began to make grete sorow.
 For they scratched theyr vysages & pulled theyr heeres /
 And whan alarde was a lityll assured / he sayd / 'Ha, 4 fayr brethern, guycharde & rycharde / now is the day
 com that we shall deye all thurgh the mortall<sup>1</sup> treyson ; for I knowe well that Reynawde hath betrayed vs, and certes I wolde never have thoughte that ony treyson 8 sholde have entred wythin so noble a man as he is ; he made vs come here agenst our wylles & mawgre vs, by cause he knoweth well the trayson. Ha, Reynawde, the sone of Aymon of ardeyne / and who shall 12 ever truste ony man / whan ye that are our broder, and that we take for our lord / have brought vs hider magre vs to our deth / and have betrayed vs so falsly' /
 'O richarde,' sayd alarde, 'draw <sup>2</sup>oute your swerde<sup>3</sup> / 16 by god, the traytour shall deye wyth vs. For well ought the traytour to deye that hathe procured so mortall a treyson.' Whan alarde had sayd this, they all thre dyde set hande to their swerdes & cam to Rey- 20 nawde for to sle hym yrefully,<sup>4</sup> & sore an-angred as lyons ; for they trowed for very certen that Reynaud had betrayed theym. Whan reynawde sawe theym com thus / he made semblaunt to defende hymself / 24 but loughe at theym by grete love. 'alas,' sayd richarde, 'what had I thoughte? I wolde not slee my broder for all the good in y<sup>e</sup> worlde' / and so sayd alarde & guycharde ; for thei were sore repented of 28 this that they had enterprised for to doo / and they began all for to wepe for pite, & caste their swordes doun to therthe, & kyssed reynawde, sore wepynge.
 And alarde sayd, 'ha, good Reynawd, whi have you 32 betrayed vs so ? / we be nother normans nor englyshe, nor almayns ;<sup>5</sup> but we be all bredern of one fader & of

The three brethren think
 that Reynawde
 has betrayed
 them,

and prepare to kill him in great anger.

Reynawde laughs
 for love of them.

They perceive his love for them,
 and throw down
 their swords.

<sup>1</sup> motarill, orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. O. v. back.    <sup>3</sup> du fourreau, F. orig. m. i.

<sup>4</sup> comme lyons, F. orig. m. i.    <sup>5</sup> Flamans, F. orig. m. i.

one moder / and we holde you for our lord. For god, brother Reynawde, tell vs of whens cometh this tray-son / we ben com of so noble kyñ, of gerarde of rous-4 sellon, & of dron of nantuell, & of the duk benes of aygremounte, and never none of our lynage thought no treyson / and how have ye doon so that have procured it now / <sup>1</sup>agenst your naturell brethern ;<sup>1</sup> certes it is a 8 grete fawte to you.'

'Brother,' sayd Reynawd, 'I have more grete pite of you than I have of my owne self / for I have brought you here agenste your wyll ; and yf I had 12 beleved you, this myshap had not com to vs. I have brought you here, and I promyse you I shall brynge you agen from hens, wyth goddys grace. Recomende our self to our lorde, and thynke for to deffende vs 16 well, and feere not the dethe for our worshyp ; For ones we must deye wythoute faylle. But it is goode <sup>2</sup>to gete worshyp' / 'Broder,' sayd Richarde, 'shall ye helpe vs?' / 'ye,' sayd Reynawd, 'doubt not therof' / 20 and whan he had that sayd, he torned towarde therles, & sayd to theim / 'fayr lordes, the kyng yon hath sent you wyth vs for to conduyt vs, & under the surete of you we be com here to lese our lyves / And therfor 24 I pray you that wyll helpe vs' / 'Reynawde,' sayd therle of ansom / 'It is not for vs to bargayn here long / but lete vs all flee for to save ourself, & we maye' / thenne sayd Reynawd / 'by my hede, ye be 28 all traytours, and I shall smyte of all your hedes' / 'Broder,' sayd alarde, 'what tary ye soo long, for they be well worthy to deye / sith that they ben traitours.' and whan Reynawde vnderstode that worde of his 32 broder / he set hande to his swerde, & smote therle of ansom so grete a stroke vpon the hede that he cloved hym to the harde teeth, & it was well rayson, for it was he that counseyllid this trayson to the kynge yon ;

Reynawde says
 that he grieves
 for them, as it is his fault that they are here,

but encourages
 them to fight
 well, and to die
 honourably;

he demands of the Earls that they shall help him.

Ansom says they must fly and save themselves.

Reynawde then
 slays him for his treason,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. O. vi.

that was the rewarde that he had for the first / Whan therle of ansom was thus slayn / the other vii began to flee, and Reynawde ran after; but he coude not renne fast; for his mewle was to sore lade of the weyghte of 4 his body / so that the beest fell down under hym / for Reynawde,<sup>1</sup> to say the trouthe, was <sup>2</sup>so bygge made & so grete,<sup>2</sup> that no horse myghte bere hym but oonly bayarde. For as it is sayd / Reynawde had xvi. fete 8 of lengthe, & was well shape of body after y<sup>e</sup> gretnes.

Thenne whan Reynawd sawe hymselfe a grounde, he stode vp lightly <sup>3</sup>wyth his mewle,<sup>3</sup> & sayd /
 'Ha, bayarde, my good horse, that I am not on your 12 backe armed of all peces, for, or ever that I sholde be overcom / I sholde sell my deth full dere. Alas, none ought not to complayne my deth, sith that I have pur-chaced it myself' / 'Broder,' sayd guycharde, 'what 16 shal we doo? here by<sup>4</sup> our enmyes evyn by vs: Yf ye thynke it good, lete vs adventure to passe over this ryver, & go vpon <sup>5</sup>that highe roche / and soo we shall maye save our selfe' / 'Goo foole,' <sup>6</sup>sayd Reynawde,<sup>6</sup> 20
 'what saye ye / ye wote well that our mewles myght not renne before the horses / what sholde avaylle vs for to flee, sith that we myght not save ourselfe / Certes I sholde not flee for all y<sup>e</sup> world / I have lever deye 24 wyth my worshyp / than I sholde lyve wyth grete shame; for he that deyeth in fleyng, his soule shall never be saved.' Thus as Reynawde spake to his broder Richarde,<sup>6</sup> alarde sayd to hym, 'broder Reynawde, 28 lete vs lighte from our mewlis a fote, & shryve our selfe the one to thother,<sup>7</sup> to thende that we be not overcom by the devyll' 'Frende,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye well & wysely.' and they dyde as Alarde had devysed / 32 and the rest fly, pursued by Reynawde,

whose mule falls
 under him;

he laments the absence of Bayard.

Guycharde advices their immediate flight,

but Reynawde
 would rather die
 than fly shame-
 fully.

They confess one to the other,

<sup>1</sup> le filz aymon, F. orig. m. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> si grant, F. orig. m. ii. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> be. <sup>6</sup> Fol. O. vi. back. <sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. ii.

<sup>7</sup> Et comunions nous de fueilles du boys a celle fin que nous ne foyons surprins de l'enemy, F. orig. m. ii.

And whan they were confessed thone to thother / Reynawd sayd to his bredern, 'Lordes, lete vs doo suche a thyng / wherof we shall gete worshyp, sith it is 4 soo that we maye not scape / lete vs kylle theym that com firste vpon vs / And we shall have avantage vpon thoder; and goddis curse have hym that shal feyne hym selfe.'

and Reynawde
 counsels them to kill all their enemies who shall first approach.

8 Thenne whan Alarde herde Reinawde speke thus / he colled hym wyth his armes, and kyssed hym all wepyng, and sayd to hym / 'Broder, we ben two & two. I praye you that thone faylle not to helpe the 12 other aslong that lyf is in our bodyes.' 'brother,' sayd thother, 'we shall helpe you wyth all our myghte' / and thenne they wente & kyssed Reynawde by grete love. and after, whan they had kyssed eche other / 16 they toke of their mauntelles & wrapped theym aboute their lifte armes / and toke their swerdes in their handes, and begaune to crie, & called their badges & tokens. Reynawde cried 'montalban' / alarde 'saynt 20 nycolas,' guyarde 'balancon' / & y<sup>e</sup> gentil richarde / 'ardeyn,' whiche was the badge or token of their fader aymon. Whan Foulques of Moryllon sawe the four 1sones of Aymon comyng towarde hym all vnarmed /
 24 and vpon mewles so boldly / he was all abasshed of it / Thenne he began to crye, and saye, 'Reynawde / Reynawde, ye are come to your dethe; and I promyse you, he that moste loveth you hath betrayed you, that 28 is the kyng Yon / but have pacyence, for I shall set to your necke an halter / Now have you not your horse bayarde / the whiche ye have ryden vpon wrongfully /
 Now shall be avenged the deth of Berthelot, that ye 32 slewe.<sup>2</sup> Reynawde, what shall ye doo: wyll ye deffende or yelde you? but your deffence shall be not worthe to you / And yf ye make ony semblaunt to defende your selfe / I shall slee you Incontynente.'

The four brethren
 vow to defend
 each other,

and then take
 their swords,
 each crying on his own banner.

Foulques of Moryllon derides
 Reynawde,

saying he will put
 a halter round his neck, or slay him immediately.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. O. vii.

<sup>2</sup> faulcement, F. orig. m. iii. back.

Foulques,' sayd Reynawde / 'ye speke well like a beste; and trowe you that I shall yelde me quycke to Charlemagne or to you / I shall first smyte of your hede, and the helme wythall / yf I can retche 4 to you. ye knowe well how my swerde cutteth / By god, Foulques,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye are gretly to be blamed for to have gyven the counseyll for to make vs to be betrayed by the kynge Yon / For it is the 8 fouleste crafte that a knyght may for to doo treyson.
 But doo as a gentylman oughte to doo / to the ende that men say not that it is treyson, yf ye wyll lete vs goo / we shall be all four redy to become liegemen of 12
 the kyng Charlemagne, and I shall gyve you my horse Bayarde / the whiche I gaaf not for all the golde <sup>1</sup>in the worlde; and also I shall gyve you y<sup>e</sup> stronge castell Montalban. and yf the kyng Charlemagne 16 maketh werre agenst you for love of vs / we shall serve you wyth fyve<sup>2</sup> hundred knyghtes well armed & well horsed ever more / and yf it playse you, ye shall save vs our lyves / And yf ye wyll not doo this / doo a 20 nother thynge that I shall telle you,<sup>3</sup> for to kepe you to be not called a traytour / Chese XX <sup>4</sup>knyghtes of the beste that ye have / and put theym in a felde well armed vpon good horses / & we four shall fyght wyth theym 24 vnarmed as we be, vpon our mewles. And yf your XX. knyghtes well armed & well horsed may overcom me & my bredern, though we have no harnes vpon vs / we pardonne theym our deth; and yf god wyll that we 28 sholde overcom theym / that ye sholde thenne lete vs go free where we wolde / it is that I requyre you, for<sup>5</sup> goddys love & for your worshyp, & no more. and yf ye doo not so, ye shall be taken for an ylle knyghte 32 all dayes of your liff' / 'By god, Reynawde,' sayd

Reynawde blames Foulques for his treachery in betraying them
 to John,

and offers him
 terms of peace.

<sup>1</sup> de Paris, F. orig. m. iil.      <sup>2</sup> quatre, F. orig. m. iiii.

<sup>3</sup> pour vous oster de blasme, F. orig. m. iiii.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. O. vii. back.

<sup>5</sup> pour dieu et pour aulmosne, F. orig. m. iiii.

foulques, 'your prechyng shall not avaylle you no thyng / for I have lever to have founde now in this araye / than that I hadde wozone an 'hundred 4 thousande marke of fyne golde.<sup>1</sup> Now is your cosin, the wyse Mawgis, ferre fro you; he can not give you no counseylle at this hour / and also all your folke be well ferre fro you / they shall not gyve you no socours / 8 And also I knowe the goodnes of my men, & that they have promysed the kyng Charlemagne / that they shall not faylle to assayll you worthily.' 'By my feyth,' sayd Reynawde, 'and we shall defende ourselfe also to 12 our power.' Thenne sayd Alarde to Reynawde / 'broder, what ordenaunce shall we kepe?' 'broder,' sayd Reynawd, 'we shall kepe fote two & two. ye & Guycharde shall be behynde, and I & Richarde shall 16 make the forwarde; and lete vs smyte well harde, I praye you: For the tyme is now come that we must nedes doo so / and make we that thyng that shall be lefte in perpetuell memory to them that shall be after 20 vs / sith that by no wyse we maye not scape.' 'Fair broder,' sayd Alarde to Guycharde, 'ye were well deceyved, for that ye trowed that reynawd had betrayed vs / I promyse you he wolde not doo it for all the 24 golde of the worlde.' 'By my feyth,' sayd thenne Guycharde <sup>2</sup>to Alarde, <sup>2</sup>' I <sup>3</sup>am now well hole, sith that our dere breder Reynawde shall be to our helpe; for aslonge as he shall be alyve, we shall deffende ourselfe, 28 but not after, for though I myght chose, I wolde not lyve after he were deed.' And whan he had sayed this, they medled theymself among their enmyes.
 Shortly to speke of, the four sones of Aymon assembled 32 wel agenst thre hundred good knyghtes / But their corages were never the lesse therefore aslonge as they had lyfe in the body, but that they shewed to their Foulques will not hear of such conditions,

 and says he would rather have found Reynawde in this manner than have won a thousand
 marks of gold.

The brethren then
 prepare to fight,

and go into the midst of their enemies against five hundred
 knights.

<sup>1</sup>-1 mille marcs dor, F. orig. m. iii.

<sup>2</sup>-<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. iv. back. <sup>3</sup> Fol. O. viii.

enmyes a knyghtes face / whan Foulques of moryllon sawe Reynawde com / he spored his horse wyth the spores & bare his speere a lowe, and went & smote Reynawde by the mauntell of scarlet that was aboute 4 his arme so grete a stroke that his spere entred thurgh his thye, & overthrew bothe hym & his mewle to therthe. Whan Alarde sawe that stroke / he cried sore, & sayd, ' alas, we have lost Reynawde our broder, 8 that was all our hope & our socour ; now maye we not scape / but that we shall be deed or taken, and it is better that we yelde us prisoners at this tyme, thenne to defende vs ony more / <sup>1</sup>For sith it is so, our defence 12 shall helpe vs no thyng agens so many folke. <sup>1</sup> And whan Reynawde vnderstode that worde of his broder, he cried to hym wyth a hie voys, & sayd, 'Fy vpon you, gloton ! what is that ye say ? I have no harme 16 yet, but I am all hole as ye ben / <sup>1</sup>thanked be god <sup>1</sup> / and yet shall I selle me full dere or I deye' / And whan Reynawd had sayd this, he rose vp quyckly, & toke the spere wyth bothe his handes / and pulled it 20 out of his thye wyth grete greef / and after set hande to his swerde, And sayd to Foulques of moryllon, 'knyghte, yf ye wyll doo like a good man, lyghte a fote as I am / And ye shall knowe what I canne 24 doo' / Whan Foulques of Moryllon vnderstode hym / he tourned vpon hym sore an-angred / and thoughte <sup>2</sup>to have smytten hym vpon his hede ; but Reynawde drewe a lityl aside, and went & gaaf to Foulques suche 28 a stroke vpon his helme, <sup>3</sup>that nother yren nor stele myghte not save hym ; <sup>3</sup>but that Reynawd clove hym into the harde teeth, and felde hym deed to the erthe / & whan he saw hym falle, he sayd to hym / 'Now 32 vnhappy traytour, that thy soule maye have no pardonne, but goo to the pyt of helle' / And whan he Foulques spurs

his horse towards
Reynawde,

and overthrew
him.

Alarde, in great
fear, cries out that his brother is
slain.

Reynawde rebukes him, and
rising quickly,
draws his sword,

and asks Foulques
to dismount also
and fight him on foot.

Foulques tries to slay him at these words,

but Reynawde
escapes,
and with one stroke lays the traitor dead upon
the ground ;

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. iv. back.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. O. viii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> que rien ne le sceust garder, F. orig. m. iv. back.

had sayd that, he toke the horse of Foulques, that was right good / and light vpon it incontynent; and toke his sheelde and his spere / that Foulques had shoved 4 thrughe his thighe. & thenne he sayd to his bredern / 'Be ye all sure that aslong as I am a lyve ye shall have no harme / but the frenshmen shal saye that they have an yll neyghbour of me.' And wyte it, whan he 8 was on horsbacke, he was not well at ease / by cause that the stiropes were to short for hym. But he had other thying to doo / than to make theim lenger. and 1 whan he was thus set on horsbacke,<sup>1</sup> he made his horse 12 to renne, & helde his spere alowe / and wente & met wyth therle Angenon by suche maner that he put bothe yren and wood thrughe the breste of hym, so that he muste falle doun deed fro the horse to the 16 grounde afore his foote / And after, Reynawde set hande to his sverde, and smote a knyghte suche a stroke that his helme <sup>2</sup>myghte not save hym, but cleved hym to the teth. What shall I telle you more? Now 20 wyte it that at that tyme Reynawde slewe <sup>1</sup>wyth his owne handes<sup>1</sup> four erles / iij dukes, & <sup>3</sup>VI knyghtes / and after he began to crie 'Montalban' wyth a hie voys.
 And after his crie, he went and smote Roberte the lorde 24 of dygeon, that was sone to the duk of Burgoyne,<sup>4</sup> so that the hede with the helme he made it lepe to the grounde. and after he slewe a nother sterke deed / 5 that cam to rescue the sayd lorde.<sup>5</sup> 28 <sup>6</sup>And whan Reynawde had doon these noble prowes / he behelde aboute hym / and trowed to have seen his brethern thenne: but he sawe none of theym / wherof he was sore abashed. 'O god,' sayd he, 32 'where are my bredern goon, now be they well ferre from me; we shall never com togyder agayn' / And he takes the horse

of Foulques,

his shield and spear,

and goes towards Earl Angenon, whom he also
slays;

and overthrows
Robert of Dijon.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> myhgte, orig.

<sup>3</sup> onze, F. orig. m. iv.      <sup>4</sup> si durement, F. orig.

<sup>5-5</sup> encontre luy en grant angouisse, F. orig. m. iv.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. P. i.

Alarde then comes to him, who has also won a horse,

and Richard and Guicharde appear.

They make great havoc among the Frenchmen,

who say they must be devils
to fight so marvellously.

The Sons are parted after this,

but Reynawde
and Alarde come out of the skirmish safely.

Guicharde is taken prisoner,
having lost his mule, and is bound and laid on a horse by the Frenchmen,

who beat him,
and say he shall be hung by Charlemagne.

than cam there Alarde, that in lyke wyse had wonne a horse / the shelde and the spere, for he had slayne a knyghte / and had taken his horse, but he was sore hurte / Nevertheles he came, and helde syde wyth his 4 broder / <sup>1</sup>and Richarde<sup>1</sup> & Guycharde came soone at the other syde / Thenne Alarde sayd to Reynawde / ' Brother, be all sure that we shall never faylle you to the deth ' / And whan the four brethern were assembled 8 togyder agayne / they began to make soo grete dystruc-tion of frenshemen, that none durste abyde theym / For all they that they hitte, scaped not the deth / whan the frenshemen sawe this, they were merveylled / and sayd 12 thone to the other / ' By my soule, this passeth all other wounder ; I trowe that they ben noo knyghtes, but that they ben devylles / now lete vs make to theym a sawte bothe behynde & before, For yf they lyve longe / they 16 shall doo vs grete hurte ' / And whafi they were herto accorded, they ran all vpon the four sones of Aymon soo harde that they parted theym, wo'de they or not / But Reynawde passed thurgh the them all, and brought hym- 20 self oute of the prees, and Alarde after hym / And Rycharde returned fleenge towarde the roche Mountbron / and Guycharde abode there on fote / for the frenshemen had slayen his mewle vnder hym / and 24 had wounded hym wyth two speres well depe in to the flesshe, & was taken for prysoner ;<sup>2</sup> & they bonde hym both hande and fote / and layed hym vpon a lityll horse overhwarte / like as a sacke of corne, soo 28 wounded as he was / and I promyse you men myghte well folow <sup>3</sup>hym bi the trase, by cause of the blode that cam out of his body ; and so led hym soo shamfully as that it had be a theef, & went all betyng vpon hym, 32 sayng to hym, that they led him to Charlemagne / the whiche sholde make hym to be hanged, for to avenge

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. iv.      <sup>2</sup> vouldist ou non, orig. m. iv.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. P. i. back.

the dethe of his dere newew Berthelot, that he loved soo moche / the whiche Reynawde slewe soo shamfully playng at the chesse.

- 4 And whan Reynawde sawe that his enmyes led his broder <sup>1</sup>Guycharde<sup>1</sup> so shamfully, he waxed almost mad for angre / and called his brother alarde to hym, & sayd / 'Fayr brother, what shall we doo? see 8 how shamfully they fare wyth our broder <sup>1</sup>guycharde.<sup>1</sup> Yf we suffre them to bryng hym forth of this facyon / we shall never have worshyp in our dayes' / 'Brother,' sayd alarde, 'I wote not what we maye best doo, for to 12 abide, or for to goo to them / For I telle you that we be no moo but two, and they be so grete nombre<sup>2</sup> of folke that we can doo no thyng agenste them' / 'O god,' sayd Reinawde, 'what shall I doo yf the kyng 16 Charlemagne make my brother to be hanged / I shall never be at my hertes ease / nor I shall never com to no court, but men shall poynte me wyth the fynger / and shall say: "see, yonder is the sone of Aymon, that 20 lete his brother to be hanged to the pyn tre of Mount-facon / and he durst not socour hym." Certes,' sayd Reynawde to alarde / 'broder, I had lever deye firste / but yf I sholde rescue our brother fro deth.' 'Broder,' 24 sayd alarde, 'now set yourselfe afore, and I shall folowe you, & after my power I wyll helpe you to rescue hym' / and whan Reynawde herde that, he caste his shelde behynde hym / and habandoned his body all 28 boldly as a lyon, and cared not how the game sholde goo; for ye sawe never wood men hewe in a forest, nor make so<sup>3</sup> grete noyse as Reynawde made wyth his swerde amonge his en<sup>4</sup>myes, for he cutted and hewed
32 legges and armes by suche wyse<sup>5</sup> that no man sholde beleve it / but they that see it.<sup>5</sup> Thus made Reynawde

Reynawde asks Alarde how they may succour Guycharde, for to let him die shamefully would be treason.

Alarde says he will follow Reynawde to his brother's rescue.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> nonbre in Caxton.

<sup>3</sup> se, orig.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. P. ii.

<sup>5-5</sup> que cest chose Incredible, F. orig. m. v.

The Frenchmen
out of love for Ogier, let the brethren pass,

and the folk who lead Guycharde fly for fear of Reynawde.

Guycharde is set
free,
and mounted on horseback.

The vallant Richard has slain meanwhile five Earls and
fourteen knights,
but from weariness
can defend himself no more.

at that tyme that the frenshemen must nedes make hym waye to passe, whether they wolde or noo. And many made hym waye for the love of Ogier / for they knewe well that the four sones of aymon were his cosins. 4 and whan Reynawde was passed, he sayd to theym that led <sup>1</sup>his brother<sup>1</sup> guycharde, 'Lete goo the knyghte, ye yll folkes, for ye be not worthy to touche hym' / and whan they that ledde guycharde sawe com Rey- 8 nawde / they were sore afrayed, that they put theym selfe to flighte, & lefte Guycharde free, & sayd the one to the other, 'Here cometh the ende of the worlde' / and whan Reynawde sawe that they fled, he sayd to 12 alarde, 'Goo ye, fayr brother, and vnbynde guycharde <sup>1</sup>our brother,<sup>1</sup> and sette hym vpon this horse / and gyve hym a spere in his hande, and com after me, for the traytours ben discomfited.' 'Brother,' sayd alarde, 'I 16 shall goo where it playse you / but I telle you yf we parte one from thother, we shall never come togider agen / seenge that we be so fewe & so yll armed / but lete vs kepe togyder / and helpe thone the other' / 20
'Brother,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye well & wysely; and we shall doo it.' And thenne they wente bothe togyder to Guycharde / and vnbounde hym / and made hym mounte on horsbacke, the shelde at the necke, and 24 the spere in the hande / Now goo there [the] thre brethern togyder / and the fourthe fyghteth agenste a grete nombre of folke / that was the valyaunt Rycharde / that was the mooste worthy of all <sup>1</sup>after his brother 28 Reynawde.<sup>1</sup> But men had slayne his mewle vnder hym / and was wounded ryght sore. But he had slayn fye erles / and well xiiii. knyghtes<sup>2</sup> / wherof he was soo sore travaylled / and soo wery, that he myghte not 32 almoste deffende hym selfe no more, but went <sup>3</sup>rounde aboute the roche / And thenne cam Gerarde of Val-

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> knyhtes in Caxton.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. P. ii. back.

- come, that was cosyn to Foulques of morillon / the whiche he had founde deed, wherof he made grete sorowe / and sayd / 'Ha, gentyll knyghte, it is grete 4 dommage of your dethe. Certes, he that hath broughte you to this deth is not my frende. Now shall I avenge me yf I maye.' and thenne he came to the roche. And whan he saw Richarde in soo grete greef, 8 he spored his horse wyth his spores, and bare his spere alowe, and smote Richarde thourghe the mauntell of scarlet / that he had wrapped aboute his lyfte<sup>1</sup> arme soo harde, that the spere entred ferre in his body, soo 12 moche that he brought hym to the erthe / and as he drewe his spere agayne / the guttes of Richarde came oute of the body in to his lappe; and the wounde was soo grete that the lyver and the lounge appyered.
 16 Thenne beganne Gerarde to crye / 'Now are dyscoupled the foure sones of Aymon, for I have slayne Richarde the hardy fyghter; all the other shall sone be slayne or taken / yf god gyve me helthe. And I shall brynge 20 theym to the kynge Charlemagne / <sup>2</sup>that shall make theym to be hanged atte Muntfacon, as sone as he hath theym.'<sup>2</sup>
- Thenne whan Rycharde was come a lityll to his 24 ease, he rose vp quyckely vpon his fecte / and toke his bowelles wyth both his handes and put theym agayn in to his bely; and after set hande to his swerde, and came to Gerarde, and sayd to hym in 28 grete angre / 'Thou cursed man, thou shalte have thy rewarde anone for that ye have doon to me. For, certes, it shall not be vmbayed to Reynawde that ye have slayne his brother.' And whan he had sayd 32 thus, he smote Gerarde thurgh the quyras / and thourghe the shelde, soo grete a stroke / that he hewed the sholdre and the arme wyth all from the body,

Gerard of Val-
come grieves
over the death of Foulques;

he perceives
Richard,

and with his spear
wounds him
terribly,

then cries out
that he has slain
one of the Sons
of Aymon.

Richard rises
from the ground,

and slays Gerard
with one stroke;

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2-3</sup> qui les mectra a montfacon, F. orig. m. vi. back.

CHARL. ROM. X

R

he then swoons
because of his wound, and on recovery regrets
the absence of his brethren,

& felled hym doun deed to the erthe <sup>1</sup>afore his feete / and thenne sayd to hym / 'Certes, Gerarde, it had be better for you that ye had not come hitherwarde / for to the kynge Charlemagne / Now shall ye not bere <sup>4</sup> your boste that ye have slayne one of the foure sones of Aymon.' And whan he had sayd that, he felle doun in a swoune; and whan he was come agayne to hym selfe / he beganne to wysshe after his bretherne, <sup>2</sup>and <sup>8</sup> complayned theym sore, <sup>2</sup> saynge, 'O Reynawde, fayr brother, this daye shall departe our company, For I shall never see you, nor ye me / O castell of Mount-alban, I comende <sup>3</sup> the to god, that he wyll by his mercy <sup>12</sup> and pyte brynge agayne your lorde sauff and sounde of his body / Ha, kynge Yon of Gascoyn / Why have ye betrayed us / and taken vs to the kynge Charlemagne / certes, ye dede therin grete synne / <sup>2</sup>and a <sup>16</sup> shamfull fawte.' <sup>2</sup> and after, he sayd all wepynge / 'O fader, kynge of glory / and lorde of all the worlde / socoure this daye my power bredern, For I wote not where they ben; nor of me they maye have nother <sup>20</sup> helpe nor socours, for I am all redy for to deye.'

and the treachery
of King John;

he weeps, praying
God to succour
his poor brothers
this day.

Reynawde, Alarde,
and Guicharde
fight valiantly,

Now shall I telle you of Reynawde, of Alarde / and of Guycharde, that faughte strongly agenste theyr ennyes, as worthy knyghtes that they were. <sup>24</sup> But all theyr grete fayttes of armes sholde avaylled theym noo thyng <sup>4</sup> yf they had not come to a narrow waye of the roche / where men myghte not come to theym but afore. And whan they had be longe there / <sup>28</sup> Reynawd beganne to saye to his brother Alarde / 'Brother, where is become our brother <sup>5</sup>Richarde, that we sawe not of a goode while agoo. Now thynke none other but that we shall never see hym / For <sup>32</sup> I lefte hym here by this sapyn tre, whan ye and I and come to a narrow pass

where they can defend themselves.

Reynawde enquires after
Richard,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. iii.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. vi.

<sup>3</sup> comeude in Caxton.

<sup>4</sup> . . . quilz ne fussent ou mors ou prins . . . , F. orig. m. vi.

<sup>5</sup> brether in Caxton.

- had soo moche adoo. I praye god, yf he be deed, that he have his soule / Now <sup>1</sup>I wyll wyte tidynges of hym yf it be possyble' / 'Brother,'<sup>2</sup> sayd alarde, 'yf ye wyll 4 beleve me, ye shall abyde here / god pardonne hym yf he be deed, For we may not helpe hym, the parylle is to grete / And I beleve that we sholde deye afore that evyn were come' / 'Ha, brother,' sayd Reynawde, 8 'shall we faylle to our brother Rycharde, the goode knyghte and worthy.' 'Thenne,' sayd Alarde / 'what wyll ye that we shall doo therto / For as to me, I knowe no remedye to it' / 'Alas,' sayd Reynawde / 12 'ye speke folysly / For I sholde not doubte for fere of dethe to wyte where he is become / And yf I sholde goo alone / yet shall I vnderstonde some tydynges of hym.' 'Brother,' sayd Alarde / 'I promyse you / yf 16 we departe thone from the other, we shall never see vs agayne togyder.' 'Brother,' sayd Reynawde, 'other deed or all quycke I shall fynde hym, where soo ever he be / it maye none other be' / And whan Reynawde 20 had sayd thise wordes / he spored his horse with his spores / and came atte the other side of the roche / And whan they that had chasod Rycharde there for to slee hym / sawe Reynawde<sup>3</sup> come / they smote theym selfe 24 to flyghte. And thenne Reynawde wente a lityll more vpwarde vpon the roche, and founde there his broder Rycharde, that laye nyghe deed vpon the grounde, and helde his bowelles bytwene his handes; and aboute 28 hym were a grete nombre of folke whyche he had slayne. Whan Reynawde sawe hym deed, and soo sore wounded / he had of it soo grete sorowe at his herte that almoste he felle down deed to the grounde / But 32 he toke corage, and came nyghe his brother / and lyghted down from his horse, and kyssed hym sore wepyng, and sayd / 'Ha, fayre brother / It is grete

and says he will seek tidings of
 him.

Alarde counsels him to remain
 where he is, as to move is perilous.

Reynawde says
 he will go alone
 rather than not rescue his brother,

and spurs on his horse to the other side of the rock.

The Frenchmen
 fly at his approach,

and Reynawde
 discovers
 Richard;

he kisses him,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. iii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Sire, F. orig. m. vi.

<sup>3</sup> et ses autres deux freres . . . F. orig. m. vii. back.

weeping sorrow-
fully over his sad
plight,

pyte and dommage of you / and of your dethe / For, certes, never man was worthe you ; for yf ye had<sup>1</sup> come to mannys age / never Rowlande nor Olyver were so prue in knyghthode / as ye sholde have be. Alas, 4 now is loste our beaulte and our yougthe thorughe grete synne / O, goode lorde / who sholde ever a thoughte that ony treason sholde have entred<sup>2</sup> in to the herte of the kynge Yon / Alas, my brother Richarde, 8 woo is me for your dethe / For I am cause of it / Alas, this daye in the mornynge, whan we departed oute of Mountalban we were four bretherne, all good knyghtes. Now are we but thre, that ben worthe noo 12 thyng, for we ben peryllously wounded, and all vnarmed. Now god forbede that I sholde scape, syth that ye be deed<sup>3</sup> vpon the traytours.<sup>3</sup> But I praye god that I maye venge your deth vpon<sup>4</sup> theym or ever I 16 deceasse / For I shall sette therto my gode wylle ; and yf god wyll, it shall be soo.' Evyn thus as Reynawde made mone over his brother / he behelde behynde hym, and sawe come his brethern Alarde & Guycharde, all 20 dyscomfyted / that cryed vpon Reynawde, ' Brother, what doo you / come anone and helpe vs / for we have grete nede' / And whan Richarde herde the voys of Alarde / he opened his eyen. and whan he sawe 24
his brother Reynawde afore hym, he sayd to hym /
' O, brother Reynawd, and what doo you here / see ye yonder that roche, whiche is soo highe and so stronge / where as ben many smalle stoncs above ; yf we myghte 28 doo soo moche that we clymed vp there / I beleve that we sholde be sauf from our enmyes, for it can not be but our cosyng mawgys knoweth our dysease by this / and he shall come to socour vs.' ' Brother,' sayd 32 Reynawde, ' wolde god we were there. Now telle me, and vows vengeance on his enemies.

Alarde and Guy-
chard fly before
the enemy,
and cry to Rey-
nawde to help
them.

Richard opens his eyes, and seeing
Reynawde,

counsels him that they should go to the top of the rock, and there wait till Mawgis succours them.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. iv.

<sup>2</sup> . . . dedens ung si noble cueur comme du roy jon, F. orig.
m. vii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> les traictres, F. orig. m. vii. back.

my fayr broder / how fele your selfe; thynke ye that ye maye recovere helthe?' 'Ye,' sayd Richarde, 'yf ye scape, and elles not; for wyth the sore that I have 4 I myghte well deye <sup>1</sup>for sorowe.'<sup>1</sup>

And whan Reynawde herd Rycharde speke thus, he was ryght glad of it. Soo called he Alarde to hym / and sayd, 'brother, take Richarde vpon your 8 shelde, and lede hym vpon the roche / and Guycharde and I shall rowme the waye afore you.' 'Brother,' sayd Alarde, 'doubte not / I shall doo my power.'
 And thenne he lyghted down, and toke vp Rycharde 12 and layd hym vpon his sheelde; and after he lyghted agayne on horsbacke. and Reynawde and Guycharde leyd hym wyth his broder vpon the horse necke / And after put theym selfe a fore to breke the preesse of the 16 frenshemen. And they dyde so moche that they came to the roche / But wyte it well that Reynawde made there soo grete fayttes of armes that all his enmyes were sore merveyllid wyth all. For he slew at that 20 tyme well thirty knyghtes / that never wylde bore, nor tygre, nor lyon / nor bere, dyde that Reynawde made there of his body / But, for to saye the trouthe, Reynawde setted noughte by his lyffe, and ieoparded hym 24 selfe all togyder / for he was as a man dysperate / And whan they were come to the roche, Alarde set doun his brother Richarde to the erthe / and beganne to deffende quyckely. but I wote not how they myghte endure / 28 for they had nother castell nor fortresse / but onely the roche.

Alle thus as the thre bretherne deffended theym selfe wyth grete woo, Thenne came there Ogyer 32 the dane and his folke / And had in his company Magon of Fryse, wyth well a thousande knyghtes, and cryed vpon Reynawde, 'Certes, knyghte, ye shall be deed / we have sworne your dethe. This daye is Reynawde tells Alarde to put Richard on his shield, and bear him thus on to the rock.

The two other brethren break
 the preesse of the Frenchmen,

and Reynawde
 slays 30 knyghtes,

risking his life
 as a desperate
 man.

Ogyer and his folk come towards them, and Magon of Fryse with a thousand knyghtes.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. P. iv. back.

Alarde is greatly augered when he sees so many folk
approach.

The brethren
grieve over Rey-
nawde, fearing that he will die
before their eyes.

Alarde, for love of
his brother,

advises him to leave them and
save himself,

the departynge that ye and your bretherne shall suffre dethe / Ye dyde as fooles <sup>1</sup>whan ye belived the kynge Yon, For he hath put you all to dethe.' Whan Alarde sawe soo grete folke come / he was sore an angred / and 4 sayd to Guycharde, 'See how grete a sorowe is here afore vs, and the grete nombre of folke that ben redy for to slee vs four knyghtes. Certes, yf we were fyve hundred well armed / yet sholde not we scape / For 8
they ben well armed, and a grete quantyte of knyghtes' /
'Surely,' sayd Guycharde, 'here is a mervelouse company / <sup>2</sup>but yf god helpe vs now,<sup>2</sup> we ben come to the ende of our dayes / It is noo grete dommage of me 12 nother of Rycharde / but the grete dommage is of Reynawde, that is the best knyghte of the worlde' /
And whan Alarde and Guycharde had spoken togyder, they wente to Reynawde and kyssed hym, full sore 16
wepyng, and sayd to hym / 'O, brother Reynawde, gyve vs a gyfte yf it playse you, for the love of our lorde god.' 'Lordes,' sayd Reynawde, 'what thyng aske you of me? ye knowe well ynoughe that I canne 20 not helpe you of noo thyng. And this daye muste I nedes see you deye byfore my eyen.'

'Brother,' sayd Alarde, 'herke what we wyll telle you, and yf it playse you ye shall doo it' / 'Sey 24 on, hardely,' sayd Reynawde. 'Brother,' sayd Alarde,
'men sayen comynly that it is better to doo one harme than two / I saye this, by cause that yf ye deye here, it shall be grete dommage, And the loss shall never be 28 recovered agayne. For none shall avenge your dethe / But thoughe we deye here and not you / it shall be noo grete dommage / For ye shall avenge vs well. And therefore we praye you, swete brother, <sup>3</sup>for all the play- 32 sures that ye wolde doo ever to vs;<sup>3</sup> that ye wyll goo

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. v.

<sup>2-3</sup> Si d'aventure dieu ne pense de nous . . . F. orig. m.
viii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. m. viii.

- your wayes / and we shall abyde here. And whan the 1 dethe shall come, we shall take it a worthe / This that we saye ye maye well doo; For ye be well horsed / 4 and ye shall well save your selfe mawgre the frenshemen, yf they<sup>2</sup> goo to Mountalban. And whan ye be at Mountalban / lyghte vpon Bayarde well armed / and brynge anone wyth you our cosyn Mawgys for to 8 socoure vs' / 'Brother,' sayd Reynawde / 'ye speke to folyshly. Certes, I wolde not doo so for all the golde of the worlde. I sholde be sore badde and full vnkynde yf I dyde soo / <sup>3</sup>For I cowde not spylle my selfe 12 sooner<sup>5</sup> than for to leue you in soo grete perylle. Other we shall all scape, or elles we shall all deye togyder / For the one shall not fayll the other as longe as we maye lyve / Now god that suffred deth and passyon<sup>4</sup> 16 save vs!' Thus, as Reynawde spake to hys bretherne, came the erle Guymarde / to whom god gyve evyll adventure, and sayd to Reynawde / 'knyghte, ye be take / and ye muste deye wyth shame vpon this roche / 20 Whan ye beleved the kynge yon, ye dyde grete foly.
 He wrought grete trayson whan he dyd sell you to the kyng Charlemagne, that hateth you soo moche / For ye loved hym more than ye dyde your cosyn Mawgys / 24 He hath well rewarded you for the grete love<sup>5</sup> that ye oughte to hym.<sup>5</sup> Telle me, Reynawde,<sup>6</sup> whether ye wyll yelde you or deffende you?' 'Certes,' sayd Reynawde, 'now speke ye for noughte / I shall never yelde me as 28 longe as I am man a lyve' / 'Reynawde,' sayd thenne Ogyer, 'what wyll ye doo? We canne not helpe you of noo thyng; other gyve yourselfe vp, or deffende your selfe.' 'Ogyer,' sayd Reynawde,<sup>7</sup> 'by hym that made 32 the worlde, I shall never yelde me. I was never noo and go to Mont-

alban, where he
may fetch Mawgis to help
them.

Reynawde says he would sooner die than escape as a coward, leaving his brethren in such peril.

Earl Guynard approaches the Sons,

and tells them
how foolish they were to trust
King John;

he asks Reynawde
whether he will yield or defend himself.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. v. back.      <sup>2</sup> vous, F. orig. m. viii.

<sup>3-3</sup> Car je ne me pourroye myeulx honnir . . . F. orig. m. viii.

<sup>4</sup> par mortelle trahison, F. orig. m. viii.

<sup>6-6</sup> qui a luy avies, F. orig. m. viii.      <sup>6</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>7</sup> par celluy dieu . . . F. orig. m. viii.

Reynawde says he would sooner die than yield and be hung as a thief.

theef, & therefore wyll I not be hanged / I have lever deie lyke a knyght, than to hange <sup>1</sup>lyke a theeff.' 'Lordes,' sayd Guymarde, 'leta vs sawte theym / For they shall not <sup>2</sup>may kepe longe agenste vs' / 'Lordes,' <sup>4</sup> sayd Ogyer, 'ye maye well sawte theym yf ye wyll / but by my soule I shall doo theym no thyng, For they ben my cosyngs, nor I shall not helpe theym / For ye shall take theym well wythoute me' / 'Certes,' sayd <sup>8</sup> the frenshe men, 'we shall thenne assaylle theym worthly' / Thenne Ogyer drew hym selfe and all his folke a side, well the lengthe of a bowe shot, And be-

Ogier makes great sorrow over his kinsmen, and his fair cousin Reynawde, ganne to make soo grete a sorowe as though the <sup>12</sup> worlde had fynnysshed a fore his eyen; and all his sorowe was for Reynawde his cosyng / and for his bretherne / And thus as he made his mone, be beganne for to saye / 'Ha, fayr cosyng Reynawde, it is grete <sup>16</sup> pyte of your dethe; And I, vnhappy man, that am of your kyn, suffre you to deye afore myn eyen / And yet I canne not helpe you / For I have promysed it to Charlemagne / nor I oughte not or to breke myn othe.' <sup>20</sup> But the history telleth that <sup>3</sup>Ogyer duange hym <sup>4</sup>selfe gretly that daye / And thorughe his purchase the four sones of Aymon scaped<sup>5</sup> / For yf he wolde have put payne to it, they sholde not have scaped by no maner / <sup>24</sup> But as men sayen, 'true blood may not lye.'

grieving that he cannot help them, because of his oath to Charlemagne.

Four Earls assult the rock on which the Sons stand.

Byfore the roche were four erles / for to sawte the four sones of Aymon, and made theym moche adoo; For they folke sawted them in four partyes. <sup>28</sup> Wherof Reynaude kepte the two partes / and Alarde and guycharde kepte the other tweyne / For Rycharde laye down vpon the erthe sore wounded / as I tolde you a fore / And yet was Guycharde<sup>6</sup> wounded sore <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. vi.

<sup>2</sup> be able.

<sup>3</sup> Ogyer se saignit celluy jour grandement, F. orig. n. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> seffe in Caxton.

<sup>5</sup> tant quilz ne furent mye prins, F. orig. n. i. back.

<sup>6</sup> alart, F. orig. n. i. back.

- thruge the thye / wherof he had bled soo longe that he was feynte / and felle down to the erthe. <sup>1</sup>And whan he sawe that he myghte noo more deffende, he
- 4 beganne to call <sup>2</sup>vpon Reynawde,<sup>2</sup> and sayd / ' Ha, Reynawde, fayr brother / Lete vs yelde vs, I praye you / for I nor Richarde maye noo more helpe you ' /
- ' Brother,' sayd Reynawde, ' what saye you, now shew
- 8 ye well that ye be ferdfull ; but I lete you wyte / that yf I trowed to scape other for golde or for sylver / or for cyte, or for castelles / or for my horse Bayarde that I love soo muche / I shold have yelde me prisoner to
- 12 day in the mornynge. For ye wote well, <sup>3</sup>that yf we ben take, all the golde of the worlde save vs not from hangyng / or som other shamfull dethe :<sup>3</sup> And therefore I wyll not yelde me by noo maner of wyse / A man
- 16 that wyll be valyaunte oughte to deffende hym selfe for to be hole ' / ' Ha, Richarde,<sup>4</sup> socoure vs for the love of Ihesus / for we have well mystre. We ben nother normans nor bretons / but we ben all of one fader and
- 20 of one moder / Now oughte we well to helpe eche other wyth all our power for our worship ; for otherwyse men shold saye that we ben bastardes, and of an ylle fader.' ' Ye saye trouth,' sayd Guycharde<sup>4</sup> / But ye
- 24 wolde not beleve how feble I am, for I am wounded to the deth.' ' Certes,' sayd Reynawde, ' I am sorry for it / but I shall deffende you as longe as lyffe is in my body.' Who had seen thenne the noble knyghte Rey-
- 28 nawde take vp the grete stones, and caste theym vpon hys enmyes, ye wolde not have sayd that he had not be wounded nor traveyllled of noo thyng / Whan Rycharde that lay a grounde thus wounded, as I have
- 32 tolde you above, sawe and herde the grete noyse that they that sawted the roche made, he toke up his hede,

Guycharde is wounded so that he falls to the ground, and can defend himself no more;

he cries on Reynawde to yield himself.

Reynawde reproaches him with cowardice, and says nothing shall make him give himself up as a prisoner.

Guycharde says he is wounded to death, and cannot fight.

Reynawde defends him nobly, throwing great stones upon his enemies.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. vi. back.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2-3</sup> que tout le monde ne nous pourroit eschapper de mort se Charlemagne nous peut tenir, F. orig. n. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> alart, F. orig.

and sayd to Reynawde, 'Brother, I shall helpe you ;
 But cutte me some of my sherte, and I shall bynde my syde and wounde soo that my bowelles maye not yssue oute of my bely / And thenne I shalle sette me <sup>1</sup>to my <sup>4</sup> deffence and shall helpe you wyth all my herte' / Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'Now arte thou well worth a true man' / And whan Guycharde vnderstode hym, he was ashamed / and toke agayne strengthe in hym be- <sup>8</sup> yonde his power, and came to the deffence / <sup>2</sup>and sayd wyth a hyghe voys, 'Ogyer,<sup>2</sup> Fayr cosyn, what doo you to your lynage? Certes, it shall be a grete shame to you yf ye socoure vs not / for the fawte that ye doo <sup>12</sup> to vs shall be layd vnto you in every place where ye goo, to lete vs deye thus, we that ben your kynnes men / the beste of all the worlde / Save Reynawde, and ye shall doo lyke a true man. And as for vs <sup>16</sup> other / it maketh nother lesse nor more' / Whan Ogyer vnderstode these wordes / he was sory for it / that noo man myghte more / and wolde have gyven a grete thyng to have delyvered theym, And sayd that he <sup>20</sup> wolde doo wyth all his herte all that he myghte doo for theym / And thenne Oger spored brayforde wyth his spores / & came to the roche wyth a staff in his hande, And sayd to theym that sawted the roche, <sup>24</sup>
 'wythdrawe yourselfe a lityll tyll I have spoken wyth theym a lytyll, for to wyte whether they wyll gyve theymselfe vp or noo / For it is better that we have theym quycke than deed.' 'Syre,' sayd the frenshe- <sup>28</sup> men, 'we shall doo<sup>3</sup> your commaundemente ; But we leve theym wyth you to kepe in the name of the kyng Charlemagne.' 'Ha, god,' sayd Ogyer, 'I never thoughte trayson / nor I shall not begynne yet' / And <sup>32</sup> thenne he came more nyghe the roche than he had be,
 and called to hym the foure sones of Aymon / and Guycharde pleads with Ogyer for the life of Reynawde.

Ogyer is sory,
 and would give much to help
 them ;

he commands his
 men to withdraw
 for a time while he speaks to the Sons ;

he calls the Sons,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. vii.

<sup>2-3</sup> et dist a Ogyer, F. orig. n. i.

<sup>3</sup> dooo in Caxton.

sayd to them, 'Fayre cosyn, rest you, and take agayn you[r] brethe / and yf ye ben hurte, wrappe vp your woundes / And make good garnyssheng of stones / and 4 so defende yourself nobly of all your <sup>1</sup>powre; For yf the kynge Charlemagne maye have you, ye shall never have pardonne; but he shall make you to be hanged and stranged / And therefore ye muste nedes kepe 8 your selfe well. For I promyse you, yf Mawgys knowe of it, he shall come to socoure you / thus shall ye scape, and other wyse not.' 'Cosyn,' sayd Alarde, 'ye shall have of it a goode rewarde / yf ever we may scape.' 12 'Ye saye true,' sayd Reynawde; 'For yf I maye scape, by god that suffred deth and passyon for vs vpon the crosse / all the golde of the worlde shall not save hym / but I shall slee hym wyth my owne handes / For I 16 hate hym moche more than I doo a straunger; For he that sholde deffende and helpe me agenste all men, It is he that dooth me harme.' 'Cosyn,' sayd Ogyer, 'I maye not doo therto, so helpe god my soule / For the 20 kyng Charlemagne made me swere afore all his barons that I sholde not helpe you in noo maner of wyse.
 And of this that I doo / I am sure that the kynge Charlemagne shall conne me noo thanke' / 'Brother,' 24 sayd Alarde, 'Ogyer telleth you trouth.' And also it was well trouth that ogyer was reprevd therof for treyson; For Charlemagne called hym traytour afore all his barons. Thenne Reynaude bonde the woundes 28 of his bretherne as well as he cowde / But the wounde of Rycharde was soo greefull to see, that it was pyte to beholde / For / all the entraylles appyered oute of his body / And whan he had lapped them all, Alarde 32 wrapped the wounde that Reynaude had in the thye / And whan they had reste theymselve a lityll / Reynawde stode vp and wente vpon the roche for to gader stones to deffende them selfe. And garnysshed therwyth

and tells them to rest and bind up
their wounds,

and urges them to
fight valiantly,

until Mawgis shall come to their aid.

Reynawde declares in anger
that he will slay
him, if he escapes
that day.

Ogyer justifies his conduct, as he has sworn before the Emperor not to defend his kins-
men.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. vii. back.

their defence where <sup>1</sup>hys bretherne sholde stande.
 When the frenshemen sawe that Ogyer, the dane, made there to long a soiournyng, they beganne all to calle and crye / 'Ogyer, ye make there to longe a sermon, <sup>4</sup> telle vs yf they wyll yelde theym or noo / or yf they shall deffende theym selfe.' 'Naye,' sayd Ogyer, 'as long as they have lyffe in theyr bodyes' / 'By my soule,' sayd the frenshemen, 'thenne goo we sawte <sup>8</sup> theym este agayne.' 'Thenne,' sayd Ogyer, 'I promyse you, I shall helpe theym with all my power.' Whan therle Guymarde herde Ogyer speke soo, he wente to hym, and sayd / 'We commaunde you in the kynges <sup>12</sup> name of Fraunce, that ye come to the batayll wyth vs, agenste the four sones of Aymon / As ye have promysed and sworne / and for doubte of you many a lorde is here in our companye that wyll not fyghte' / <sup>16</sup> 'Lordes,' sayd Ogyer, 'for god mercy / ye knowe all redy they ben my cosyns germayne / I praye you lete vs wythdrawe ourselfe abacke, and lete theym be in peas ; and I shall gyve eche of you large goodes.' 'Ogyer,' <sup>20</sup> sayd the frenshemen / 'we shall not doo soo, but we shall brynge theym prisoners to the kyng Charlemagne that shall doo wyth theym his playsure / and also we shall telle hym what ye have doon. Whereof / he <sup>24</sup> shall conne you lytyll thanke all his lyff.' And after whan Ogyer vnderstode these wordes, he was sore an angred / and sayd by grete wrathe, 'By the feyth that I owe to all my frondes, yf there be ony of you soo <sup>28</sup> hardy that take Reynawde or ony of his bredern for to delyver theym to kyng charlemagne I shall smyte of his hede, what somever come after it.' 'Ogier,' sayd the erle Guymarde, 'we shall not leve therefore, for <sup>32</sup> to take theym ryght shortly / And whan we have theym / we shall see who shall take theym from us / <sup>2</sup>for we shall well conne shewe this to the kyng Charle-

The Frenchmen
are angry with Ogier for his long
parley with the
Sons,

and prepare to assail them again.

Ogier declares his intention of helping his kins-
men,

and asks his men
to let the Sons go
in peace.

The Frenchmen
will not, as they are in the service
of Charlemagne.

Guymard rebukes
Ogier, and says
when these Sons
are taken prisoners, Charlemagne shall know
of his conduct.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. P. viii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. P. viii. back,

magne.' And thenne they began to sawte the roche agen. Wyte it that Reynawde & his bretherne deffended theym selfe full nobly. But whan Reynaude sawe this 4 grete multytude of folke that cam for to sawte theym / he beganne to saye / 'Ha, Mawgis, my fayr cosin / where are ye now that ye knowe not this myshap, for ye wolde come anone to helpe vs, but ye knowe it not ; 8 wherof I am evyll contente / For I was a foole and over hasty that I spake not to you of this matere afore that I cam here / Ha, bayarde, yf I were vpon your backe / I sholde never entre wythin this roche, for fere 12 of the frenshemen. But the kyng Charlemagne sholde lose here of the beste knyghtes of his company.' and whan he had sayd thys, he beganne to wepe full tendrely for the love of his bretherne, that he sawe soo 16 sore wounded & soo wery / Thenne the frenshemen sawted theyn efte as stronge agayn ; and I promyse you yf it had not be the grete prowes of reynawd they sholde have ben taken at that tyme by fyne force.
 20 Whan the sawtyng was fynsshed / Reynawd set hymself vpon his deffence ; for he was so wery, that yf he had goon he sholde have fallen doun to the erthe, soo weke he was, and that was noo merveylle, for they 24 had soo sore traveylled hym / and had suffred soo many tormentes & terrible sawtes that it was wonder they<sup>1</sup> cowde endure soo longe.

28 And whan Oger, the dane, sawe his cosyn soo sore tourmented, he toke hymselfe to wepe tendrely.
 And thus as he wepte, he bethoughte hymselfe of a grete wysedome, & called to hym a knyght of his that was named gerarde, and sayd to hym / <sup>2</sup>'have, for god, 32 mercy of me ; & <sup>3</sup>but yf ye doo that I shall telle you<sup>3</sup> /
 I am dishonoured for ever more' / 'sire,' said Gerarde, 'telle me what it please you / for it shal be doo

The Frenchmen
renew the assault.

Reynawde
bewails the absence of Mawgis

and Bayard,

and weeps out of pity for his brethren, who are so wery.

He sets himself
on his defence,

and nearly falls
through weariness.

Oger calls a knight named Gerard,

<sup>1</sup> they repeated in text.      <sup>2</sup> Girart, F. orig.

3-3 se vous ne faictes ce que vous diray, F. orig. n. iii. back.

and tells him to take XL. knights and go to Mount Hosity, and keep watch there, lest Mawgis should come to succour the Sons.

Ogyer does this that the Sons may not have to fight so many folk.

though <sup>1</sup> I sholde lose my liffe' / 'gramercy,' sayd Ogyer /
 'Now shall I tell you what I wyl that ye do. Take wyth you XL. knyghtes of the best of my felawshyp / and goo lightly to the mount Hosity / and kepe your 4 selfe therypon / and beholde towarde Mountalban all the ryght waye that noo body come but ye see hym / For yf Mawgys maye wyte by ony waye the mysfortune of his cosins, I promyse you that he wyll come to 8 socoure theym, and shall gyve vs moche a doo, soo that y<sup>e</sup> moste hardy shall be sore afrayed' / 'Sire,' sayd gerarde, 'this that ye have sayd shall be well doon' / and thenne he toke XL of y<sup>e</sup> best knyghtes of 12 his company, and went to the mount Hosity ; where they made not well theyr watche for the prouffyte of the frenshemen / Ye oughte here to wyte that Ogyer founde this manere to sende his men forth, but oonly that 16 Reynawde & his brethern sholde not have a doo wyth soo many folke ; and thoughte not of that that happed.
 ¶ But now levethe here the history, to speke of the foure sones of Aymon that were in the roche Mount- 20 bron. And also leveht to speke of Ogyer the dane, and of thother folke that Charlemagne had sent / and retorneth to speke of Godarde the secretary of the kyng Yon, that had red the lettres, where the trayson was 24 conteyned all playnly /

CHAPTER X.

¶ Howe after that Godarde the secretary of the kynge yon had rehersed all the treyson to Mawgys / that the kynge yon had doon 28 to his cosins<sup>2</sup> / Mawgis brought suche a

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. i.

<sup>2</sup> la quelle Il scauoit bien au long car Il auoit leues les lectres du roy charlemaigne et escripte la responce que le roy yon luy auoit surce faicte, F. orig. n. iii.

socoures to Reynawde & to his brethern, that he saved theym fro deth by his grete wysdom / Capytulum x.

4 Now sheweth the history, that whan Godarde sawe Reynawde & his brethern goo to their deth thorughe soo false a trayson / he had of it grete sorowe & pyte, and he was ryght sory for it / for two pryncypall 8 causes / <sup>1</sup>wherof thone was for his mayster, the kyng yon, that had wroughte that shamfull treyson / And thother was for the grete pyte & dommage that it was for to make deye so pytously suche worthy knyghtes 12 as the four sones of Aymon were / So began he to wepe pytously ; and thus as he wept, came there Mawgys, the cosin of the four sones of Aymon, that went to the kechyn for to haste the mete / for the kyng yon wold 16 ete, to the whiche men made good chere, bicause thei knewe not the trayson that he had doon / Whan the clerke sawe Mawgys, he called hym / and sayd to hym / ‘ Ha, mawgys, how it is yll wyth you / for yf 20 god put noo remedy in you, ye have loste that thyng that ye moost love in this worlde, that is Reynawde & his brethern / for the kyng yon hath betrayed them shamfully.’ And thenne he shewed to hym all the 24 trayson. whan Mawgis vnderstode these wordes, he was all oute of his wyttes, & sayd to the clerke, ‘ Godarde, for god goo away fro me / for all my lymmes shaken for angre, nor I can not stande vpon my feet, 28 for my herte telleth me that Reynawde & his brethern ben deed.’ ‘ Certes,’ sayd Godarde, ‘ ye saye trowth / For<sup>2</sup> the lettre sheweth that Ogier the dane & Foulques of morillon are set in a bushement<sup>3</sup> wyth a grete nombre 32 of folke in the playne of Valcolours / and Reynawde &

Godard weeps
 because of the betrayal of the Sons by King
 John,

and tells Mawgis
 of their sad fate,

and how Ogier
 and Foulques lie
 in ambush to attack them,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fer in Caxton.

<sup>3</sup> a tout deux mille cheualliers bien armez, F. orig. n. iv. back.

and how they cannot defend themselves without arms.

Mawgis is so grieved that he would have killed himself, but is restrained by Godard, who advises him to go to the rescue of his kinsmen.

Mawgis, without a word to King John, orders all
the soldiers in the castle to arm,

his brethern are goon thyder all vnarmed by the counseylle of kyng yon / and thus they can not defende / but they muste be deed or taken.' Whan Mawgys vnderstode this, he was sory for it, that he 4 felle doun in a swoune to therthe / and atte the fallyng that he made, he brake all his browes. and whan he was come agen to hymselfe, he was so sory that he wyste not what he sholde doo / So toke he a 8 knyff, and wolde have shoved it in his breste / but he myghte not / for Godarde toke hym by the handes, and sayd to hym / ' Ha, gentyll knyghte, <sup>1</sup>have mercy vpon you / kylle not yourself / for your soule shal be 12 dampned for it; but light a horsbacke, & take wyth you all the men of armes that ben wythin, and the good horse bayarde, that renneth so fast / and goo there as your cosins ben goon assone as ye may: and 16 whan ye come there, ye shall see anoone yf ye can helpe theym or not; for yf thei ben alyve, ye shall socoure them ryght well' / 'Godarde,'<sup>2</sup> sayd Mawgis,
'your counseylle is ryght good.' and thenne he began 20 to wepe, and sayd / ' Ha, noble knyghte Reynawde, it is grete dommage yf ye be deed / but I make my vow to god, that yf ye & your brethern be deed,
I shall never lyve two dayes after you' / And thenne 24 Mawgis, wythout ony noyse or<sup>3</sup> ony worde to be made of this to the kyng yon, nor his suster, the wyff of Reynawde / commaunded all the souldyou[r]es of the castell to be redy in armes lightly. and whan the 28 knyghtes vnderstode hym, they toke their harneys on Incontynent, as they were wount to doo / And whan they were all armed, they cam all to the loweste parte of the palays & presented theymselfe; and whan 32 Mawgys sawe theym, he shewed vnto them all the

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. ii.

<sup>2</sup> Sire, F. orig. n. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> or repeated in text.

traison that the kyng Yon of Gascoyn had doon to Reinawde and to his bretherne. and tells them of the treachery of the kyng.

Thenne whan y<sup>e</sup> knyghtes of Reynawd vnderstode 4 this, thei began to make suche sorowe that it was pyte for to see, and wysshed after the noble knyghtes that were gon to their deth / <sup>1</sup>and were so disperat that thei wolde almost have kylled theimself<sup>1</sup> / For thone 8 wysshed after Reynawde, & y<sup>e</sup> other after Alarde,<sup>2</sup> thother after Guychard, & thother after Richarde, and sayd, ‘Ha, valyant & pru knyghtes, it is grete domnage of your deth, for certenly all the world shall 12 be the worse therfore / Alas, & who shall gyve vs now the fair armes & the good horses that ye were wount to gyve vs?’ thus <sup>3</sup>as thei were makyng this grete sorow / mawgis sayd to y<sup>e</sup> palfreyner that kept bayerde / 16 ‘frende, goo & set the sadell vpon bayerde, and I shall bryng hym to Reynawde’ / ‘syr,’ sayd y<sup>e</sup> palfreyner / ‘I may not doo it / for Reynawde ‘my maister<sup>4</sup> commaunded me whan he went, that I shold not suffre no 20 body to lighte vpon it tyll he were com agen’ / whan mawgis vnderstode thanswere of the palfreyner, he was wroth / and smote hym wyth hys fiste so grete a stroke that he cast hym<sup>5</sup> at his fote afore hym, & after went 24 hymself to the stable where bayerde was / whan bayard sawe Mawgis, he began to shrynke his eeres, & smote wyth his forfete so strong that no body durst goo nyghe hym / <sup>6</sup>but the palfreyner that tended vpon hym. and 28 whan mawgis sawe that bayerde played so, he toke a staffe & smote bayard vpon the hede so that he made him knele to the erth. and whan bayerd sawe he was so curstly dealed wythall / he was a ferde lest he shold 32 be yet more shreudely handlyd, & so he helde hymselfe styll / and mawgis caste the sadel vpon hym, & brydled

The knyghts make great sorrow over the misfortunes of the Sons.

<sup>1-1</sup> et a peu quillz ne se desesperent . . . F. orig. n. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> Guichart, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Q. ii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>5</sup> Sur ses genoulx, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>6</sup> fors que Regnault ou le palefrenier, F. orig. n. iv.

Mawgis saddles
and mounts
Bayard,

and with five thousand men
issues out of the gate Fawcon,

and goes secretly
through the wood.

Reynawde sees
the approach of Mawgis from the
wood;
he is mounted
upon Bayard,
who flies like a swallow, leaping
xxx feet at each step.

hym.<sup>1</sup> And wyte it, that whan mawgis was vpon bayardis backe, he was well like a valyaunte man <sup>2</sup>& a hardy knyghte,<sup>2</sup> for he was one of the fayrest knyghtes of the world, & one of the best / and the moost subtyl <sup>4</sup> of the worlde. And whan mawgys & all his folke were <sup>2</sup>all redy a horsbacke<sup>2</sup> well armed / thei went out ate the gate fawcon. And they myght well be a bouthe V. thousande men well horsed & well armed, and 8 vii hundred good archers, that never wolde goo backe for noo doubte of deth by ony maner / <sup>3</sup>and they set theymsel to the waye / not by the right waye / but<sup>3</sup> went thourge the wode<sup>4</sup> all a coverte wyth grete <sup>12</sup> dyligence / And all wayes mawgys wente wysshynge after Reynawd and after his brethern, for he wyst not yf they were deed or a lyve / and sayd to hymselfe, 'Ha, Reynawde,<sup>5</sup> god be this day wyth <sup>6</sup>you / and kepe <sup>16</sup> you <sup>7</sup>& your bredern<sup>7</sup> fro dethe & fro prison! But now yf the frenshemen kepe not theymsel well / they shal have suche a neyghbour & so cruell that thei shalle soone wery of it, & shall sore repent' / Now shall we <sup>20</sup> leue to speke of maugis, that brought socours to Reynawde to the playn of Valcolours. and we shall shewe of Reynawde & of his brethern, that were at roche montbron full of woo & sori, for thei saw theymsel in <sup>24</sup> grete peryll / All thus as Reynawde dyde reste hymself vpon the defence of the roche, & thought in hym selfe what he myght doo / he torned his sight towarde the wood,<sup>4</sup> & sawe come mawgis wyth his folke, the shelde <sup>28</sup> at the necke, the swerd in the hande, & mounted vpon bayerde. wyte it that bayarde went not the lityll pase, but went lyke a sualowe / for at every lepe that he made, he lept xxx fote of grounde / and whan Reynawde <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1</sup> puis se arma et moxta dessus bayart, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>3-3</sup> Et se mirent a la voye hors le chemin, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>4</sup> de la serpente, F. orig. n. iv. <sup>5</sup> le filz aymon, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. Q. iii.

<sup>7-7</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. iv.

sawe mawgys com wyth so grete folke & so fayr a company, all his body shevered all sodenly for grete ioye / and forgate all the grete sorowe & tormente that 4 he had suffred all the daye, & sayd to his bredern / ‘Bredern, <sup>1</sup>be mery, & <sup>1</sup>be not dysmayed of no thyng, for here cometh mawgis for to socour vs <sup>1</sup>wyth a grete nombre of folke; <sup>1</sup> now he sheweth well that he is our 8 kynsman & a good frende: blessed be he of god that hath tolde hym the daunger that we were in’ / ‘Brother,’ sayd alarde, ‘is it trouthe that we shall have helpe anone?’ ‘Ye,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘by the feyth 12 that I owe to you.’ ‘Certes,’ sayd alarde, ‘now complayne I not’ / and whan Rycharde, that laye with his boweles betwene his handes, vnderstode this word, hym semed that he dremed this that he herde whiche 16 his brethern sayd / for he was all redy brought as one that had loste hys brayne / by cause of the grete sore that he felte, and forced hymself so that he righted hymself vpon his buttocke, but it was wyth grete 20 peyn / & sayd to his broder, ‘Reynawde, me <sup>2</sup>semeth that I have herde named mawgis, or elles it is come to me by a vision’ / ‘broder,’ sayd Reynawd, ‘by my feyth we have socours of mawgis, that bryngeth to vs 24 all the power of montalban’ / ‘Broder,’ sayd Rycharde, ‘for god, shewe me hym!’ And thenne Reynawde toke hym vp bitwene his armes, & shewed hym mawgis, that cam ridyng vpon bayarde as faste as tempest. whan 28 Richard saw mawgis he was so glad that he fell in a swoune bytwene his broders armes. and whan he was com agen to hymself, he sayd, ‘Now am I hole, for I fele nother yll nor sore’ / ‘Brother Rey-32 nawde,’ sayd alarde, ‘what shall we doo? For yf the frenshemen perceyve the comyng of mawgis, they shall fle, and I wolde for no good that they sholde doo so;

Reynawde encourages his brethren to be of good cheer, as Mawgis is comyng
 with succoure.

Richard enquires
 of the coming of Mawgis,

and is shown his approach from the arms of Rey-
 nawde;

he swoons with
 joy.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. Q. iii. back.

Alarde advises that they should avenge themselves on their enemies, by beginning the battle before Mawgis arrives.

The three brethren descend from the rock.

The Frenchmen think they come to yield themselves prisoners.

Ogier upbraids the Sons with folly for leaving the rock, saying they will be hanged by Charlemagne this day.

Reynawde counsels Ogier to flee lest he should slay him.

for I wolde that we were first avenged vpon theym for the grete hurt that they have doon to vs; but lete vs doo one thyng that I shall tell you / Lete vs goo doun to the fote of the roche & begyn the batayll / 4 and while that they shall fyghte wyth vs / mawgis shall be com / & by all thus they shall not scape vs' / 'broder,' sayd reynawde, 'ye saye well, & we shall doo so' / and thenne reynawd, alarde, & guycharde went 8 doun to the fote of the roche / and the lityll richarde bode above vpon the roche, for he cowde not move nor helpe hymselfe.

Reynawde cam doun fro the roche wyth his two 12 bredern; and whan the frenshemen sawe them, thei began to saye thone to thother / 'Here com the sones of aymon, that wyll yelde theymselvf prisoners / now lete vs not kylle them, but take we them for 16 to brynge them a lyve to themperour Charlemagn.' and whan they had sayd this / they began to crye / 'Reynawd, but yf ye wyll deye shortly / yelde yourself! and yf ye doo it wyth good wyll / we shall 20 all praye Charlemagn that he have mercy vpon you' / Whan Oger herde theym speke thus, he wende it had be trouth that reynawd & his <sup>1</sup> bredern wold have gyven theym self vp as prisoners / Soo was he full sori for it / 24 and spored brayford wyth the spores, & cam agenst reynawd & his bredern, & sayd to theym, 'knyghtes, I holde you now for foles, that ye have lefte your roche, that was y<sup>e</sup> sayng of your lif / this day shall ye be 28 hanged wyth grete shame / and yet I can not helpe you, for I shold be blamed of Charlemagn' / 'Oger,' sayd Reynawd, 'we be not suche foles as ye wene / but I wyll that ye flee. For by the feyth that I owe 32 to the olde aymon my fader, yf ye tary ony while here ye shall not be wyse / for yf I can reche to you / I shall shewe what I canne doo' /

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. iv.

This hangyng / that reynawd spake to oger, oger behelde towarde the right waye that cam fro the wode,<sup>1</sup> and sawe folke com to reynad, that mawgis 4 brought / and was all afore mounted vpon bayarde, that cam fast / And whan oger sawe com thus<sup>2</sup> the folke of reynawd in grete nombre, he knew theym well, and was right glad of it / and his hert rored 8 in his beli for ioye. and righted hymself vp<sup>3</sup> in his sadle wel halfe a fote, & sayd to his folke / 'Fayr lordes, what shall we doo / the devyl hath told mawgis that we be here. he cometh ridyng vpon bayard, & 12 bryngeth wyth hym a fayr company. Certes, yf we were xx. thousand, yet were we not able to fighte wyth theym, and ye shall see this day that the sorow shall retorne vpon vs' / This hangyng, cam mawgys wyth 16 all his felyshyp / and there where he saw oger, he cam to hym & sayd / 'Oger, I holde you for a fole by-cause that ye cam here to werke treyson. I challenge of you reynawd & his bredern, & am com here for to 20 be their surete. By god, oger, it longeth not to you for to betray thus reynawd<sup>4</sup> & his bredern<sup>4</sup> / for ye be of his lynage; but ye have yll shewed it to hym.
 your fader wroughte never treyson, and I merveyll me 24 sore how ye<sup>5</sup> wold graunt to it / your fader lefte you in fraunce for a pledge at saynt omers to Charlemagn, whos man ye are / paynge to hym everi yere four peny weyghte of golde / Oger, oger, ye be descended of 28 damp Richarde of roussillon, of dron of nantuell, of the duk benes of aygremaunt; all these were bredern, and good true men & feithfull knyghtes / and aymon of dordonne was theyr broder, & is fader to 32 reynawd / this knowe ye wel, and ye wyll be other than was your lynage; wherof I defye you to the deth /

Ogier perceives Mawgis and his folk

and with joye asks
his lordes what
they shall do
against so many
men.

Mawgis rebukes
the Dane for his treachery against the Soue,

and defies him to the death.

<sup>1</sup> de la serpente, F. orig. n. v.

<sup>2</sup> Mawgis et les gens, F. orig. n. v.

<sup>3</sup> dessus la teste de son cheval, F. orig. n. v.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. vi. back. <sup>5</sup> Fol. Q. iv. back.

for I hate you vtterly.' Whan mawgis had sayd this He spurs Bayard, worde / he spored bayarde wyth the spores, & smote Ogyer in the sheelde so harde that the sheelde nor his and wounds Ogyer severely, breaking his spear in the encounter. harnes coude not save hym / but that he made hym a 4 grete wounde in his brest / and of that stroke floghe the spere in peces. And whan oger sawe that / he was so sore an anged for it that he waxed almost mad, and wold have goon vpon mawgys, but he myghte not. 8
 For whan bayard smelled his lord / he ran myghtely Bayard will not stay longer, but runs towards his master, towarde hym / wold mawgis or noo. And whan he was com byfore reynawde, he kneled byfore hym / & and mawgis dismounts and embraces his kinsmen. mawgis lighted from hym, & cam to reynawd & kyssed 12 hym full swetly / and after he kyssed alarde & gycharde. And thenne sayd / 'where is the lityll rycharde? For men helde hym for one of the moost hardy of the worlde.' 'Cosin,' sayd reynawd, 'he is 16 there above sore wounded, that I wote not whether he be deed or a lyve.' 'cosin,' sayd mawgys, 'can not he move hymself' / 'it is not tyme to speke so long,' sayd reynawd / 'but lete vs see who shall doo best of vs all. 20 gyve me my horse & my armes.' 'with a good will,' sayd mawgys. and thenne reynawd armed hym & lighted vpon bayarde / the sheelde at the necke & the spere in the hande<sup>1</sup> / and whan he had said this he 24 spored bayard with his spores / and lept at everi tyme
 xxx. fote of lengthe / Whan reynawd saw hymself vpon bayarde he was right glad, for <sup>2</sup>he trowed never to have set vpon his backe agen,<sup>3</sup> and whan he sawe 28 hymself thus horsed & armed <sup>4</sup>wyth his owne armures<sup>4</sup> / so helde hymself more sure than that he had be in the maister towre of montalban / and thenne he made a course & ran vpon Oger, & smote hym so harde that 32
 he made hym lighte fro the sadle, and bare hym fiersly

Reynawde asks for his horse, and, having armed himself, mounts upon Bayard.

He runs upon Ogyer, and smites him fiercely to the ground, <sup>1</sup> et dist a ses freres. Freres, armes vous car le besoing en est venu, F. orig. n. vi.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. Q. v.

<sup>3</sup> et qu'il peust retourner en son premier estre, F. orig. n. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

to the grounde. & whan reynaude sawe oger a grounde / he lighted a fote, & toke the horse of ogyer & brought it to him agen, and helde the stirope, &
 4 made oger to light vpon brayforde agen / and thenne Reynawd sayd to hym / 'Cosin ogyer, now have ye the rewarde of the goodnes that ye dyde vnto vs / but, certes, this that ye have doon, ye dyde it as a traytour 8 & an yll kynsman / therefore kepe you fro me, for I defye you; and by hym that made y<sup>e</sup> worlde, I shall spare you nomore / for ye are slaundred' /

but afterwards
 dismounts and holds the stirrup
 for his cousin to mount again,

telling him to keep away, or he will be killed
 without mercy.

12 Cosin Reynawd,' sayd Ogyer, 'and we shall kepe vs fro you, doubtte ye not.' who thenne had be in that place, he shold have seen how Reynawd had medled hymself vygoriously among the frenshemen / and myght well saye that he was a knyghte <sup>1</sup>prue &<sup>1</sup> 16 valyaunt. And thenne cam mawgis vpon a nother horse that he had recovered, & spored hym with his spores, and cam to therle Guymarde, & smote hym thorughe the sheelde so that he shoved his spere 20 thrughe & thrughe his body / and felde hym doun deed to therthe. <sup>2</sup>And whan he had guyven that stroke he cried <sup>3</sup>'Montalban cleremount.' and after he sayd in this maner, 'Fre knyghtes, smyte vpon these frenshe-24 men, that wold slee the best knyghtes of the world; they have well shewed grete worthynes whan they be com heder in grete nombre fur to fight agenst four knyghtes vnarmed: but they shall repente theym of 28 their bargayn right sore, <sup>3</sup>or that two owres ben a goo<sup>3</sup> / & <sup>4</sup>therefore leye strongly vpon theim, & as harde as ye can / for yf oger scape vs, we be <sup>5</sup>dishonoured' /

Mawgis slays
 Earl Guymard,

calling on his banners, 'Mount-alban,' and 'Clere-
 mount';
 he commands his
 knyghts to fight
 valiantly, for if

Ogier escape they are dishonoured.

1-1 omitted, F. orig.

2-2 Et puis mist la main a son espee, et frappa ung chevallier qui auoit nom aliau, et luy donna sur son heaulme si grant coup, quil labact mort a terre. Et quant Il eut fait ses deux coups, Il escrie son enseigne, F. orig. n. vi.

3-3 omitted, F. orig. n. vii. back.

4 Lors dist a les gens, F. orig. n. vii. back.

5 Fol. Q. v. back.

and thenne began the striff fell and cruell; & many a frensheman was cast down to therth: For<sup>1</sup> they myghte not endure the grete merveylles of armes that Reynawde & his bredern made. And whan the frenshemen 4 saw that they coude not wythstande no lenger / and saw the grete dommage <sup>2</sup>& hurt<sup>2</sup> that Reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis bare to theym, they put theimself to flighte, and oger wyth theim, towards the ryver of 8 dordonne; and oger passed it over vpon his horse brayforde / and whan he was come at thother side of the ryver / he lighted a fote / and Reynaud called in a scorne, & sayd to hym / 'Oger, I trowe ye be becom 12 a fisser / have ye celes or sawmons? I gyve you leve to chuse whether ye wyll com agen at this side, or that I go to you at that side. and yf ye come agen at this side / I shall kepe you sauf from all men, but of me 16 onely / or els make me sure fro charlemagnes folke, & I shall passe over to yonder side & shall iuste wyth you' / and after sayd to hym / 'Ye horson false knawe, ye have falsed your feyth to Charlemagn, for 20 ye be my cosin germayn / And how had ye the hert for to see vs murtrished in your presence / and that ye defended vs not agenst all men / and ye come yourselfe for to slee vs by traison. Certes, oger, ye 24 have doon amys gretly / But thanked be god, ye leve wyth vs behynde you a good pledge / For here abideth with vs Foulques of morillon and therle Guimard / the whiche shall never make vs no werre; & more than vi.<sup>3</sup> 28 hundred of your frenshe knyghtes / evyll tydynges ye shall bere of theym to charlemagne and to Rowlande / and ye shall gyve theym an yll rekenynge of your men. And goddys curse have they yf they make not 32 you to be hanged as a theeff <sup>4</sup>by the necke.<sup>4</sup>

The Frenchmen
with Ogier fly
towards the river Dordogne.

Reynawde scoffs
at Ogier, asking
if he be a fisher,
and sells eels or
salmons;

he upbraids him
with cowardlice
and false faith
towards the
Emperor,

who shall hang
him as a thief.

<sup>1</sup> Fro in Caxton.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. n. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> quatre, F. orig. n. vii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>1</sup>Thenne were the frenshemen sore abashed whan thei herde reinaud repreve oger<sup>2</sup> so, wherof thei were glad,<sup>3</sup> & said to oger / 'well fynde ye now y<sup>o</sup> <sup>4</sup>rewarde of your goodnes! yf ye wolde have doon your devoyre, y<sup>o</sup> four sones of aymon had be taken' / & whan oger saw hymself thus repreved of thone parte & of thother, he was right sori for it / and thenne thei <sup>8</sup>lefte hym vpon the river side of dordonne; & abode wyth hym but V<sup>4</sup> men / and whan oger sawe that all his company had lefte hym / he knew well that they dyd so for dispyte. thenne said he all by hymself, <sup>12</sup>'Fayr god of heven, I am well worthy to be served thus! and the proverbe may well be reherced for a trouth, that sayth / "Often happeth evill for a good torne"' / whan oger had said this, he <sup>5</sup>cried & <sup>5</sup>said <sup>16</sup>to reynawd / 'O, mad beest, ye blame me wrongfully & wythout a cause, for ye & your bredern shold have be hanged by this wythout any pardonne / nor mawgys had never com here tyme ynoughe; wherof ye have <sup>20</sup>called me traytour / but ye lye falsly, for I never dide treison, nor never shall, yf god wyll. Ye have also called me fyssher, now ought I well to wexe mad all quycke, whan suche a gloton doth to me soo grete <sup>24</sup>owtrage / but by the feith that I owe to all my frendes / but yf I fered other than you / I sholde goo gyve you suche a stroke thorough the shelde that ye sholde saye it is a stroke of a maister.' ¶ Thenne said <sup>28</sup>reynaude / 'ogier, ye speke well at your ease / for ye shall doo no thyng at all of that ye say, leest your lymmes should be hurt' / 'by my berde,' sayd Oger, 'I shal' / And thenne he broched braiford with the spores, <sup>32</sup>and put hymselfe to swymme over the ryver. And whan he was come to the playn grounde / he made

The Frenchmen
 also repreve the Dane for not having slain the Sons.

Ogier laments
 over his evil
 fortune,

and telle Reynawde how wrongfully he blames him after his goodnes towards him.

He swimme
 over the river
 again
 on Brayford,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. vi.

<sup>2</sup> le dannoy, F. orig. n. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Lors dirent entreulx. Dieu soit loue de ses parolles, F.
 orig. n. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> dix, F. orig. <sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

and declares himself ready to fight.

Reynawde does not wish to begin the quarrel again, but Ogier will fight, so that men may not say he has betrayed the Emperor, and would rather die than return thus to Charlemagne.

Reynawde in great anger defies Ogier to the death, and runs so hard upon him that both their spears are broken, hym redy for to ioust as wete as he was. and whan reynawde saw oger so yll arayed for to fighte, he had pite therof / And said to him,

‘Cosyn, I have at this our no wyll for to fyght, 4 and therefore <sup>1</sup>goo your wayes agen, for this daye ye shall not be defoyled by me; now know I well that ye have holpen me’ / ‘Reynawd,’ sayd oger, ‘mocke not wyth me / Ye have called me traytour byfore many 8 knyghtes. yf I went my waye agen / men mighte saye to Charlemagn that I had betrayed hym falsly / My spere is yet all hole: it were a grete shame to me but yf I brake it vpon you or vpon one of your bredern / For 12 Foulques & therle guymarde shold complayne in helle vpon me / and of thother parte I shold have non excuse towarde the kynge charlemagn yf I went thus away / for ye have well slayne four hundred knyghtes of ours / 16 wherfore I saye for a conclusyon that I shall not goo my waye, but that I medle firste wyth you / for ye wote well that yf I wente thus my waye / the kyng Charlemagn sholde bere me som dishonour for it, & 20
he shold have rayson, & also he shold make me to be heded, and therefore I wyll fyghte wyth you / for, certes, I have lever dey than to retorne thus to hym / and yf god hath ordened that ye shall smyte of my hede, I 24 pardonne you my deth / for yf I can overcome you, I shall brynge you to the kynge charlemagn, what som- ever come of it.’

And whan reynawd herde ogyer speke so, he wexed 28 mad for angre, & sayd by wrathe / ‘oger, I defye you to y<sup>e</sup> deth, & kepe you fro me!’ ‘and you of me,’ sayd oger / And whan they had defyed eche other so, Reynawd spored bayarde, & Ogyer brayford, their good 32 horses, & ran thone vpon thother so strongly that the erthe trembled vnder their fete / and whan cam to laye the speres alowe, thei hit eche other so harde that they

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. vi. back.

brake their speres ; and after their speres were broken / they recounted eche other wyth theyr sheldes, & gaaf eche other so grete strokes that thei both fell down to 4 therth over the croper of their horses,<sup>1</sup> & were sore wounded. and whan y<sup>e</sup> two good knyghtes <sup>2</sup>sawe theimself at the grounde,<sup>3</sup> thei rose vp quyckly & set hande to their swerdes, & began to make so harde medelyng 8 that it was merveylle. But herke of their horses ! wyte that whan bayarde & braiforde sawe their maisters at the grounde / incontynent they went thone to thother / and began to byte eche other, & cast their fete thone 12 vpon thother. whan oger sawe that, he was ful sory for it / for he knewe well that bayarde was the stronger ;
 so ran oger thider, the shelde at his necke & his swerde in his hande ; for he wold helpe his good horse brai-16 forde, for he was a ferde that bayarde sholde have kylled hym. Whan reynawd sawe this, he cried & sayd / ' what is it oger that ye wyll doo ? it is not the werke of a knyghte to smyte a beest / and well me 20 semeth that ye have ynoughe to doo of me wythout ye bete not my horse ' / Thenne reynawd smote oger so grete a stroke vpon his helme, that he felde hym down to the grounde ; but the stroke slided a side & kyt a 24 sondre all that it rought well a hundred maylles of his flankarde, and wounded hym sore vpon his hippe / and yf the swerde had not tourned wythin reynawdes hande, oger sholde never have eten bred / and whan 28 reynawd had gyven to hym that stroke / he sayd to hym, ' ogyer, lete alone bayarde, for ye have ynoughe adoo wyth me / I beleve that I have apayred your helme / for I see your visage that is sore pale. ' and 32 whan oger felt hymself hurt / he wexed almost wood for angre / and returned to reynawd wyth his swerde and are finally unhorsed and much wounded.

Bayard and Bray-ford, like their masters, fight
 each other.

Ogier interferes,

knowing his horse
 will be slain.

Reynawde goes
 after him,
 and wounds him
 again severely.

<sup>1</sup> tieulement que de tieulle Iouste, F. orig. n. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. Q. vii.

<sup>3</sup> Sans faire demourance, F. orig. n. viii. back.

cortyne, and sayd, 'Ha, cortyne that so moche I have loved the, and, certes, it is wel rayson / for ye be a good swerde, & in many places ye have well holpen me, & many a proud man overthrowen / and whan I went 4 with charlemagn at estborwgh in almayn / Rowlande & Olyver dyde assaye their swerdes at Perron / And I smote after for to assaye you, And ye kytted therof well halfe <sup>1</sup>a fote, and there I brake you, wherof I was 8 right sori. But for the goodnes that I know in you, for to be amended agen, & therefore ye be called courten / and but if ye avenge me now of this gloton I shall never have no trust to you / and thenne he smote Rey- 12 naud vpon his helme so harde, that he made hym rele / and whan oger saw Reynaud thus arayed, he said to hym, 'by god, Reynawde, I have yelde you agen that ye had gyven me / we be now quyte: wyll ye begyn a 16 fresshe.' 'by my feyth,' sayd Reynawd, 'ye, for I desire more to fight than I do ony other thyng' / and thenne they went & ranne thone upon y<sup>e</sup> other and began a nother medelynge; but thenne cam there 20 alarde, mawgis, & guycharde, & all their folke / and whan oger sawe theim com, he was <sup>2</sup>wrathe & sory<sup>2</sup> for it / and so went he agen to brayforde, his good horse, & lighted upon him, & swymmed agen over dordonne. 24 and whan he was over, he abode still at the ryver side, & lighted down to therthe / but he had no sadel upon his horse, for the gyrthes brake whan he iusted wyth Reynawde / Whan Reynawd sawe brayforde sadeles, he 28 called to oger, & sayd, 'Oger, com fetche your sadell, for it shall be to you a grete shame yf ye ryde thus; and thanke our lorde that ye be thus departed fro me wythout ony more harme; for yf we had taryed a lityll 32 lenger togyder / I wold have broughte you in suche a place where ye were never; for the kynge Charlemagn, your lord, sholde never have rescued you in [t]yme' /

Oger appeals to his good sword to help him against Reynawde, and with a blow makes his kinsman reel.

They begin the fight again, but Mawgis, Alarde, and Guycharde approach, and Oger has to flee upon Brayford.

Reynawde asks him to return and fetch his saddle, and be thankful for his escape without more harm.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Q. vii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> moult doulant, F. orig. n. viii.

'Reynawd,' sayd oger, 'ye threten me of ferre / it longeth not to a good knyghte to threten one so; but I wote well that yf it had not be your folke that have 4 socoured you, I wolde have brought you to kyng Charlemagn or evyn.' 'Ogyer,' sayd Reynawd, 'ye have well shewed that ye be a good knyghte that passed y<sup>e</sup> ryver of dordonne for to com fight wyth me; but 8 shall ye tari there<sup>1</sup> for me tyll I passe over at thother side <sup>2</sup>vpon my horse bayard.' 'ye, vpon my soule,' sayd ogyer / 'and yf ye doo it, I shall saye that ye be the best knyghte of the world. Whan Reynawde vnder-12 stode that worde, he spored bayarde wyth the spores, & wold have passed over dordonne, but mawgis, alarde, & guycharde letted hym / and wold not suffre hym to goo, but toke hym by the brydell; and alarde sayd to 16 hym / 'Ha, fayr broder, & what is this that ye will doo / ye be overhasty / for who that dooth you goode, he leseth well his tyme. ye knowe well, and Oger had not be, we sholde have be ded this daye, and the 20 socours of mawgis had helped vs but lityll / Lete Ogyer be in peas, I praye you / for there is not a better knyghte in the worlde than he is one' / & thenne cryed alarde to ogyer / 'Fayr cosyn, goo to god / for ye have well 24 holpen vs' / whan alard had spoken to ogyer / he returned him to his broder Reynawd, & sayd to hym, 'Fayr brother, me semeth it were good that we shold torne backe agen, for to wyte howe our brother Richarde 28 dooth / that abydeyth vpon the roche mountbron so wounded as ye knowe. Lete goo our enmyes with shame ynoughe, for we have dommagd theym ryght sore.' Thenne called Ogyer to Reynawde / and sayd, 32 'ye have dyscomfyted vs / but by my faders soule, we shall come agen soo grete folke vpon you, that we shall bere to you grete harme, and so shall we take the proye / the whiche ye shall not dare defende' /

Ogier blames Reynawde for his injustice towards
him.

Reynawde wishes to pass over the river and fight
Ogier again,
but his brethren
prevent him.

Alarde commends
the conduct of Ogier in helping
them.

and counsels that they should return
to the rock where Richard lies.

<sup>1</sup> sur broyfort, F. orig. o. i. back.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. Q. viii.

'Now threten all fayr,' sayd Reynawd, 'for we have suche a castell where we dare well abyde Charlemagne / and you, at any owre that ye come / and also I telle you for certen that, or ever thre<sup>1</sup> dayes be passed / 4 ye shall never take vs for all that ye can doo. And how somever the game gooth, the losse hath ever be vpon you vnto this tyme / And also ye shall bere no goode tydynges to Charlemagne.' 8

Ozier departs on Brayford for the tent of Charlemagne.

¶ And whan ogier had spoken ynoughe to Reynawde / he spored Brayforde,<sup>2</sup> and wente after his folke that had lefte hym, and he rode soo long that he cam to Mountbandell, & lighted doun before the tente 12 of Charlemagn / and whan Rowland & Olyvere saw com Oger thus wounded & makyng so evyll chere / thei trowed that there had be a battayll ; and that oger had taken Reynawde & his bredern. and so thei dyde 16 call the duke Naimes, Salmon of breten, Rycharde of normandy, & therle Guydellon ; and when thei were all assembled / they sayd, thone to thother, 'Pour vnhappy, & what shall we do / this day shall we see hange the 20 four sones of Aymon / thei be cosins to vs all, and yf Charlemagn maketh them to be hanged / we be dyshonoured for ever' / And whan Charlemagn sawe com oger, he sayd to him, 'Oger, where ben the foure sones 24 of Aymon / have ye taken theym, or slayn them, or remysed theym for prysoners?' 'Syr,' sayd oger, 'all fair and softly, wyte it that they ben no children / but thei are the best knyghtes of the world / and they be 28 a lyve / I tell you, syre, that we fonde theym in the playn of valcolours / all four clothed in scarlet, furred wyth ermyns, & vpon mewles / and bare in their handes flowers & roses. well has the kyng yon of gascoyn kept 32 his covenant to you / for he hath sent theym forth in suche maner as he promysed to you / but worthynes

The barons think that Ozier has captured the Sons.

Charlemagne enquires whether the Sons are slain or taken prisoners.

<sup>1</sup> quatre, F. orig. o. i.      <sup>2</sup> des esperons, F. orig. o. i.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Q. viii. back.

& the proues was suche that they chaunged ther meules to gode horses, & recovered both shelde & spere. Ogier describes the Sons' wonderful prowess,
And whan Reynawd had gotten a horse / he slewe 4 foulques of morillon first of all, and mounted upon his horse<sup>1</sup> / but at the last they fonde a roche corven after the maner of a cave, that is a strong place / where they defended theymself a longe while ; and Rycharde, one 8 of their bredern, had be slayn / and thother thre shold have ben other taken or slayn, if mawgis had not com there to socoure theym, mounted vpon bayarde, & brought with hym V. thousande knightes,<sup>2</sup> whiche have 12 dyscomfyted vs, and have slayne therle Guymarde' /
'Ha,' sayd Charlemagne, 'that is it true that they ben so scaped.' 'syre,' sayd Ogier, 'ye, verely.' Whan the kyng vnderstode that reynawde & his 16 brethern were scaped, he was<sup>3</sup> right wrothe & full angry<sup>3</sup> for it / and sayd / 'Ha, good lord of glory / 'how am I shamed for four glotons ! certes this weryes me sore !
but no forse, lete theym doo the worst that they can, 20 for yf they have scaped me now, they shall not scape me a nother tyme' / 'Syre,' sayd Ogier, 'wyte it / but mawgys had not be, they cowde not have scaped.'
'goodys curse have he for it,' sayd Charlemagne, 'and 24 an evyll yere ; for often has he holpen theym agenst me / and soo I wote well, that yf I helde Reynawde & his brethern wythin my prison / Mawgis sholde delyver theym oute, and therfore I hate hym to deth, wherof I 28 praye you our lord that I deye not tyll I be first 'avenged of it.' 'Syre,' sayd Ogier, 'by the feyth that I owe to you / Reynawd gaaff me soo grete a stroke that the corner of my helme felle doun wythall to therthe, 32 and I promyse you I was well gladde whan I was scaped from his handes. For of thre thousande<sup>5</sup> that we

and how Rey-
nawde recovered
a horse, and slew Foulques,

and how they would all have ben slain, had Mawgis not rescued them with
v. thousand
knighte.

Charlemagne is very wroth when he hears of the Sons' escape,

and declares
his hatred for
Mawgis.

<sup>1</sup> puis nous les menasmes ung grant traict darc tous descon-fitz, F. orig. o. ii. back. <sup>2</sup> Fol. R. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> moult doulant, F. orig. o. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> avenged in Caxton. <sup>5</sup> cheualliers, F. orig. o. ii. back.

Ogier tells the Emperour of their great losses in battle.

Roland, in fierce anger, calls Ogier a coward for having spared the Sons.

Ogier, for this injury, tells Roland that he lies falsely.

broughte wyth vs, there are com agayn but thre hundred, and the surplus is all slayn or taken' / Whan Rowland vnderstode thise wordes, he shoke all for angre, & sayd by grete wraathe, 'By god, syre Ogier, 4 ye were sore hardy, for ye had noo felawes that dyd soo wel as ye dyde / but by saynt peter the postle / I saw never soo stronge a cowarde as ye be, nor never cam oute of Denmark a good knyghte.' 'Ha, hourson 8 cowarde kaytiff, how have ye ony eyen that dare beholde vpon a man / but a nother thyng there is / for ye have spared theym / for they ben your cosins & your frendes. Now be the kyng blamed, but yf he 12 maketh you to be hewen in all peces, for they sholde have ben take, if ye had not be' /

Thenne whan oger sawe hymselfe so reprevd/ he wexed all madde of the grete iniury that Row- 16 lande had sayd to hym soo / and answered boldly & sayd, 'Damp Rowlande, ye lye falsly of that ye saye; For I am not suche as ye telle / And here is my pledge for to defende me this quarelle agenst body to body; 20 for I nor none of my kyn dyde never amys agenste Charlemagn; but of all Fraunce I am one of the best & truest knyght that be in it; and of a better kynne I am come than ye be, Rowlande<sup>2</sup> / Gerarde of roussyllon 24 was myne vncl / he kept me of a lityll chyld; and Dron of nantuell & the duke Benes of aygremount; thise thre were brethern, the whiche were all myn vnclcs. And Myneus of aygremount was my fader / 28 and also the bisshop Turpyn & Rycharde of normandy ben my kynsmen / and thus are the four sones of aymon of my lynage. Now, good sire Rowlande, telle me your lynage, for I knowe your highnes; for by saynt 32 denys of Fraunce, I shall defende me agenst you wyth my swerde / and so shall I shewe to you yf I be true or no' / <sup>1</sup>Rowlande was thenne wouderfull wrothe / whan he herde ogyer speke so, and vaunced hymselfe agenste hym, & wolde have smyt hym / And whan ogyer sawe 4 hym come, he set hande to his swerde cortyne, & sayd to Rowland / 'Beware ye be not so hardy for to set hande vpon me, for by the feyth that I owe to him that begate me / I shall make the hede to fleo fro thy 8 body / yf ye come ony nerer' / Whan Charlemagn saw these two barons move theymselfe soo sore, <sup>2</sup>the one agenste thother<sup>2</sup> / he was right sory for it / And thenne rose the duke Naymes of bavyre, & therle Aymery, and 12 sayd / 'Syr Rowlande, what wyll ye doo / by my hede, the thyng shall not goo as ye trowe / For oger is not suche as ye make hym ;<sup>3</sup> and yf the kynge were not, the thyng sholde goo otherwyse than <sup>4</sup>ye wene / ogyer is 16 suche a knyghte as all the world knoweth ; nor in his lynage was never noo man borne that made treyson ;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Sire droit empereur, F. orig. o. ii.

 but he is the best knyghte in all Fraunce of all sides but we mervelle how Charlemagn suffreth you to take 20 so grete a pride vpon you. And yf he suffreth it / we wyll not doo so for no thyng that can come of it.' Whan Charlemagne sawe this grete noyse betwene his barons, he was right wrothe, & sayd to Rowland, 'Fayr 24 newew, lete this alone, for it longeth not to you to saye so / and betwene this & to morow I shall enquere of this matere ; and yf Oger hath doo amys in ony thyng agenste me, I shall make hym abyte it full dere / for all 28 they in the world shall not kepe hym, but I shall make hym beheded for it.' 'Syr,' sayd ogyer, 'I wyt well but there is in fraunce no man so prue ne so hardy / that shall saye that I have doon treyson agenst you nor 32 agenst ony other, but that I shall fighte agenst hym in the quarell / and shold shewe to hym that he lyed

Rowland advances towards Oger,
 and would have struck him, but Oger sets hand
 to his sword and threatens to slay
 him.

Duke Naymes
 and Earl Aymery interfere between
 them.

Charlemagne
 commands Roland to cease this quarrel,
 and says he will
 enquire into the matter.

Oger protests
 that he is innocent of all treachery towards
 the Emperour,

<sup>1</sup> Aultrement me conuendra mourir de dueil, F. orig. o. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. ii.

<sup>3</sup> et que vous le doyes batre ne oultraiger, F. orig. o. iiii.
 back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. R. ii.

and relates to
him all that happened at Mountbron,

falsly' / but and it plaise you to here me, I shall telle you the trouth of the mater<sup>1</sup> / Wyte it, syre, that whan I came to the roche Mountbron where the four sones of Aymon were, and sawe that we were so grete nombre 4 of folke agenst four knyghtes all vnarmed / I promyse you that I holpe theym not / nor I was not agenst theym / but wythdrew me aside & lete the other shyfte wyth theym / and I stode styll & behelde vpon 8 the grete sorow / For I sawe deye my flesshe & my blode, and I myghte not helpe theym of noo thyng / Now have I tolde you all the trouth / and all that I dyde / And yf ye fynde otherwyse than that I telle 12 you a fore all thise noble barons / I wyll be sore punysshed / but by the feyth that I ow to god, yf ever I fynde me in ony place where I maye helpe theym, I shalle helpe them wyth all my power, yf I shold lose 16 my hede for it. For all the worlde <sup>2</sup>oughte to hate me, by cause I faylled them atte theyr nede. For they ben my cosins / and ye, syre, have doon so moche to theym that it shold suffyse you, for they be not soo 20 moche giltly of that they be charged of as men make semblaunt; but by the virgyn Mary / as long as I shal lyve, I shall not fayll theym of that I maye doo. Over hasty was Rowlande for to have smytte me wrongfully / 24 and wythout ony cause, but I wyll well that he knowe that yf he sawe Reynawde mounted vpon his horse bayerde / he sholde not take hym for a ribawde, nor he sholde not dare abyde hym body to body, for all the 28 golde of spayne.' Whan Rowlande herde Oger speke thus / he sayd to hym, 'by god, Oger, ye have prayсед hym moche / and ye make hym wonderfull hardy / but I praye god that I maye ones fynde hym vpon 32 bayerde, his good horse, all armed from hede to too / for to knowe yf he be as valyaunt as ye make hym' /

and says he will
from henceforth help the Sons
whenever he shall find that they need it.

He blames Roland
for his hastines,

and vows he would not dare to meet Reynawde mounted vpon Bayerd for all the gold of Spain.

<sup>1</sup> Sans mentir de mot, F. orig. o. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. R. ii. back.

Wyte that god herde the prayer of Rowlande, for Rowlande not longe after that fonde Reynawde vpon bayarde, and I telle you that Rowland helde hym not 4 sith for noo rybawde nor for no knave / but toke hym for the beste knyght of the worlde / But the history levethe now to telle of kyng Charlemagn of Fraunce / of Rowland,<sup>1</sup> & of Oger the dane, and of the XII peres 8 of Fraunce that ben at y<sup>e</sup> sege afore Mountalban / and retorneth to speke of Reynawde, that was yll at ease for the love of Richarde, his brother, that was wounded to deth in the roche Montbron.

CHAPTER XI.<sup>2</sup>

12 [How by the succours that Mawgis brought to reynawd and to his bretherne into the playne of Walcoloures, they discomfited kyng charlemagnes folke, wherof Ogier had 16 many reproches of rowlande for some goodnes and favoure that he had shewed to reynawde and his bretherne at roche mountbron, and was therfore called trait-20 toure, wherof a great inconvenience came therof afterwarde afore king Charlemagne.]

Now sheweth the history, after that Reynawd had dyscomfyted the frenshemen / he retorned agen

<sup>1</sup> et de Olivier, F. orig. o. iii.

<sup>2</sup> The heading of this chapter is omitted by Caxton, and is therefore given here from Copland's Table: the French Edition of 1480 has it in the following form:

Comment, par le secours que maugis amena a Regnault et a ses freres es plains de Vaulx couleurs, Ilz des confirent les gens du roy Charlemaigne, dont ogier en eut mains reproches de Rolant pour aucune bonte quil auoit faicte a Regnault et a ses freres en la roche mombron. Et en fut ogier appellee 'traicte,' dont grant Inconvenient en vint apres devant Charlemaigne.

Chapitre .xi.

Reynawde returns
to the rock
Mountbron,

and weeps over
the sad state of Richard.

Mawgis comes
to the rock,

and is sorry when he sees Reynawde
weep thus.

He promises to cure Richard of his wounds, if Reynawde will vow to help him against Charle-
magne.

towarde roche mountbron, where he had lefte his brother Richarde thus wounded, as ye have herde / And whan he was come there, & saw his brother so horryble wounded / he cowde not kepe him from wepyng / and 4 sayd, ' Alas ! what shall I doo whan I <sup>1</sup> have lost my dere brother, the beste frende that I have in the world ?' and after he had sayd that worde he felle to the grounde from bayarde in a swoune. and whan alarde 8 & guycharde sawe their broder that was fall, they began to make theyr mone for Richarde pietously.
And whan Reynawde was com agen to hymselfe / he made grete sorowe wyth his two bredern, Alarde & 12 guycharde, vpon Richarde their brother, that laye vpon therthe wyth his bowelles betwene his handes. And this hangyng, cam mawgis vpon broykarre, his gode horse, the best that men wyste after bayarde / and 16 helde a pece of a spere in his hande / And whan he saw Reynaud make suche sorow, he was right sori for it. And whan he sawe Richarde thus sore wounded / he was wrothe, & had grete pyte for to see the wounde 20 that was so grete / for men sawe the lyver wythin his body. Thenne sayd he to Reynawd, ' fayr cosin, take hede what I shall say, & leve this sorow ; ye know wel that ye be all my cosins / and therefore we ought to 24 parforce ourselfe for to socour thone the other whan it is nede. I have socoured you many tymes / and wyte it that all the [h]arme that Charlemagn bereth to me / it is all thrughe your occasion / he slewe my 28 fader but late, wherof I bere yet at my hert grete hevynes, that was your vnclé that deyed for your love : that knowe ye well / But yf ye wyll promyse me afore all your barons for to com wyth me into the 32 tente of the kynge charlemagne, & helpe me to sawte hym for to avenge vpon hym the dethe of my sayd fader / yf we can, I shall delyver to you Rychard, evyn

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. iii.

now hole & sounde without any sore' / and whan Reynawde understode thise wordes, he cam to mawgis / and kyssed hym in the breste all wepyng, & sayd to 4 hym / 'Ryghte swete & fayr cosin, for god mercy, Delyver to me agen my broder Richarde hole, yf it playse you. And yf ye wyll that I <sup>1</sup>doo any other thyng for you / commaunde me, and I shall do it wyth 8 right good herte / For ye wote well that I dyde never any thyng that was agenst your wyll; nor there is no man in the worlde for whom I wolde doo so moche as I wold do for you.' whan mawgys sawe Reynawd 12 wepe so tenderly, he had grete pite of it, and sayd to hym, 'Now be not dysmayed of no thyng, fayr cosyn, for ye shall have Richarde hole & sounde incontynente.'
 And thenne he lighted down from his horse / and toke 16 a botell wyth white wyne, & washed the wounde of Rycharde ther wythall ryght well / and had awaye all the blood that was aboute / And be not merveylled where he gate all suche thynges as apperteyneth to this 20 cure / For he was the subtillest nygramancer that ever was in the worlde; and whan he had doon so, he toke his bowelles, & put theym agen in to his body / and thenne he toke a nedle & a threde / and sewed vp the 24 wounde full maisterly, and hurted not rycharde / and after, he toke a salve, he anoynted all the wounde / and as soone as the wounde was thus anoynted it was as hole as thoughe he had never be hurte in that place 28 of his body / And whan he had doon all this, he toke a drynke & gaaf it to Rycharde for to drynke / and whan Richarde had dronken it, he rose lightly vpon his fete, all delyvered & quyte fro his dysase / and sayd to 32 his bredern / 'where is Ogier goon and his folke / are they scaped from vs' / 'brother,' answered Reynawd,
 'we have dyscomfyted them, god gramercy, & mawgis, that cam to socour vs / for otherwyse we sholde have

Reynawde willingly consents to do all that his cousin may command.

Mawgis washes
 the wound of Richard with
 white wine,

and gives him a drink, which cures
 him immediately.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. iii. back.

ben all deed, and so he hath saved vs & our lyves at thys tyme. now ought we well to love hym more than our selfe.' 'broder,' sayd Richarde, 'ye saye trouthe' / and after, Alarde sayd to mawgys / 'fayr 4 cosin, hele me, I praye you / for I have a grete wounde in the thye.' 'And I also,' sayd Reynawde, 'for I 1 am hurt right sore' / 'and I also,' sayd guycharde, 'for goddys love gyve vs helthe to all vs' / thenne sayd mawgis to 8 them / 'be not dysmayed, my fayr cosyns / for I shall helpe you al anone' / Thenne toke mawgis of the white wyne wherof he had washed the wounde of Richarde / and washed their woundes to theim all / and after he 12 noynted them swetly, & anone they were all hole / And whan they were all guarissed / they made Richard to lighte vpon a horse, and put theymself to the waye, for to retorne agen <sup>2</sup>to montalban.<sup>2</sup> And thus as they 16 went on their waye,<sup>3</sup> a spye departed fro their felyshyp of Reynawde / and cam to montalban to the kyng yon, & sayd to hym, 'Sir, I bryng you tydynges / Now wyte that reynawd & his bredern ben scaped fro 20 the playn of valcolours, where ye had sent them; and they have dyscomfyted ogier the dane & all the folke of charlemagn, and also they have slayn foulques of morillon & therle guymarde / and soo many of other 24 knyghtes that I cowde not telle you the nombre.'

And whan the kyng yon vnderstode these tydynges, he was sore abasshed of it, that he wyste not what he sholde saye; and after he sayd, 'Alas, how 28 gooth this / here ben evill tydynges! how may this be / dyde they fynde the busschement of the kyng Charlemagne? 'sire,' sayd the spye / 'ye, certenly / and shold have ben cursedly handled yf mawgis their 32 cosin had not socourde them / And for the socours that mawgis broughte wyth him / Oger was dyscom-

Alarde and Reynawde also ask Mawgis to heal their wounds.

Richard mounts on horseback, and with his brethren and Mawgis return to Montalban. A spye goes from their company to King John with tidings of all that has happened, and of the succours which Mawgis brought to his kinsmen.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. iv.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. iv.

<sup>3</sup> a moult grant joye, F. orig. o. iv.

fyted, & all his folke of Charlemagne, soo that fewe of theym scaped / For mawgis broughte to Reynawd bayarde, his good horse / that was cause of all the harme 4 <sup>1</sup>that was doon there of the other parte<sup>1</sup> / 'Alas! vn-happy myschaunt,' sayd thenne the kyng yon, ' & what shall I doo / yf I abyde Reynawd, mawgis, alarde, guychard, & rychard, I am deed wythout doubt / for 8 all the world <sup>2</sup>coude not deffende me therfro. And also it were well righte nor Reynawd sholde doo but well, yf he slewe me cruelly / For I have well deserved dethe / for never Iudas ne the emperour Neron of Rome 12 made soo grete a troyson as I have doon, that wold have brought to a cruell deth the best knyghtes of the worlde, <sup>1</sup>that ben the four sones of Aymon,<sup>1</sup> for the thretynge of a prynce.' And whan he had sayd thise 16 wordes, he beganne to make grete sorowe / and sayd /
 'Ha, fayr suster Clare / this day shall departe our love / ye shall never see me more / This daye shall I forsake Gascoyn, for I shall never come agen therin' / And 20 thenne he cryed wyth an hyghe voys / 'Now goo hens, fayr lordes, for goddis sake / be lightly redy / For the nede of it is now com; and lete vs bryng with vs the beste knyghtes<sup>3</sup> that I and ye have. and yf we maye 24 doo so moche to gete the wode of the serpent, <sup>4</sup>whiche is a grete foreste, we shall be sauff ynoughe / and<sup>4</sup> we shall may scape at our ease / For we shall lodge ourselfe wythin an abbey of saynte Lazare / and we shall 28 take suche habyte as the monkes there have / And by all thus shall we maye be saved. For I knowe soo moche goodnes in Reynawd, that whan he shall fynde vs shoren as monkes / he shall do vs no harme' / 32 Thenne was there a spye, that was called Pygwade, that was soo grete that he had well XV fote of lengthe /

King John
deplores his evil
fate,

and compares himself to Judas
and Nero.

He commands
his knyghts to arm and fly with him to the wood
of the Serpent,

where there is an Abbey, in which they can enter
and become monks.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. v. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. R. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> chevaux que vous avez, F. orig. o. v. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. v. back.

A spy called Pigwade writes
all the words of John on parchment,

and goes to the
pavilion of the Emperor, where he calls Roland.

And tells him how John and his folk have fled to the Abbey,

and intend to become monks.

Roland swears to hang the traitor.

Pigwade say-
he has found Rey-
nawde and Mawgis, who come over the river towards Mountalban.

and wente as faste as any horse cowde trotte / This Pygwade had well herde all that the kyng yon had sayd / & wrote it in a skynne of parchemente / and wente lightly out of Mountalban at the gate, called y<sup>e</sup> 4 gate fawcon / and passed thurgh the wood of the serpent in a lityll while, And mette wyth Reynaud, his bretherne, and Mawgis, that came agayn to Mount-alban, that broughte wyth theym <sup>1</sup>a grete multytude of <sup>1</sup>8 prisoners; and Pygwade, that grete theeff watched vpon <sup>2</sup>theym. And anone he ranne as faste as he myghte to Mountbendel / and wente in to the pavylyon of Charlemagne, and called Rowlande / and sayd to hym, 'Syre, 12
I shall telle you such tydynges / wherby ye shall gete goode ynoughe, yf ye wyll beleve me / And I shall telle you a thyng wherof ye shall be right gladde' /
'Goode frende,' sayd thenne Rowlande, 'thou arte wel- 16
com to me / and what tydynges bryngest thou, telle me, I praye the.'<sup>3</sup> 'Syre,' sayd Pygwade / 'wyte it that the kyng yon fleeth awaye all vnarmed / he and all his folke, and hath wyth theym nother somer nor 20 mewle, but oonly their beste horses' / And they goo in to the wode of the serpente, in to a house of religyon, whiche is named saynte Lazare / and he hymselfe is delybered for to take the habyte and to be come a 24 monke / 'By my feyth,' sayd thenne Rowlande, 'I shall goo mete wyth theym anone wyth foure thousande knyghtes / And I shall avenge Reynawde and his brederne vpon theym / and I shall make theym to be 28 hanged as traytours / For I never loved tratours / nor never shal, and god wylle' / 'Syre,' sayd Pygwade, 'yet is there more / for I have founde Reynawde, his brethern, and Mawgis, that came over the ryver of 32 Balencou, that bryngeth wyth theym many prisoners of your folke / And yf ye wyll fynde theim, ye muste

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. R. v. <sup>3</sup> thee.

goo that waye' / 'Frende,' sayd Rowlande, 'ye have deserved a grete rewarde / for ye have broughte to vs goode tydynges' / Thenne Rowlande called to hym 4 Olyver / and sayd, 'Olyver, my goode & true felawe, lighte vpon your horse quyckely / and brynge wyth you Guydellon and Rycharde of Normande; and ye syre Ogyer of Danmarke, ye shall come wyth me, yf 8 it playse you / and ye shall see the grete prouesse of Reynawde, the sone of Aymon / And we shall take <sup>1</sup>wyth vs but foure thousande men, and yet Reynawde is fyve thousand well horsed and well arayed / And 12 thus we shall mowe fyghte wyth theym wythoute ony advantage.' 'Certes,' sayd Ogyer, 'I shall goo there to see howe ye shall have hym / And whan ye have taken hym, I promyse you to lende you a rope, yf ye 16 have neede of it' / And whan they had all devysed, they mounted on horse backe / and toke their waye, And the grete rybawde guyded theym streyght to the ryver of Balancon. And the kyng of Gascoyn rode thenne 20 thorughe the wodes of serpente wyth his folke / and he rode soo longe that he aryved at the monastery of saynte Lazare / And they prayed the abbote of the place soo moche, that he made theym monkes in the 24 devylles name / This hangynge, came there Rowlande and Olyvere wyth theyr folke, that entred anone in to the abbey. And whan the abbot sawe them, he came theym agenste, and all the covent syngynge, 'Te deum 28 laudamus.' And whan they had songe / the abbot sayd to Rowlande, 'Syre, ye be right welcome / wylle ye have ony thyng that we may doo?' / 'Lorde abbot,' sayd Rowlande, 'we thanke you wyth all our herte / 32 But wyte that we seke here the falseste traytour of the worlde / that men calle the kyng yon of Gascoyn / the whiche is here wythin; for I wyll hange hym like a theeff' /

Roland calls
 Oliver, and tells him to arm and
 come with V.
 thousand men to fight the Sons of Aymon.

King John rides
 through the wood,

and arrives at the monastery, where he is made a monk by the Abbot.

Roland comes to
 the Abbey,

and demands the person of King
 John.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. v. back.

The Abbot will not consent to yield him up.

Thenne answered the abbot / 'ye shall not, syre, and plaise you, for he is become our monke / and also he hath taken the habyte / And therefore we shall defende hym agenste all men.' Whan Rowlande herde 4 the abbot speke soo / he tooke hym by the hooede / And Olyver toke the pryour that was nyghe, & they shoved theym so prately agenste a pyller of marbell stone that their eyen lepte oute of their hedes. And 8 thenne Rowlande sayd to the abbot / 'Now mayster monke, delyver to me lightly that devyll the kynge Yon, whiche is the brother of Iudas, or elles I shall make an ende of you, For I have sworne that he shall 12 never doo treyson more' / Whan thabbot vnderstode this that Rowlande sayd to hym, he and all his monkes fledde awaye from hym. And whan Rowlande sawe this, he set hande to his goode swerde, Durandall, and 16 entred in to the cloystre, where he fonde the kynge yon knelynge byfore an ymage of our lady, And was cladde wyth the abbyt of religyon / and the hode vpon his hede / And whan Rowlande sawe hym / he knewe 20 hym well / For he had seen hym afore that wyth his vncl Charlemagn / Thenne he toke hym and sayd to hym, 'Syre monke, in the devylles name, conne ye well your lesson / arise vp wyth sorowe, and come wyth 24 me for to see the kynge Charlemagne; for he shall make you to be hanged as a traytour proved evyll kynge, and a felon / Where ben the foure sones of Aymon that ye sholde have delyvered vnto Charlemagn? ye 28 shall be payed for the trayson that ye have doon; and I wyth myn handes shall avenge Reynawde and his brethern vpon you.' And whan he had sayd this / he made the kynge Yon to be set vpon a horse / and 32 blynded his eyen <sup>2</sup>wyth a clowte, that he myghte not see noo thyng.<sup>2</sup> And thenne gaaffe hym the monkes hode vpon his hede / And thus satte in the sadle, the

Roland swears to kill him if he does not consent.

The Abbot and all the monks fly in terror.

Roland takes John, and reproaches him for his evil treachery aginast the Sons;

he blinds his eyes, and sets him on horseback with the monk's hood upon his head.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. R. vi.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vi.

face towarde the horse taylle / and the back forward.
 The kyng yon made none other thyng but that he wysshed styll after Reynawd and his brethern / and 4 sayd / 'Alas, and that I dyde grete harme / whanne that I consented to this mortalle trayson<sup>1</sup> / Now oughte I well to deye ten tymes yf <sup>2</sup>it myghte be soo<sup>2</sup> / For I have well deserved deth.' <sup>3</sup>Whan the kyng Yon had 8 sayd this, he sayd to one of his pryve counseyll that he herde nyghe hym, how well he sawe not, 'Frende, goo to Mountalban, and telle Reynawde that he com to socour me, for he is my man, and that he take no 12 hede to my trespase <sup>2</sup>& evyll dede<sup>2</sup> / but to his fraun-chyse. For yf he lete me deye soo, he shall be therof reprevd & blamed evermore, and his yssue shall be dishonourde by. And yf he can recover me / I wyll 16 that he make my tonge to be kyt of, wherby I dyd consent to the trayson / or elles my hede / yf it semeth hym good / for I have well deserved it agenst hym' / 'Syre,' sayd the knyghte, 'I shall not goo 20 there, for I wote wyll that reynawd wyll not set one fote forth for to save you, by cause of the grete harme that ye wold have doon to hym' / 'he shal,' sayd the kyng yon, 'for I knowe so moche by hym 24 that he shall not saye there agenst.' 'Syr,<sup>4</sup> I wyll themne goo to hym wyth a good wyll, sith that it please you; and god gyve that reynaude, his bredern, & mawgys wyll com & helpe you / for I know well 28 that ye have grete nede of it / but yf god helpe you' /
 This hangyng, olyver sayd to rowland / 'Rowlande, good felawe myn / what shall we doo with this vnhappy kyng?' / 'frende,' sayd Rowland, 'we shall 32 lede hym to mountfawcon / and we shall leve Balencon at the right hande' / And this they dyd, for to fynde

John tells one of his men, who is near him, to go to Reynawde and implore his assistance.

The knight consents to go.

Roland declares his intention of hanging King John at Monfaucon.

<sup>1</sup> comme ceste a este, F. orig. o. vi.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vi. <sup>3</sup> Fol. R. vi. back.

<sup>4</sup> dist le cheuallier, F. orig. o. vi.

reynawde & his bredern / for rowland was sore wyllinge to fynde reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis <sup>1</sup>his cosin.<sup>1</sup> 'Gode lord,' said oger the dane, 'by thy pite & mysericorde, graunt to Rowlande his prayer & <sup>4</sup> his wyll, that is that we maye fynde Reynawde, his brethern, & mawgis / for to see how rowlande shall bere hymself, and yf he shold take theym or noo / for I knowe well that none shall put down his pride <sup>8</sup> but onely reynawd.'<sup>2</sup> ¶ But here I leve to speke of Rowland, olyver, & of Oger, & of their folke, and of the kynge yon of gascoyn, that <sup>3</sup>they broughte wyth [them] for to be hanged, and retorne agen to shewe of <sup>12</sup>
 the foure sones of Aymon.

CHAPTER XII.

¶ How after that Reynawd & hys bredern were garnysshed of theyr woundes that they had in the playne of valcolours, they <sup>16</sup> went agen to Montalban. And how they rescued the kynge Yon from the handes of Rowlande.<sup>4</sup>

In this partye sheweth the history, that whan Rey- 20
 nawde & his brethern were well hole of theyr

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vi.

<sup>2</sup> le filz aymon, F. orig. o. vii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. R. vii.

<sup>4</sup> Caxton has left out part of the French original, which has:

"Mais quant le roy jon sceut leur destour, il sen fouyt, et sen ala rendre moyne en ung moustier qui estoit dedens le boys de la serpente, la ou rolant et olivier et ogier le dannois le trouverent, et le volurent faire pendre pour la trahison quil auoit faicte a regnault et a ses freres. Non obstant que regnault fut leur enemy. Mais regnault le recourut des gens de rolant."

Chapitre .xii.

woundes, by the helpe of Mawgys, that had heeled theym, they put theym selfe to the waye agayn towarde Mountalban. And whan they were come there / 4 my lady Clare wente agenste theym, and broughte wyth her two chyldren, Yonnet and Aymonet, that had wepte and<sup>1</sup> scratched their swete<sup>2</sup> vysages soo sore that there appered of theym nother eyen nor mouthes / 8 Alwayes they wyste not wherfore they dyde soo / for they were veri yonge. And she also was all dysfygured for wepynge, And of grete lamentacyons that she made, for she wyste well how<sup>2</sup> her brother,<sup>2</sup> 12 the kyng Yon, had betrayed Reynawd her husbonde and his bredern / and wende that they had ben deed.
 But whan she sawe theym come, she was never soo gladde. And the two chyldren ranne at their faders 16 fete<sup>3</sup> / and wold have kyssed theym. And whan Reynawde sawe theym, he shoved theym awaye wyth his fete soo strongly that he had almoste broste theym /
 And the lady wolde have taken hym in her armes and 20 kyssed hym, but he wolde not sufere her / and sayd to her / 'Lady, goo oute of my syghte to your brother, that fellon cruell and false traitour / for ye shall never have my love agen / for it hath not holden in hym / but 24 that we shold have be deed by this tyme, yf god & our cosin mawgis had not socourde vs / now goo after hym all a fote & wythout company / for ye shall not take<sup>4</sup> no thing of myn, & as an evyll woman ye shall 28 goo your way, for ye be the suster of y<sup>e</sup> gretest traytour & the vntruest kyng of the worlde / and I shall hang your chyldren / for I fere me leest they sholde be traytours as their vncler / 'Syre, for god mercy,' sayd 32 the lady, 'I shall swere to you vpon all halowes, that I had doubte of your goynge, and many tymes I dyde

The Sons and Mawgis arrive
 at Montalban,
 where the lady
 Clare receives
 them.

She is disfigured
 with weeping and lamentations for
 her husband,

but rejoices when she sees him
 again, and with her two sons
 hastily approaches
 him.

Reynawde with
 anger repels her,

and says she shall go after her evil
 brother on foot
 without escort,

and that the children shall be hung.

<sup>1</sup> end in Caxton.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> et de leurs oncles, F. orig. o. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. R. vii. back.

Lady Clare
implores for mercy, as she is entirely guiltless
of wrong,

and swoons at the feet of her husband.

Guycharde raises her from the ground, and comforts her.

Richard advises
that they should ask Reynawde to pardon her.

Alarde intercedes
with his brother,

telle you of it, thourghe thocccasion of the dreme that I dremed that nyghte / And I tolde you that ye sholde not beleve the kyng my brother. And, notwythstandynge that he was my brother / I doubted this 4 that is befallen sith. Syre, for god I crye you mercy / For in this I am noo thyng gylty / and soo god have mercy of my soule / For I love moche better the leest too of your fote, than all kyng yon my brother / 8 nor all the londe of Gascoyn.' And whan she had sayd this, she felle down in a swoune vpon the fete of Reynawde. And whan guycharde saw the lady in a swoune / he toke her vp, & sayd to her / 'Madame, 12 discomfort not yourselfe so sore; lete Reynaud saye his wyll / for ye be our owne lady, <sup>1</sup>& our suster<sup>1</sup> / now be of good chere / as longe as we be a lyve we shall not faylle you; & thoughe <sup>1</sup>our broder<sup>1</sup> Reynawd faylle 16 you, we shall not doo so / but we shall serve you wyth all our hert' / 'broder,' sayd richarde, 'lete vs doo one thyng / goo we praye our broder Reynawd that he pardonne my lady, our suster, his evyll wyll / for she 20 is not gylty in the mater / And yf we wold have belevd her, we shold not have gon on fote oute of this place / and now we oughte to shewe the grene & y<sup>e</sup> russet mauntelles of ernynes, the good horses & 24 palfreis that my lady dyde gyve vs, more oftener than dyde Reynawde. Now lete vs reward her for it / for she hath mystre of it / and at the nede the frende is knowen.' 'bi my feith,' said alard, 'ye saye well.' 28
And thenne wente the thre bredern vnto Reynawde, <sup>2</sup>and drewe hym a syde. and after, Alarde sayd to hym / 'Fair broder, for goddys love be not thus angry, for ye know that my lady hath noo culpe at all the 32 treyson that her brother, the kyng yon, hath doon to vs / For yf ye wolde have bylevd her, we sholde not

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. R. viii.

have goon thider / Wherfore we praye you that ye wyll pardonne her' / Thenne sayd Reynawd, 'my brethern, for the love of you I graunt the same, and I 4 pardonne her myn evyll wyll presently' / Whan the brethern vnderstode hym, they were right glad / and came agen to the lady Clare, and sayd to her / 'Madame, be of good chere, and make Ioye, for we 8 have made your peas' / And thenne <sup>1</sup>Alarde & Guy-charde<sup>1</sup> toke her by the handes, and broughte her to her husbonde Reynawd / and whan Reynawde saw her / he went and toke her by the chynne, and kyssed her.<sup>2</sup> 12 And thenne began the ioye & the feste ryght grete at Mountalban / And they washed their handes & went to their mete. And thus as they sat at the table, there came in the messenger of the kynge yon / that cam to 16 Reynawd / And whan he was afore Reynawd, he sayd to hym, 'Syre, the kynge yon sendeth you worde by me that ye come to socour hym / for otherwyse he canne not scape the dethe, For Rowlande & Olyver 20 ledeth hym for to be hanged at Mountfawcon. And doo this, syre, yf it playse you for god / and beholde not his evyll wyll / but take hede to your goodnes, for our lord pardonned mari magdalene & longys<sup>3</sup> of their 24 synnes. He knoweth well that he hath deserved dethe for the grete fawte that he hath doon to you; and yf ye slee hym, he pardoneth to you his dethe' /
 'Goddys curse have he,' sayd Alarde, 'that shall 28 G set his fote thiderward, nor that shall bye hym agen, though he myghte be had for a strawe / But goddys curse have Rowlande, 'yf he hangeth hym not as a traytour approved' / Whan Reynawd had herd this 32 that the mesager said, he loked downward, & studyed a goode while that he sayd noo worde. and whan he

and Reynawde,
 for the love of his brethern, consents to receive
 her again.

They all feast joyfully at Mont-
 alban.

A messenger
 arrives with the tidings of the capture of John
 by Roland,

and his appeal to Reynawde for help.

Reynawde thinks deeply when he hears this news,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. vii.

<sup>2</sup> par grant amour, F. orig. o. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Longius.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. R. viii. back.

had thoughte long ynoughe / he began to wepe, behold-ynge his bredern / For a good herte can not lye whan it cometh to a nede. Thenne sayd he a good raison as a noble knyghte / 'Lordes,' sayd Reynawd to his bredern 4 & to his knyghtes, 'Now here what I wyll saye to you / Ye know how I was dyssheryted at parys wrongfully vpon a feste of Penthecoste, that Charlemagn helde open court and full in his palays, where was a fayr 8 company of grete Iordes / For there were vii<sup>1</sup> hundred knyghtes, all gentylnen, bothe of name & of armes / and a hundred, what of dukes & of erles / and more than four<sup>2</sup> score bysshopes, and many barons. and that 12 tyme was slayne the duke Benes of aygremount, myn vncle, that was so goode a knyght, as men knew well. I dyde aske right for hym to Charlemagn afore all his courte / wherof the kynges rebuked me, <sup>3</sup>& 16 called me all to nought<sup>3</sup> / and grete iniury he sayd to me / And whan I sawe that the kyng reproved me thus, I was wrothe & right angry for it / And I behelde vpon my bredern, & knewe their stomackes / and sawe 20 myn ennyes byfore me / soo neded not that I shold have soughte theim elles where / And it suffysed theym not of that I had be owtraged by charlemagn / but that Berthelot owtraged me of newe, he & I 24 playng at the ches, Wherof I toke the ches borde, & smote hym wyth it soo grete a stroke vpon his hede, that I slewe hym <sup>3</sup>a fore my fete.<sup>3</sup> And Lews, another newewe of Charlemagn, wolde have slayn my broder 28 Rycharde, and had hurt hym all redi full sore / But I smote hym in suche wyse wyth my fyst that I felde hym doun ded afore me to therthe / and whan Charlemagne wyste of it / He wolde have made me <sup>4</sup>to be 32 kylled and hewed in to peeces / but my kynnesmen

and tells his brethren to listen to what he shall say to them.

He relates to them all his
 history,

and how he slew Berthelot at the court of the
 Emperor,

<sup>1</sup> Troys, F. orig. o. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> cinquante, F. orig. o. viii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. viii. back.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. S. i.

wold not suffre it / for there was grete medlynge, soo that many strokes were gyven. And whan the medlinge was ended, I mounted vpon bayard / and my 4 brethern I made to mounthe also, thone byfore, & the two other behynde me / <sup>1</sup>And thus rode we all four vpon my horse bayarde<sup>1</sup> / and so came to ardeyne / where I dyde buylde a castell. And there Charle-8 magne came & beseged me / and made swere my good fader Aymon that he shold never helpe vs wyth none of all his godes / <sup>1</sup>and that he shold be vtterly agenste vs<sup>1</sup> / and in likewyse he forclosed me fro all my kyn-12 men, that none of them was not soo hardy for to have shewed to vs the leest favour of the worlde. Fayr brethern, ye knowe well the grete poverte that we have endured soo longe tyme / And whan I sawe that 16 I wyst not where to goo / I cam in to this londe wyth suche a feliship, as ye knowe, and I spake to the kyng yon and shewed hym howe I had werre agenste Charlemagne; and he shewed me grete love, and made me 20 grete honour, soo that he gaaff me his suster to my wyff, and wyth her a duchye, and buylded Montalban for me. And of thother part, my chyldeyn are his nevews / wherof thone bereth his name / that is 24 Yonnet, and ye see them here / and I have saved hym, his royame & all his londe; and all his rebelles<sup>2</sup> I have made come to seke mercy of hym; and I fonde hym never in noo fawte / but Charlemagn is soo grete & 28 soo myghty a kinge, and also ye knowe well that he hath overcom & dyshonourde many good men / and for fere of hym, the kyng yon betrayed vs, wherof he is not to be blamed overmoche, seenge that agenste 32 charlemagne noo thyng hath power / And therefore, yf the kyng Yon delyverde me to Charlemagne, it was by evyll counseyll that some of his barons gaaf hym / <sup>3</sup>for and of the strife

which ensued;

his flight to Arden,

and his war with Charlemagne;

his interview with King John,

and his marriage
with the King's
sister;

how the treachery
of John arose
from fear of the Emperor,

<sup>1</sup>-<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. o. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> de son pays, F. orig. o. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. S. i. back.

and therefore there is reason
why he should
succour him now,
and not let him
be hanged as a thief.

Alarde declares that he will not go to the aid of a traitor, nor will Guycharde either.

Richard says that they shall do as Reynawde
desires.

god made never soo good a man, but that<sup>1</sup> he mysdoeth by evyll counseylle sometye / And how can I leve hym when I have not mystrusted hym afore tyme; me semeth that I oughte to shewe hym goodnes agaynst 4 felony. Therefore I praye you all, that ye wyll make you redy, for I wyll go socour hym / For it were grete reproche to my chyldren that theyr vncler sholde be hanged as a theeff / and it were to vs a grete dishonour, 8 for he is our lord. And yf he hath doon evyll, we ought to doo well agenst it / and also we oughte not to forgete the benefeyttes that the kyng yon hath doon to vs; and I promyse you that the fawte & the treyson that he 12 hathe doon, is not com thorough his malyce, but thorough evyll counseylle. For yf it had be oonly by his mocyon / I wolde see the herte from the body of hym / but I wote well nay / For Charlemagn is of soo 16 grete a power, that every man fereth hym. And therfore, I telle you that I wyll goo rescue hym <sup>2</sup>from Rowlande, yf I can,<sup>2</sup> wyth all my power.' 'By my feyth,' said Alarde / 'ye shall thenne goo wythout me / 20 for I shal not put my fete there / for a traytour oughte never to be holpen nor socoured' / 'Nor I,' sayd Guycharde; 'I shall not goo there.' 'Ye shall,' sayd Rycharde, '& it playse you, sith that Reynawd wil 24 have vs to doo so / For he is our lord and our wele / and therefore I praye you, fayr bredern, that ye wyll obeye hym.' Whan Reynawd had concluded that he sholde goo for to rescue the kyng yon agenste 28 the wyll of Alarde & of Guycharde, all y<sup>e</sup> Gascoynes that were there began to crye, & sayd, 'Blessed be the hour that ever Reynawde was borne / for noo man erthly ys worthe hym of goodnes & of prowes' / and 32 thenne they sayd to Reynawde, 'Syre, we shall gyve vp to you all the londe of Gascoyn / and shall make

<sup>1</sup> that repeated in text.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. i. back.

you the lord of it / For there shall be never none other lorde in gascoyn but you, as <sup>1</sup>long that ye shall lyve / so that for god, ryght swete syr, that ye suffre not the 4 kyng yon <sup>2</sup>to be had away <sup>3</sup>to Charlemagn; <sup>3</sup> for it were a grete shame to all them of the royaume of Gascoyn that men had hanged their kynges.' 'By my soule,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye saye trouthe' / And thenne he 8 toke his horne, & blew it thre tymes so strongly that he made all Mountalban to sowne wyth it / And incontynent, wythout abydyng, 'they of the towne' went & armed theym / and cam byfore Reynawd / 12 and whan they were all redy, Reynawde lighte vpon bayarde / the sheelde at the necke & the spere in the hande / and they were well in his felawshyp six thousande men on horsbacke, and well a thousande a 16 fote / And whan they were oute of Mountalban, Rey-nawd spake to his folke, & sayd to theym, 'Lordes, remembre you that your lorde is in grete daunger, and in perell of dethe; and but yf we fyghte strongly, he is 20 deed wythout remedy. Wherefore I praye you all, that ye doo this daye that / that shall torne to our worship.' And whan reynawd had sayd these wordes, he went agen towarde his bredern / and sayd to theym, 'Fayr 24 bredern, ye knowe that Rowlande hateth me to deth / and not through my defawte, but onely thorughe enuye.
 Wherefore, I praye you that ye attende vpon me this daye, and ye shall see me doo as a good knyghte; and 28 this daye the pride of Rowlande must be layd, or elles myn, a doun.' Whan Alarde herde his broder Reynawde speke so / he sayd to hym / 'And wherof care you? be sure & certeyne that as longe that liff is in 32 our bodyes, we shall not faylle you' / and wyth this worde thei put theym to the way. And Reynawd toke two thousande knyghtes, & gaaff theym to alarde

Reynawde blows
 his horn three times to summon
 his folk,

and mounts on Bayard, taking in his company
 vi thousand men.

Reynawde tells his brethren how he intends this day to lay low
 the pride of Roland.

He gives two
 thousand knyghts

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. ii.    <sup>2</sup> be to, orig.    <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. i. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> ceulx qui ouyent le son de la trompe, F. orig. p. i. back.

to Guycharde for the vanguard.

& guycharde, & sayd to theim, 'Fayr brethern, ye shall make the forwarde, & kepe your men in good ordenaunce; and I & my broder Rycharde shall make the reregarde' / 'syre,' <sup>1</sup>sayd Alarde, 'we shall doo 4 it well yf god wyll' / and thenne they rode forthe so long that thei sawe y<sup>e</sup> folke of Rowland nigh theim. and whan Alarde aperceyved them, he made his men to tari, & sente worde to Reynawd that he 8 sholde make haste to com / for thei had fonde their enmyes. And whan Reynawde wyst of these tydynges / he made his folke to ride hastely, & cam anone to Alard his broder. and whan he sawe his enmyes, he 12 put his folke in araye, and devysed his batailles honestly<sup>2</sup> as a good capitayn of werre. /

and Reynawde
marshals his folk.

Roland informs his lords of the coming of the
Sons and Mawgis.

Thenne whan Rowlande sawe so grete folke / he called to hym the bisshop Turpyn, & Guydellon 16 of bavyre, & sayd to theym, 'Lordes, now behold / I see yonder many folke armed / myght that be Reynawd & his bredern, wherof the renomme is so grete; & of their cosyn Mawgis, the subtyll knyghte?' 20 'Sir,' sayd the bisshop Turpyn / 'ye, they ben the verely / and also I telle you they make theymself to be well know wherscever thei goo; and I tell you that we can not save vs, but that we must medle wyth 24 theym.' Whan Ogier sawe Reynawde, he Ioyned & heved his handes towards heven, & sayd / 'O god, blessed thou be that hast suffred Rowland to fynde Reynawde, his bredern <sup>3</sup>& Mawgis!<sup>3</sup> certes, who that 28 gaf me a thousande marke of gold, I shold not be so glad, for Rowland hath now all his desire; <sup>3</sup>and, for certen, I am right glad that we have founde them.<sup>3</sup> Now shall I see how he shalle bere hymself agenst the 32 valyaunt Reynawd, his bredern / and Mawgis' / and whan he had sayd this / he torned hymself toward

Ogier is grently rejoiced when he sees Reynawde
and his folk;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. ii. back.    <sup>2</sup> Comme Il le scauoit bien faire, F. orig. p. i.
<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii. back.

Rowland, & said to hym, 'Rowland, now have ye that ye have desired so long! and I am glad that it is com so / for now shall I see how ye shall take theym / For 4 yf ye can take theym a lyve, & bryng theym to Charlemagn, he shall coñ you grete thanke for it; and so shall bayarde be your owne, that <sup>1</sup>ye have soo sore desired / and the werre shall be thus fynshed' / 8 'Ogyer, ogier,' sayd thenne Rowlande, 'thise ben reproches that ye telle me. But, by saynt Denys of Fraunce, ye shall see or evyn who shall be mayster of vs two' / 'Rowlande,' sayd Ogier / 'now shall it be 12 seen what ye can doo' / whan Rowlande knewe that he muste have medlyng wyth his enmyes / he ordeyned all his bataylle, as he cowde well doo / and after he set his folke in ordenaunce of bataylle, the 16 beste that he myghte / And whan Reynawde sawe that Rowland ordeyned his bataylles / he called his brethern, and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, here com the frenshemen : yonder is Rowlande & Olivere / and the duke Naymes 20 of bavyre, and Oger the dane; Ye shall abyde here for to make the reregarde / and yf we have mystre of helpe / come & helpe vs' / 'Syr,' sayd Mawgis, 'ye make to longe sermone / delyver you, for we tary to 24 long fro sawtyng<sup>2</sup> vpon our enmyes'<sup>2</sup> / 'Cosyn,' sayd Reynawd, <sup>3</sup>'ye say well, and<sup>3</sup> ye speke like a good knyghte / For yet have I no better knyghte than ye be one, whan I see you armed by me; now thynke 28 to doo well / for I goo firste of all for to overthrowe the pryde of Rowland, that is so grete, as every man knoweth / And I praye you all that everi man doo his parte wyth all his power.

32 And whan the bredern vnderstode that reynawd <sup>4</sup>wold goo prove hymselfe vpon rowland<sup>4</sup> / they he advises Roland to show his prowess in the capture of the Sons.

Roland swears he will do his best to win the battle.

Reynawde orders his brethern to keep in the rear until he has need of them.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. iii.      <sup>2-3</sup> Rolant, F. orig. p. ii. back

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> aler esprouuer sur bayart, F. orig. p. ii.

Reynawde is entreated by his brethren not to fight single-handed against Roland, beganne all thre<sup>1</sup> to wepe, & sayd / 'Ha, brother<sup>2</sup> / and wyll ye that ye & we be deed all atones? For ye can slee yourselfe noo better than to prove yourself vpon Rowland / For he is overmoche prue<sup>1</sup> & valiaunt,<sup>1</sup> and <sup>4</sup> also he can not be hurt wyth yron; but we pray you that ye wyll assaye yourselfe vpon the other, & lete rouland alone' / 'Lordes,' sayd reynawd, 'ye have spoken ful well. I knowe well that rowland is hardy <sup>8</sup> & prue, and that his <sup>3</sup>matche is not in the worlde of knyghtehode; but I am in the right / and he is in the wronge, whiche shall mowe tourne hym to a grete harme, and therefore I wyll not refuse / but that <sup>12</sup> I shall goo agenste hym / But and yf he wyll peas he shall have it / and yf he wylle have werre, <sup>4</sup>he shall fynde me redy to receyve him therto,<sup>4</sup> For I have lever deye than be longe syke. 16

but he will not listen to their counsel,

¶ Now I praye you speke noo more of it, but see that ye bere yourselfe well agenste our ennyes, For we have to doo agenste many a noble knyghte' / 'Cosyn,' sayd Mawgys, 'thynke to assaylle well, For <sup>20</sup> ye shall be socoured ryght well.' Thenne the worthy knyghte Reynawde wente afore all the other wyth his sheelde at the necke, and his spere in his hande, sittyng vpon bayarde<sup>5</sup> / Whan Rowland sawe Reynawde come wyth his folke well ordred / he shewed it to olyver, and sayd / 'Felawe, what thynke you by that folke? / see how they come towarde vs in good arraye' / <sup>6</sup>' Certes, Rowlande,' sayd Olyver,<sup>6</sup> 'Reynawd <sup>28</sup> knoweth more of werre than any other knyghte that lyveth, and the moost gracyous; For ther is none so poure a knyghte in the worlde, if he come to hym / but he shall be ryght welcome to hym / and yf he <sup>32</sup> come a fote, he shall set hym anone a horse backe.

and goes forth before his folk well armed

mounted upon Bayard.

Roland commends the prowess of Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.      <sup>2</sup> Regnault, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. S. iii. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> il laura, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>5</sup> que bien ressembloit cheualier a leure, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>6</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.

And yf he be yll appoynted / he shall anone araye hym after his astate. Is not this a grete goodnes of hym?'<sup>1</sup> / 'Ye, by my soule,' sayd Rowlande / 'and 4 he dooth well / For yf he dyde otherwyse, he myghte
 not abyde longe agenst myn vnclē Charlemagne.'<sup>2</sup>
 'And me semeth,'<sup>3</sup> sayd agayn Olyver,<sup>3</sup> 'that he hathe well thre tymes moo folke than we have, wherof he 8 myght well gete vpon vs / but yf we take better hede, for they ben well subtyll folke' / 'Olyver,' sayd Row-lande, 'ye saye trouth, but ye knowe well the gascoyns ben cowardes of veri kinde / and can not abyde no 12 stroke of swerde, but that thei will 'flee lightly away.'
 'that is true,' sayd the bysshop Turpyn, 'but they have wyth them a good guyde as ony is in all y' worlde. And wyte it, syr Rowland, that the valiaunt 16 man causeth his folke to abyde nyghe hym. For a worthy capytayn is the myrroure & ensaumple to thother for to doo well.' Whan Rowland herde this,
 he wexed almost mad / bycause men praysed Rey-20 nawde & his folke soo moche; & wyth this he spored
 his horse, and went byfore all his folke well the shot of a bowe ferre / and cam agenst Reynawd. And whan Reynawde sawe Rowland com alone, he sayd to 24 Alarde, 'Fayre broder, beware, vpon asmoche as ye love me, that ye move not, nor your folke; but abyde styll here till that I have iousted wyth Rowland, that cometh alone / and therfor I wyll no man helpe me 28 agenste hym' / Whan Reynawd had sayd this, he spored bayard wyth the spores, and came agenst Rowland so faste, that they that sawe it wende that bayarde had floughe in the ayer, For the smallest lepe that he 32 lepte, was of XXX fote ferre or more. And whan he was com nyghe Rowlande as for to have iousted /

Oliver fears the strength of the
 Sons.

Roland says the Gascons are cowardes, and are sure to run away

Roland is angry
 at the praise
 accorded to Rey-
 nawde, and spurs
 his horse towards
 Bayard.

Reynawde hastily
 approaches Rol-
 land,

<sup>1</sup> dist Olivier, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>2</sup> car trop est noble chevalier, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. S. iv.

Reynawde is entreated by his brethren not to fight single-handed against Roland, beganne all thre<sup>1</sup> to wepe, & sayd / 'Ha, brother<sup>2</sup> / and wyll ye that ye & we be deed all atones? For ye can slee yourselfe noo better than to prove yourself vpon Rowland / For he is overmoche prue<sup>1</sup> & valiaunt,<sup>1</sup> and 4 also he can not be hurt wyth yron; but we pray you that ye wyll assaye yourselfe vpon the other, & lete rouland alone' / 'Lordes,' sayd reynawd, 'ye have spoken ful well. I knowe well that rowland is hardy 8 & prue, and that his <sup>3</sup>matche is not in the worlde of knyghtehode; but I am in the right / and he is in the wronge, whiche shall mowe tourne hym to a grete harme, and therefore I wyll not refuse / but that 12 I shall goo agenste hym / But and yf he wyll peas he shall have it / and yf he wylle have werre,<sup>4</sup> he shall fynde me redy to receyve him therto,<sup>4</sup> For I have lever deye than be longe syke. 16

but he will not listen to their counsel,

¶ Now I praye you speke noo more of it, but see that ye bere yourselfe well agenste our enmyes, For we have to doo agenste many a noble knyghte' / 'Cosyn,' sayd Mawgys, 'thynke to assaylle well, For 20 ye shall be socoured ryght well.' Thenne the worthy knyghte Reynawde wente afore all the other wyth his sheelde at the necke, and his spere in his hande, sittyng vpon bayarde<sup>5</sup> / Whan Rowland sawe Rey- 24 nawde come wyth his folke well ordred / he shewed it to olyver, and sayd / 'Felawe, what thynke you by that folke? / see how they come towarde vs in good arraye' / <sup>6</sup>' Certes, Rowlande,' sayd Olyver,<sup>6</sup> 'Reynawd 28 knoweth more of werre than any other knyghte that lyveth, and the moost gracyous; For ther is none so poure a knyghte in the worlde, if he come to hym / but he shall be ryght welcome to hym / and yf he 32 come a fote, he shall set hym anone a horse backe.

and goes forth before his folk well armed

mounted upon Bayard.

Roland commends the prowess of Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.      <sup>2</sup> Regnault, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. S. iii. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> il laura, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>5</sup> que bien ressembloit cheuallier a leure, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>6</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.

And yf he be yll appoynted / he shall anone araye
 hym after his astate. Is not this a grete goodnes of hym?'<sup>1</sup> / 'Ye, by my soule,' sayd Rowlande / 'and 4 he dooth well / For yf he dyde otherwyse, he myghte
 not abyde longe agenst myn vnclē Charlemagne.'<sup>2</sup>
 'And me semeth,'<sup>3</sup> sayd agayn Olyver,<sup>3</sup> 'that he hathe
 well thre tymes moo folke than we have, wherof he 8 myght well gete vpon vs / but yf we take better hede, for they hen well subtyll folke' / 'Olyver,' sayd Row-lande, 'ye saye trowth, but ye knowe well the gascoyns
 ben cowardes of veri kinde / and can not abyde no 12 stroke of swerde, but that thei will 'flee lightly away.'
 'that is true,' sayd the bysshop Turpyn, 'but they have wyth them a good guyde as ony is in all y<sup>e</sup>
 worlde. And wyte it, syr Rowland, that the valiaunt 16 man causeth his folke to abyde nyghe hym. For a worthy capytayn is the myrroure & ensaumple to thother for to doo well.' Whan Rowland herde this,
 he wexed almost mad / bycause men prayسد Rey-20 nawde & his folke soo moche; & wyth this he spored
 his horse, and went byfore all his folke well the shot
 of a bowe ferre / and cam agenst Reynawd. And whan Reynawde sawe Rowland com alone, he sayd to 24 Alarde, 'Fayre broder, beware, vpon asmoche as ye love me, that ye move not, nor your folke; but abyde styll here till that I have iousted wyth Rowland, that cometh alone / and therfor I wyll no man helpe me 28 agenste hym' / Whan Reynawd had sayd this, he spored bayard wyth the spores, and came agenst Rowland so faste, that they that sawe it wende that bayarde had floughe in the ayer, For the smallest lepe that he 32 lepte, was of XXX fote ferre or more. And whan he was com nyghe Rowlande as for to have iousted /

Oliver fears the
 strength of the
 Sons.

Roland says the Gascoyns are
 cowardes, and are
 sure to run away

Roland is angry
 at the praise
 accorded to Rey-
 nawde, and spurs
 his horse towards
 Bayard.

Reynawde hastily
 approaches Rol-
 land,

<sup>1</sup> dist Olivier, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>2</sup> car trop est noble chevallier, F. orig. p. ii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. ii.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. S. iv.

and alights on
foot,

and presents his sword to Roland,
kneeling before
him;

he begs him to remember his kinship,

and says he will give him Bayard

and forsake
France, if peace
may be accorded between him and Charlemagne.

Roland says he cannot make peace unless Mawgis is delivered up to the Emperor.
Reynawde will not do this,

Reynawd lighted doun a fote / & pyghte his spere in therth, And bounde bayard therat, bycause he shold abyde there stille / And vngirte flamberge, his<sup>1</sup> swerde, and cam before Rowland & presented it to hym, 4 and kneled afore hym & kyssed his fote, and sayd all wepyng / 'Damp̄ rouland, I crie you mercy for that pite that our lord had in the crosse vpon his moder whan he comended her to saynt Ioh̄n, that ye wyll 8 have pyte vpon me. Ye knowe well that I am your kynsman, and, how be it I am poure, yet shal I be and my brethern your men / And also I shall gyve you bayarde, and shall make you lord of Mountalban, so 12 that it wyll plase you to purchase our peas wyth the kyng Charlemagn your vncle; and, yf it playse you for to doo so I shall make all<sup>2</sup> my bretherne to graunte the same, And I shall forsake fraunce all my liff / And 16
I promyse you that<sup>3</sup> I shall goo in to the holy londe<sup>3</sup> wyth Mawgis and my brethern for to make werre agenste the sarrasins.<sup>4</sup> And yf ye thynke that I saye well / brynge it aboute yf ye canne. For yf ye doo it 20 ye shall have a felawe and a servaunt of me.'

Rowlande had grete pyte whan he herde Reynawd speke in this manere, And beganne to wepe full tenderly / and after sayd to hym, 'By god, Reynawd, 24 I dare not speke of it, but yf soo be that ye wyll delyver vnto hym Mawgys' / 'Alas,' sayd Reynawd,
'I shold never doo that, for to deye for it, For Mawgys ys no man for to be gyven awaye for to have peas.' 28 And thenne he rose vp and toke his swerde & his sheelde, And came to bayard and mounted vpon hym wythoute styrope / and thenne he toke his spere in his hande / And whan he was well appareylled, he 32 wente agen to Roulande, and sayd to hym / 'Row-

<sup>1</sup> bonne espeé, F. orig. p. iii. back.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. S. iv. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> Iray oultre mer, F. orig. p. iii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Tres doulx sire, F. orig. p. iii. back.

lande, wye that I shall never more crye you mercy, for fere that I have of you / But I have cried you mercy for to bere you worship, by cause that ye be of my 4 kynne / But sith that I see that ye be so proude that ye wyll doo noo thyng for me / nor for my prayer. I shall mowe deale resonably wyth you / to the ende that ye shall not mow reporte nor saye to the other barons 8 and knyghtes of Fraunce / that Reynawde the sone of Aymon hathe cryed you mercy for fere / The caas is suche / ye have wyth you a grete company of folke /
 .And also I have of my side men ynough, thanked 12 be god / and yf our folke asemble togider / it canne not be otherwyse, but that grete harme shall falle of bothe sides. But, and ye wyll, we shall fighte, we two togyder, for theym all, wythout ony helpe of 16 other / and yf ye overcom me, ye shall bryng me to charlemagne / that shall <sup>1</sup>doo his playsure of me / And yf I can conquere you, ye shall com wyth me to Mountalban, under condycyon that ye shall have 20 nother evyll nor shame / no more than shall my owne persone' /

but proposes that they should fight together single-handed, and whichever shall win shall be prisoner of the other.

' Shall ye doo this that ye have sayd?' sayd Row-lande / 'ye, wythoute fawte,' sayd Reynawd / ' By 24 mi hede,' sayd roulande, 'ye shall make me sure therof fyrst' / ' Certes,' sayd Reynawde, 'wyth a god wyll' / And thenne Reynawd sware it vnto hym vpon his parte of paradys.<sup>2</sup> 'Reynawd,' sayd rowlande, 'I wyll 28 go take leve of my felawe Oliver / for I have promysed hym that all the bataylles that I shall vndertake, he shall mow make theym hymself, yf it playse hym.'
 'Go thenne,' sayd Reynawde, '& make it short.' and 32 thenne Rowland went agen to his felawes / And whan he was com to them / hector, the sone of oedon, olyver, & ogyer the dane, asked of hym, saenge / 'Syr

Roland consents, and departs to take leave of Oliver;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. v.

<sup>2</sup> de tenir loyaulment ce que auoit este devise, F. orig. p. iiii.

he relates to his friends the proposal of Reynawde.

Oliver agrees that either he or Roland must fight.

Bishop Turpin and the other Earls oppose the fight, and advise that their armies should decide the victory.

Roland willingly agrees to this, and commands the advance of his folk.

Rowland, what sayeth Reynawd? have ye spoke wyth hym?' 'ye,' sayd rowland / 'and what thynke you by hym?' 'Certes,' sayd rowlande, 'reynawd is a sage knyght & well taughte / for he hath requyred me to 4 fyghte wyth hym body to body / and that our folke be styll of the one syde, and of the other' / 'Rowlande,' sayd olyver, 'ye shall doo in this your playsure / for other ye or I must fyghte wyth hym / But I 8 counseyll that ye go there / for as longe as I shall lyve, I shall not be enmye to Reynawde, onely for his worthynes. For Reynawde is a knyghte of grete honour' / Whan the bysshop turpyn, ector the sone 12 of odeon, & thother erles herde this, they began to saye, 'Rowland, what is that ye wyll doo? For god mercy, doo it not, for reynawd is of your linage & of ours; and yf ye brynge hym to dethe / we shall 16 never love you after / sire, leve that of're that reynawde gyveth to you, & make your folke to assemble wyth the folke of reynawde, for it is <sup>1</sup>better that they be take of your folke, than that the one of you two were deed.' 20 'wyll ye that it be so?' sayd rowland / 'ye, sir, yf it playse you' / 'certes,' sayd roland, 'it playse me right well' / and thenne he sayd to all his folke / 'Lordes, thynke to defende you well / for it is now nede 24 therof' / 'Syre,' sayd thother, 'have no doubte of no thyng, for we shall do well your commaundement' / and thenne thei put theymself in ordenaunce. and rowland began to crie 'mountioye, saint denys' / and 28 whan cam to y<sup>e</sup> setting on wyth speres, Ye shold have seen thenne many a knyght brought to grounde, & many horses that ranne masterles thrughe the feeldes, so moche that it was grete pite for to see so grete a 32 dystructyon of knyghtes as was made there. Whan reynaud save the two oostes muste assemble togyder / he spored bayarde wyth the spores, & put hymselfe

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. v. back.

amonge the thyckest of the frenshemen / and smote a knyghte so harde in the breste that he overthrewe bothe horse & man to the grounde ; and after smote a 4 nother soo sore, that nether for sheelde nor for quyras
 1 of stele<sup>1</sup> he let not, but that he shoved the yren of his spere thurgh & thurgh hys body / and fell deed to itherth / and wyte at that stroke he brake his spere.
 8 and reynawd set hande lightly to his swerde, and began to crie ' Mountalban ' as lowde as he cowde. And thenne he made so grete slaughter of frenshemen that none durst abyde afore hym, but fled fro him as fro
 12 the deth. Shortly to speke, reynawd dyd somoche thurgh his strengthe / and thurgh the highe knyghthode of his brethern, that he brake the firste bataylle of the frenshemen / wolde they or noo /
 16 Whan the lityll Rycharde / the brother of Reynawde, sawe that the Frenshemen were putte a backe / He beganne to crye on heygthe ' Ardeyne ' as moche<sup>2</sup> as he myghte. And put hymselfe in to the 20 greteste preesse<sup>1</sup> amonge his enmyes,<sup>1</sup> and beganne to make soo grete hewynge of folke that it was wonder to see / For Reynawde faughte not for to loke the better vpon hym. And thenne Rycharde, that thoughte hym
 24 selfe never wery of gevyng of strokes, beganne to calle vpon his broder, and sayd, ' Reynawd, fayr broder, where ben your grete strokes goon that ye were wonte for to gyve<sup>1</sup> vpon your enmyes?<sup>1</sup> Alas, smyte
 28 now vpon them / for they ben almost overcom ; make that the frenshemen, full of pryde, mocke not of you / and soo make we suche a thyng that it be spoken of it vnto Parys ' / Whan Reynawd herde Rycharde 32 speke thus, he began to smyle / and after he smote bayarde<sup>1</sup> wyth the spores<sup>1</sup> / and beganne to smyte better than he dyde afore. Who that had seen thenne his grete strokes departe / he myghte well have sayd that

Reynawde fights in the thickest of the battle, and makes the Frenchmen flee before him.

Richard cries on high ' Arden,' and fights as valiantly as Reynawde.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. iv. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. S. vi.

The Frenchmen
cry to Roland
to defend them.

no carpenter smotte never soo well in wood as Reynawde dyde vpon the helmes<sup>1</sup> of stele<sup>1</sup> and vpon the sheldes of the frenshe men / And whan the frenshemen sawe that the dyscomfytur turned vpon theym, they 4 beganne to calle Rowlande / and sayd to hym / 'Ha, Rowlande, what doo ye / whi come ye not and helpe your folke / For they ben deed, but yf ye socoure theym.' Whan Rowlande vnderstode that worde, 8 wherof he was wrothe / <sup>2</sup>and ryght sory<sup>2</sup> / And whan he sawe his folke soo sore handeled / He beganne to crye 'Mountioye saynte Denys.' And after spored his horse, and entered in to the medlee; And wente here 12 and there, cryenge, 'Reynawd, where be you goon / See me here; I am all redy for to doo the bataylle, my body agenste yours, that ye aske of me.' Whan Reynawde herde Rowlande, that called thus after hym / 16 He put flamberd<sup>3</sup> in to his sheeth; And<sup>4</sup> toke a spere in his hande, and cam there as Rowlande was, & sayd<sup>5</sup> to hym / 'Where are ye, Rowlande? be ye a ferde of me, that ye have taryed soo longe for / Beware your self 20 from me!' 'And you of me,' sayd Rowlande. And thenne they spored theyr horses,<sup>6</sup> and dyde iouste the one agenste the other. And whan the frenshemen and the gascoyns saw that, thei withdrewre them selfe 24 from eche other, for to beholde the ioustyng of the two worthy knyghtes / For, to saye the trouthe, there were not two other suche in all the worlde / and the two knyghts prepare to joust together.

Whan Salamon of Bretayne / and Ector, the sone 28 of Oedon, sawe that the ioustyng of Reynawde and of Rowlande was begon, they set theym selfe to wepe full tendrely; and came to the duke Naymes, to the bysshop Turpin, and to Olyver, and 32 sayd to theym / 'How, lordes, may ye suffre that one 1-1 omitted, F. orig. p. iv. back.      <sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. iv.

<sup>3</sup> son espee, F. orig. p. iv.

<sup>4</sup> et prent une lance courte et grosse, F. orig. p. iv.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. S. vi. back.      <sup>6</sup> des esperons, F. orig. p. v. back.

of the beste knyghtes of the worlde / and hym that we oughte to love beste, be slayne and deed before you.’
 ‘Certes,’ sayd the duke Naymes, ‘that shall be grete 4 sorow to vs for to see’ / And thenne he cam to Olyver, and sayd to hym / ‘I praye you that ye goo to Rowlande, and telle hym from vs all, that he oughte not to fyghte wyth Reynawde wyth the swerde / But lete hym take 8 a spere and breke it vpon reynawde ; for to acqyute his feythe / For yf he slee Reynawde we shall never love hym after’ / ‘Lordes,’ sayd thenne Ogyer, ‘lete this alone / ye knowe not Reynawde so well as I doo / 12 Reynawde is noo childe for to be made a ferde soo lightly as ye trowe. Lete theym shyfte hardely, <sup>1</sup>they two togyder,<sup>1</sup> For, by the feyth that I owe to you / Rowland shal be all wery or ever he retourne agayne / 16 And he shall be as fayne to leve the bataylle as shall Reynawd. And ye shall see that Rowlande wold he had not gon there, for the best cyte that themperour Charlemagn hath.’ ‘Oger,’ sayd ector / ‘ye speke of it 20 as for enuye / certes yf ye shold fight wyth rowlande, ye shold <sup>2</sup>well saye otherwyse’ / And thenne he sayd to Olyvere / ‘Good syre, lete this bataylle be deferred yf ye maye be ony wyse.’ ‘Lordes,’ sayd Olyver, ‘wyth 24 a goode wyll, sith that ye will have it soo’ / And thenne he wente to Rowland, and sayd to hym all that the barons had sayd. ‘Felawe myn,’ answered Row-lande / ‘god confounde theym / for they take awaye 28 this daye the desyre of myn vnclé Charlemagne’ / And thenne he tourned hym towarde Reynawd, and sayd to hym / ‘Syre reynawd, ye have assayed of my swerde / and not of my spere.’ ‘Rowlande,’ sayd Reynawd, 32 ‘yf ye leve your swerde I shall conne you nother thanke nor gramercy for it / For I fere you not of noo thyng / but lete vs make an ende of our bataylle /
 And to whom god gyveth the vycory, lete him have Naymes counsels

 Oliver to go and prevent the combat between Roland and
 Reynawde.

Ogyer is anxious that the fight
 should continue.

Hector begs Oliver to let the combat be deferred.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. v. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. S. vii.

Roland will not fight with a sword, but runs on Reynawde with his spear.

They break their spears in the encounter, and Roland is unhorsed,

through the fall of Melantes.

Roland prepares to kill Melantes for having fallen, but Reynawde interferes, and prevents him.

it' / Rowlande wolde not doo soo, but dyde like as a curteys man / and he dyde as the barons had sent him worde. For he toke a spere, and ran vpon Reynawde as moche as he myghte / And whan Reynawd sawe he 4 wolde none otherwyse do, he ranne also <sup>1</sup> wyth a spere<sup>1</sup> vpon Rowlande / And roughte eche other sore wonderfull harde that they made theyr speres to flece all in peces. And whan they had broken their speres, they 8 recounted eche other wyth their sheldes so strongly that bothe theyr horses, that is to wyte, Melantes & Bayarde, stakerde / and were all a stonyed ther wythall / But wyth that stroke Rowlande & Melantes<sup>2</sup> were 12 both felde to the grounde in a hepe / And Reynawd passed forthe by theym, cryenge 'Mountalban' wyth a hye voys. Wherby I telle you, for certeyn, that Rowlande never felle down for no stroke of spere, but 16 onely that tyme / but it was no mervyllle / For he cowde not holde hym selfe by the clowdes / syth that his horse had faylled hym

Thenne whan Rowland saw hymselfe thus over- 20 thrown, he was not well contente, & rose vp incontynente and toke his swerd in his honde, And came to melentys to kit of his hede / And beganne to seye / 'Evyll courser, who kepeth me that I kylle the 24 not<sup>4</sup> / sithe that thou haste lete falle thyselfe through the stroke of a childe, I shall never trust the' / 'Soo helpe me god, Rowland,' sayd Reynawd, 'ye do <sup>5</sup>to melantis grete<sup>5</sup> wronge, For it is longe sith that he ete 28 ony mete / and therefore he can not well traveylle / but bayarde hath eten well to nyghte that was, and therefore he is more strong than is your horse'<sup>6</sup> / and thenne Reynawd lighted down fro bayard / bycause that Row- 32 land was a fote. and whan bayarde sawe his mayster

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> Son cheval, F. orig. p. v. <sup>3</sup> Fol. S. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> not repeated in text.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. v.

<sup>6</sup> Benoiste soit leure que oncques fut ne, F. orig. p. v.

a fote, he ran vpon melantis, the horse of Rowland, and smote hym wyth his hinder fete soo grete strokes that he had almost broken his thie / whan rowlande 4 sawe that, he was wrothe for it, & cam towarde bayarde for to have smyte of his hede. And whan Reynawd saw that / he sayd to Rowlande / 'What wyll ye doo ? it is no worship to you to smyte a beest ; and yf ye wyll 8 doo ony fayt of armes, com to me & not to my horse, for I shall gyve you strokes ynowe, so moche that ye shall be wery of it or we departe ; but kepe well that I slee not you / and leve bayarde in peas, for there is not 12 in all the worlde another so good a beest ; For he dyd shewe it well whan he wan the crowne of charlemagn your vnclie in your presence / and yf he doth helpe me, he doth but his devoyre, & that a good horse ought to 16 doo ; but torne your sheelde towarde me, & ye shall see how Flamberde cutteth.' 'Reynawd, reynaud,' sayd Rowlande, 'threten not soo moche, For before this daye be com at an ende / ye shall see a thyng 20 that shall not playse you over moche' /

Bayard attacks Melantes, to the great anger of Roland.

Roland advises Reynawde not to boast so much until the day is finished.

Reynawde was not contente whan he vnderstode the yll wordes of Rowlande, and shoke all for angre ; <sup>1</sup>and Incontynente ranne vpon Rowlande, and 24 gaaff hym suche a stroke vpon his helme that he all to brused it ; and the stroke slided vpon the shelde soo that he cut of it a grete quarter, and of the courset of stele also, but he cut no thyng of the flesshe / And 28 whan Reynawde had gyven Rowland that stroke, he sayd in maner of a mocke to Rowland, 'what saye ye bi my swerde / doo it cut well or no ? for I have not myssed at that stroke / Now kepe ye well fro me / for 32 I am not suche a chylde as ye take me for' / Whan Rowlande felt that grete stroke that Reynawd had gyven to him / he was all merveyllled of it / and wythdrewe hymself abacke / for he wolde not that

The fight begins again, and Reynawde smites Roland severely.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. S. viii.

Roland with his sword cleaves the shield of Reynawde.

Reynawd shold have recovered a nother stroke vpon him sodenly / and set hande to durandall, his good swerde, & ran vpon Reynawd / and reynawd helde his sheelde agenst it / & Rowlande smote in to the shelde 4 so grete a stroke that he clove it bi the myddes thrughe & thrughe / and the stroke descended vpon the helme, & dyde it no harme. and whan Rowland had made that stroke / he sayd to Reynawd, 'Vassall, ye be now 8 quyte / for I have yelded you agen that ye lended me right now / Now shall I see who shal begyn agen.' 'By my soule,' sayd reynawd, 'fowle fall have I now yf I feyne me now / For I dyd but play afore; nor 12 your fraunchise shall never avaylle you agenst me, but that I shall bryng your pride al doun to therthe.' 'Reynawd,' sayd rowland, 'yf ye doo this that ye saye, ye shall werk merveilles' / And all thus as they 16 wold have begon agen the batayll, soo cam there Mawgis & all his company, and sayd to Reynawd / 'Cosin, mounte vpon bayarde / for it were to grete a losse yf you or Rowland were ded.' And there came 20 Ogier and Olyver, and made Rowlande to lighte agayne vpon his horse. But wyte it well that Ogier had not be soo gladde yf one hadde gyve to hym <sup>1</sup>a <sup>2</sup>grete<sup>2</sup> cyte, as he was be cause that Reynawde had cast doun 24 Rowlande <sup>2</sup>& his horse<sup>2</sup> / and whan they <sup>3</sup>had recounted roulande<sup>3</sup> / they began agen a sore batayll & a cruell / and so felle that it was pite for to see / for thone hewe the other wythout ony mercy / And whan Rowlande 28 saw that the batayll was begonne agen / his hert dide swell for angre bycause that reynawd had overthrowen hym to the grounde. soo began he to call as hie as he myghte, 'Where are ye goon, Reynawd the sone of 32 Aymon? goo a side & lete vs parfornysse our batayll, for men knowe not yet whiche is the beste knyghte of Mawgis and all his company appear and prevent Reynawde from renewing the strife.

Ogier and Oliver take Roland away.

The battle commences between the two armies.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. 8. viii. back.    <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. vi.

<sup>2-3</sup> eurent monte roland, F. orig. p. vi.

- vs two' / 'Syr,' said Reynawde, 'ye have the corage of a knyghte that wyll conquere honour / but & we fichte here togyder, our folke shall not suffre it / But 4 lete vs doo one thyng that I shall tell you; ye be well horsed, & I am also, lete vs bothe swimme over the river & goo to the wode of the serpent, for ye can not wysse no better place for to fichte / and we shall not 8 be there departed, thone fro the other, of our folke, but <sup>1</sup>we shall maye fyghte there togyder tyll the one of vs two be dyscomfited & overcome' <sup>1</sup> / 'Certes,' said Row-lande, 'ye have well spoken, and I graunt it as ye have 12 sayd.' and thenne they spored their horses for to go to the wood of the serpent. but Olyver toke hede to theym / and toke Rowland by the brydell & wythhelde hym, wold he or noo. and Reynawd went for to have 16 passed over the river vpon bayarde, that ran as the wynde, & waloped so harde that he made all therthe where he passed to shake vnder hym; and as he ran in this maner / he loked afore hym and sawe the kyng 20 yon, that was avyronned wyth well four score knyghtes, that kept hym for fere of Reynawd, leste he & his brederen shold have rescued him / & thise knyghtes ledde him shamfully, as ye have herd afore. and whan 24 reynaud saw y<sup>e</sup> kyng, he was glad of it, & sayd / 'Ha, good lord, blessed <sup>2</sup>be thy name, whan ye have graunted me so fayr adventure,' and wyth this he set hande / to his swerde, and spored bayarde wyth the spores / and 28 cryed as hie as he cowde / 'lete go the kyng yon, evyll folke that ye be / For ye be not worthy to laye hande vpon hym.' and thenne he entred wythin theym, & smote a knyghte vpon his helme so rudely that he 32 clove his hede to the harde teeth / and overthrewe hym deed to therthe / And whan the other sawe

Reynawde proposes to Roland
that they should go to the wood of the Serpent, and
there end their combat.

Oliver again interferes, and prevents Roland
from going there.

Reynawde on his way to the wood
meets King John,

and demands the knights to release
him;

he slays one of them, and the rest
are discomfited.

<sup>1</sup> et la pourrons finer nostre bataille, et a qui dieu en donra lon ne, si le peigne car ceste le meilleur selon mon aduis, F. orig. p. vi. <sup>2</sup> Fol. T. i.

Reynawde amonge theym / they put theymselfe to flighte / and sayd the one to thother / ' The devyll hath broughte this cruell<sup>1</sup> man here now / lete vs flee ; goddis curse have he that shall abyde hym / For the soule of 4 hym that wylfully suffreth hymself to be slayn shall never come to the mercy of god' / And thenne they put [t]heymself in to the thyckeste of the forest, and lefte behynde theym the kinge yon, that they lodged as 8 a prisoner / and Reynawde cam streyghte to hym / and vnbounde hym and vnstopped his eyen, and after sayd to hym / ' Ha, evyll kyng / how have ye the hert for to betraye vs so falsly, as ye have doon me & my 12 bredern ; dyde we ever ony thyng that was in<sup>2</sup> your dysplaysur / It is not longe on you, but that we shold have ben all hanged by this / but I shall smyte of your hede, evyn anone / and shall avenge me & my bredern<sup>3</sup> 16 vpon your body' / Whan the kyng yon sawe Reynawde, that hadde delyverde hym, he kneled adoun byfore hym, & sayd to hym / ' Certes, noble knyghte, it is well rayson that men slee me ; Wherof I praye 20 you, for god, that yourselfe wyl<sup>4</sup> take the liff fro me, and<sup>4</sup> cut of my hede / and lete it not be doon by none other / and pulle out my tonge, wherwyth I spake the trayson / For I have well deserved gretter martyrdom. 24 and all this made me doo therle of Ansom / and the erle Anthony / Now slee me, for god / for suche an evyll man as I am oughte not to lyve longe. I have moche lever<sup>5</sup> that ye kylle me<sup>4</sup> wyth your swerde,<sup>4</sup> 28 than that cruell kyng Charlemagn<sup>4</sup> shold make me to be hanged.<sup>4</sup> ' Now light vp,' sayd Reynawde, ' for ye shall be well payd as ye have deserved.' But here leve I to speke of kyng Yon & of Reynawd, that ben in the 32 wood of the serpent / where he taried after Rowlande

Reynawde un-binds the eyes of John, and reproaches him
 for his treachery.

John confesses that he deserves
 to be slain,

but begs Rey-
 nawde to beheld
 him, rather than Charlemagne
 should have him
 hung.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. vii. back.      <sup>2</sup> m. in text.

<sup>3</sup> chetif serorge et mauvais homme que vous estes, F. orig.
 p. vii. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. vii. back.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. T. i. back.

for to fighte wyth hym, as he had promysed hym / & shall retorne to speke of Rowland & of Olyver, that spake to their folke for to telle them a part of theyr 4 besines, and how they had ben dyscomfyted.

CHAPTER XIII.<sup>1</sup>

[The xiii. chapter sheweth, how that after Reynawd had succoured kyng yon, was the 8 same houre a merueyliouse battaylle betweene Reynawde and the frenshe men. For Rowlande was there sore beten and many other, wherof Ogyer was glad by-
 12 cause that Rowlande had called him traytoure; And also he knewe that the foure sonnes of Aymon, were not for to be so lyghtelye ouercomen, as men had sayde
 16 afore. And for this cause there had been a sore medle betweene Rowland and ogyer, yf it had not be the other barons, that departed them, and in this recountre Rycharde 20 the brother of Reynawde, abode for prisoner of Rowlande.]

In this parte sheweth the history, that after Reynawde was departed fro the bataylle for to go 24 fighte body to body agenste Rowlande, the newewe of Charlemagne, in the wood of the serpent / Rowland Olyver & the dane Ogyer faughte agenst Alard, Guycharde, & the lityl Richarde, agenste Mawgis & 28 agenste their folke / and the batayll was there so sharpe & soo fell of one parte & of the other / soo that

<sup>1</sup> The heading of this chapter is omitted by Caxton, and is therefore given here from Copland's Table: Ed. 1554.

The folk of Roland are overcome by the Sons and
Mawgis.

Ogier jeers at Roland for his discomfiture;

they would have fought, but are parted by Oliver.

Richard defies Roland, whom he meets, and prepares to fight
him;

he is overthrown,

but remounts and

grete hurte & scathe was there made of bothe partes / but at the laste the discomfyture torned vpon Row-lande / and vpon his folke. In somoche that Row-lande & Olyver were constrayned by force for to goo 4 backe agen all dyscomfyted / for the thre brethern & Mawgys made agenst theim so grete efforte of armes that they gate the pryce that daye / And then as Rowland went backe agen all dyscomfyted, he bare his 8 hede lowe, for he was a shamed that he had be soo rebuked / And thenne<sup>1</sup> Ogier sayd to hym / 'Lord Rowland, who hath arayed your sheelde of this facyon?
I see your horse hurte in the thye, & vnder the croper / 12 he was felled vpon the right side, and you also / it is well seen on your side. I trowe that ye have founde reynawd the sone of Aymon. have ye brought him wyth you / where have ye put hym' / Whan Row- 16 lande vnderstode that reproche that Oger made vnto him / he wexed almost <sup>2</sup>madde for angr / Soo toke he his swerde, and ranne vpon Ogier for to have smytte hym vpon the hede / But whan olyver sawe this, he 20 toke Rowland by the brydelle / and the erle Guydellon toke Ogier / and thus they were departed / And thus as they were departed, and that Rowland went on his waye / came there after hym the lityll rycharde, the 24 brother of Reynawde / that beganne to calle as hie as he myght / 'Damp Rowlande, ye goo cowardly awaye / retourne agayn that I may see your sheelde / and lete vs have a course, <sup>1</sup>we two togyder.'<sup>1</sup> 'knyghte,' an- 28 swerde Rowlande, 'I graunt therto by my feyth.' And thenne they spored theyr horses wyth theyr spores; and Rowlande cam agenste rycharde soo harde that he overthrewe hym and his horse wyth all in a hepe 32 to the grounde. And whan rycharde sawe hymselfe thus a grounde / he rose vp quyckely and came to his horse / and lighted vp agayn wythoute ony styrop /

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. vii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. T. ii.

And whan he was on horsbacke, he set hande on his swerde, and defended hymself nobly <sup>1</sup>agenste his enmye Rowlande.<sup>1</sup> defends him-self nobly.

4 Whan Rowland sawe this / and that he knewe that it was one of the brethern of Reynawd, <sup>2</sup>he had so grete Ioye of it that hym semed that he had be in paradyse / and Incontynente<sup>2</sup> he beganne to crie / 8 'Mountioye saynt Denis.' And sayd vpon hym, 'now, my frendes / For yf he scape vs, I shall telle it to Charlemagn.' And whan the Frenshmen sawe that Rowlande wold have rycharde taken, they set all<sup>3</sup> vpon The Frenchmen all set upon Richard, 12 hym, so that they smote hym wyth more than forty swerdes all at ones / and it happed so that his horse was kyllid vnder hym / and he overthrowen to therth / and whan Richarde sawe his horse deed a grounde, he 16 was right sory for it / and rose vp quyckely vpon his fete / and smote therle Antony so grete a stroke wyth his swerde that he wounded hym <sup>4</sup>right sore / Humall the breton sawe that, and he smote Rycharde ; & rycharde 20 recovered vpon hym wyth suche a stroke<sup>5</sup> that he felled bothe horse & man doun to the erth / <sup>6</sup>And wyth this guydellon cam from behinde, & overthrewe richarde fro and after a short onslaught he is overpowered, the arsons of his sadle to the grounde<sup>6</sup> / And whan 24 Rowlande sawe richard at the grounde, he cam to hym & sayd / 'Now yelde you, and abyde not that we slee you, for it were grete dommage' / 'sire,' sayd thenne richarde, <sup>6</sup>the yongest sone of aymon, <sup>6</sup>'to you, rowlande, and yields him-self prisoner to Roland. 28 I shall yelde me, & to none other / For I can not yelde me to no better man than ye be one.' And wyth this he toke hym his swerde ; and Rowlande receyved it wyth a goode wyll, & made the lityll richarde to light

<sup>1-1</sup> contre ses ennemys, F. orig. p. vii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. vii. <sup>3</sup> all repeated in text.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. T. ii. back.

<sup>6</sup> que luy et cheval versa par terre et si le naura durement a mort, F. orig. p. viii. back.

<sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. viii. back.

vpon a mewle. And thus they had hym prisoner.
 Alas, & what dommage shall it be if the prue richarde be hanged / he is well like to be / but that god & Mawgys delyver hym / all this myshappe sawe a 4 servaunt of richarde. and whan he sawe that men led thus his mayster richard / he spored his horse wyth the spores, & aventured hymselfe to passe over the ryver / and cam lightly<sup>1</sup> to reynawd, & sayd to hym / 'Syre, I 8 bryng you evyll tydynges. Wyte that Rowlond ledeth wyth hym your brother richard for prisoner well sham-fully.' Whan Reynawd vnderstode these wordes, he was so angrī for it that he had almoste lost his wyte / 12 and after he sayd to the yoman / 'com hyder, tell me, my frende / are they that leden my broder<sup>2</sup> ferre hens' /
 'Sir,' sayd the yoman / 'ye, it is not possible that ye sholde overtake them.' And whan Reynawde vnder- 16 stode this, he was more angrī than he was to fore / and fell fro bayard in a swoune to therthe. And whan he was com agen to hymselfe / he beheld afore hym / And sawe his brother Alard come wyth his folke, that 20 came after Reynawde by the trase / For they wende that Rychard had be goon to hym long afore theym.
 And whan <sup>3</sup>alard sawe reynawd make suche a sorow / he came thenne to hym, & sayd in this maner, 'Ha, 24 fayr broder, and what eylleth you / It longeth not to suche a knyghte as ye be for to make so grete a sorowe as ye doo.' 'Alard,' sayd Reynawd, 'ye have doon full yll, for I have lefte my brother richarde wyth you to 28 kepe him / and ye have lost hym, for Rowland ledeth hym wyth hym as prisoner / and he is all redy so ferre broughte that we can not socour hym' / whan alard & guychard vnderstode these tydynges / they began to 32 make suche a sorowe that it was merveyll for to see A servant of Richard brings

 the evil tidings
 of his capture to Reynawde.

Reynawde makes great sorrow for
 his brother,

and tells Alarde how Richard has been taken prisoner by Roland.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Richart, F. orig. p. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. T. iii. (S. in text.)

- 1 the lamentacion that they made<sup>1</sup> / 'alas,' sayd Reynawd, 'what is he that hath parted our company / to daie in the mornynge we were four bredern togider /
 4 and now we ben but thre. Ha, fayr brother richard, it is a grete dommage of you; for yf ye had lyved your age, ye shold have passed all your brethern / seenge that ye were the yongest of vs all, & yet ye
 8 were the moost hardy / and thrughe your hardynes ye are taken.' 'fayr<sup>1</sup> brother,' sayd alard / 'all cometh by you, that broughte vs here agenst our wyll for to socour the kinge yon / Now have we lost richard,
 12 wherof the losse shall never be recovered, for we shall never see hym a lyve.' And whan he had sayd this, he sayd to guycharde / 'Broder, draw oute your swerde, so shall we cut of the hede of this traytoure kyng yon 16 therwyth / for whom we have now lost our broder richarde.' 'Brother,' sayd thenne Reynawde, 'I praye you, for ye love that ye have to me, that ye touche not the kyng yon<sup>1</sup> for to doo hym ony harme<sup>1</sup> / for 20 he hath yelded hymselfe vnto me / but bryng hym vnto mounstalban, and see that he be kepte sure. And I shall abyde here wyth my good horse bayard, & flamberde my good swerde, wythoute ony other com-
 24 pany / Soo shall I goo in to the pavyllion of charlemagn, where I shall recover my brother Richard, or a nother prisoner for hym, or<sup>2</sup> elles I shall deye wyth hym' / and whan he had said that worde, he spored bayard 28 wyth the spores, for to have goon thyder, but alard toke hym bi the bridyll, & guycharde toke hym with both his armes fro behynde for to kepe hym, that he shold not goo / and thenne alard sayd to him / 'Bi 32 saynt peter of rome, ye shall not goo no fote there, for it is better that richard deye, yf it must be so / than ye shold deye.' And thus as the thre brethern made Alarde wishes to behead King John, who is the cause of all their misfortune.

Reynawde restrains him, and commands that the King be kept from harm;

he announces his intention of going to the tent of Charlemagne for Richard.

Alarde and Guycharde prevent his going.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. viii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. T. iii. back. (S. in text.)

their mone<sup>1</sup> for richarde, cam there mawgis theyr cosin, that followed theim. and whan he sawe his cosins make suche sorow / he was sore agaste, & sayd to theym / 'What eyleth you, fayr cosins / it is no 4 worship to you, nor y<sup>e</sup> maner of good knyghtes / but of wymen, to make suche sorrowe as ye doo.' 'Cosin, cosin,' sayd alard, 'I shall tell you what causeth vs to doo so / wyte that rowland ledeth wyth hym our 8 broder richard for his prisoner, the best knyght of the world after reynawd; and reynawd wyl go to the pavyllion of charlemagn; and ye know well yf he goo there, he is but lost for evermore' / 'Reynawde,' sayd 12 thezme mawgis, 'it were no wysdome to you yf ye went there / for your goyng shold not profyte no thyng / but go your wayes to mountalban, & I shall go there 2as ye wold have goon my self; 2 and yf richarde 16 be not deed, I shall bryng hym agen wyth me vnto you all, were he shitte vp in X prisons, mawgre charlemagn.' 3 'Cosin,' sayd reinawd, 'I shall becom your man yf ye doo this that ye saye' / 'cosin,' sayd 20 mawgis, 'I shall doo it wythout fawte / but leve your sorow; I shall deliver hym agen in to your handes 4hole & sounde, 4 yf it playse god.' and whan he had sayd so, the bredern set theymself to the waye for to 24 retourne to mountalban / but soo grete sorow was there never made, as the thre bredern made for their broder richard 5 / And thus, makyng their grete mone, they dyd someche that they cam to mountalban, & 28 lighted 6from their horses in the base court, and after

Mawgis enquires the cause of their sorrow, and tells Reynawde to go to Montalban, and he will deliver Richard.

The Sons depart for Montalban,

<sup>1</sup> que estoit grant pitie a veoir, F. orig. p. viii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. p. viii.

<sup>3</sup> de france, F. orig. q. i. back.

<sup>4-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. i. back.

<sup>6</sup> Helas! ce dist regnault, frere richart comme cest grant dommaige de vous se vous estes mort, car oncques chevallier ne vous valut de hardiesse, ne de proesse. Et si etiez ung yosne enfant. Et se maist dieu Je plains plus la grant bonte de vous, que Je ne fais ce que vous estes mon frere, F. orig. q. i. back, omitted in Caxton.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. T. iv.

wente vp to the dongeon / And whan the noble<sup>1</sup> lady clare, the wyf of Reynawde, wyste that her husbonde came / she came agenste hym right glad & Ioyfull / 4 and ledeth at ether hande of her both her yonge children / aymon & yon; and eyther of theym bare a lityll staff in his hande / and began to crie vpon their vnkle / 'vassayll / but that ye be now prisoner / 8 ye shold have deyed by our handes' / and they cam nyghe hym, & sayd / 'cursed kyng & vntrue! why have you betrayed my lord our fader, & his bredern, our vncles / that have doon to you so god servyse?
 12 certes, ye be well worthy to deye a shamfull deth' / Whan alarde herde his nevewes speke of this maner / he beganne to wepe full tendrely. And thus as he wepte, he kyssed Aymonet, that bare the name of their 16 fader / and sayd, 'Ha, god, how ben we broughte lowe and dystroyed'! And whan the lady herde Alarde speke thise wordes, and sawe that he wepte / she thoughte well that it was not wythoute a cause; and 20 she sayd to alarde / 'Fayr brother, for god telle me the occasyon of your sorow.' 'Lady,' said alarde, 'wyth a good wylle<sup>2</sup> / Now wyte that we have loste our brother rychade / Rowlande ledeth hym for his 24 prysoner to charlemagn; but yf our lord save hym, we are not like never to see hym' / 'Alas, I vnhappy!
 what shall we doo?' sayd the lady, 'syth that Rycharde is loste, For we shall never have honoure.' And 28 saynge thise wordes, she felle doun in a swoone to the erthe. And whan she was come agen to herselfe, she beganne to make soo grete a sorowe / that all they that were there had grete pyte of her / ¶ But 32 here levethe the history to speke of Reynawd, of Alarde / and of Guycharde / and of the lady Clare / and her yonge chyldren / And retourneth to shewe of

and are received by Lady Clare
 and her children.

The lady asks them why they are so sorrowful.

Alarde tells her
 of the loss of
 Richard.

Clare falls doun
 in a swoon,

and grieves
 terribly for
 Richard.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. i.

<sup>2</sup> le vous diray, F. orig. q. i.

Mawgis, the goode knyghte, that had put hymselfe in adventure and in peyne, for to <sup>1</sup>deliver Rycharde oute of the handes of the kynge Charlemagne.

CHAPTER XIV.

C How after that Reynawd, Alarde, and <sup>4</sup> Guycharde were retourned to Mountalban, after the bataylle that they had by the woode of the serpente, they made grete sorowe for the love of Rychard there broder / <sup>8</sup> that was in the handes of the kynge Charlemagne / and how he was delivered by the wytte of Mawgys.

Mawgis goes to Mountalban,

Now telleth the history / that whan Mawgys was <sup>12</sup> come agayne to Mountalban / soo moche wrothe he was, that he myghte nomore, for the love of Rycharde that was take / And by cause that reynawd and his bretherne made therfore soo grete sorowe, Inconty- <sup>16</sup> nente that he was lighted from his horse / he wente into his chambre, and made hymselfe to be dysarmed ; and after he toke of all his clothes, and put hymself all naked / and this doon, he toke an herbe and ete it, and <sup>20</sup> as soone that he had ete it / he swelled like a padde / and thenne toke an other herbe / and chaufed and helde it betwene his teeth / and anone he be came all blacke as a cole <sup>2</sup>in his face, as one that is beten wyth staves<sup>2</sup> / <sup>24</sup> and his eyen reled in his hede <sup>3</sup>as he had be other dronken or madde<sup>3</sup> / and dysguysed hymself wonderfully, that he that had well knowe hym afore<sup>4</sup> shold not thenne have sayd that he had be mawgys. And whan <sup>28</sup> and there dis-

guises himself;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. T. iv. back.                      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> quil sembloit quil deust mourir, F. orig. q. i.

<sup>4</sup> ne leust congneu, F. orig. q. i.

he was thus <sup>1</sup>torned and <sup>1</sup>countrefayt. / he toke a grete mantell and a hode, and clothed hymselfe therwyth, he takes a pilgrim's staff, and wears a mantle
and hood, and thus issues out of Mountalban;
 and toke on his fete a grete payre of botes, & the staff 4 of a pylgryme in his hande. And thus arrayed, he yssued oute of mountalban. And whan he was oute, he sette hymselfe for to goo the waye so grete pase that no horse cowde not have waloped so fast / tyll that he 8 cam to mountbandell, byfore the tentes of themperour Charlemagn, <sup>2</sup>or ever that Rowlande were come there agayn. and there he helde hym styll, & spake no thyng at all / but loked oonly vpon the kyng & vpon his 12 pavylion / And whan he went, he halted wyth thone fote / and lened before the kynges tente vpon his staff, and kept the one of his eyen close. And whan he sawe the kyng com out of his pavylion / he nighed hym, 16 & sayd, 'God of heven, that suffreth deth & passion in the crosse, kepe you, kyng Charlemayn, fro deth & fro pryson, and from evyll treyson /'
 'Vassall,' sayd the kyng charlemagn / 'god con- Charlemagne is suspicious of his appearance,
 20 founde you! for I shall never truste vpon none suche a begger as ye be / by cause of the evyll theef mawgis / the whiche hath deceyved me many tymes / for whan he wil, he is a palmer, a knyghte, or a gryfon, 24 or elles a heremyte / be suche maner that I can not beware of hym. And yf it playse god & hys blessed moder, I shall avenge me ones vpon hym, how that the game gooth' / And whan mawgis herde themperour 28 speke of this manere, he answered no thyng / and kepte hym styll a grete while; and after he sayd to the kyng, 'Syre, yf mawgis be a theef / all other poure folke be not so. I have more nede of helthe than I 32 have to doo any treyson; & it is well seen on me that I am not the body that myghte doo any grete harme / Syr, I come from Ierusalem, where I have worshypp the holy grave, and have doon my oblacyons in the Mawgis assures him that he has just come from Jerusalem,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. i.<sup>2</sup> Fol. T. v.

and is going to Rome;

he relates how he passed the river Gironde yesterday with x men, and how he was attacked by thieves, and all his men were slain,

and the thieves were the four Sons and Mawgis;

and how they beat and robbed him so that he nearly died, and therefore he has come to implore help against the Sons from the Emper.

temple of salamon, and yet I must goo to rome & to saynt Iames in gales, and god wyll. But I dyd passe yesterdaye over balencon & over gironde<sup>1</sup> / wyth x men, <sup>2</sup>my servauntes,<sup>2</sup> that I ledde alwayes by the waye wyth 4 me for to kepe & defende my body. And whan I had passed over gyronde / <sup>3</sup>I cam wyth my meyne thrughe a wood nyghe montalban<sup>3</sup> / where I mette wyth many brygantes & theves, that slewe all my men, & al that 8 I had thei toke <sup>4</sup>fro me, and lete me goo / and gladde I was whan soo fayr I was deliverde of theym. And after I asked of the folke of y<sup>e</sup> countrey what men they were that <sup>5</sup>had so<sup>6</sup> slayn my men / and they dyd telle 12 me that they were the four sones of aymon, & a grete thef that was called mawgys <sup>2</sup>wyth theim<sup>2</sup> / And I asked them why they wold set theymself to so fowle a craft & vnhappy / seen that thei were so grete gentylnen 16 born. and the peple of the countrey answerde me that they were constrained for to doo so, by cause they had soo grete poverte wythin mountalban that they wyst not what to doo / but I dyde never see so cruell a man 20 as the same mawgis is / for he bounde my handes behinde my backe whan he had robbed me / and thenne he bete me so sore that I wende to have deyed therof / and hathe arayed me as ye see. Syr, ye be the best 24 kyng of the worlde, & ye be lord of all this londe, wherfore I pray you, for god, that ye wyll do me right of these four sones of aymon, & of maugis that grete theef' / And whan charlemagn vnderstode these wordes, 28 he righted his hede vp & sayd / 'Pilgryme, is it true as thou sayst' / 'ye, syre,' sayd mawgis / 'Now tell me thy name,' sayd charlemagn / 'Syr,' sayd mawgis, 'my name is gaydoñ, & I am borne in bretayn, & I am 32 a grete man in my countrey / wherfore I requyre you, in

<sup>1</sup> et entre dedens ung dromon, F. orig. q. ii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. ii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> Je vins par dessoulz montauban, F. orig. q. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. T. v. back. <sup>5-5</sup> so had, orig.

the worship of the holy sepulture<sup>1</sup> that I have soughte,<sup>1</sup> that ye doo me ryght' / 'Pylgryme,' sayd Charlemagn,
 'I can not have noo ryght of theim my selfe / for I 4 promyse the! yf I had theym, all the worlde sholde not save theym, but that I sholde make theim deye a shamfull dethe.' 'Syre,' sayd thenne mawgis / 'sith that ye can doo me no righte of theym, I besече all 8 myghty god, that is in heven, that it playseth hym for to doo it' / 'Syre,' sayd the barons, 'this pylgryme semeth to be a goode man and a true / as I suppose /
 For it is well seen on hym / gyve to hym your almes 12 <sup>2</sup>yf it playse you' / And thenne the kyng commaunded that men sholde gyve hym<sup>3</sup> xx. li. of money / and mawgis toke theym & put it in his hode / and he sayd in himself / 'ye have gyven to me of your owne good, 16 but ye have doon like a fole / I shall reward you right dere for it or ever I departe fro you.' and whan he had the silver, he asked after some mete, for goddys sake / for sin yesterdaye he had not eten, as he sayd / 20 'by my feyth,' sayd Charlemagn, 'thou shalte have 'mete & drynke<sup>4</sup> ynough.' And anone they brought to hym mete / and he set hym doun,<sup>5</sup> & toke & ete well of the beste.<sup>6</sup> And the kynge sayd to hym, 'now ete fre, 24 good pylgryme, For thou shalt be well served' / and mawgis ete styll, and answered never a worde, but beheld oonly the kyng in his visage / And the kyng sayd to hym, 'tell me, pilgryme, & hide no thyng fro me / 28 why haste thou loked so sore vpon me!' 'syre,' sayd mawgis, 'I shall tell you it wyth ryght a good wyll / Wyte that I am a well traveylled man; but in noo place that ever I was / I saw never, nether crysten man 32 nother sarraasyn, soo goodly a prynce / ne soo curteys / as ye be one / wherof of all the pardons that I have

Charlemagne
 deplores his helplessness against the Sons, whom
 he would willingly
 slay.

and commands
 his barons to give alms to the pilgrim,

and food of the best.

Mawgis says he has never seen so goodly a prince as Charlemagne,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. T. vi.

<sup>3</sup> trente, F. orig. q. ii.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. ii.

<sup>5</sup> sur ung eschaquier, F. orig. q. ii.

<sup>6</sup> car il en auoit mestier, F. orig. q. ii.

wonne in my vyage makynge, I gyve you the halfe freely' / 'Certes, pylgryme,' sayd the kynge, 'and I take it gladly / And I thanke you moche therof.' And mawgis gaaf hym thenne,<sup>1</sup> for a wytnesse of the same,<sup>1</sup> 4 and gives him his staff to kisse. his palmers staff<sup>1</sup> for to kysse it.<sup>1</sup> Thenne said the barons / 'certainly, syre, the pylgryme hath given you a fayr gifte; ye oughte to rewarde hym well for it' / 'Syr,' sayd mawgis, 'I aske none other rewarde for it' / 8<sup>2</sup> but that ye wyll take my gyfte a worthe / and that I may reste me here a while / for I am very syke and wery'<sup>2</sup> / And thus as y<sup>e</sup> kyng spake to mawgis, cam thenne Rowlande and Oliver, and all their folke, that 12 broughte Rycharde for a prysoner.

Roland, Oliver, and all their folk, arrive, bringing Richard with them.

<sup>3</sup> And whan Ogyer and Estorfawde, the sone of A Oedon / and the duke Naymes, sawe that Rowlande wolde goo to the pavyllion of Charlemagne wyth 16 Rychard, They came to Rowland and sayd to hym / 'Syre Rowland, how canne you hate Rycharde soo sore / that ye wyll yelde hym to Charlemagne' / 'Lordes,' sayd Rowlande, 'what will ye that I shall doo wyth 20 him; tel me and I shall doo it' / 'Syre,' sayd they, 'we wyll that ye delyver Rycharde, and ye shall saye that it was a nother prisoner.' 'Lordes,' sayd Rowland, 'yf I canne doo this, I shall doo it gladly' / All 24 these wordes herde a yoman,<sup>4</sup> that Incontynent spored his horse / and came to the kynges tente,<sup>5</sup> and sayd to Charlemagn, 'Syre, I brynge you tydynges sore strange / we have fou[g]hte by<sup>6</sup> the ryver syde of Balencon / 28 where there Reynawde, the sone of Aymon, hath kept his owne right well agenst rowlande your nevewe / and setteth not a strawe by hym. And Rowlande loste there more than he wanne.' Whan the emperoure 32 Charlemagne vnderstode that worde / he was abashed

The barons entreat Roland not to deliver up Richard to the Emperor.

He consents if it is possible. A yeoman overhears this conversation, and goes to Charlemagne and tells him that Richard has been taken prisoner.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. ii.

<sup>2-2</sup> car Je suis plus malade quil ne me fait mestier, F. orig. q. iii. back. <sup>3</sup> Fol. T. vi. back. <sup>4</sup> aymon, in text orig.

<sup>5</sup> la ou Il vit le roy, F. orig. q. iii. back. <sup>6</sup> be, orig.

gretly; and after he sayd to the yoman, 'Telle me, my frende, how was yet of my nevene Rowland' / 'Syre,' sayd the yoman, 'he foughte<sup>1</sup> wyth the four sones of 4 Aymon, that deffended theymselfe well. But Rowlande hathe broughte wyth hym prisoner one of the foure sones<sup>2</sup> of Aymon<sup>2</sup> / the whyche is the mooste hardy & the moost valiaunt of them all / in all poyntes.'

8 Charlemagne began thenne to lepe for Ioye, whan he vnderstode thise tydynges / and came oute of his tent, & behelde & sawe Rychard, that Rowlande<sup>3</sup> brought. Whan Charlemagn sawe rycharde, he knew 12 hym well incontynente, & began to crie for grete ioye that he had / 'by my soule, neveu, it is well seen that ye have be there, for elles Richarde sholde<sup>4</sup> not have ben take' / 'Certes,'<sup>5</sup> sayd Rowlande, 'well lied Ogier
16 to you / for if he had not be / y<sup>e</sup> four sones of aimon were take as well as one' / and thenne said the kyng to richard / 'Hoursone! by the feyth that I owe to 20 shall have of evylle & of tormentes ynough.' 'sire, sayd Richarde, 'I am in your prison. I fere me not to be hanged as long as reynawd, my broder, shall may light vpon bayarde / and that mawgis be a lyve, alarde 24 & guycharde, my righte dere bredern / for yf ye doo to me ony owtrage, no castell, ne towne, ne fortresse shall not kepe you; but that thei shall make you deye an evyll deth or two dayes be passed.' Whan charlemagn herde 28 richard speke so proudly, he was right an angred for it, & toke a staff with both his handes, & smote Richarde therwyth vpon the hede so harde that he made the blode renne oute of it to therthe / And whan richard 32 felt hymself thus wounded, he vaunced hymselfe / and toke the kyng wyth both his armes by the waste, &

The Emperor with great joy comes out of his tent and sees Richard;

he swears to have him tortured, and then hung.

Richard boldly says he fears nothing so long as his brethren and Mawgis live.

Charlemagne smites Richard with a staff,

and they fight.

<sup>1</sup> au gue de balancon, F. orig. q. iii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> son nepveu, F. orig. q. iii. back. <sup>4</sup> Fol. T. vii.

<sup>5</sup> Sire, F. orig. q. iii.

Ogier interferences between them, and rebukes the Emperor for his conduct.

Mawgis nearly attacks the Emperor with his staff when he sees Richard treated thus.

Charlemagne still threatens Richard with death, and says he shall be hanged ere night, and wishes that the other Sons and Mawgis were also in his power.

Richard turns round and sees Mawgis, whom he at once recognises, and is very joyful.

wrastled togyder alonge whyle, so that thei fell both doun, thone here & the other there. And Richarde<sup>1</sup> rose vp quyckly, &<sup>1</sup> wolde have renne vpon charlemagn, but oger & salamon seased him & kept him therfro / 4 and after they sayd to charlemagn, 'Sir, ye have doon overmoche amys for to bete a prisoner.' 'certes, my lordes,' sayd richard, 'it is more dishonour to the kyng for to smyte me / than it is to me for to defende my 8 body / but he is well wonte to doo suche owtrages / for it is not the first that he hath doon, nor it shall not be the last' / And whan mawgis sawe that charlemagn had smyten richarde / he was sore an angred therfore / 12 that he had almoste layd vpon hym<sup>2</sup> wyth his palmers staff; but he thought if he had doo soo, bothe Rycharde & he shold have be deed. and whan charlemagn sawe that richard spake so boldly, he said to hym, 'richard, 16 god confounde me yf ye scape me for all your<sup>3</sup> wyckednes / for ye shall soone be hanged<sup>4</sup> by the necke.'<sup>4</sup> 'sir,' sayd richard, 'speke more courtesli, yf it playse you, for I shall see you soner be fleyn quycke than 20 ye shall see me hange / nor ye shall not be so hardy to doo so.'<sup>5</sup> 'what somever ye prate / say, or crake'<sup>5</sup> / sayd charlemagn, 'ye shall not scape me, but ye shall be hanged or nyghte; and wold god I helde as faste your 24 bredern, & mawgis, <sup>6</sup>that theef,<sup>6</sup> as I hold you now / for they sholde be hanged wyth you to bere you company, bycause ye sholde not be a ferde.' ¶ All thus as richarde strove with charlemagn / he torned hymself & 28 sawe mawgis behynde him, that held hymself styll lenyng vpon his staff; and he knewe hym well, wherof he was well glad, for he wyste well he shold not deye sith mawgis was there. And whan richard had seen 32 mawgis, he was sure of his liff, & sayd to charlemagn, <sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. iii.      <sup>2</sup> le roy, F. orig. q. iii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. T. vii. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> en brief, F. orig. q. iii.

<sup>5-6</sup> Si ne meschapperez vous mye toutesfois, F. orig. q. iii.

<sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. iii.

The Publications for 1871 (one guinea) are :—

44. The Alliterative Romances of Joseph of Arimathe, or The Holy Grail: from the Vernon MS.; with W de Worde's and Pynson's Lives of Joseph; ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 5s.
 45. King Alfred's West-Saxon Version of Gregory's Pastoral Care, edited from 2 MSS., with an English translation, by Henry Sweet, Esq., B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Part I. 10s.
 46. Legends of the Holy Rood, Symbols of the Passion and Cross Poems, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 10s.
 47. Sir David Lyndesay's Works, Part V., ed. Dr. J. A. H. Murray. 3s.
 48. The Times' Whistle, and other Poems, by R. C. 1616; ed. by J. M. Cowper, Esq. 6s.

The Publications for 1872 (one guinea) are :—

49. An Old English Miscellany, containing a Bestiary, Kentish Sermons, Proverbs of Alfred, and Religious Poems of the 13th cent., ed. from the MSS, by the Rev. R. Morris, LL.D. 10s.
 50. King Alfred's West-Saxon Version of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. H. Sweet, M.A. Part II. 10s.
 51. The Life of St Juliana, 2 versions, A.D. 1230, with translations; ed. T. O. Cockayne and E. Broock. 2s.
 52. Palladius on Husbandrie, english ab. 1420 A.D., ed. Rev. Barton Lodge, M.A. Part I. 10s.

The Publications for 1873 (one guinea) are :—

53. Old-English Homilies. Series II., and three Hymns to the Virgin and God, 13th-century, with the music to two of them, in old and modern notation; ed. Rev. R. Morris, LL.D. 8s.
 54. The Vision of Piers Plowman, Text C: Richard the Redeles (by William, the author of the Vision) and The Crowned King; Part III., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 18s.
 55. Generydes, a Romance, ed. ab. 1440 A.D., W. Aldis Wright, M.A. Part I. 3s.

The Publications for 1874 (one guinea) are :—

56. The Gest Hystoriale of the Destruction of Troy, in alliterative verse; ed. by D. Donaldson, Esq., and the late Rev. G. A. Panton. Part II. 10s. 6d.
 57. The Early English Version of the "Cursor Mundi": in four Texts, edited by the Rev. R. Morris, M.A., LL.D. Part I, with 2 photolithographic facsimiles. 10s. 6d.
 58. The Blicking Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. R. Morris, LL.D. Part I. 8s.

The Publications for 1875-84 (one guinea each year) are :—

59. The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part II. 15s. 1875
 60. Meditaoyuns on the Soper of Our Lorde by Robert of Brunne, edited by J. M. Cowper. 2s. 6d. ..
 61. The Romance and Prophecies of Thomas of Erceoloune, from 5 MSS.; ed. Dr. J. A. H. Murray. 10s. 6d. ..
 62. The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part III. 15s. 1876
 63. The Blicking Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part II. 7s. ..
 64. Francis Thynne's Emblemata and Epigrams, A.D. 1600, ed. F. J. Furnivall. 7s. ..
 65. Be Domes Dæge Bode's De Die Judicii, &c., ed. J. R. Lumby, B.D. 2s. ..
 66. The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part IV, with 2 autotypes. 10s. 1877
 67. Notes on Piers Plowman, by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. Part I. 21s. ..
 68. The "Cursor Mundi," in 4 Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part V. 25s. 1878
 69. Adam Davie's 5 Dreams about Edward II., &c., ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A. 5s. ..
 70. Generydes, a Romance, ed. W. Aldis Wright, M.A. Part II. 4s. ..
 71. The Lay Folks Mass-Book, four texts, ed. Rev. Canon Simmons. 25s. 1879
 72. Palladius on Husbandrie, english ab. 1420 A.D., Part II. Ed. S. J. Herrtage, B.A. 15s. ..
 73. The Blicking Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. Part III. 10s. 1880
 74. English Works of Wyclif, hitherto unprinted, ed. F. D. Matthew, Esq. 20s. ..
 75. Catholicon Anglicum, an early English Dictionary, from Lord Monson's MS. A.D. 1483, ed., with Introduction & Notes, by S. J. Herrtage, B.A.; and with a Preface by H. B. Whentley. 20s. 1881
 76. Aelfric's Metrical Lives of Saints, in MS. Cott. Jul. E. 7., ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A. Part I. 10s. ..
 77. Beowulf, the unique MS. autotyped and transliterated, edited by Prof. Zupitza, Ph.D. 25s. 1882
 78. The Fifty Earliest English Wills in the Court of Probate, 1387-1439, ed. by F. J. Furnivall, M.A. 7s. ..
 79. King Alfred's Orosius, from Lord Tollemacine's 9th century MS., Part I, ed. H. Sweet, M.A. 13s. 1883
Extra Volume. Facsimile of the Epinal Glossary, 8th cent., ed. H. Sweet, M.A. 15s. ..
 80. The Anglo-Saxon Life of St. Katherine and its Latin Original, ed. Dr. Eimenkel. 12s. 1884
 81. Piers Plowman: Notes, Glossary, &c. Part IV, completing the work, ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A. 18s. ..

EXTRA SERIES.

The Publications for 1867 (one guinea) are :—

- I. William of Palerne: or, William and the Werwolf. Re-edited from the unique MS. in King's College, Cambridge, by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 13s.
 II. Early English Pronunciation, with especial Reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S. Part I. 10s.

The Publications for 1868 (one guinea) are :—

- III. Caxton's Book of Curtesye, in Three Versions. Ed. F. J. Furnivall. 5s.
 IV. Havelok the Dane. Re-edited by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 10s.
 V. Chaucer's Boethius. Edited from the two best MSS, by Rev. Dr. R. Morris. 12s.
 VI. Chevelere Assaigne. Re-edited from the unique MS by H. H. Gibbs, Esq., M.A. 3s.

The Publications for 1869 (one guinea) are :—

- VII. Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S. Part II. 10s.
 VIII. Queene Elizabethes Achademy, &c. Ed. F. J. Furnivall. Essays on early Italian and German Books of Courtesy, by W. M. Rossetti and Dr. E. Oswald. 13s.
 IX. Awdley's Fraternity of Vacabondes, Harman's Caveat, &c. Ed. E. Viles and F. J. Furnivall. 7s. 6d.

The Publications for 1870 (one guinea) are :—

- X. Andrew Boorde's Introduction of Knowledge, 1547, Dyetary of Helth, 1542, Barnes in Defence of the Berde, 1542-3. Ed. F. J. Furnivall. 18s.
 XI. Barbour's Bruce, Part I. Ed. from MSS. and editions, by Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 12s.

The Publications for 1871 (one guinea) are :—

- XII. England in Henry VIII's Time: a Dialogue between Cardinal Pole and Lupset, by Thomas Starkey, Chaplain to Henry VIII. Ed. J. M. Cowper. Part II. 12s. (Part I. is No. XXXII. 1878, 8s.)
 XIII. A Supplicacyon of the Beggars, by Simon Fish, 1528 A.D., ed. F. J. Furnivall; with A Supplicacyon to our Moste Soueraigne Lorde: A Supplicacyon of the Poore Commons; and The Decaye of England by the Great Multitude of Sheep, ed. by J. M. Cowper, Esq. 6s.
 XIV. Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, Esq., F.R.S. Part III. 10s.

Early English Text Society.

The Subscription, which constitutes membership, is £1 ls. a year [and £1 ls. (Large Paper, £2 12s. 6d.) additional for the EXTRA SERIES], due in advance on the 1st of JANUARY, and should be paid either to the Society's Account at the Head Office of the Union Bank, Princes Street, London, E.C., or by Cheque, Postal Order, or Money-Order (made payable at the Chief Office, London) to the Hon. Secretary, W. A. DALZIEL, Esq., 67, Victoria Rd., Finsbury Park, London, N., and cross 'Union Bank.' (United-States Subscribers must pay for postage 1s. 4d. a year extra for the Original Series, and 1s. a year for the Extra Series.) The Society's Texts are also sold separately at the prices put after them in the Lists.

ORIGINAL SERIES.

The Publications for 1885 will be chosen from:—

82. Thomas Robinson's Life and Death of Mary Magdalene, ab. 1620 A.D., ed. O. Sommer. 7s. 6d.
 The Oldest English Texts, Charters, &c., ed. H. Sweet, M.A. [Text and Glossary printed.
 Aelfric's Metrical Lives of Saints, in MS. Cott. Jul. E.7., ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A., LL.D. Part II. [At Press.
Preparing:—
 The Lay Folks' Catechism, by Archbp. Thoresby, ed. Canon Simmons and F. D. Matthew. [Text printed.
 Cursor Mundi. Part VI. Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. [Part printed.
 Q. Elizabeth's Translations, from Boethius, &c., edited from the unique MS. by Walford D. Selby. [At Press.
 Treatise on the Virtues, ab. 1200 A.D., edited from the unique MS. by P. Z. Round, B.A.
 Early English Deeds and Documents, from unique MSS., ed. Dr. Lorenz Morsbach.
 Merlin, Part IV., containing Preface, Index, and Glossary. Edited by H. B. Wheatley.
 Beowulf, a critical Text, &c., ed. Prof. Zupitza, with Dissertations by Prof. Müllenhoff.
 All the Early English Verse Lives of Saints, ed. Dr. C. Horstmann.
 Pilgrimage of the Lyf of Manhode, in the Northern Dialect, ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A.
 Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. W. Aldis Wright, M.A., Ph.D.
 Early English Homilies, 13th century, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.
 The Rule of St. Benet: 5 Texts, Anglo-Saxon, Early English, Caxton, &c., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.

EXTRA SERIES.

The Publications for 1885 will be chosen from—

- Charlemagne Romances:—Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part IV.
 Charlemagne Romances:—The Four Sons of Aymon, ed. Miss O. Richardson. Part II. [At Press.
 The Three Kings of Cologne. 2 English Texts, and 1 Latin, ed. Dr. C. Horstmann. [At Press.
 Hoccleve's Mimer Poems, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. [At Press.
 Hocceve's Complaint, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.
 Bp. Fisher's English Works, ed. Ronald Bayne, B.A. Part II. [At Press.
 Another Alliterative Romance of Alexander, ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, LL.D., and J. H. Hesses, M.A. [At Press.

Preparing:—

- Barbour's Bruce, ed. Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat. Part IV.
 Sir Bevis of Hamton, from the Auchinleck and other MSS., ed. Dr. E. Külbinger. [At Press.
 Lancelich's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part V.

The Publications for the years 1872 to 1884 (one guinea each year) are:—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| XV. Robert Crowley's Thirty-One Epigrams, Voyce of the Last Trumpet, Way to Wealth, &c., 1530-1 A.D., edited by J. M. Cowper, Esq. 12s.   | 1872 |
| XVI. Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe. Ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A., LL.D. 6s.   | "    |
| XVII. The Complaynt of Scotlande, 1549 A.D., with 4 Tracts (1542-48), ed. Dr. Murray. Part I. 10s.  | "    |
| XVIII. The Complaynt of Scotlande, 1549 A.D., ed. Dr. Murray. Part II. 8s.  | 1873 |
| XIX. Oure Ladyes Myroure, A.D. 1530, ed. Rev. J. H. Blunt, M.A. 24s.  | "    |
| XX. Lancelich's History of the Holy Grail (ab. 1450 A.D.), ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part I. 8s.   | 1874 |
| XXI. Barbour's Bruce, Part II., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 4s.  | "    |
| XXII. Henry Brinklow's Complaynt of Roderick Mors (ab. 1542); and The Lamentation of a Christian against the Citty of London, made by Roderick Mors, A.D. 1545. Ed. J. M. Cowper. 9s. | "    |
| XXIII. Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S. Part IV. 10s.  | "    |
| XXIV. Lancelich's History of the Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part II. 10s.   | 1875 |
| XXV. Guy of Warwick, 15th-century Version, ed. Prof. Zupitza. Part I. 20s.  | "    |
| XXVI. Guy of Warwick, 15th-century Version, ed. Prof. Zupitza. Part II. 14s.  | 1876 |
| XXVII. Bp. Fisher's English Works (died 1535), ed. by Prof. J. E. B. Mayor. Part I, the Text. 16s.  | "    |
| XXVIII. Lancelich's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part III. 10s.   | 1877 |
| XXIX. Barbour's Bruce, Part III., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A., LL.D. 21s.  | "    |
| XXX. Lancelich's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part IV. 15s.   | 1878 |
| XXXI. The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat. 6s.   | "    |
| XXXII. Starkey's "England in Henry VIII's time." Pt I. Starkey's Life and Letters, ed. S. J. Hertridge. 8s.   | "    |
| XXXIII. Gesta Romanorum (english ab. 1440), ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A. 15s.  | 1879 |
| XXXIV. The Charlemagne Romances:—1. Sir Ferumbras, from Ashm. MS. 33, ed. S. J. Hertridge. 15s.   | "    |
| XXXV. Charlemagne Romances:—2. The Siege of Malayne. Sir Otuel, &c., ed. S. J. Hertridge. 12s.  | 1880 |
| XXXVI. Charlemagne Romances:—3. Lyf of Charles the Grete, Pt. I., ed. S. J. Hertridge. 16s.   | "    |
| XXXVII. Charlemagne Romances:—4. Lyf of Charles the Grete, Pt. II., ed. S. J. Hertridge. 15s.   | 1881 |
| XXXVIII. Charlemagne Romances:—5. The Sowdone of Babylone, ed. Dr. Hausknecht. 15s.   | "    |
| XXXIX. Charlemagne Romances:—6. Rauf Colyere, Roland, Otuel, &c., ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A. 15s.  | 1882 |
| XL. Charlemagne Romances:—7. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part I. 15s.   | 1882 |
| XLI. Charlemagne Romances:—8. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Pt II. 15s.   | 1883 |
| XLII. Guy of Warwick: 2 texts (Auchinleck MS. and Caius MS.), ed. Prof. Zupitza. Part I. 15s.   | "    |
| XLIII. Charlemagne Romances:—9. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Pt III. 15s.  | 1884 |
| XLIV. Charlemagne Romances:—10. The Four Sons of Aymon, ed. Miss Octavia Richardson. Pt I. 15s.   | "    |

LONDON: N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.
 BERLIN: ASHER & CO., 53 MOHRENSTRASSE.

Early English Text Society.

THE
ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

*Eng. Lib. 152
(1204)*

PART XI.

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie

of the

Four Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISHT FROM THE FRENCH BY

WILLIAM CAXTON,

AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1489.

EDITED FROM

THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER,

with an Introduction,

BY

OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

PART II.

LONDON:

PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY

BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCCLXXXV.

Digitized by Google

Price Twenty Shillings.

Early English Text Society.

Committee of Management :

Director : DR. FREDERICK J. FURNIVALL, M.A.

Treasurer : HENRY B. WHEATLEY, Esq.

Hon. Sec. : W. A. DALZIEL, Esq., 67 VICTORIA ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, N.

Hon. Sec. for America : PROF. F. J. CHILD, Harvard Coll., Cambr., Mass., U.S.A.

J. MEADOWS COWPER, Esq.	REV. DR. RICHARD MORRIS.
ALEXANDER J. ELLIS, B.A., F.R.S.	DR. J. A. H. MURRAY.
H. HUCKS GIBBS, M.A.	EDWARD B. PEACOCK, Esq.
S. J. HERRTAGE, B.A.	REV. PROF. WALTER W. SKEAT, LL.D.
S. L. LEE, B.A.	HENRY SWEET, M.A.
REV. PROF. J. RAWSON LUMBY, D.D.	DR. W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A.
REV. PROF. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A.	PROF. J. ZUPITZA, Ph.D.

(With power to add Workers to their number.)

Bankers : THE UNION BANK OF LONDON, 2, PRINCES STREET, E.C.

The Publications for 1866 (except Nos. 19, 20, and 21) are out of print. Subscribers who desire the issue for 1866 should send their guineas at once to the Hon. Secretary, in order that other Texts for 1866 may be sent to press.

The Publications for 1864-1871 (one guinea each year, save those for 1866 now out of print, two guineas) are :—

- |  |                     |      |
|--|---------------------|------|
| 1. Early English Alliterative Poems, ab. 1360 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.  | 10s.                | 1864 |
| 2. Arthur, ab. 1440, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A.   | 4s.                 | ..   |
| 3. Lauder on the Dewtie of Kyngis, &c., 1556, ed. F. Hall, D.C.L.  | 4s.                 | ..   |
| 4. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight, ab. 1360, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.   | 10s.                | ..   |
| 5. Hume's Orthographie and Congruitie of the Britan Tongue, ab. 1617, ed. H. B. Wheatley.  | 4s.                 | 1865 |
| 6. Lancelot of the Laik, ab. 1500, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.   | 8s.                 | ..   |
| 7. Genesis & Exodus, ab. 1250, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.   | 8s.                 | ..   |
| 8. Morte Arthure, ab. 1440, ed. E. Brock.  | 7s.                 | ..   |
| 9. Thynne on Speght's ed. of Chaucer, A.D. 1599, ed. Dr. Kingsley and F. J. Furnivall.   | 10s.                | ..   |
| 10. Merlin, ab. 1440, Part I., ed. H. B. Wheatley.   | 2s. 6d.             | ..   |
| 11. Lyndesay's Monarche, &c., 1552, Part I., ed. J. Small, M.A.  | 3s.                 | ..   |
| 12. Wright's Chaste Wife, ab. 1462, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A.  | 1s.                 | ..   |
| 13. Sainte Marherete, 1200-1330, ed. Rev. O. Cockayne.   |                     | 1868 |
| 14. Kyng Horn, Floris and Blanchefour, &c., ed. Rev. J. R. Lumby, B.D.   |                     | ..   |
| 15. Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. F. J. Furnivall.   |                     | ..   |
| 16. The Book of Quinte Essence, ab. 1460-70, ed. F. J. Furnivall.  |                     | ..   |
| 17. Parallel Extracts from 45 MSS. of Piers the Plowman, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.   | 1s.                 | ..   |
| 18. Hali Meidenhad, ab. 1200, ed. Rev. O. Cockayne.  |                     | ..   |
| 19. Lyndesay's Monarche, &c., Part II., ed. J. Small, M.A.   | 3s. 6d. [In print.] | ..   |
| 20. Hampole's English Prose Treatises, ed. Rev. G. G. Perry.   | 1s. [In print.]     | ..   |
| 21. Merlin, Part II., ed. H. B. Wheatley.  | 4s. [In print.]     | ..   |
| 22. Parthenay or Lusignen, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.   |                     | ..   |
| 23. Dan Michel's Ayenbite of Inwyt, 1340, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.  | 10s. 6d.            | ..   |
| 24. Hymns to the Virgin and Christ : the Parliament of Devils, &c., ab. 1430, ed. F. J. Furnivall.   | 3s.                 | 1867 |
| 25. The Stations of Rome, the Pilgrims' Sea-voyage, with Clene Maydenhod, ed. F. J. Furnivall.   | 1s.                 | ..   |
| 26. Religious Pieces in Prose and Verse, from R. Thornton's MS. (ab. 1440), ed. Rev. G. G. Perry.  | 2s.                 | ..   |
| 27. Levins's Manipulus Vocabulorum, a ryming Dictionary, 1570, ed. H. B. Wheatley.   | 12s.                | ..   |
| 28. William's Vision of Piers the Plowman, 1362 A.D. : Text A, Part I., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.  | 6s.                 | ..   |
| 29. Early English Homilies ab. 1220-30 A.D. : Part I. Edited by Rev. Dr. R. Morris.  | 7s.                 | ..   |
| 30. Pierce the Ploughmans Crede, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat.   | 2s.                 | ..   |
| 31. Myrc's Duties of a Parish Priest, in Verse, ab. 1420 A.D., ed. E. Peacock.   | 4s.                 | 1868 |
| 32. Early English Meals and Manners : the Boke of Nurture of John Russell, the Bokes of Keruyng, Curtaase, and Demeanor, the Babees Book, Urbanitatis, &c., ed. F. J. Furnivall. | 12s.                | ..   |
| 33. The Knight de la Tour Landry, ab. 1440 A.D. : A Book for Daughters, ed. T. Wright, M.A.  | 8s.                 | ..   |
| 34. Early English Homilies before 1300 A.D. : Part II., ed. R. Morris, LL.D.   | 8s.                 | ..   |
| 35. Lyndesay's Works, Part III. : The Historie and Testament of Squyer Meldrum, ed. F. Hall.   | 2s.                 | ..   |
| 36. Merlin, Part III. Ed. H. B. Wheatley, On Arthurian Localities, by J. S. Stuart Glennie.  | 12s.                | 1869 |
| 37. Sir David Lyndesay's Works, Part IV. : Ane Satyre of the Three Estaites, Ed. F. Hall, D.C.L.   | 4s.                 | ..   |
| 38. William's Vision of Piers the Plowman, Part II. : Text B, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.   | 10s. 6d.            | ..   |
| 39. Alliterative Romance of the Destruction of Troy, Ed. D. Donaldson & G. A. Panton. Pt. I.   | 10s. 6d.            | ..   |
| 40. English Gilds, their Statutes and Customs, 1389 A.D. : Edit. Toulimin Smith and Lucy T. Smith, with an Essay on Gilds and Trades-Unions, by Dr. L. Brentano.                 | 21s.                | 1870 |
| 41. William Lauder's Minor Poems. Ed. F. J. Furnivall.   | 3s.                 | ..   |
| 42. Bernardus De Cura Rei Familiaris, Early Scottish Prophecies, &c. Ed. J. R. Lumby, M.A.   | 2s.                 | ..   |
| 43. Ratis Raving, and other Moral and Religious Pieces. Ed. J. R. Lumby, M.A.  | 3s.                 | ..   |
| 44. The Alliterative Romance of Joseph of Arimathie, or The Holy Grail : from the Vernon MS. : with W. de Worde's and Pynson's Lives of Joseph : ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.      | 5s.                 | 1871 |
| 45. King Alfred's West-Saxon Version of Gregory's Pastoral Care, edited from 2 MSS., with an English translation, by Henry Sweet, Esq., B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Part I.   | 10s.                | ..   |
| 46. Legends of the Holy Rood, Symbols of the Passion and Cross Poems, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.  | 10s.                | ..   |
| Sir David Lyndesay's Works, Part V., ed. Dr. J. A. H. Murray.  | 3s.                 | ..   |
| The Times Whistle, and other Poems, by R. C. 1616 : ed. by J. M. Cowper Esq.   | 6s.                 | ..   |

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie
of
The Foure Sources of Annon.

---

Early English Text Society.

Extra Series. No. XLV.

1885.

BERLIN : ASHER & CO., 5, UNTER DEN LINDEN.
NEW YORK : C. SCRIBNER & CO.; LEYPOLDT & HOLT.
PHILADELPHIA : J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.

Surv.

©
THE
ENGLISH CHARLEMAGNE ROMANCES.

---

PART XI.

---

The Right Plesant and Goodly Historie
of the Goure Sonnes of Aymon.

ENGLISHT FROM THE FRENCH BY
WILLIAM CAXTON,
AND PRINTED BY HIM ABOUT 1489.

EDITED FROM
THE UNIQUE COPY, NOW IN THE POSSESSION OF EARL SPENCER, with an Introduction,
BY OCTAVIA RICHARDSON.

PART II.

✓
LONDON:

PUBLISHED FOR THE EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY,
BY N. TRÜBNER & CO., 57 & 59, LUDGATE HILL.

MDCCCLXXXV.

Eng. Lit. 1522

Subscription Fund

Extra Series.

XLV.

---

R. CLAY AND SONS, CHAUCER PRESS, BUNGAY.

'syre, where shall I be hanged, tell me?' / 'certes,' sayd charlemagn, 'at the gibet of mountfawcon; & there shall your bredern may se you, & mawgys your cosyn' / 4 'Sire, it is no reyson that suche a man as I am sholde be hanged / but make peas wyth vs, & ye shall doo wysly / & yf ye doo not soo, ye shall sore repent it, as I trowe.' And whan mawgis had herde all that he 8 wold here, he made no lenger taryeng / but he went out of the pavyllion & said no worde / and whan he was out of it, he began to walke so grete a pas that no horse myght not have folowed hym, and passed thugh 12 the wood of the serpent, & dyd somoche that he cam to mountalban, where he fonde Reynaud & his folke, that wayted for hym / And whan reynawd saw him
 com wythout richard, he was full sory, so that he fell 16 down in a swoune / and alard & guychard toke him vp & sayd to hym, 'Fair broder, ye doo as a childe / ye ought not to make suche sorow' / 'holde your peas, traytours,' sayd reynawd / 'for ye have lost the beste 20 knyght of the <sup>3</sup>worlde,<sup>2</sup> For I see Mawgys come alone, <sup>4</sup>wherfore I beleve that Richard is deed / for if he were a lyve, Mawgis wold have brought him wyth hym, For he never myssed of no thyng that he toke in 24 hand' / And whan alard & guychard vnderstode these wordes / thei toke therof so grete a sorow that they fell both down in a swoune to therth / And whan they were com agen to theymself, they made so grete sorowe 28 that it was pyte for to see; and this hangyng, cam there Mawgis. And whan he saw the grete sorowe that his cosins made, he was wrothe for it, And sayd to them,

Mawgis then leaves the pa-
 villion, and goes swiftly towards
 Montalban.

Reynawde swoons
 when he sees Mawgis without
 his brother,

fearing he is slain.

The brethren all
 weep for sorrow.

<sup>1</sup> Sire Regnault beau frere, F. orig. q. iv.

<sup>2-3</sup> dieu vous confonde car par vostre defaulte a este perdu le meilleur chevalier du monde, car se vous leussiez suiuy; il neust mye este prins mais vous ny ousastes mye aler pour crainte. Et aussi vous ne vouliez point que Je y alasse pour le secourir car Je y eusse bien este a temps. Or lavons nous perdu ne Jamais ne le verrons, F. orig. q. iv.

<sup>3</sup> word, orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. T. viii.

Mawgis is angry when he sees them, and enquires why they make such sorrow,

‘What eyleth you, fayr cosins, that ye make so evyll chere’ / ‘Alas, mawgis,’ sayd Reynawde / ‘what is doon of our broder richard?’ ‘Cosin,’ sayd mawgis, ‘richard is yet in prison; but charlemagne hath sayd that he shall 4 make hym to be hanged at the gybet of mounthawcon / And hath sayd that he shall not kepe hym longe alyve, leest ye & I shold rescue hym. And here is xx.<sup>1</sup> li of money that charlemagn hath gyve me in hys pavylyon, 8 and made me have bothe mete & drinke at my plaisur.<sup>2</sup> Now shall it be seen yf ye love Rychard, and yf ye be a goode knyghte or not; for ye must socoure & delyver hym by force of armes, or elles he shall deye, for all 12 the world shall not kepe hym otherwyse therfro.’

and tells them that they must rescue Richard by force of arms.

Reynawde is comforted by this news, and no longer fears for his brother’s safety.

Reynawd was well recomforted whan he herd R<sup>3</sup> mawgis speke; <sup>3</sup> & after he sayd / ‘sith that it is so that Richard is yet alive, yf I had but myself, my 16 brethern & mawgis, yet sholde I kepe richard fro deth, mawgre the power of charlemagne’ / and thenne mawgys, wythout ony long abidyng, toke of his cope & his hode, and toke an herbe & ete it, and anone the 20 swellyng went fro him<sup>4</sup> / and whan he was armed, he presented hymself to reynawd<sup>5</sup> / and incontynent al his bredern put theymself in armes / And anone they toke their waye towarde mounthawcon / And 24 whan they were come to a bowe shotte nyghe from it, Reynawde sayd to his folke / ‘Lordes, yf ever <sup>6</sup>ye loved me / thynke for to doo now so moche that my brother rycharde may be rescued from this shamfull 28 deth. For I promyse you that I shall brynge hym wyth me, or elles I and my brethern & Mawgys shall deye wyth hym’<sup>7</sup> / ‘Syre,’ sayd his men, ‘doubte not of vs / for we shall doo our devoyre’ / ‘brother,’ sayd 32

The Sons and Mawgis arm themselves, and depart for Mounthawcon;

<sup>1</sup> trente, F. orig. q. iv.      <sup>2</sup> au pres de luy, F. orig. q. iv.

<sup>3-3</sup> ses paroles, F. orig. q. iv. back.

<sup>4</sup> et puis se arma, F. orig. q. iv. back.

<sup>5</sup> moult honnorablement, F. orig. q. iv.      <sup>6</sup> Fol. T. viii. back.

<sup>7</sup> et Ils sont tieulx comme vous scaucs, F. orig. q. iv. back.

thenne Alarde, 'lete vs lighte here doun / and lete vs hide ourself wythin that busshe that we se yonder; for yf we were seen, the frenshemen myght kylle our 4 broder ry Chad or ever they wolde come.' 'Broder,' sayd Reynawde / 'ye speke wysely' / and thenne they lighted doun a fote, and put theymself in a bushemente wythin a wode<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>that was nyghe Mountfawcon,<sup>2</sup> Rey-8 nawd at the right side of it / Alard at the left side, and wyth hym Guycharde & Mawgys / they put themselves in ambush

in a wood near Moufaucon.

Well, ye have herde how thei were sent to the playn of valcolours, and the payne that Rey-12 nawde & his bredern suffred; and thenne howe they wente & socoured kyng yon of Gascoyn, that had betrayed them / And how Reynawde dyde fyghte wyth Rowland, wherof he was sore trayveylled / and 16 had ben all redy thre dayes wythoute slepe, and therfore ye ought not be merveylled yf Reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis fell a slepe / and, to saye the trouth, assone as Reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis 20 were embusshed vnder the sapyn trees, thei fell in to so harde a slepe that thei forgate richard / Now god, for his pite / have pite vpon him, <sup>2</sup>and kepe hym<sup>2</sup> / For otherwyse he muste deye /

The brethren and Mawgis fall asleep
in the wood from weariness.

24 Now shall we telle you of Charlemagne, that was in his pavyllion. he called to hym the duke Naymes & rycharde of normandy, & sayd to theym,
'Lordes, what counseyll gyve you me? ye knowe 28 that rycharde the sone of aymon is of grete power / I fere me that reynawd shal com to socour him whan I shall sende him for to be hanged, & therefore I must sende<sup>3</sup> <sup>4</sup>company for to withstande reynawde, his bre-32 dern, & Mawgis.' And thus as the kyng and the duke Naymes spake togyder, he loked before hym & saw

The Emperor
calls Naymes and Richard of Normandy, and asks
their counsel in regard to the son
of Aymon.

<sup>1</sup> de sappin, F. orig. q. iv. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> ung tieul homme de ma part, F. orig. q. v.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. V. i.

He calls Berenger of Valois, Berenger of valoys / and called hym, & sayd to hym /
 'Berenger, ye are of my men, For ye hold of me scotland & wales / ye oughte to come serve me in Fraunce wyth all your pouer every yere ones whan 4 and promises to I have nede. I shall now quyte you & relesse vnto release him from you all the servyse that ye owe me, to you & to your all service to him eyres for evermore, soo that ye wyll take<sup>1</sup> Richard, the if he will hang sone of Aymon, <sup>2</sup>and see that he be hanged & stranged 8 Richard. at Mountfawcon.<sup>2</sup> And yf Reynawde com there for to rescue hym / I praye you that ye wyll take in hande my quarell.' 'Sire,' sayd Berenger, 'I see well now that ye love me but a lityll / whan ye sende me to doo 12 Berenger answers suche a dede. it were to me a grete shame yf I dyd that he cannot do it; for no thyng that is to my disworshippe, I wyll so shameful and not doo wyth my good wylle / and also ye ought dishonourable an action. not to conseylle me to it, nor suffre me to doo so. 16 Yet have I lever to serve you, as mi dute is for to doo, than that I shold doo the same that ye wolde put me to.' And whan Charlemain sawe that Berenger wold not doo it / he called to hym therle Guydellon, & sayd 20 to hym, 'Guydellon, ye be my man, & holdeth Bavire of me; and ye ought to serve me at ony tyme that I call you, with thre<sup>3</sup> thousande men / yf ye wyll goo hange Richarde, <sup>2</sup>the sone of aymon / I shall make you 24 free, & <sup>2</sup>I shall gyve you y<sup>e</sup> cyte of mascon' / 'I wyll not doo it,' sayd therle Guydellon; 'but I telle you for certeyn that Richard shall have noo harme if I may helpe hym fro it to my power.' Thenne sayd Charle- 28 magn, 'goo oute of my sighte / for ye be no good man' / And thenne he sayd to rychard, 'by god, yet shall ye be hanged in dispite of theym' / Thenne called Charlemagne Oger the dane, & sayd to hym, 'Ogier, ye 32 be my man. it is shewed vnto me that ye dyd <sup>4</sup>the other daye treyson agenste me in the playn of Val-colours, for love of Reynawde / Now shall it be seen now yf it is true or not / Yf ye wyll goo hange Richarde, I 4 shall gyve you the cyte of Lion. And I shall holde you quyte of all the servyse that ye owe me, & your eyres also, for evermore.' 'By the feith that I owe to you, sire, I shall not doo it, for ye wote how Richarde 8 is my cosin germayn; and I telle you, that who soever shall hange Rycharde <sup>1</sup>the sone of Aymon, <sup>1</sup>I defy hym, and I shall helpe Reynawde wyth all my power' /

<sup>1</sup> aillez pendre richart, F. orig. q. v.<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. v. back. <sup>3</sup> deux, F. orig. q. v.<sup>4</sup> Fol. V. i. back.

 'Go fro me,' sayd charlemagn, 'goodys curse have ye / 12 nevertheles, by my berde, yet shall he be hanged' / And whan he had sayd so / he called to hym the bysshop Turpyn, & sayd to hym, 'Ye bysshop, I shall make you pope <sup>1</sup>of rome <sup>1</sup>yf ye wyll hange Rychard.' 16 'syre,' sayd the bysshop Turpyn / 'What saye ye / ye knowe well that I am a preest / and ye wyll that I shold hange folke / yf I dyd so, I shold lese my masse, & be regulet / and also ye knowe well that Richarde 20 is my cosin / wolde ye that I sholde commytte treyson vpon my kynsmen / certes, it were agenst reyson' /
 'Soo helpe you god,' sayd Charlemagn, <sup>2</sup>'ye leve it neyther for kynred nor for masse, but as a cowarde; 24 ye leve it only for fere that your crowne sholde be bete.'<sup>2</sup>

Charlemagne calls on Ogier to prove himself his faithful subject by hanging Richard.

Ogier declares that his near kinship to the Sons prevents his obeying this command.

The Emperor addresses Bishop Turpin, to whom he promises the Pontificate if he will do this deed. Turpin says that as a priest he cannot hang men.

Thenne called Charlemagn, Salamon of breten, & sayd to hym, 'Salamon, ye knowe well that ye 28 be my man, & that ye holde breten of me / I shall gyve you y<sup>e</sup> duchie of Ansom, yf ye wyll hange Richarde, <sup>1</sup>the sone of Aymon.'<sup>1</sup> 'Syr,' answerde Salamon / 'yf it playse you to commaunde me ony other 32 thynge, I wyll be redy to doo it wyth a good wyll, but this I wyll not doo / And I telle you for certeyn, that <sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. v. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> vous le laissez plus pource quil est vostre parent que pour dieu ne pour vostre messe, F. orig. q. v. back.

rycharde shall have noo harme, yf I maye' / 'Salamon,' sayd the kyng / 'ye be a traytour, sith that ye wyll not doo my commaundement.' And after this he sayd, 'Rycharde, I wyll that ye <sup>1</sup>know well that ye <sup>4</sup> shall be hanged in dyspyte of all thy kynsmen' / 'Sir,' sayd Richard / 'peraventure it shall be otherwyse than ye wene.' and thenne Charlemagn tourned hymself towarde Rowlande, and sayd to hym / 'Fayr newewe, <sup>8</sup> goo & see that he be hanged, I praye you / for it is well reyson that ye doo thoffyce, sith that all the frenshemen have faylled me / & also ye have taken hym / wherfore ye must nedes hange hym; and I <sup>12</sup> shall gyve you Coleyn vpon the ryn, & soo many other countreys that ye shall have ynoughe.' 'Syr,' answerde Rowlande, 'yf I dyde this, I shold be taken for a traytour / For I have answered Richarde a fore <sup>16</sup> that I toke hym, that he shold have noo harme of his body; and yf ye make hym deye, no man shall never truste me vpon my feyth / Wherfore I praye the xii peres of Fraunce, that none of theym wyll take the <sup>20</sup> charge vpon hym for to see hym hanged / for yf he were hanged / I sholde be dyffamed / And I promyse you, that who shall hange Richarde, I shall goo to Reynawde / and shall put myself in hys pryson / and <sup>24</sup> yf he wyll pardonne me his broders deth, I shall helpe hym vndre my othe agenste all men wyth thre thousande fyghtyng men, well arrayed on horsbacke' /
 'Newewe,' sayd Charlemagne, <sup>26</sup> 'the devyll spede you / <sup>28</sup> ye ben all false vnto me.'<sup>3</sup>

Charlemagne
 turns towards Roland, and tells him to see that the traitor is
 hung.

Roland also refuses because of his promise to
 Richard.

The Emperor
 rises in great wrath, and addresses his barons,

And whan Charlemagn sawe that he myght not bringe his wyll aboute <sup>3</sup>for to hange Rycharde,<sup>3</sup> he was soo wrothe <sup>4</sup>that he shoke for angre,<sup>4</sup> and rose <sup>32</sup> vpon his fete, & sayd / 'Lordes, ye knowe well that I

<sup>1</sup> Fol. V. ii.

<sup>2-2</sup> de dieu soyes vous maudit, F. orig. q. vi.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> quil ne scauoit que faire, F. orig. q. vi.

am the sone of kyng Pepyn, & of the quene Bete. to whom he relates the story of his life, my fader was norished in Fraunce, and I fled in to Spayn to Alaffre vpon the see; and there I dyd 4 many merveilles of armes that I was made knyght, & dyde conquere salienne, my love, that forsake XV. kynges bering crowne for my sake; and she cam with me in to<sup>1</sup> Fraunce, <sup>2</sup>and thenne I was crowned kyng and how he was crowned king of France, 8 <sup>3</sup>accordynge to the right of my patrymonye<sup>3</sup> / and thenne I dyde wed the sayd lady galiene wyth right grete ioye, & wende to have had my royame in peas / but the same day that I was crowned, the xii peres of 12 Fraunce purposed to have made me deye at cristmasse nexte folowyng / but our lord sent me an angell / and made hym to telle me that I shold goo hide myselve / the whiche I dyde so, & I durste not saye agenste it / 16 nor I wyst not where I sholde hide me / but god wold that I sholde fynde Bason, a grete theef / that brought me in to a pytte; and this hangyng, men conspired my deth / but Bason<sup>4</sup> shewed me all togyder, & thorughe 20 his ayde I toke myn enmyes; and I punysshed theym afterwarde at my wylle; and so shall I do by you / yf there be ony that wyll doo contrary to my wyll.
 And I am delibered to enquere eche of you by this 24 maner, for to see who shall be false or true to me.
 Whan Charlemagn had sayd this, he torned towarde the sone of Oedon, & sayd to hym / 'Escouff, com forthe! I have brought you to grete honour, & we and says he shall judge of their fidelity by their obedience in this matter.
 28 have norysshed you full derely. ye knowe that ye holde Langres of me; yet shall I doo to you moche more good than I have doon, for I shall gyve to you therldomes of mounferraunt & of clermount, so that He then commands Escouff to come forth, 32 ye will goo hang that hoursoñ rychard' / 'Sir,' sayd escouff, 'ye wote well that moreoedon holdeth all the and offers him great lands if he will do his will.

<sup>1</sup> la douce france, F. orig. q. vi. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. V. ii. back.<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vi. back.<sup>4</sup> Bazyn, in text orig.

lond that ye speke of, and I had never no<sup>1</sup> thing therof / but I am felaw wyth Rowland in armes; and whan I shall be lord of that londe my father holdeth in his hande, I shall fulfyll your commaundement'<sup>2</sup> / 4 'By saynt Denys of Fraunce, ye must goo see that he be hanged,' sayd charlemain, <sup>3</sup>'& I shall make you lord of moo londes.'<sup>3</sup> 'Sir,' sayd estorfawde / 'is it erneste that ye speke?' 'ye,' sayd Charlemagn. 'By 8 my hede, syre,' sayd Estorfawde / 'Ye wolde not be wyth me for to see Rycharde hange, for halfe <sup>4</sup>of your royame' / Whan the kyng herde that he was thus reprevd / he toke a staff, & caste it after Estorfawde<sup>5</sup> / 12 but Estorfawd sterte from his place, and <sup>6</sup>the staff brake in peces agenste a post<sup>6</sup> / And whan the xii. peres sawe that / they wente all out of the pavyllion of Charlemagn. And whan that charlemagn retorned 16 hym / and sawe that none of all the xii peres wolde abyde there wyth hym, Thezne he sayd to the duke Naymes, 'where be my xii peres goon?' 'Syr,' sayd the duke Naymes / 'they ben all goon oute of your 20 pavyllion / and not wythout a cause, for it becometh not to suche a <sup>3</sup>noble<sup>3</sup> kyng<sup>e</sup> as ye be, for to smyte his barons / for ye shold be sore blamed.'

Esouf reproves the Emperor, who flings a staff at him; it breaks against a post.

The XII. peers leave the pavilion in disgust at the Emperor's conduct.

Thenne whan Charlemagn sawe this, he called to 24 hym Rychard of montrolonde,<sup>7</sup> & sayd to hym / 'Com forthe, Rycharde of montrolonde'<sup>7</sup> / here what I shall tell you. ye know well that ye be one of theym that I love best in this worlde, but ye must doo 28 one thyng at my request / It is that ye wil goo hange Richard, the sone of Aymon, at the gybet of mount-fawcon' / Thenne Rychard of montrolonde answerde, Charlemagne tries to induce Richard of Montrolonde to do the deed,

<sup>1</sup> ne, in text.    <sup>2</sup> et vostre volente, F. orig. q. vi.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vi.    <sup>4</sup> Fol. V. iii.

<sup>6</sup> pour le frapper, F. orig. q. vi.

<sup>6-6</sup> le baston ala frapper au rubant si grant coup que le baston en ala en deux pieces, F. orig. q. vi.

<sup>7</sup> de rolant, F. orig. q. vi.

'Sir, I shall doo so wyth a good wyll / for I am your man, & soo I oughte not to refuse your commaundement / but, by my soule, syre emperour / yf ye wyll 4 that I goo hange Richard, ye shall come wyth me with a thousand knyghtes well armed / and I shall hange hym where soever it playse you / And yf Reynawd & his bredern com there to rescue / I shall icoparde 8 my owne body for to save yours. Now see yf ye wyll do this or no, for none otherwyse wyll I not goo there one fote.' 'Goo from me, gloton,' sayd Charlemagn / 'goddys curse have thou' /

but he answers that he will consent if the Emperor will accompany him with a thousand knights.

12 The kynge thenne called to hym the duke Naymes, and sayd to hym, 'What counseyll geve you' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'goode / yf ye wyll beleve me. <sup>1</sup>Syre, ye wote that Reynawde, his brethern, 16 and Mawgis, are of the best knyghtes of Fraunce / as every man knoweth well / this werre hath lasted ryght longe, For it is wel xvi. yeres that it began fyrste / and many a noble knyghte hath be slayn for the same /
 20 yf it playse you, ye shall sende worde <sup>2</sup>to Reynawde,<sup>2</sup> to Alarde, Guychard, & Mawgis, that they wyll becom your men / and ye shall deliver agen vnto theym their brother Rychard <sup>2</sup>alyve,<sup>2</sup> and that ye wyll doo make
 24 reynawde & alarde of the xii. peres of Fraunce. And whan Reynawd & his bredern shall see that ye have doon to them soo grete worship, they shall serve you wyth good herte, and so that ye shall cofn them grete
 28 thanke for it / and I ensure you ye shall be the more dred & more redoubted for cause of them. and yf ye have ones the four bredern & Mawgis their cosin <sup>3</sup>to your frendes<sup>3</sup> / there shall be no prynce in all crysten-32 dome so hardy that dare move werre agenst you / and I promyse you, sire, that the more ye kepe this werre agenste theym / the more shall ye lose therby / and,

Duke Naymes counsels the Emperor to send word to the Sons and Mawgis that he will release Richard if they will become his subjects again.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. V. iii. back.    <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> tous ensemble, F. orig. q. vii.

moreover, they be all of our house by theyr fader Aymon / this knowe ye well / and therefore I can not hate them by noo wise' / 'Naymes,' sayd charlemagne,
 'I wyll not doo so / for they all have doon amys 4 agens<sup>1</sup> me, and so shall I doo hange Rycharde, bi the feyth of my body' / 'Syr,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'ye shall not doo so, & god wil, For he is of grete lynage, & of our lynage / for we sholde never maye suffre it 8 nor endure, and ye also sholde be blamed full sore for it. But & ye wyll make hym deye, I shall gyve you better counseyll' / 'Telle me how,' sayd Charlemagn /
 'and I shall doo it / yf it semeth me good' / 'Syr,' sayd 12
 the duke Naymes, 'sith it playse you that Rycharde shall deye, lete hym be caste in to a depe prison vnder the erthe, and make hym to be kepte surely 2 there in that he scape not awaye 2 / and commaunde 3 that noo 16 mete at all be broughte to hym / and so shall he deye for hungre. And ye shall not be blamed yf ye doo soo' /
 'Naymes,' sayd Charlemagne / 'ye doo iape wyth me /
 I knowe it well / whan ye doo telle me this / Ye knowe 20 well that Mawgys is to grete a nygremancer / For I shold never maye kepe Rycharde in pryson, but that mawgys wolde have hym oute thorughe his craft / and therefore I wyll not doo as ye saye' / Thenne came 24 Ogyer the dane / and sayd to the duke Naymes, 'Ye make to longe a sermon ; lete the kyng doo wyth it as it playseth hym ; For the more that ye praye him, and the worse shall he doo / but he shall make peas whan 28 he see that he canne none otherwyse doo / But this daye shall be seen who loveth Rycharde' 4 / And whan Ogyer had sayd this / he wente oute of the pavyllion, and Escouff wyth hym, and Rychard of Normandy, the 32 bysshop Turpyn, and Guydellon of Bavyre / and made

Charlemagne will not listen to this advice.

Naymes then proposes that Richard should be cast into prison, and there
 left to starve.

Ogyer comes to Naymes, and tells him it is useless to hold further parley on the matter ;

<sup>1</sup> aienst, in text.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. V. iv.

<sup>4</sup> et combien que son lignaige soit huy tourne dune part et se Il y a nul qui luy face mal, je les deffie de moy, F. orig. q. vii. bk.

their folke to be armed. And whan they were armed, they were well xii thousande men. And thenne ogier beganne to crie wyth a hie voys / <sup>1</sup> Now shall it be 4 seen who shall be so hardy for to lede Rycharde <sup>2</sup> the sone of Aymon<sup>3</sup> to hangynge / For suche shall brynge hym that never shall come agayn / but he be hedles / and oger wente into the pavyllion where Rychard was / 8 that was bounde bothe handes & fete, and was blindefelde. And whan Ogier sawe rycharde that was thus arrayed, he had of hym grete pyte; soo wente he to hym to have delivered hym / but he advysed hymselfe / 12 & sayd that he shold not doo it, but he wolde tary for to see an ende of it, what the kyng shold doo therof.
 And whan Rychard herde Ogier speke, he called to hym, & sayd in the presence of the duke Naymes, and of 16 Rycharde of normandy, of Guydellon <sup>3</sup> of bavyre,<sup>3</sup> and of the bysshop Turpyn / and of Rowland, that thenne happed to come there / <sup>4</sup> 'Fayr lordes, I knowe well that yf it were at your playsur ye wolde lete me go quyte; 20 and all ynoughe ye have traveyllled yourselfe for me, wherof I thanke you right moche; but sith that I muste nedes be broughte to the galohous / It is better that I, poure, vnhappy, deye alone / than that ye sholde have 24 ony harme for my sake; wherfore loke that ye lose not the good grace of Charlemagne / and I praye you that ye wyll goo vnto hym, & tell hym that he doo his wyll vpon me, for I have lever deye shortly / than to lyve 28 longe in sorowe.' Whan Ogier sawe Richard speke soo, he was so sory for it that he felle almost down to the grounde for grete sorow in a swoune,<sup>5</sup> and sayd to Rychard in angre, 'What saist thou, fole destestable, 32 Wylte thou be hanged? for yf we sayd the same that thou sayst to Charlemagn / all the golde of the worlde

he enters the pavillion where Richard is seated, bound hand and foot.

Richard thanks the lords which surround him for their endeavours on his behalf, and says he must die.

Ogier swoons when he hears Richard speak thus,

<sup>1</sup> Damps roy, F. orig. q. vii. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vii. back. <sup>4</sup> Fol. V. iv. back.

<sup>5</sup> et quant Il fut revenu Il dist a Richart, F. orig. q. vii. back.

shold not save the, but that thou sholdest soone be hanged <sup>1</sup>bi the necke.<sup>1</sup> ‘I care not,’ sayd Rychard, ‘hap as it hap wyll’ And thenne he tourned hymself toward Rowland, & sayd to hym / ‘I pardonne you, <sup>4</sup> <sup>1</sup>sire<sup>1</sup> Rowlande, here & afore god, the feith that ye have promised me / and that ye gaaff me whan ye toke me afore balancon’ / And whan Ogyer herd this he waxed almost mad for grete angre, and sayd to Rowlande, <sup>8</sup> ‘Syr, beleve not Richarde, for he speketh as a man that is vexed in his spyrites, and not wythout a grete cause / but kepe to hym the feyth that ye have promysed hym, for it shall be your <sup>1</sup>grete<sup>1</sup> worship yf ye <sup>12</sup> doo so’ / ‘Ogier,’ sayd Rowlande, ‘doubt not / I shall kepe to Rycharde all that I have promysed hym, & more.’ Whan Richarde herd that worde, he called to him oger, & sayd / ‘Fayr cosin, for god, kepe your <sup>16</sup> peas / for I have seen here mawgis ryghtnow / and I wote well he hath not forgotten me / For by the feyth that I owe to you, suche shall lede me to the gibet that shall soone lose his hede, and many other moo wyth <sup>20</sup> hym.’ <sup>2</sup>‘Cosin,’ sayd Ogyer, ‘is it trouth that ye saye that ye have seen Mawgis here’ / ‘Ye,’ sayd Richard, ‘withoute ony fawte.’ Thenne sayd Ogier, ‘blessed be the good lorde of this tydynges / now have I noo doubte <sup>24</sup> of Rycharde / sith that my cosin knoweth of it.’ And thenne all the xii peres of Fraunce lighted a fote / and cam to Charlemagn & sayd to hym / ‘Sir, we ben all your men sworn to you. All that we have sayd & <sup>28</sup> doon / we dyde it for to see whether we myghte have deliverde our cosin<sup>3</sup> <sup>4</sup>from deth by your good wyll<sup>4</sup> / but sith that it playseth not to you that he be saved, & that ye wyll that he be hanged, we wyll not speke no more <sup>32</sup> agenst it / by cause that ye angre yourselfe to sore / and begs Roland

 to keep faith with
 him.

Richard tells Ogier how he has seen Mawgis here.

The xii peers
 submit to the decree of Charlemagne aganist
 Richard.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. vii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. V. v.

<sup>3</sup> richart, F. orig. q. viii.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. viii.

Now sende Rycharde to be hanged by whom ye wyll / for he shall not be letted of vs therfro' /

- Thenne sayd Charlemayn, 'by my feith now ye 4 speke well & wisly, and now I pardonne you The Emperor then pardons
them,
all'<sup>1</sup> / And thenne charlemagn called to hym Rypus of Riplemonde, & sayd to him, 'Rypus, yf ye wyll doo and commands Ripus to hang
Richard.
so moche for me that ye wyll goo hange Rychard / I 8 shall make the lord of grete londes / and ye shall be my chambreyne all your liff' / 'Syr,' sayd Ripus, 'I am all redy to fulfille your commaundement / for Reynawde slewe my vncler be side balencon.' 'Ye 12 speke now well,' sayd ogyer / 'ye shall be a cowarde but yf ye avenge yourself at this tyme' / And whan Ripus vnderstode Ogyer speke thus, he thoughte hymselfe the more sure for it, And <sup>2</sup>right humble & 16 courtesly<sup>2</sup> he kneled down tofore themperour Charlemagne, and kyssed his fete, & after he sayd to him /
'Syr, I am ordeyned for to doo you servyse & your Ripus promises to fulfil the Emperor's orders.
commaundement. Yf it playse you, ye shall make me 20 sure that whan I shall com agen fro the hangynge of Rycharde, that none of your xii peres shall not awaite me none evyll tourne for it afterwarde' / 'Bi my feyth,' sayd Charlemagne, 'I wyll doo soo wyth a good wyll.' 24 <sup>3</sup>And thenne he sayd to Rowlande and to Olyvere / and to all the twelve peres of Fraunce / 'Lordes,<sup>4</sup> I wyll that ye promyse hym that he shall not be hurt by none of you, nor in tyme to come by noo maner of wyse / by 28 cause I make hym to hange Rycharde.' The whiche thyngge all the xii peres promysed hym wyth a good wylle. And whan Rypus had taken the othe of the xii peres of Fraunce for his surety / he wente to his 32 owne tente / and made him to be armed / and whan he was armed, he lighted on horsbacke / and cam before

<sup>1</sup> mon mal talant, F. orig. q. viii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. viii. <sup>3</sup> Fol. V. v. back.

<sup>4</sup> par ma fois, F. orig. q. viii.

kyng Charlemagn / And whan themperour sawe hym / he sayd to hym, 'Rypus, take a thousande knyghtes wyth you for to kepe you / and yf Reynawd or Mawgys come there, take theym & hange theym wyth rycharde.' <sup>4</sup> 'Syr,' sayd ripus / 'I shall doo your commaundement.' And thenne the kyng made theym deliver rycharde / and whan ripus had hym, he put hym to the waye, & mounted richard vpon a mewle / and put a halter at 8 his necke, & so ledde hym forth, like as it had be a stronge<sup>1</sup> theef, and brought him before the pavyllion of charlemagn. And whan the kyng sawe him, he was glad of it, and sayd to rypus,<sup>2</sup> 'Wolde god that all 12 thother sones of Aymon were in the plighte that richard is now in / For I sholde well avenge you / and myselfe also vpon them.'

Ripus puts Richard on a mule with a halter round his neck, and leads him to Charlemagne.

The Frenchmen sorrow when they see the evil plight of Richard.

Whan the frenshemen saw rycharde that was led to 16 hangynge so vilainously, they began to make suche a sorowe for hym that it was merueille / soo that none so grete was never seen / Rypus rode on his waye, & dyde somoche that he cam to Mountfawcon. And 20 whan rypus dyde see the galous sette vp / he sayd to rycharde, 'By god, richarde, see yonder is your lodgyng, where ye shall be hanged by myn owne handes<sup>3</sup> / this daye shall be avenged the deth of foulques,<sup>4</sup> my vncl, 24 that Reynaude slewe besides Balencon. The socoures of <sup>5</sup>Mawgis is now ferre fro you, for he can not kepe you, but that I shall hang you now in dispite of Reynawd & of your other brethern' / Whan Richard 28 herde Rypus speke so proudly, & sawe that he was so nighe the gibet / and that he sawe noo socours comyng of noo parte / he was sore agast & a ferde / and thoughte he wold kepe Ripus wyth wordes, & sayd to hym, 32 'Rypus, for god have pyte vpon me! For I am noo

Ripus shows Richard the gallows prepared for him.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. q. viii.

<sup>2</sup> mon amy vengez moy de ce truant. Sire dist rypus . . . F. orig. q. viii.

<sup>3</sup> a grant villite, F. orig. q. viii.

<sup>4</sup> de morillon, F. orig. q. viii. <sup>5</sup> Fol. V. vi.

man that shold be hanged by rayson / but I ought to be delivered by you; and yf ye wyll delyver me / I shall gyve you two hundred marke weyghte of fyne 4 golde, & I shall make you a grete lord' / 'Certes, Richard,' sayd Ripus, 'ye speke for noughte / for I wold not leve you but that ye shall be hanged, for x of the best cytees of Fraunce.' 'Rypus,' sayd Rychard / 8 'sith that ye wyll not have pyte vpon my body / have pyte vpon my soule. And I praye you, asmoche as I can, that ye wyll make a preest com to me for to shryve me.' 'Certes,' sayd Rypus, 'ye shall have one wyth 12 right good wyll.' And thenne he made come a preest, som sayen that it was a bysshop, for to shryve Richard / the whiche began to shryve hymself, & shewed to the preest <sup>1</sup>many moo synnes<sup>1</sup> than ever he dyd in his dayes / 16 and this he dyd for to <sup>2</sup>lengthe the tyme / and<sup>2</sup> to see yf he shold have ony socours or noo. And whan Rychard sawe that his helpe cam not, he wexed almost mad, and sayd to his confessour / 'Syr, I wote not 20 what I shold more say / gyve me absolucyon' / and he gaff him penaunce according to the terme of his liff / and the confessor went from him all wepyng. And whan Rypus sawe that Rychard was confessed / he 24 came to hym & put the halter aboute his necke / and made hym mounte vpon the ladder, & dyd shit the cheyn <sup>2</sup>wherat he shold hang<sup>2</sup> / & whan richard<sup>3</sup> sawe that his bredern cam not for to save him / he wende 28 none other but that he shold have deyed / & delibered hymselfe <sup>4</sup>for to suffre deth atte that owre; and thenne he sayd to Rypus, 'My frende, I pray the for god that thou suffre me awhyle tyll I have sayd an oryson 32 that I dyde lerne in my youthe, to the ende that god have mercy of my soule.' 'I wyll not,' sayd Rypus /

Richard offers Ripus a ransom,
which he refuses.

Richard asks for a priest,

which is granted
him.

He tries to delay
in hopes of help
arriving, but it does not come.

Richard, expecting to die, begs
for respite to say
his prayers.

<sup>1-1</sup> dix fois plus de pechiez, F. orig. r. i.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. i.

<sup>3</sup> Quant richart fut monte sur leschielle, F. orig. r. i.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. V. vi. back.

He promises to pray for Ripus,

who grants him
time to say his orison.

The prayer of Richard before his death.

‘thou shalte have noo lenger respyte.’ ‘Syre,’ sayd his men / ‘yes / ye shall yf it playse you / For yf he maye doo so moche that his soule be saved / he shall praye for you in the other world / and for vs also’ / 4 And thenne Rypus gaaf respite to Rycharde, wherof he dyd like a fole<sup>1</sup> / And thenne Rychard tourned hymselfe towarde the eest / and beganne to saye his prayer wyth good herte and devowtly / For he trowed to 8 have deyed wythoute remyssyon / And he sayd in this maner.

‘Glorious Ihesus / by thy blessed name / that made heven & erthe / and all the elements that 12 ben, and wente in this world as a poure man, and saved Ionas from the beli of the fysshe, and in Bethelem reysedest Lazaron, and delyvered Danyell from the pyt of the lion. the synnes of the theef / ye dyde 16 pardonne in the crosse / where the felons Iewes had crusified you. Also to mari magdalene her synne / ye forgaaff in the hous of Symon / For she wysse your fete wyth grete devocyon / Iudas, the false 20 traytour, murmured thurgh enuye / wherof ye dyde shewe to hym that he dyde grete foly; and Iudas kyssed you by grete treyson, and delivered you to the iewes, wherof he was rewarded after his deserv- 24 ynge.<sup>2</sup> Good lord, ye created & made our fader Adam<sup>3</sup> of the slyme of therth / and yllumyued him with the grace of the holi gost; and after ye dyd haban-donne to him the frutes of paradise / but he brake 28 your commaundement, Wherbi mankynde went to damnacion, & we all were dampned wythout remys-sion / but after ye redemed vs bi the merite of your blessid passion; ye did suffre<sup>4</sup> grete evylles and grete 32

<sup>1</sup> Et quant richart eut le respit Il se tourne devers orient . . .
F. orig. r. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Car pecha mallement a tort et sans raison. Dont faulcement mourust en desesperacion, F. orig. R. i.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. i. back.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. V. vii.

afflyctyons for vs poure synners, wythout ony devocyon.
 Whan Longys<sup>1</sup> dyde shove the spere in to your dygne side, the water ranne of it, and also the blode lepte 4 into his eyen / wherof he recovered his sighte ; and ye pardonned hym his synnes / whan he called vpon you for mercy. And also to Noe ye lete make by your carpenters an arke for to save hymself, and of every 8 beest a couple. In Iosaphat, good lord, ye broughte your apostles, where ye dyde make a fayr myracle /
 For wyth two fysshes & fyve loves of barle / ye fed v. thousande men all their fylle / O, gode lord / as I doo 12 byleve this that I have sayd stedfastly, kepe this daye my body fro deth that is so nyghe, that I be not hanged nor put in pryson, but deliver me from the handes of my enmyes / that I be not vytupered nor 16 broughte to shame by Rypus of ryplemonde, that holdeth me in his gynnes / Ha, Reynaude, my right dere broder, that ye be not here now wyth my brethern & wyth my<sup>2</sup> cosyn mawgis / ye have now forgotten me, 20 & lete me here deye, Wherfore I recomende me to god of heven.' And thenne Richard began to wepe full tendrely, & sayd to rypus, 'Rypus, doo wyth me what ye will.'
 24 Now shall we speke of bayard, the good horse, of Reynawd, of his bredern, & mawgis. It is trouth that bayard,<sup>3</sup> the horse of reynawd the sone of Aymon,<sup>3</sup> that cam of the fery, and thus he vnder-28 stode the worde whan it was spoken as well as it had be a man / Whan bayard vnderstode the noise<sup>4</sup> that the folke made about the galous, and sawe that his mayster slept fast / he cam to reynawd, & smote him soo harde 32 wyth his fete in the myddes of his sheelde that he

Richard implores God to have mercy on him.

Bayard wakes his master Reynawde,

<sup>1</sup> Longius.

<sup>2</sup> bon cousin le saige maugis, F. orig. r. i. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. ii.

<sup>4</sup> et le bruit des gens que ripus avoit amene avecques soy a monfaucon . . . F. orig. r. ii.

who sees his brother on the ladder, leaps on Bayard, and flies
to his rescue.

Mawgis and the brethren wake
and follow him.

Rypus sees the brethren approach,

and is in great
fear for his life.

He begs Richard to have mercy on
him.

made hym awake. Soo lept reynawd vpon his fete all afrayed, & beheld what it was, and loked toward mountfawcon & saw his brother vpon the ladder.
Soo made he none other taryenge, <sup>1</sup>but lighted vpon 4 bayarde, that raune as the wynde / For at every tyme he lepte xxx. fote in a playne grounde. And alarde, guycharde / and mawgis awoke for love of bayarde, that made grete noyse / And whan they were all 8 awaked / mawgis began to crye as hie as he cowde vpon his horse, 'the devyll spede the, evyll beeste, that thou hast lete me slepe soo longe' / and thenne he lighted quykly vpon his backe / For there was noo 12 better horse in all the worlde after bayarde.<sup>2</sup>

Whan Rypus of ryplemonde, that wold have strangled Rycharde, sawe come his brethern & mawgys / he was soo sore abashed wyth it that 16 he wyste not what he shold doo, and he sayd thenne to Rycharde / 'Richard, ye be deliverde out of my handes / For here comen Reynawde & Mawgis / and all their puissaunce, that com for to socour you,'<sup>3</sup> 20 and yf it playse you, ye shall have mercy on me For this that I dyde / for to have broughte you here.
It was put for to have awaye y<sup>e</sup> debate that Charlemagne had wyth the xii peres of Fraunce; and I 24 knew well that ye shold be rescued wythout ony fawte by your brethern & of Mawgis.' 'Rypus,' sayd Richarde, 'mocke not wyth me / for here is to hard a mocke for me, and ye wyne not moche by, for to 28 gabbe me of this facyon.' 'By my soule,' sayd Rypus,
'I mocke you not / it is in good ernest that I saye / ye maye see theim here not a bowe shotte a ferre, nor I seke not to doo you ony harme / but goo doun fro 32 the ladder / and have mercy on me, I beseche you, for goddys love.'

<sup>1</sup> Fol. V. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> et sen va apres regnault, F. orig. r. ii.

<sup>3</sup> dont je me rens a vous beau sire, F. orig. r. ii.

Rychard was mervellously abashed when he herde Rypus speke, and he torned his hede aside & sawe Reynawde, that cam a good pas / and whan he 4 saw him, he sayd, 'ripus, I shall never clayme my broder reynawd for my broder / yf he hange you not 1 by the necke<sup>1</sup> to the same gibet where as ye thought to have hanged me right now.' This hangyng that 8 Rychard spake to Rypus, Reynawd was arryved, and herde this that <sup>2</sup>Richard had sayd to Rypus / And Reynawde began thenne to crie wyth a hie voys /
 'so helpe me god, Rypus, ye be deed. For ye be 12 a cursed man / and for your cursidnes I shall hange you my owne self at this gibet / so shall you be possessor of my broder Richardis place / for all the power that Charlemagne shall make shall not save 16 you therfro' / This hangyng, cam there mawgis, sore chauffed, & sayd to Ripus, 'Ha, rypus, thou traytour, evyll man, ye have alwayes be redy for to doo som evyll agenst vs, but sith that I have founde you here, 20 I shall not seke you nowhere elles' / and thenne mawgis bare vp his spere for to have perced his body therwyth, but Reynawd cryed vpon hym, 'cosyn, touche hym not, for I wolde not for a grete thyng 24 that a nother than I sholde slee hym. For I shall avenge vpon hym my dere broder Rycharde' / and thenne he drewe oute flamberde, & smote rypus wyth it suche a stroke that he felde hym deed to therthe 28 at the fote of the ladder; & after he sayd to his bredern, 'kepe wel that none of his folke scape, but that thei be ded or taken' / And thenne Reynawd descended a fote, & went vpon the ladder, & toke 32 richarde betwene his armes & brought hym down / and vnbounde him handes & fete / and after he kyssed his mouth, & sayd to hym / 'Broder, how doo ye fele your selfe? are ye not yll at ease' /

Richard threatens to make his brother hang Ripus on the gibbet he had prepared.

Reynawde slays Ripus and his
folk,

and releases his brother Richard.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. ii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. V. viii.

‘Brother,’ sayd Rycharde, ‘I have noo harme / but lete me be armed, I praye you.’ ‘By saynte Iohan,’ sayd Reynawde / ‘ye shall be armed anone.’ ‘Brother,’ sayd Rycharde, ‘lete me have the armours 4 of Rypus of Ryplemonde’ / ‘wyth a good wylle,’ sayd Reynawde / And Incontynente he made Rypus to be had from his harneys, & made his broder richarde to be armed. therwyth he made hym to lighte on 8 hors<sup>1</sup>backe, and toke hym his sheelde / and his baner. and whan Richard was well appareilled, Reynawd toke y<sup>e</sup> halter that rypus had put aboute Richardis necke / and put it aboute rypus necke; & after, he mounted 12 vpon the ladder, & drewe hym all deed / and hanged hym there as he wold have hanged richarde, and wyth hym well xv. moo<sup>2</sup> of his company, suche as kyng charlemagn loved moost / and whan he had hanged 16 [t]hem, he sayd to rycharde / ‘Brother, thise many shall kepe here whatche in stede of you’ / whan this was doon, mawgis came to Reynawd, & sayd to hym, ‘Cosyn, telle me who waked you so well in tyme 20 as ye were.’ ‘cosyn,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘by the feyth that I owe to god, I slept as harde<sup>3</sup> as though I had not slept in xii. nyghtes a fore<sup>3</sup> / but baiard, my<sup>4</sup> gentill horse, awoke me’ / thenne sayd mawgis, ‘O gracious 24 lord of heven, blessed be god that made suche a horse / it is not the first good tourne that bayarde hath doon to you, my cosin, nor also it shal not be the laste.’ And they all went and kyssed bayarde for the 28 goodnes that he had shewed vnto theym /

Reynawde gives his brother the armour of Ripus
of Riplemonde,

and hangs the body of Ripus
with xv of his company on the gallows.

The brethren embrace Bayard
for waking them
in time to save
Richard.

‘My lordes,’ sayd Reynawde, ‘what shall we now doo? we have wrought well / sith that we have rescued the gentill richarde hole & sounde / me 32 semeth that we ought to goo to mountalban, so shall

<sup>1</sup> Fol. V. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> des plus principaulx de sa compaignie, F. orig. r. iii.

<sup>3-3</sup> si je neusse jamais dormy, F. orig. r. iii.

<sup>4</sup> le, F. orig. r. iii. back.

we recomforte clare, my wyff, & my two children, that ben all evyll at ease for the love of rycharde, & so shall we ete & slepe at our ease / for we have well 4 nede therof / and we shall doo iustyce of kyng yon, that so falsli hath betrayed vs. And after tomorowe we shall assaylle<sup>1</sup> charlemagne, that we love not / and we shall leve v hundred men wythin mountalban / and 8 as many above mountbandell, that shall socour vs if nede be' / And thenne sayd richard / 'sir, yf it playse you, ye shall not doo soo, For ye knowe not the sorowe and the grete lamentacyon that the frenshemen 12 made <sup>2</sup>for the love of me in thoste of Charlemagn.
 And I promyse you, ye oughte well to love Ogier / Rowland / Estorfawde the sone of Oedon, Richarde of normandy / the fayr Guydellon, Salamon of bretein, 16 and eke Olyvere of vyeñ / For thei toke grete debate for me wyth Charlemagn wythin his pavylion; and all this they dyde for the love of you / for they wend all for certen that Ripus shold have hanged me, and 20 that I sholde have noo socours; but, & it playse you, gyve me leve that I maye shewe me to Ogier the dane, & to all other our kynsmen <sup>3</sup>that ben in Charle-magnis court,<sup>3</sup> For thei shal have grete Ioye for to see 24 me scape from the dethe.'

Reynawde proposes to go to Montalban.

He wishes to attack Charle-
 magne.

Richard tells them how many friends he has
 with the Emperor,

and asks to show
 himself to Ogier.

Thenne sayd Reynawd / 'for sothe, Ogier dyd like a valiaunt man; for men ought to love 'their frendes,<sup>4</sup> & helpe them whan it is nede' / & after sayd 28 Reynawde,<sup>5</sup> 'Broder, y<sup>o</sup> sonne is almoste vnder all redy. I fere me sore of you yf ye wyll goo in to the oste of Charlemagn / but & ye will nedes goo there / take wyth you four hondred knyghtes well horsed & 32 well armed, and put theym in a bushemente nyghe by where ye go / and I shall be here wyth my folke /

Reynawde makes him take four hundred knyghtes
 with him to succour him if wanted.

<sup>1</sup> le roy charlemaigne, F. orig. r. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. X. i.      <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iii.

<sup>4-4</sup> les sciens, F. orig. r. iii. back.

<sup>5</sup> richart, F. orig. r. iii. back.

and ye shall take wyth you Bondy, my good horne / and yf ye nede of ony helpe / sounde it hie as ye can well doo / and I shall socour you incontynent' / 'Syr,' sayd Richarde, 'be it as it playse you.' And thenne 4 Reynawde toke his horne to Richarde, & foure hundred knyghtes. and Richard<sup>1</sup> toke on his waye, & bare the baner of Ripus wyth hym / and he<sup>2</sup> dyde so moche that he came to thoost of Charlemagne / and the kyng 8 stode armed afore his pavylion wyth his folke, that kept the way of mounthawcon / and they sawe come the baner of Rypus / <sup>3</sup>as it had be borne by Rypus hymselfe vpon his horse<sup>3</sup> / 12

Richard, with the banner of Ripus,
 comes to the
 pavilion of the King.

Ogyer, thinking
 it is Ripus,

swoons with grief
 for the loss of Richard, and after goes to meet him.

W<sup>h</sup>an Ogyer sawe Richarde com, he wende it had be Rypus of riplemonde, that had hanged Richarde / and of <sup>4</sup>the sorowe that he toke for it, he fell down to thert<sup>h</sup> in a swoone / And after, when he was 16 come agen to hymself, he sayd, 'Alas, we have lost Richarde, we shall never have hym agen!<sup>5</sup> Now it is well seen, Richard, that ye had fewe frendes.' And wyth this he spored his good horse braiford / and cam 20 agenste Rycharde / for he trowed verely that it had be Ripus. And when Charlemagn sawe that Ogyer the dane ranne towarde Ripus, he sayd to his folke, 'goo after hym, barons, I shall now see whiche of you is 24 my frende <sup>6</sup>or my foo<sup>6</sup> / here cometh Ripus, certeynly he hath doon well his devoyre, & hathe doon me good servyse, for he hath made me quyte of Rycharde, <sup>7</sup>one of my mortalle enmyes,<sup>7</sup> and now Ogyer wyll kylle 28 hym in treyson / but & I canne holde hym / I shall doo suche iustyce vpon hym that it shall be spoken of it long time here after' / And thenne spored their horses, frenshemen & bourgoyns, after Ogyer / and 32 Charlemagn hymselfe went after hym / but Ogyer was Charlemagne goes after Ogyer for fear he should slay Ripus.

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iii.      <sup>2</sup> richart, F. orig. r. iii.

<sup>2-3</sup> monte sus son cheval, F. orig. r. iii.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. X. i. back.

<sup>5</sup> trahy la regnault et maugis, F. orig. r. iii. back.

<sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iii. bk.      <sup>7-7</sup> le filz aymon, F. orig. r. iii. bk.

all redy ferre from theym, wrothe & fyers as a lyon / and he cryed as hie as he cowde, 'Soo helpe me god, Rypus, ye be deed / and ye shall have a rewarde of 4 that ye have doon to my cosin Rychard; and I pro-myse you <sup>1</sup>Charlemagn shall not come tyme ynoughe for to save you from mý spere <sup>1</sup> / Whan rycharde herde ogyer speke thus, he sayd, 'have mercy on me, my fayr 8 cosyn, For I am rycharde, your cosin, & not rypus / for we have hanged rypus in my place. And I promise you my brother Reynawde hath well avenged me vpon hym / and therefore I am come for to shewe me to you 12 & to my other kynsmen / for I wote well that ye shall be glad therof.' 'ye make a lesyng, false traytour of ryplemonde,' sayd ogyer / 'but ye shall not scape me soo.' Whan rycharde sawe ogyer soo sore chauffed 16 wyth wrathe<sup>2</sup> / he sayd to hym / 'Cosin, knowe not you me?' 'nay, wythout fawte,' sayd ogyer / <sup>3</sup>'For ye bere the armes and the baner of Ripus' / 'I have doon so, syre,' sayd Rychard, 'by cause I shold not be 20 knowen.' 'By my soule,' sayd Ogyer / 'I wyll see your face naked, For otherwyse I wyll not beleve that that ye say.' 'Syre,' sayd Richarde / 'and ye shall see me anone' / And thenne he vnbokled hys helme 24 & shewed his vysage / And whan ogyer sawe hym he was right glad / and went & <sup>4</sup>kyssed the mouth of Rycharde full swetly<sup>4</sup> / and toke hym in his armes many tymes, & said to rycharde, all lawghyng / 'Cosyn, 28 what have ye doon of rypus?'<sup>5</sup> 'by my feith,' sayd rycharde, 'he is now Archebyssshop of that feeldes / <sup>6</sup>gyvyng the benedycion wyth his fote;<sup>4</sup> For my broder Reynawd hath hanged hym, his owne handes / and wolde 32 not suffre that none other sholde sette hande vpon hym but onely hymself' / 'by my soule' sayd oger / 'he hath 1-1 charlemaigne vous sera mauvais garent, F. orig. r. iii. bk.

Richard declares
himself to Ogier.

Ogier will not believe that he is Richard.

He shows his face
to Ogier,

and tells him the fate of Ripus.

<sup>2</sup> contre luy, F. orig. r. iv.      <sup>3</sup> Fol. X. ii.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iv.

<sup>6</sup> le mauvais traicte, F. orig. r. iv

doon right well.' and thenne he sayd to rycharde, 'Fayr cosin, see to your selfe / for here cometh Charlemagn / and god be with you;' and thus retourned ogyer / And whan Charlemagne sawe Ogyer, he sayd 4 to hym, 'why wente ye towarde rypus afore me' / 'Syr,' sayd Ogyer, 'yf ye were not soo nyghe me / I sholde smyte of his hede / But I dare not doo it for love of you. goo ye to hym / for I make you sure he 8 shall have no harme by me.' Thenne sayd Charlemagne<sup>1</sup> / 'I shall defende hym agenste all men.' And thenne he spored the horse wyth the spores, and cam to rycharde / wenyng to hym that it had be rypus<sup>2</sup> / & 12 sayd to hym, 'Come nere, my specyall frende rypus / and take no fere of noo thyng / For I shall kepe you agenste all men.' Whan Rycharde herde Charlemagne speke thus, he sayd to hym / 'I wyll that ye knowe 16 now that I am not the false traytour Rypus, but I am Rycharde the sone of aymon / and I am the brother of Reynaude, the best knyghte of all the world, and of Alarde, and of Guycharde, and cosyn to the valyaunte 20 maw<sup>3</sup>gis that ye love so moche. Ye smote me to daye in the mornyng wyth a staff in the hede, wherof ye mysyde gretly; & therefore my broder reynawd hath hanged 4your right wel beloved<sup>4</sup> rypus there as he wold 24 have lodged me / and xv. of his felawes wyth him for to bere him feliship / now beware of me, for I defye you' / Whan Charlemagne vnderstode thise wordes, he was soo sore an angred of it, that none can be more / 28 and spored his horse & ranne vpon rychard, and richard agenst hym / and gaaf thone to thother so grete strokes in their sheeldes that they brake bothe their speres all in peces. <sup>5</sup>And wyth the same<sup>5</sup> they recounted eche 32 other wyth their bodies soo myghtely that the strongest

Charlemagne
spurs after Richard, thinking
it is Ripus.

Richard makes himself known to Charlemagne.

Charlemagne is angry, and attacks
him furiously.

<sup>1</sup> par ma foy . . . F. orig. r. iv.

<sup>2</sup> de ripemont, F. orig. r. iv.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. X. ii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iv. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> et apres le briser de leurs lances . . . F. orig.

- of bothe habandouned the styropes / but it happed well to charlemagn that he bode wythin tharsons of the saddle ; but rycharde fell doun to therth. and whan 4 rycharde sawe hymself a grounde / he was wrothe for it, and rose vp quyckly & set hande to his swerde / and wente & smote Charlemagn vpon his helme soo grete a stroke that he made hym all astonyed wythall ; but 8 the swerde slided vpon the helme, that was goode <sup>1</sup>& fyne,<sup>1</sup> doun to the horse necke soo harde that he cut it a sondre, <sup>1</sup>and with this stroke he felled y<sup>e</sup> horse sterke deed ;<sup>1</sup> and by all thus was Charlemagn broughte to the 12 grounde / And whan charlemagn saw hymself a grounde, he was sore an angred for it / and lept vpon his fete right quyckely, & toke his swerde in his hande, and smote rycharde vpon his helme so harde that he made 16 hym rele wythall / and thenne began bytwyx charlemagn<sup>2</sup> & rycharde a sore sharpe medlynge. And whan they had foughte a grete while togyder, Charlemagn began to crye 'mowntioye saynt denys' / and whan rycharde 20 herde this, he drewe him a side / and toke his horne & souned it right hie, soo that his brethern herde it well / and soo dyde mawgis. And thenne Incontynent they spored theyr <sup>3</sup>horses, and cam toward rycharde for 24 to socour him / And thenne sayd mawgis,<sup>4</sup> 'I doubt me that richard is taken, but we shall deye all wyth hym / or elles we shall have hym agen.'
- 28 Grete dyligence made reynawd for to socour rycharde.
 And when he was come where he was / he cryed sodenli, 'montalban,' and alard, 'pavereyment,' guychard, 'balencon,' and richarde, 'ardeyn' / and mawgys went & ranne vpon a knyghte that was called magon, other-32 wyse sampson, lord of pyerrefrite, & roughte him suche a stroke that he felde hym deed to the grounde ; and reynawd smote vpon a nother knyght by suche a wyse

They fight,
and Richard is
unhorsed.

The King has his horse killed by Richard.

They fight
fiercely, till Charlemagne calls
for help.

Richard blows his horn to summon
his brethren.

Reynawd and the brethren come to his succour.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. iv. back.      <sup>2</sup> charlemagn in text.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. X. iii.      <sup>4</sup> seigneurs, F. orig. r. iv. back.

that he shoved his swerde thrughe & thrughe his body ;
 and guychard smote a nother with his swerde soo fierly that he cleved his hede in two peces ; & alard smote the fourth knyghte vpon his helme soo grete a 4 stroke that he cast hym deed to fore his fete ; and after he ranne vpon a nother knyghte rychely arrayed, & gaff eche other suche strokes that they bothe fell doun from their horses to therth / And thenne came 8 there reinawd, that dyde so moche that the sayd knyghte was taken prysoner / whiche was called hughe of almagn, and broughte hym<sup>1</sup> to mountalban / what shall I telle you more / the batayll began to be felle / 12 and soo cruell that it was grete pyte for to see / For the one spared not thother, but slew eche other as thicke as bestes. And whan reynawd sawe all redy that y<sup>e</sup> sonne was goon vndre, & that the nyght cam 16 fast on / he was in a doubte for his bredern, and sayd,
 ' Good lord, thrughe thi mercy & redempcyon / kepe me & my bredern from deth & from prison / for the nyght that is at hande maketh me to be a ferde' / 20
 And as he spake thise wordes, cam there kyng charlemagn, as fast as his horse myghte walop, agenst rey-nawd, and reynawd agenste hym, by cause he knewe hym not / and smote eche other so harde in their 24 sheldes that thei made their speres<sup>2</sup> to flee in peces, and recounted togyder both wyth theyr bodyes & sheeldes soo mervyllously that they overthrewe eche other to the grounde / and thenne they rose quyckly bothe 28 atoues, and set hande to their swerdes / And thenne Charlemagn began to crye 'mowntioye saynt denys' / and after sayd, ' Yf I be owtraged by one knyghte oonly, I ought not to be a kyng nor to bere crowne.' Whan 32 reynaud vnderstode charlemain speke, he knewe hym well, & wythdrewe hymself a syde, & sayd, 'Alas,

The great fight between the Sons and the King's followers.

Reynawde and
 Charlemagne
 fight without recognising each
 other.

<sup>1</sup> par prisonier . . . F. orig. r. v.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. X. iii. back.

how am I dyffamed ! it is charlemagn to whom I have iousted / I have mysprysed to sore for to have set hande vpon hym / Ha, good lord / it is well XVI.<sup>1</sup> yeres a 4 goon that I spake not ones wyth hym / but I shall now speke to him yf I shold deye for it / for by reyson & right I ought to lese the firste ; wherfore I wyll make to hym a mendes presently, and lete hym doo wyth 8 me what he wyll' / and whan he had sayd this, he went to Charlemagn, & kneled byfore hym, and sayd to hym / 'Sir, for god / I crie you mercy, gyve me trews tyl that I have spoken wyth you.' 'wyth a good 12 wyll,' sayd charlemagn ; 'But I wote not who ye be, <sup>2</sup>how be it that ye have iousted wyth me.' <sup>3</sup>' I thanke you humbli,' sayd reynaud, <sup>3</sup>' of that it playseth you to saye soo by me <sup>3</sup> / Syr, wyte that I am Reynawde, the 16 sone of aymon / and I crie you mercy / And for that pyte that our lord had vpon the cros of his moder whan he recomended her to saynt Iohan his dyscuple / I beseche you that ye wyll have pyte vpon [me] & vpon 20 my bredern. ye knowe that I am your man / and ye have disherited me of mi londes, & have chased me <sup>4</sup>oute of fraunce.<sup>4</sup> It is a goo xvi<sup>5</sup> yeres ; and by cause of this, are deed soo many noble knyghtes & valyaunt 24 men, & other, in soo grete nombre that it can not be sayd, For god / ye see well what it cometh of the werre / for a lord that hath no pite in him, hath a hert as harde as a stone. <sup>6</sup>And therefore, sire, I beseche you 28 for god that ye have mercy on me & of my bredern that ben suche knyghtes as ye know. I speke not thise wordes for fere of deth, ne for courtyse of ryches /
For god gramercy we have goodes ynoughe / but I 32 speke it for to have your love oonly / Syr, suffre that

Reynawde asks
pardon of the Emperor when
he discovers him,

and begs that peace may be accorded between
them ;

<sup>1</sup> quinze, F. orig. r. v.

<sup>2-3</sup> mais vous joustes moult bien, F. orig. r. v.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4-4</sup> . . . de vostre terre et de la mienne, F. orig. r. v.

<sup>5</sup> xv. F. orig. <sup>6</sup> Fol. X. iv.

he offers to give up Montalban
and Bayard

we have peas wyth you / and we shall becom your men for evermore, and we shall swere to you feyth & legeauns / and also I shall gyve you mountalban & my good horse bayard, whiche is the thyng that I love 4 beste in this worlde after my bredern & mawgis / For there is not in all the world suche a nother horse<sup>1</sup> / And yf this can not satsysfe your mynde / I shall doo yet more / Playseth it to you for to pardonne my 8 bredern / and I shall forswere Fraunce for evermore, that I shall never be seen there, and I shall goo to the holy sepulcre in Iherusalem, bare fote, for the remembraunce of you ; and I nor Mawgys shall never come 12
agen in fraunce, <sup>2</sup>but we shall werre styll on goddys enmyes / as ben turques & sarrasins '<sup>2</sup>/

If Charlemagne
will pardon his brethren.

The Emperor
refuses to accept these terms of peace,

Thenne whan charlemagn herde reynawd speke thus,
he answerde hym & sayd, 'Reynawd, ye speke 16 for noughte / ye dyde an over grete foly / whan ye toke that hardynes vpon you for to speke wyth me in my palays as ye dyde / and yet ye dyde worse whan ye slewe my newewe berthelot that I loved so moche ; and 20 now ye speke to me of peas, and ye crye me mercy. I promyse you for certeyn that ye shall have noo peas with me, but yf ye doo that I shall tel'e you' / 'Sire,' sayd reynawd, 'what shall that be? telle me, I praye 24 you!' / 'I shall shewe it to you wyth a goode wyll,' sayd charlemagn / 'And yf ye doo it / ye and your brethern shall accorde wyth me, And I shall gyve you agen your heritage, and yet I shall gyve you / ynoughe 28 of myn owen / It is that ye gyve me mawgys in my handes for to doo my playsur wyth hym, for I hate him <sup>3</sup>more than ony thyng in the world' / 'Syre,' sayd reynawd / 'if I sholde deliver hym to you, what 32 wold ye doo to hym?' / 'Reynawd,' sayd charlemagn,

and demands the deliverance of Mawgis into his hands.

<sup>1</sup> chevalier, F. orig. r. v. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> mais ferons guerre contre les turcs, F. orig. r. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. X. iv. back.

'I promyse you I shold make hym to be drawen sham-fully at four<sup>1</sup> horses taylles thurgh parys. And after that, I shold doo take from the body of hym the limmes 4 one after a nother, and thenne I shold make him to be brent, and his ashes to be cast at the wynde / And whan he shall be arrayed as I telle you / lete hym thenne doo his incantacyons & his magyke as he wyll / 8 and I shall pardonne hym all that he can doo to me after that' / Thenne sayd Reynawd to the kyng /
 'syre, wold ye doo it in dede as ye saye?' 'Ye,' sayd charlemagn, 'in good feyth' / 'Emperour,' sayd rey-12 nawde, 'wold you not take townes ne castelles, golde ne silver, for the raunsom of mawgis?' / 'certes naye,' sayd charlemagne.<sup>2</sup> 'Sir,' sayd reynawd, 'thenne shall we never be accorded togyder; for I tell you for certeyn, 16 that yf ye had all my brethern in your pryson, and that ye were delibered for to make theim to be hanged, yet shold I not gyve you mawgis for to have theym deliverde oute of your handes' / 'Holde your peas 20 thenne,' sayd charlemagn, '& beware of me / for otherwise gete ye noo peas wyth me' / 'Syr,' sayd reynawd,
 'I am sory for it, for we be noo meñ that oughte to be cast from your servyse;'<sup>3</sup> and sith that ye defye me, I 24 shall deffende me / and our lord shall doo me that grace, yf it playse hym, that I shall not be take of you.' And whañ charlemagn herde this / he was sore angry / and ranne vpon reynawd / and whanne reynawd sawe hym 28 come vpon hym / he sayd to hym, 'Syre, for god mercy, suffre not that I sette hande vpon you / For yf I sholde leve my selfe for to be slayne by you, I were well a myschaunt' / 'Vassayll,' sayd Charlemagn, 'all 32 thise wordes avaylleth you not, For ye must nedes deffende yourselfe' / And thenne Charlemagne 'smote hym wyth Ioyuse his swerde vpon his helme, and the Reynawde refuses

 this request,
 and tells the Emperor that peace can never be made between them on these conditions.

Charlemagne in fierce anger
 renews his attack
 on Reynawde,

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. r. vi.      <sup>2</sup> par ma foy, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> sernyse, orig.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. X. v.

who seizes the
Emperor
and lays him on Bayard.

Charlemagne
calls on his banners,
and deploras the absence of his men.

Roland and Oliver come to his relief;

also Mawgis and his men arrive.

The battle begins
again.

stroke slided down vpon the sheelde of Reynawde soo that he kytted quyte and clene a grete parte therof.
Whan Reynawde felte soo grete a stroke that kynge Charlemagne had gyven hym, he was sore an anged <sup>4</sup> for it. He vaunced hym selfe forthe, and caught the kynge wyth bothe hys armes by the backe / and by the waast in maner of wrastelynge, For he wolde not smyte hym wyth his swerde Flamberde, and toke hym and <sup>8</sup> layd vpon the necke of his horse Bayarde / for to have broughte hym wyth hym <sup>1</sup>to Mountalban<sup>1</sup> wythout ony other harme. And whan Charlemagn saw that he was handeled of this facyon / he beganne to crye as <sup>12</sup> lowde as he myghte, 'Mountioye, saynte denys' / and thenne he sayd / 'Ha, fayr newew<sup>2</sup> Rowlande / where be you / Olyvere of vyenne, and ye duke Naymes / and bysshop Turpyn / shall ye suffre that I be thus taken <sup>16</sup> <sup>1</sup>and broughte as a prysoner? <sup>1</sup> and yf ye doo soo / it shall be a grete shame to you all' / Reynawde began thenne to crye 'Mountalban' <sup>3</sup> as highe as he cowde / whan he herde Charlemagne speke soo / And after he sayd / <sup>20</sup>
'Ha, my bredern / and ye cosin Mawgys, com hither / and lete vs goo, for <sup>4</sup>I have gyven the kynge suche a checke,<sup>4</sup> that yf we can now brynge hym wyth vs / we shall have peas in Fraunce fromhens forthon.' Thenne <sup>24</sup> the noble peres of Fraunce / as Rowlande, Olyvere / and the other, came to the socours of Charlemagne / And of that other parte / came there for to helpe Rey-nawd, his brethern and Mawgys, and well four hundred<sup>5</sup> <sup>28</sup> knyghtes well armed. And whan the valiaunt knyghtes were assembled togyder of bothe partyes, ye sholde thenne have seen there a merveyllous bataylle / For they slewe eche other as bestes. And there were so <sup>32</sup> many speres broken, and so many sheeldes cloven / and

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> neuueuw, orig. <sup>3</sup> son enseigne, F. orig. r. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> Jay pris ung tel eschac, F. orig. r. vi.

<sup>5</sup> hndred, orig.

hewed in to peces, and so many <sup>1</sup>helmes vnbokeled / and soo many a quyras broken and perced, and so many horses that drew after theyr guttes a longe in the 4 feeldes, and soo many a man sleayne, that it was pyte for to see.<sup>2</sup> And whan Rowlande was come to the medlee, he wente vpon Reynawde, and gaaf hym soo grete a stroke vpon hys helme that he was all astonyed 8 therwyth, and after he sayd to hym, 'Vassayll, ye have doon evill that ye trowed to have brought awaye the kyng in this maner of wyse! Ye wote well it is to hevy a bourdon for to lede of this facyon. ye shall leve 12 hym / and yet ye shall abyge full dere for it, are ye escape me' / And whan Reynawde sawe that he was thus reprevd, and felte the grete stroke that Rowlande had gyven to hym <sup>3</sup>vpon hys helmet,<sup>3</sup> he was wrothe, 16 and toke his swerde in his hande / holdyng always Charlemagne afore hym vpon bayardes necke / and cam to Rowlande, and sayd to hym / 'Damp Rowlande, come forthe! soo shall ye wyte how Flamberde cutteth' / 20 And whan Rowlande vnderstode hym, he came vpon hym / And whan Reynawde sawe hym come / he lete fall doun Charlemagne & ranne vpon Rowlande / And there beganne amonge theim two a fyers medelynge.
 24 This hangyng, cam Alarde, Guycharde / and the lytyll Rycharde / and ranne vpon Rowlande atones / and gaaff hym soo moche to doo that he muste put hymselfe to flighte / wolde he or noo / And whan Reynawde sawe that 28 Charlemagn and Rowlande had saved theymselfe, he was right sory for it, and he sayd to his bretherne, 'My brederne, ye have wroughte yll / For yf ye had be styll by me, we had doon a grete fayt / For I had taken 32 Charlemagne, that we sholde have broughte wyth vs to

Roland attacks
 Reynawde,
 who is holding the Emperor on his horse.

Reynawde lets Charlemagne fall,
 and fights Roland
 with the help of Alarde and Guycharde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. X. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> et vous prometz quil en y eut tant de occis dune part et daultre que lon ne scauoit le nombre et grande fust la pitie, F. orig. r. vi. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

The Sons grieve
over the escape
of the Emperor.

mountalban.<sup>1</sup> 'Syre,' sayd his bretherne / 'we are sory for it that we dyde not soo / But we had so moche to doo in a nother place, <sup>2</sup>that it is well to vs that we scaped sauf wyth our lyves. But lete vs see that we <sup>4</sup> doo well, and sowne our horne to thende ye maye gader agen togyder your folke that be soo sperkled abrode, for there is dangeour by cause of the nyghte that cometh so fast on / and calle agen your baner / for <sup>8</sup> we have wonne more than we have loste, and lete vs goo to montalban.' Reynawd, that was sage, dyde as his bredern & maugis counseyllid hym / Whan charlemagne sawe that reynawde had wythdrawe his baner / <sup>12</sup> he was glad of it / For he saw well that his folke was at the worste hande / soo made he to sowne the retirete, & passed balencon / and dyde somoche that he cam agen to his oost / And whan he was lighted down a <sup>16</sup> fote / he sayd to his folke / 'By my soule, it gooth not well with vs / for reynawd hath put vs from the felde.'
'Syre,' sayd rowland, 'speke noo more of it, for it is not longe on you / but that we had be almost shamed. <sup>20</sup> Ye dyde grete foly whan ye iousted wyth reynawd / for if he had slayn you, or take, the werre had be ended that hath lasted so longe' / I leve now here to speke of charlemagne & of rowland his nevew<sup>3</sup> / and retorne to <sup>24</sup> speke of reynawde & of his bredern, and of mawgis theyr cosin, and of their folke.

Charlemagne
orders his men
to retreat,
and returns to his
host.

Roland reproaches
the Emperor for trying to fight
Reynawde.

CHAPTER XV.

¶ How after that reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis had dyscomfyted charlemagn after <sup>28</sup> that thei had rescued rychard / that ripus wold have hanged at montfawcon / went agen vpon hym and pulled down his pavy-

<sup>1</sup> mounalban, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. X. vi.

<sup>3</sup> et de ses gens, F. orig. A. 1.

lion, and bare away wyth theim the egle of golde that was thervpon, wherof the kyng was full sori for it, soo that he wolde have 4 taken agen his crowne in to the handes of hys barons / seyng that he wold not be noo more theyr kyng / by cause that they had faylled hym, and had habandouned 8 hym for the four sones of aymon / And sayd to theym / that they shold crowne reynawde therwyth, soo sholde he be their kyng, <sup>1</sup>For thei loved hym better than they 12 dyde him ; And how oliver sayd to charlemagn / that he shold take agen his crowne, and that he shold yelde hym mawgis that he had taken as he robbed the pavylion, for 16 he abode there alone ; And how charlemagne toke agen his crowne / and was right glade of the pryse of mawgys that he hated<sup>2</sup> so moche /

20 Here sheweth the histori, that whan reynaude, the sone of aymon, sawe that the kyng charlemagn was goon agen to his ooste / he made his baner to ryde before hym / and rayled his folke togyder / And whan 24 he had mounted the mountayn of mountfawcon / he called his folke, & sayd to them / ‘My frendes, put yourself in ordynance, & take on your waye towarde mountalban / and I, my bredern & mawgis, shall come 28 behynde / For I fere me leest the frenshemen, that ben so wroth that we have dyscomfyted them so, shall folowe for to hurte vs yf they can / and yf they doo / we shall better suffre the payne than our folke /

Reynawde orders
 the greater part of his folk to return to
 Montalban,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. X. vi. back.    <sup>2</sup> hasted, orig.

I wolde not for noo good that rowlande & olivere sholde mocke wyth vs, nor that thei sholde fynde vs in dysaray.' 'By my soule,' sayd alarde / 'brother reynawd,<sup>1</sup> ye speke well & wysely.' And thenne their 4 folke put theymselfe in ordenaunce. and thei abode behinde tyll that their folke had passed balencon /
 And whan the moost parte was passed, he<sup>2</sup> toke iii. thousand men of the best of his folke, & sayd to 8 thother, 'goo your wayes to montalban, For I wyll goo assayl the kyng charlemagne in his pavylion, what so ever it hap of it / And soo shall I shewe<sup>3</sup> his folke what I can doo / and that I am a man for to seke 12 hym, and not he me.'

while he with three thousand men assails the Emperor's
 pavilion.

Whan reynawd had sayd this, he cam to the water of Balencon / and passed over <sup>1</sup>wyth his thre thousande men<sup>1</sup> / And they rode soo longe<sup>4</sup> 16 that they came to the oost of Charlemagn / that was wroth more than mesure requyreth, <sup>5</sup>by cause that he had loste the feelde <sup>1</sup>agenste Reynawde.<sup>1</sup> And whan Reynawd sawe the pavylion of Charlemagne / he sayd to 20 his bredern / and to all his folke / 'I pray you that ye governe you wysly' / 'Syre,' sayd richard <sup>1</sup>the hardy,<sup>1</sup> <sup>6</sup>'he that wyll be enhaunced in price / he oughte not to loke soo nyghe but he must ieoparde for to conquere 24 worshyp.'<sup>6</sup> and whan rycharde had sayd so / he set hande to his swerde, & spored his horse wyth the spores. & went streyght to the pavylion of charlemagn, and cut of the cordes, & made it falle doun 28 to the erthe wyth the egle of golde massy, that was of grete value. whan reinawd sawe this, he called mawgis, & sayd to him / 'Cosin, com hider / helpe

Reynawde goes straight to Charlemagne's
 pavilion,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. A. i. back.      <sup>2</sup> Regnault, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> luy et a ses gens, F. orig. A. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> luy et ses gens, F. orig. A. ii.      <sup>6</sup> Fol. X. vii.

<sup>5-6</sup> Qui veult en pris monter Il ne doit regarder de si pres:
 mais se doit mettre a laventure pour conquerer honneur et pris, F. orig. A. ii.

- me to bryng away this gayn' / 'syr,' said mawgys,
 'wyth a good wyll.' and they lighted a fote, & toke the egle of golde, <sup>1</sup>that was soo riche that noo man 4 wyste what it was worthe; <sup>1</sup> & reynawd said to his folke / 'My lordes, smite now well, & feyn not your self / for he that begiñneth a game, he ought to see an ende of it to his prouffyte, yf he can' / Who thenne 8 had seen the folke of charlemagn arme theim & com oute of their tentes, & renne vpon the sones of Aymon, he wold have merveyllid / and it was pite for to see the grete slaughter that was doon there / whan mawgis 12 had put the egle of golde in sure handes / he went agen to the pavyllion of charlemagn, & he fonde the kyng, and sayd to hym / 'By my hede, sir emperour, ye have troubled vs sore a long while, but ye shal bye 16 it full derely at this hour, your comyng in to gascoyn, & y<sup>e</sup> dethe of my fader, the duke benes of aygre-mount / For I shall gyve to you suche a stroke that ye shall never make werre to vs nor to none other.' And 20 with this he bare vp his spere for to have shoved it thrughe y<sup>e</sup> brest of charlemain; but charlemagn abode not the stroke, but he torned hymself a side, & y<sup>e</sup> spere entred in to the bed of the kyng well 24 ii fote. And whan <sup>2</sup>charlemagn sawe this, he was a ferde, and he beganne to crie 'mountioye, saynt denys.'
 And thenne he sayd / 'Ha, fayr newewe rowlande, where are you now!' Whan mawgis herde calle 28 rowlande, he loked aboute hym, & sawe not reynawd nor his bredern / for thei had put theimself to the way to return home agen.

- 32 Over long taried mawgis in thost of charlemagn / for reynawd was all redy passed over balencon / and rowland & oliver were all redy com to the calling of charlemagn, sore afrayed / and whan mawgis sawe theym, he made noo lenger taryeng / but gaaff the <sup>1</sup>—1 omitted, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. X. vii. back.

and tries to follow them,

but is attacked by the Emperor's
folk,

and is finally overthrown by Oliver,

who takes him
prisoner,

spores to his horse, & went after reinawd as fast as his horse myght renne. And whan he wold have passed balencon, he met wyth a grete company of the folke of charlemagn. and mawgys smote one of theym 4 soo harde in the sheelde / that he overthrewe bothe horse & man to therthe; and after that he smote the sone of mylen of puyll, so that he cleved his sheld a sondre, & cast hym doun to the grounde with a 8 wounde mortall / and thenne he cryed 'montalban,' & sayd, 'Ha, fayr cosin reynawde, where be you? socour me for god. For if ye lose me, ye shall have harme therat.' And thenne mawgis thought well that 12 Reynawd was goon / This hangynge, came oliver thugh
the prees, & cam vpon mawgis, & smote him so harde that it abode not nother for sheelde nor for courset of stele, but he made hym a wounde in his brest, and 16 caste hym doun to the erthe /

Whan mawgis felt hymself thus hurt & overthrowen, he was ryght wrothe for it. Soo rose he vp quy[c]kly vpon his fete, & toke his swerde 20 in his hande, <sup>1</sup>& dyde merveylls of armes / And the nighte was very derke, that almost the one knew not thother. and whan olyver saw mawgys defende himself so well / he sayd to hym / 'I know not the 24 knyghte whom thou art; but, & thou yelde not thyselfe to me, I shall <sup>2</sup>now smyte of thy hede from the sholdres.' 'what is thy name?' sayd thenne mawgis /
'for & thou be a good man / I shall yelde me to the, 28 & elles not, knyght.' 'my name is oliver of vyenne.' Whan mawgis herde hym named, he knewe him well / and sayd to hym, 'Ha, gentyll knyghte olivere, I yelde me to you vpon your feyth, & vnder suche 32 a condycion that ye shall not deliver me to charlemagn / for yf ye deliver me in his handes, I am deed without remedy, & he shall make me deie shamfully as

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. X. viii.

- a theef.' 'By my feyth,' sayd oliver, 'this wyll I not do / for I dare not hide you from charlemagn. but yelde you / & I promise you that I shall helpe you to
- 4 my power for to make your apoyntments wyth the kyng' / 'Sir,' sayd mawgis, '& I yelde me to you vpon your trowth'<sup>1</sup> / and toke his swerde to him. & oliver toke it, and after made hym to light vpon a
- 8 lityll horse, and brought hym to the pavylion of Charlemagn, where they fonde not the kyng, by cause he was all affrayed, as ye herde afore / And whan oliver sawe that he fonde not charlemain / he was sore a ferd
- 12 that mawgis shold scape from him thurgh his incantacyons & wytchecraft, and sayd to hym, 'Mawgis, ye knowe how I have taken you by armes, & that ye are my prisoner / I wyll that ye gyve me your feyth truly
- 16 that ye shall not goo oute of wythin, wythout my leve' / 'Sire,' sayd mawgis, 'wyth a good wyll' / and thus he dyde swere this to oliver. And whan oliver had taken the othe of mawgis / he made hym to
- 20 be vnarmed / and made his wounde to be wrapped / and gaaff hym a mantell vpon hym, & made hym to lie vpon a bed / Now shall we leve a lityll to speke of charlemagn, of oliver, & of mawgis / and shall shewe
- 24 of reynawd & his bredern, what thei dyde whan those of charlemagn was moved / and how thei wonne the egle of golde, that was of so grete value / & how reynaud said to his bredern / 'lordes, lete vs se now
- 28 for to quyte vs wel / for it were not good for vs for<sup>2</sup> to tary here ony lenger.' And thenne he made to wyth draw his folke, and made theym put to the waye / And as they wente / Rycharde sayd to Reynawd /
- 32 'Syre, we have goten a ryche proy, thanked be god / For Charlemagne sha'l be many a longe day wrothe therefore' / 'Certes,' sayd Reynawde, 'fayr broder, ye saye trowth; & also we have slayn a grete mayne promising at the same time to plead his cause before the Emperor.

Oliver takes him to the pavilion of Charlemaigne, who is not there;

he begs Mawgis to swear that he will not escape.

Mawgis swears this willingly.

Reynawde withdraws his folk from the battle, and goes towards Montalban with the golden eagle.

<sup>1</sup> yrouth, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. X. viii. back.

of his folke.' 'Ha, god,' sayd thenne alarde, 'where is our cosin mawgys / For I see him not here.' 'Broder,' sayd rycharde / 'be not a ferde for mawgys / for I beleve that he is goon to mountalban afore vs.' 'god 4 be wyth him where soever he be,' sayd reynawde,
'For he is ryght sage / and a noble knyght / I wolde not for all the golde in the worlde that my cosin mawgis had ony harme.' 8

¶ We shall leve a lityll to speke of Reynaude & of his bredern, that are bounde to mountalban, glad of their proy / And shal now speke of Charlemagn, that was soo sore wrothe, as I have sayd afore. 13

Whan Charlemagn was from hys arneys, he felle in a swoune for the grete ange that he had of that he had be thus dystressid / And whan he was com agen to hymself, he sent for the duke Naymes, 16 the bisshop Turpyn, escouff the sone of oedan, for Salamon of breten, Richarde of normandy, therle Guidellon, & for Oger the dane. and whan they were all gadred togider, the kyng began to shewe to 20 them his complayntes in this maner, 'Lordes, I have kepte & mayntened you vnder my tucyon the space of XL<sup>1</sup> yeres <sup>2</sup>& more,<sup>3</sup> that noo man hath not wronged you of a peny / and ye have no neighbour that dare 24 aske you ony thyng. Now, me semeth, by cause that I am now old, that I am but halfe a man, & yet not so gode as I wold be / and I may not be a kyng without you ; for whan ye faylle me, I am no kyng / ye knowe 28 well that ye have left me for love of reinawd / wherof I am right sori, as <sup>3</sup>I may well / for reynawd hath taken me where I was habandonned of you, & he hath chased me out of y<sup>e</sup> felde ; certes, I am worse than 32 madde of this that ye have forsake me for reynawde /
And sith that it is thus wyth me / I seke not to lyve

Charlemagne
summons his barons together,

and complains of their infidelity
to him,
and says they would rather have Reynawde
for their king;

<sup>1</sup> cinquante, F. orig. A. iii. back.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. i.

ony lenger, nor to be kyng ony more / and now I take to you the crowne, to thende that ye shall gyve it vnto reynaude whan ye wyll, and that ye make hym kyng 4 of Fraunce, For I wyll be no more your kyng' /

he offers to resign
his crown.

Whan the xii peres of Fraunce & the other lordes herde Charlemagn speke so sorowfully, they were sore abashed, that there was noo man so hardy 8 that durste saye one worde. And thone loked vpon the other & were ashamed. And whan the duk Naymes of bavyre vnderstode y<sup>e</sup> wordes of Charlemagne / he put hymself forthe and sayd, 'Syr emperour, 12 god forbede that ye shoold doo as ye say / for it were grete shame to vs all, & also to you. but I wote well that we have misprysed agenst you in that we

Naymes speaks on behalf of the
barons,

have supported reynawd / but ye oughte to consider 16 that we have doon / was by no malice, but for good entencyon / For we wende, to have made the peas of the werre that hath endured so long / wherby many good true men are deed / but sith that we see that it 20 playseth not you to make peas wyth the foure sones of

and justifies their conduct towards
Reynawde;

Aymon / take agen your crowne, & be not wroth wyth vs / and we shall promyse you that we all shall serve you wel & truly / and that we shall take Mountalban 24 or a moneth be paste, or elles<sup>1</sup> we shall deye all / and fromhens forthon he that shall spare the sones of

he begs the Emperor to take back his crown,
and vows that Mountalban shall be besieged.

Aymon shall be slayn of vs' / Thenne sayd the kyng Charlemagne, 'lete all this alone; I telle you for 28 certeyn that I shall never be your kyng / but ye yelde to me Reynawde or Mawgis, the cursed thief / that hath mocked me soo often' / And whan Charlemagn had sayd this, he <sup>2</sup>entred wythin his pavyllion sore an Charlemagne says

he will be their
king no longer,

32 angred. And thenne cam there oliver, that was sore abashed of that he sawe the king make soo evyll chere / and after, he sayd to charlemagn, 'Syre, wherof are ye soo sore angry' / 'by my feyth,' sayd the duke and goes to his pavillon in great

wrath.

<sup>1</sup> ellis, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. Y. i. back.

Oliver goes to the
Emperor,

naymes, 'he hath shamed vs ; for he hath forsaken his crown & his royame.' 'Syr,' sayd thenne olyver, 'doo not soo, but take agen your crowne, & be our lorde<sup>1</sup> and our kyng.<sup>1</sup> And who dooth not your commaundement, 4 chastyse hym in suche a maner that men take ensample therby' / 'Oliver,' sayd charlemagn, 'ye speke for noughte / for I wyll not doo it / but I have reynawde or mawgis dede or quycke' / 'Syre,' sayd olivere, 8
'pardonne vs thenne / and I shall deliver to you mawgis or evyn.'

and promises to deliver Mawgis
into his hands.

Charlemagne
consents to take back his crown if Mawgis is delivered to him.

'Dam̄p oliver,' sayd charlemagn / 'I am not a chylde wherof men oughte to mocke wyth / For 12
I wote well that mawgys doubteth you of noo thyng' /
'Syre,' sayd olivere, 'yf ye wyll promyse me that ye shall take agen your crowne, & that ye shall kepe vs as ye have doon a fore tyme / I shall bryng hym 16 now afore you.' 'By my feyth,' sayd charlemagn, 'yf ye doo it, and that I maye have hym at my wyll / (For I hate hym moost of all men in the world)
I shall doo all that ye wyll desire of me / and also 20
I shall gyve you londes ynough that ye shall be con-tente of me. For yf mawgys were not, the four sones of aymon myghte not endure agenst me / for yf I had theym in pryson, and thoughe I had sworne 24 to kepe theym, yet shold<sup>2</sup> that theef mawgis<sup>2</sup> stele theym awaye fro me.' 'Syre,' sayd oliver, 'I shall brynge hym to you wythoute ony doubt.' And thenne oliver went to his pavyllion, & rowlande wyth 28 hym / and many other knyghtes, for to see mawgys. oliver sayd thenne to mawgis, 'Mawgys, ye must come to charlemagn.' 'oliver,' sayd mawgis / 'ye have betraied me / but<sup>3</sup> I wote well that charlemagn shall 32 be more curteis than ye have be / for he shall doo me noo harme / and lete vs goo to hym in the

Oliver tells Mawgis that he must come before
the Emperor,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted F. orig. A. iv.      <sup>2-2</sup> II, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. ii.

name of god, whan ye wyll' / And thenne oliver leded and leads him to Charlemagne's
pavilion.
mawgis to charlemagn. and whan he was wythin the pavlylion, he went streyght to the kinge, & sayd to 4 hym / 'Sire, ye have promysed me, that yf I brought mawgis, that ye sholde take agen your crowne, And that ye shold kepe vs to ryght as ye have doon a fore tyme' / 'Certes,' sayd charlemagn, 'it is trouth / 8 and yf ye kepe your covenaut, I shall doo that I have promysed you.' 'Now holde you, sir,' sayd oliver, 'here mawgis, that I deliver vnto you for to doo your playsur wyth hym, y<sup>e</sup> whyche I have 12 take & conquered bi force of armes.' Whan the kyng charlemagn sawe mawgys, he was so glad that noo man myght be more; and after he sayd, 'by my feyth, now have I one parte of my desire. o, false theef 16 mawgys, now I holde the / now shalt thou be rewarded of thi pride that thou haste shewed vnto me whan thou barest awaye myn egle of golde / and for all the good tornes & theeftes that thou hast doon in thy 20 dayes! For many tymes thou haste angred me sore, wherof thou shalt be now payd after thy deservyng' /
'Syr,' sayd thenne mawgis, 'ye shall doo wyth me what it playse you, for I am now in your handes / 24 but I counseylle you for the best, that ye lete me goo, and that ye make peas wyth reynawde & wyth his bredern / for ye shall gete no thyng by my deth; & my cosins ben suche that thei shall avenge it right wel 28 by force of armes / and yf ye doo as I saye / ye shall have with you the flower of knyghthode of all the worlde' / 'Ha, thef,' sayd Charlemain / 'how ferfull thou art now / Certes, this that thou sayst shall avaylle 32 the noo thyng' / 'Syre,' sayd mawgys, 'I am noo theef. Now canne I not doo noo thyng, sith that I am in your handes / And whan ye shal have put me <sup>1</sup>to dethe, ye shall doo me no more no thyng, and

The Emperor
with great joy threatens Mawgis
with severe penalties for his enmity towards
him.

Mawgis says the Sons shall revenge
his death,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. ii. back.

and that
Charlemagne
shall be sorry
for the deed before twenty-four hours
are past.

yet ye shall be sory for me or ever xiiii.<sup>1</sup> owres comen at an ende' / 'Ribawde,' sayd charlemagn, 'speke not soo boldly; for, and I can, thou shalt have an evyll nyghte or ever thou escape me; nor the glotons, thy 4 cosins, shall not helpe the therfro, but that I shall make the deye in dyspyte of all thy wytche crafte that thou canste doo.' ¶ Now we shall leve a lityll to speke of charlemagne & of mawgis, and we shall speke 8 of the good knyghte reynawde, of alarde, guycharde, and of the lityll rycharde hys brethern.

Reynawde and his brethren arrive at Montalban,
and are gladly received by the Lady Clare.

Whan Reynawd was departed from the oost of charlemagn, <sup>2</sup>as I sayd byfore<sup>2</sup> / he rode so 12 long that he came to mountalban, & his folke wyth hym / And whan the lady wyste that her lorde came, she came hym agenste / and said to him, 'Syre, ye be right welcom / have ye deliverde rycharde' / 'ye, 16 vereli,' sayd Reynawd, 'god gramercy.' 'and blessed be god,' sayd the lady. and thenne she wente to rycharde, & kyssed hym more than ten tymes. and there was a chere & a feest made ryght amyable / 20 And after they had made grete ioye / Reynawd began to demaunde after his cosin / and the lady answerde, 'my lord, I knowe noo tydynges of him' / and whan reynaude herde that, he was sore agast of it / and 24 tourned hymself towarde his bredern, & sayd to theim, 'My bredern, I praye you thāt we maye knowe whether our cosyn mawgis is com or not / and goo seke hym in his lodges / For happli he is goon for 28 to vnarme hym selfe.' And incontynente guycharde & richarde soughte hym at his lodges, & asked for hym to two of his men, the whiche sayd that they had not seen hym sith he was gon wyth theym. 32 And whan they herde that, thei were full sory, & went agen to their broder reynawd, & tolde him how they cowde not fynde hym / Whan reynawd vnder-

Reynawde asks
after Mawgis.

Guycharde,
and Richard look
for him,
but his men say
he has not returned.

<sup>1</sup> xxiiii, F. orig. A. v.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

stode that<sup>1</sup> they had not fonde him / he began to make more sorow than yf all his bredern had be deed / and thenne, who had seen the grete mone that alarde, 4 guycharde, & the lityll rychard made<sup>2</sup> for theyr cosin<sup>3</sup> / he wold have had grete pyte for to see theym, for thei pulled their heeres from theyr hedes, & scratched their visages<sup>3</sup> / whan the good lady sawe the grete 8 sorowe that reynawd her husband, & his bredern made, she felle doon in a swoun<sup>4</sup> to therth. I promyse you he that had seen that sorow, how herde herted that he were, cowde not have kepte hym fro wepyng.

The Sons sorrow
 grievously for the absence of
 Mawgis.

12 After that reynawd had thus made grete sorow, he refrayned hymself a lityll, & thenne sayd / 'ha, my cosin maugys, well ye have stolen yourself from vs / and what shall we doo from hens forth, 16 sith that we have lost you' / Whan they had made theyr mone in this maner a long while / reinawde sayd <sup>2</sup>to his bredern &<sup>2</sup> to his folke, 'My lordes, I praye you that ye leve your sorowe, for by noo sorow the 20 mater canne not be remedyed / I praye you recomforte yourselfe / for I wyll put me agen to the waye, for to goo to the woode of y<sup>e</sup> serpent, for to speke wyth the abbot of saynt Lazare, to wyte yf he can telle 24 ~~vs~~ ony tidynges; for my hert iudgeth me that a fore xxiiii houres I shall knowe the certente / and fare wel, my bredern, tyll I com agen.' 'ye speke well and wysely,' sayd alard, 'but we shall goo wyth you 28 for to kepe you.' 'Certes,' sayd reinawd / 'ye shall not come one fote wyth me' / And thenne reynawd went in to his chambre, and made hym to be armed, & came & lighted vpon bayard his good horse / 32 and yssued out of mountalban / the sheelde at the necke / and the spere in hande, & cam to balencon / and passed over the water. and whan he was over

Reynawde begs
 his lordes to ceas
 their sorrow,

and says he will go to the Abbot of St. Lazare for tidings of his cosin.

He mounts
 Bayard,

and goes to the river Balencon,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. iii.    <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> moult asprement, F. orig. A. v.    <sup>4</sup> swonn, orig.

where he finds
two pages
belonging to the Emperor's folk.

the water, he fonde two laddes, that cam to water theyr horses from the ooste of Charlemagne. Whan the <sup>1</sup>laddes sawe reynawd, that was soo grete / and was all a lone / they sayd to hym / 'Syre, what <sup>4</sup> be you, that are a lone / ye seme to be a noble man?' 'Chyldren,' sayd reynawd, 'I am of rypus folke, that dyde scape whan the sones of aymon hanged hym at mountfawcon.' And thenne he sayd <sup>8</sup> agen to theym / 'what dooth the valiaunt kyng Charlemagn / soo it is souper tyme wyth hym.'
'syr,' sayd the laddes, 'the kyng is well mery, & maketh good chere; and he hath forgotten all the <sup>12</sup> sorowe that he dyde make for your mayster rypus, For men have broughte to hym mawgys, that he hated soo moche' / 'Now telle me,' sayd reynawde, 'is mawgys deed?' 'Syr,' sayd the two laddes, 'he <sup>16</sup> is yet alive.' whan reynawd vnderstode that maugys was a live, his herte lepte all in his bely for grete ioye; and thenne he sayd, 'my fayr chyldreñ, blessed mote you be, sith that mawgys is not deed / Now <sup>20</sup> I fere me not that he shall deye this daye.' All thus as reynawd spake this, the laddes went theyr wayes / and reynawd abode alone thynkyng at the ryver side / and whan he had thoughte ynoughe, he said to <sup>24</sup> hymselfe / 'fayr god, what shall I doo / I wote not now what shall I thynke or saye / for yf I goo assaylle charlemagn atte his souper, the nyghte is derke / and he shall wene that I have grete folke <sup>28</sup> wyth me / and he shall be a ferde to lese mawgys / and thus he myghte kylle hym anone. but sith that I knowe somoche of hym, I shall tary tyll to morowe; and yf he bryngeth hym thenne for to be <sup>32</sup> put to deth / I shall deffende hym wyth my power / or elles<sup>2</sup> I shall deye wyth hym' / Here leveth the history to speke of reynawd, that is at the ryvers side

The pages tell him that Mawgis is in the Emperor's
hands,
and still alive.

Reynawde
resolves to rescue Mawgis on the morrow.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. iii. back.      <sup>2</sup> ellis, orig.

of balencon all alone vpon bayard / and retorneth to speke of charlemagn, kyng & emperour of fraunce.

CHAPTER XVI.

4 ¶ How the kyng Charlemagn wold have doon hanged Mawgys incontynent after that oliver had deliverde hym to hym / but <sup>1</sup>thrughe the meane of the XII peres 8 of fraunce, that at the request of mawgis were his surety for one nyghte oonly / he dyde so moche that he scaped with his honour, and acquytance of theym that 12 were his suretyes. And he broughte wyth hym to mowntalban the crowne & the swerde of the [kyng] Charlemagn that same nyghte / and also the swerdes of all 16 the peres of fraunce, wherof themperour was ryght sory ; and how the kyng charlemagn sente worde to reynawd that he sholde sende hym agen hys crowne & his 20 swerd, and all that maugis had borne away wyth hym / and he shold gyve him trews for two yeres / to the whiche thyng reynawd graunted, wherof happed 24 many grete evylles afterwarde /

In this party sheweth the history, that whan charlemagne sawe hym seased of mawgys, he called rowlande, oliver, ogyer the dane, the bysshop turpyn, 28 rycharde of normandy, guldellon of bayere, & the duke naymes, and sayd to theym / 'My lordes, I

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. iv.

Charlemagne tells his barons to prepare a gallows, in order to hang Mawgis before supper-time.

Naymes counsels Charlemagne to wait until daylight for the death of Mawgis.

Mawgis pledges his faith to the Emperor not to escape.

praye you asmoche as I canne, that ye doo make a grete galehous, for I am delibered that, afore souper, mawgis the grete thief shall be hanged by the necke<sup>1</sup> / for yf all the worlde had sworne the contrary, yet<sup>4</sup> shal I not kepe hym to the daye were com.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'sith that it playse you that mawgys shall deye, ye shall make hym deye by a nother maner of wyse, yf ye doo after me' / 'And<sup>8</sup> how thenne?' sayd charlemagn. 'Syre, I counseyll you that ye hange not mawgys by nyghte / for reynawde & his bredern shold mocke you / and thei shall saye that ye durste not make hym deye by daye<sup>12</sup> lighte for fere of theim. and therefore, sir, abyde tyll the day becom /<sup>2</sup> and thenne maye ye doo execusion vpon hym wyth worshyp.<sup>2</sup> And whan the tyme shall be com that ye wyll sende hym forth / sende many<sup>16</sup> folke wyth hym / that and<sup>3</sup> reynawd & his bredern com there for to 'socour hym / that they maye be take / and hanged wyth hym' / 'Naymes,' sayd the kyng / 'ye mocke wyth me / for yf this thief scape<sup>20</sup> me / I am defamed' / 'Syr,' sayd mawgis, 'yf ye be a ferde that I shold goo awaye / I shall gyve you surety that I shall not goo'<sup>5</sup> / 'Who is that,' sayd Charlemagne, 'that shall be thy suerty / is there<sup>24</sup> ony man in the worlde so hardy that dare take this?' 'Syr,' sayd mawgis / 'I shall finde ynowe, if it playse you.' 'now shall we see,' sayd Charlemagn, 'how ye shall fynde theym' / And thenne mawgis<sup>28</sup> loked abowte hym, and sawe the xii peres. soo called he olyver, and sayd to hym, 'Syr oliver, ye promysed me whan I yelded me to you / that ye wolde helpe me towarde charlemagne. Now I requyre you that ye<sup>32</sup> wyll be my surety, yf it playse you' / 'wyth a good

<sup>1</sup> et estrange, F. orig. A. vi.

<sup>2-3</sup> pour le faire pandre, F. orig. A. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> and = if. <sup>4</sup> Fol. Y. iv. back.

sans prendre congie de vous, F. orig. A. vi. back.

- wyll,' sayd oliver, 'vpon my liff & my goodes I shall be your surete' / 'and ye, syre rowlande,' sayd mawgis, 'shall ye not be also for god, my surety / and ye, and asks the twelve peers of France to go surety for him.
- 4 duke naymes; and ye, ogyer / and ye, escouf; and ye, bysshop turpyn / and ye, damp rycharde of normandye; and ye, guydellon of bavyere / I praye you all that ye wyll be my surete, for the love of the good
- 9 knyght reynawd' / 'Mawgis,' sayd thenne the duke naymes, 'wyll ye promise to vs vpon your feyth that ye shall not go from vs wythout our leve' / 'ye,' sayd mawgis, 'vpon my feyth' / And thenne came the
- 12 duke naymes wyth the other peres of fraunce byfore the kyng charlemagne, and sayd to hym, 'Syre, we wyll be surete for mawgis, vpon our lives and vpon our londes that we holde of you, that he shall not goo
- 16 awaye wythout your leve, and also of all your company / & we shall deliver hym agen to you to morow in the mornyng<sup>1</sup> for to doo wyth him what ye wyll.'<sup>1</sup> 'My lordes,' sayd the kyng / 'sith that ye wyll be his surete /
- 20 I remyse hym in to your kepyng, by suche a condycion, but<sup>2</sup> that I have hym to morowe in the mornyng<sup>3</sup>erly, ye shall lese all your londes, And ye shall never maye retourne in to douce Fraunce agayne' / 'Syre,' sayd
- 24 oliver, 'we graunte it as ye have sayd' / 'Lordes,' sayd the duke naymes, 'sith that this is doon / lete vs goo recomforte mawgis / For he is well sory' / 'Lordes,' sayd thenne mawgis to theym again, 'Sith that ye
- 28 have doon me one good torne / doo me a nother / I praye you gete me some mete / for I am yll a hungred.' Whan Charlemagn vnderstode mawgis speke / he loked vpon hym, and sayd to hym all
- 32 lawghynge / 'And shalt thou ete?' sayd Charlemagne / 'ye,' sayd mawgis, 'yf I canne have ony mete.' 'Now here,' sayd Charlemagne, 'what it is of this devyll

Naymes makes Mawgis promise not to escape without their leave, and the peers all swear to be surety for him.

Mawgis asks for food,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> but = except.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. v.

and goes to supper
with the Emperor
and his barons.

The Emperor
fears that Mawgis
will work witch-
craft upon him;

he commands the XII Peers to keep watch over Mawgis all night.

here that asketh for mete / and soo lityll a terme he hathe to live. For and I were in his plighte / I sholde not mowe have corage for to ete.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'ye saye yll / For who that hath eten 4 well, he is better at his ease / wherof I praye you, that ye lete hym have some mete.' And thenne the kynge washed his handes for to goo to souper, and sayd,
'where shall mawgis be for to ete?' 'Syr,' sayd 8 rowlande / 'he shall be well by you.' 'Nevewe,' sayd the kyng, 'ye saye right well, For here shall we be sure of hym / and I had thoughte for to doo soo / For I sholde not dare truste hym to be by none other 12 man.' And thenne the kynge was set atte the table / For as longe as the souper lasted, he durste not ete nor drynke / leest that Mawgys sholde werke witchcraft vpon hym / but mawgis ete ryght well, For he had a 16 goode appetyte to his mete / And whan oliver sawe that, he beganne to lawghe, and shewed rowlande, and after sayd to hym / 'Have ye seen how the kynge durste not ete all this souper / for fere that mawgys 20 shold werke wytchecraft vpon hym' / 'Surely,' sayd rowlande, 'it is true.' After souper <sup>1</sup>Charlemagn called his stywarde / and sayd to hym / 'stywarde, I praye you brynge me XL.<sup>2</sup> torches, and that they brenne al 24 the nyghte' / 'Syr,' <sup>3</sup>sayd the stywarde<sup>3</sup> / 'I shall doo your commaundement.' And whan Charlemagne had ordeyned this, he retorned hym towarde Rowlande / and sayd to hym, ' 'Fayr nevewe, I praye you that ye 28 and oliver, and all the xii peres of Fraunce, that ye wyll watche to nyghte wyth me for to kepe this theef mawgys. and make an hundred men to be armed / that shall whatche wyth vs. and make the playe at 32 the tables & at the chesses<sup>4</sup> / to thende that none of

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. v. back.      <sup>2</sup> trente, F. orig. A. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Et aussi a tous jeux a calle, F. orig. A. vii. back.

vs falle a slepe / And also make a thousande knyghtes to make gode watche wythoute / to the ende that yf mawgys sholde escape vs, they sholde take hym 4 agayne' / And whan Charlemagne had ordeyned this / he set hym doun vpon his bed / and he made mawgys to set doun by hym / And of that other parte, Row-lande, Oliver, Ogyer the dane / and all the xii peres 8<sup>1</sup> rounde aboute the bed<sup>1</sup> / 'Syre,' sayd thenne mawgys, 'where shall I slepe' / 'what saye ye?' sayd Charlemagne, 'wylle ye slepe?' 'ye, syre,' sayd mawgys, full fayne / 'yf it playse you to suffre me' / 'By my 12 soule,' sayd Charlemagne, 'ye shall have evyll rest here, For ye shall not slepe as longe as ye be a live / For ye shall be hanged tomorowe atte the spryngyng of the daye.' 'Syre,' sayd mawgys / 'ye doo me 16 grete wronge. Wherefore have I gyven you surete, but oonly that I maye have my ease for soo longe as I have for to live / Other suffre me to take my reste, and that I maye slepe / or elles<sup>2</sup> holde quyte my 20 suretees' / 'Certes, false theef,' sayd charlemagne, 'all this shall not avayll the / For I wylle that thy suretes goo quyte / and dyscharged / But therefore ye be not oute of my handes' / And thenne he made to be 24 broughte a grete payre of yrens, and fetred hym wyth theym, bothe hys fete togyder, And<sup>3</sup> gare the cheyn to be fastened harde at a pyller. and wyth all he gaaff hym a grete coler of yren abowte his necke / 28 wherof the kynge kepte the key hymselfe. And whan mawgys was arrayed of this facyon, Charlemagne sayd to hym / 'By my soule, mawgis, ye shall not escape me now' / 'Syr,' sayd mawgys, 'ye mocke 32 well with me. But I telle you now byfore the xii peres of fraunce, that I shall see mountalban or it be to morowe pryme.'

Mawgis enquires
 of the Emperor
 where he shall sleep.

Charlemagne
 fastens irons
 upon the hands
 and feet of
 Mawgis.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> ellis, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. vi.

Whan Charlemagn vnderstode this that mawgys sayd to hym / he trowed to have wexed mad all quycke. Soo he stode vp & set hande to his swerde, and cam to maugys all wrothe for to have 4 smyten of his hede. But whan rowlande sawe that, he avaunced hym & sayd to the kyng / 'Syr, for god, mercy / for yf ye slewe hym / we ben all shamed for evermore. Syre, ye ought not to take hede to that he 8 sayth to you / For that that he sayth / he sayth it like a man that is in dyspeyre. And how myghte that be that he sholde escape you as ye holde hym nowe?'
 'verely, my nevewe, I wote not how / but that he here 12 a fore tyme hath soo often mocked me / maketh me to doubte of hym / but at all aventure I shall leve hym in peas tyll to morowe that he shall be hanged' / 'Sir,' sayd Rowlande, 'ye saye well. Thenne all they that 16 were there beganne to playe at the tables<sup>1</sup> & atte the chees,<sup>1</sup> and many other games. And whan [it] came that they had played longe, they beganne all to have grete luste to slepe / And whan mawgys sawe that, he made 20 his charme. And whan he had made it / they beganne all to fall in a stronge slepe; and charlemagne hymselfe slepte soo harde that he fell backwarde<sup>2</sup> vp on his bed.
 And whan mawgys sawe that Charlemagne was soo 24 faste a slepe / and all the twelve peres of Fraunce,<sup>1</sup> and all the company of theym<sup>1</sup> / He beganne to<sup>3</sup> make a nother charme / that was of suche vertue that his feters that were on his fete, and the coler and the cheyn 28 of yren, felle all to the grounde a sondre; <sup>4</sup>and thenne mawgys rose vpon his fete / and sawe Charlemagn, that slept so well grovelinge wyth his hede a wrye / and he toke thenne a pelow, and righted vp his hede with. 32
 And thenne he vngirded him, toke Ioyous his swerde,

and would have
slain him,

but Roland pleads
for his life.

Charlemagne says
he will hang Mawgis tomorrow.

Mawgis makes a charm, and sends them all to sleep.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> bakewarde, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. vi. back.

<sup>4</sup> Et quant maugis vist ce il sault en pieds, F. orig. A. viii.

and gyrde it abowte hym / and after he wente to Rowland / and toke from hym durandall his good swerde / and after he toke hawteclere from olivere, and cortyne 4 from ogyer / And after this he went to the couffres, and toke there-out <sup>1</sup>all the treysour of Charlemagne, & wente wyth all this streighte to mountalban. And whan mawgis had taken all this / he toke an erbe, and robbed 8 Charlemagnes noose & his lippes wyth it / and vnhosed him / and after he shoved hym wyth the fynger / and sayd to hym, 'awake, syre emperour! I promysed you yesternyghte that I sholde not go wythoute I sholde 12 take leve of you / <sup>2</sup>farewell, I goo now<sup>2</sup>' / And whan he had sayd this, he wente oute of the pavyllion, and set hym to the waye towarde mountalban. And whan Charlemagne vnderstode that mawgis had sayd to hym / 16 he rose vpon his fete soo wrothe that men cowde be no more / and called vpon his xii peres that he cowde not awake. And whan he sawe that, he bethoughte hymselfe of an herbe that he had broughte wyth hym from 20 beyonde the grete see / and toke it and robbed wythall the nose, the mouth, and the eyen of rowlande / and in like wyse to all thother xii peres of fraunce / and incontynente they were awaked / and rose vpon theyr 24 fete sore abasshed / and whan they were all awaked / they beganne to loke one vpon a nother, And the firste that beganne to speke was the duke Naymes, that sayd to the kyng, 'Where is Mawgys?' 'By my soule,' 28 <sup>3</sup>sayd charlemagn, 'ye shall deliver hym me agen / for ye have lete hym goo wylfully / For yf ye wolde have suffred me to have hanged hym yesterdaye, I had be otherwyse ridde of him.' 'Rowlande,' sayd olivere, 'sawe ye hym 32 goo hens' / 'Naye, by saynt denys,' sayd rowlande.
 'I saw hym well goo,' sayd Charlemagne / 'Syre,' sayd rowlande, 'ye oughte thenne to have tolde vs of it, For

He takes Charlemagne's sword,
 and the armour
 of Roland and Oliver,

then robs the Emperor of his treasures,
 and departs to
 Montalban.

Charlemagne
 awakes, and discovers the flight
 of Mawgis;

he arouses the
 XII Peers and Roland.

<sup>1</sup> la couronne et le tresor, F. orig. A. viii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. <sup>3</sup> Fol. Y. vii.

Roland discovers
the loss of his
sword,

he shold not have escaped soo' / And in sayenge this,
Rowland loked at hys side, & he sawe not durandall his swerd / wherof he dyde caste a grete syghe. And thenne charlemagne sayd to hym, 'Nevewe, where is 4 your swerde / by my hede, I knowe well that the theef mawgys hathe bewytched vs / For none of vs hath his swerde / <sup>1</sup>and / also he hath my hosin wyth hym, <sup>1</sup> now hath he well mocked vs / 8 and all the peers sorrow over the subtily of

Mawgis.

Whan the xii peres of fraunce saw that they had lost all theyr good swerdes, they were ryght sory for it, more than ony man can saye. And after, rowlande sayd, 'by my feth, mawgys hath wonne a grete 12 gayne, whan he bereth awaye thus our swordes / For they ben more worthe than is all parys / And whan Charlemagne perceyved that his cofres were open, he wente anone and loked in, and he was sore an angred / 16 whan he founde not his crowne, nor the best parte of his treysur / wherof he made grete sorowe, and after sayd, 'Ha, false<sup>1</sup> theef mawgis, full lityll I have goten of the & of thy takynge!' And who thenne had seen 20 the sorow that the xii peres of fraunce made, wolde have had noo luste to lawghe. ¶ Now shall we telle you a lityll of mawgys, that went as fast as ever he

Mawgis comes to the river Balencion, and finds Reynawde
there, in great grief for him.

cowde towarde mountalban / And he came to passe 24 over the water of Balencion, atte that place where Rey-nawd was full hevvy / and full of sorowe / by cause he knew noo certeyn tidynges of mawgis / but whan mawgis had passed over the water / bayard smelled 28 hym & began <sup>2</sup>to crye, and came towarde Mawgys / wolde Reynawde or noo. And whan mawgys sawe Reynawde, he knewe hym well, & sayd to hym, lawghynge / 'Knyght! what be ye that rydeth at this tyme 32 of nyghte' / and Reynawd sayd to hym, 'ye know well that I am your cosin Reynawde, y<sup>e</sup> sone of aymon' / and thenne he lighted from bayarde / and

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. A. viii. back.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. Y. vii. back.

cam to mawgys, & kyssed hym by grete love many tymes, and thenne sayd to hym / 'Fair cosin, thanked be our lorde that I see you deliverde from the handes of Charlemagn' / 'By my feyth,' sayd mawgys, 'ye forgate me well behynde.' 'Cosyn,' sayd reynawde, 'by my soule, I cowde not doo therto, for I have be here sith yesterdaye evyn. And I promyse you that I was delibered for to have socoured you, or elles to have deyed wyth you.' 'My cosyn,' sayd mawgys, 'I thanke you! light vpon your horse, and lete vs goo to mountalban.' Whan reynawde was vpon his horse agen, he sayd to mawgys, 'My cosyn, what is it that ye have laden?' 'Cosyn,' sayd mawgys, 'it is the crowne of Charlemagne / and his swerde Ioyous / durandall, the swerde of rowlande / and the swerdes of all the xii peres of fraunce' / 'cosyn,' sayd reynawd, 'ye have wrought wel, god gramerci; but of the swerde of ogyer, me dysplayseth' / 'Cosyn,' sayd mawgys, 'I have doon it all wyfully, to thende that the kyng sholde marke therby none evyll / and that he were not apeched of treyson.' And thenne he shewed hym all the caas / and the maner that Charlemagne had holde hym / 'cosyn,' sayd reynawde, 'ye dyde ryght well' / And whan he had sayd thys / they went on theyr way towarde mountalban. And they mette in theyr way alarde, guychard, and the lityll rycharde, that came rydyng / makyng grete mone for doubte of Reynawde. and whan reynawd saw them com, he sayd to them / 'Whether go you, my fayr bredern' / 'sir,' said thei, 'we went sekyng after you.' <sup>1</sup> 'Ye have founde me,' sayd Reynawd, 'And I have fonde our cosin mawgys' / And whan they vnderstode this tydynges, they were ryght gladde, & thanked our lorde of it. And after, Alarde sayd to mawgys / 'Fayr cosin, where became ye that ye cam not wyth vs agen?' 'Alarde,' sayd mawgys, joyfully.

They meet

and Mawgis
shows Reynawde
all the swords
he has taken,
and the crown
of the Emperor.

They ride towards
Montalban,
and meet the
three brethren
on their way.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Y. viii.

Mawgis relates his adventures
to them,

'whan rycharde was entred wythin the pavylion of charlemayn, and had take the egle of golde, I taried wythiñ the pavylion for to slee charlemagne, And it lacked but lityll that I slewe hym / and whan I trowed 4 to have comen after you, I fonde a grete rouwte of knyghtes that arested me / and so I defended me of all my power. And thenne came olivere of vyenne, that overthrewe me down; and I yelded me to him for his 8 prysoner / the whiche deliverde me to Charlemagne, that wold have made me to be hanged shamfully, but, lord, I thanke you / I have doon soo moche that I am escaped.' 'Cosin,' sayd alarde, 'it is well happed to 12 you' / whan they had devysed longe ynoughe / they went to mountalban, where they made grete fest / whan they were com there, it is not to be asked yf the good lady clare was well glad, For incontynent she dyde to 16 be made redy dyverse metes for the dyner. And whan they <sup>1</sup>had eten, they went to rest / for they were wery, <sup>2</sup>& specyally reynawd & mawgis wold fayne have slept /<sup>2</sup>
And the nexte daye they wente to here theyr masse 20 at the chyrche of mountalban / and whan the masse was doon / Reynawde called mawgis his cosin & his bredern, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, shewe me the boty that ye gate yesterdaye.' 'Syre,' sayd rycharde, 24 'gladly, syth it playse you' / And thenne he toke the egle, that was of golde massi / and of precyous stones, and gaaff it to Reynawd. and whan Reynawde saw that that gyfte [was] so <sup>3</sup>riche / he was glad of it / bycause 28 of y<sup>e</sup> grete valure of it / reinawd called mawgis, & sayd to hym / 'cosyn, what shall <sup>4</sup>we doo with this egle' /
'My cosyn,' sayd mawgys, 'me semeth that ye oughte to put hym a bove vpon the apple of the grete towre <sup>2</sup>of 32 this castell,<sup>2</sup> to thende that charlemagn & all his ooste maye see it.' 'By my soule,' sayd reynawd, 'ye saye and how Oliver took him before

Charlemagne.

The Sons, with Mawgis, all feast joyfully at Montalban.

Richard shows
Reynawde and Mawgis the golden eagle
which they captured from
Charlemagne,

<sup>1</sup> hay, orig.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> rcihe, orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. Y. viii. back.

well' And thei toke the egle, & made it to be borne vpon the high tower of montalban. And whan the sonne dyde shyne vpon this egle / it casted soo grete a 4 lighte that it myghte be seen v myles thens / And whan Charlemagn & his folke apperceyved it, they were ryght sory for it & an angred / and they set it

 upon the high tower of the castle.

8 Whan Charlemagn<sup>1</sup> the grete emperour<sup>1</sup> sawe that the four sones of aymon mocked hym thus / he called to him rowlade & olivere, and all the other peres of fraunce, & sayd to them, 'Lordes, it is sore mysshaped tyll vs sith we came in this londe of gas-12 cogn / for I have loste my crowne, & ioyous mi<sup>2</sup> swerde, & myn egle of golde, that was of soo grete value as ye all knowe / and ye all have lost your goode swerdes, wherof we ben well shamed / and also we have ben 16 chased from the felde shamfully / Now have well y<sup>e</sup> four sones of aymon shamed vs all, through that false theef mawgys. wherfore, my fayr lodes, I complaine me vnto you, prayng that ye wyll helpe me to avenge 20 me vpon theym ; for they have doon you shame, as well as to me' / Thenne sayd the xii peeres / 'sire, we be redy for to doo all that ye wyll.' 'I wyll,' sayd the kyng, 'that ye ogyer / also the duke naymes, and ye 24 bysshop turpyn, & ye escouff, the sone of oedoñ, that are of the kindred of reynawde / that ye goo to mount-alban, and soo telle to reynawde, to his bredern & mawgis, that they delyver me agen my crowne / Ioious 28 my swerde / and myñ egle of golde / and the swerdes of you all / And I shall gyve [t]heym trews for two yeres. And I shall doo all myn oste to retorn agen in to fraunce' / 'sir,' answerde oger, 'I shall wyth a 32 good wyll do<sup>3</sup> your commaundement / but I fere me of reynawd that he wyll kepe vs prisoners' / 'Ha, ogyer,' sayd Charlemagn, 'ye fere hym but lityll.' Whan the

The Emperour
 perceives how the Sons mock him,

and complains of
 their conduct to his peers,
 whom he calls
 upon to help him
 against them.

He sends Ogier and Naymes to Montalban,
 to demand from Reynawde his crown and treasure, and promises to grant him
 peace for two years.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> bonne espee, F. orig. B. ii.      <sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. i.

The Barons
depart, and reach
the gate of Montalban.

The porter announces their arrival to Reynawde,

who goes forth
with his brethren
to meet them.

Richard welcomes them with great
honour,

barons herde the commaundement of the kyng, they made no taryeng, but lighted on horse backe and rode to mountalban. And whan they were com to the drawbrydge, the porter that kepte warde vpon the gate 4 sayd to theym / 'Lordes, what be ye?'<sup>1</sup> 'my frende,' sayd Ogyer / 'we are of the folke of Charlemagn / goo your waye to Reynawd, and telle hym that the duke naymes, the bysshop turpyn, escouffe the sone of oeden, & 8 ogyer the dane wold speke wyth hym' / 'My lordes,' sayd the porter / 'I shall goo to hym Incontynent; and thenne he went to Reynawde, & shewed hym howe foure knyghtes were at y<sup>e</sup> gate that wolde speke wyth 12 hym. 'what ben they?' sayd Reynawd. 'My lord,' sayd the porter, 'they tolde me that thone is called the duke Naymes, that other the bysshop turpyn / and a nother escouff the sone of oedon / <sup>2</sup>and the fourth<sup>2</sup> is 16 named ogyer the dane.' Whan Reynawd herde this, he stode vp, & sayd to his brethern / 'My lordes, here come four valiaunt knyghtes & wyse / I beseche you that we shewe to theym that we ben noo children for 20 to be rokked a slepe' / 'Cosin,' sayd mawgis, 'ye speke well & wysly / Me semeth<sup>3</sup> it were good that we sholde knowe wherfore they com, or they entre, to thende that we may best answeere to theym.' Thenne they wente 24 to the gate / and made the brydge for to be lete doun And whan it was doun, Richard yssued oute first vpon the brydge / and went agenst theym, & made to theym grete honour,<sup>4</sup> & sayd to theym, 'My lordes, ye be 28 right welcom! this castell is at your commaundement / For I holde me soo sure of my brother Reynawd, that I dare offre it to you' / 'Cosyn,' sayd the messagers, 'gramercy' / And thenne Reynaud auanched himselfe, 32

<sup>1</sup> qui estes devant ce pont, F. orig. B. ii.

<sup>2-2</sup> et aultre, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> se dist regnault, F. orig. B. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> et si les salua, F. orig. B. ii. back.

and saluted theym honourable / and after toke ogyer by <sup>1</sup>the hande / and he hym / and the other thre he broughte to the dongeon / where they were receyved 4 honestly by the lady clare, the wyff of Reynawde / And whan Reynawd had receyved theim, he made them to set vpon a benche; and thenne he sayd to theym, 'Fair lordes, I praye you that ye wyll telle vs 8 wherfore ye be com, For ye com not wythoute a grete cause' / 'Ye knowe well, syr Reynawde,' sayd ogyer,
 'that all we that ben here have ever loved you wel /
 And I promyse you, yf it had be at our wyll / ye sholde 12 have had goode peas wyth the kyng charlemagn; but many tyme he hath vnbrayd vs therof<sup>2</sup> / <sup>3</sup>Ye must knowe that your cosin mawgis hath shamed vs all / For we were his surete to charlemagne, vpon oure ooth to deliver 16 hym at his wyll. And the sayd mawgis is come hither wythout our leve agenst his promyse; and that worse is / he hath robbed the crowne of the kynge charlemagne, & his swerde / and all<sup>4</sup> the swerdes of vs all 20 twelve peres / Wherfore charlemagne sendeth to you worde by vs that ye see here / that ye deliver hym agen his crowne / the egle of golde, and all our swerdes / And he shall gyve you trews for ii yeres, and 24 he shall doo retorne all his armee in to fraunce' / After that oger had sayd this, Mawgys stode vp & spake by leve of reynawd,<sup>5</sup> and said, 'Lordes, ye ben right wel-com in this castell of mountalban<sup>6</sup> / And yf it playse 28 you, ye shall not speke noo more of this mater now, and ye shall abyde this nyghte wyth vs / and to morewe ye shall have an answeere of that ye have sayd' / 'Reynawd,' sayed thenne ogyer, 'wyll ye kepe 32 that mawgys hath sayd?' 'ye, wythout fawte,' sayd and they are well received by Lady Clare.

Oger delivers
 his message to Reynawde.

Mawgis begs the Barons to defer
 the matter until
 the morrow,
 when they shall receive an answer.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Z. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> que nous sommes tieulx que vous, F. orig. B. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Regnault, F. orig. <sup>4</sup> aussi, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> et de ses freres, F. orig. B. iii.

<sup>6</sup> et a tres grant joye receux, F. orig. B. iii.

Ozier consents to remain a night
at the castle.

Reynawde takes
them into the hall, where they are entertained
royally,

and honourably
served.

Naymes requests Reynawde to give his answer to

reynawd<sup>1</sup> / ' Sythe that it playseth you,<sup>2</sup> we shall abyde for the love of you.' And thenne mawgis went to the stywarde of Mountalban / and devysed hym the metes / wherof the <sup>3</sup>knyghtes of Charlemagne sholde be feested 4 wythall, and tolde that they sholde be well served / what soever it costed. 'and see that the grete cuppe be borne afore the duke naymes / the whiche I dyde conquere at reyns.' 'My lorde,' answerde the stywarde, 8 'doubt not ye shall well be served at my power.' And thenne mawgys came agen.<sup>4</sup> And whan Reynawde sawe hym come, he called hym, & sayd to hym / 'my cosyn, I praye ye see that we be well served?' 'Syre,' sayd 12 mawgys, 'I have purveyd for it all redy' / And [whan] reynawd vnderstode hym, he was glad of it / and beganne to devyse wyth the folke of Charlemagne right honestly and of many thynges. And whan he thoughte that 16 the mete myghte be well redy, he and his bredern toke the four knyghtes, and brought theym to the hall to theyr mete. And whan they were there, Mawgys made theim wasshe / and thenne he toke the duke naymes 20 and made hym sit down / and my lady clare nexte hym.
And he made sit down the bysshop turpyn & reynawd, and thenne ogyer & alarde / and after guycharde & escouf the sone of Oedon / and thenne the lityll 24 rycharde. And whan they were all set atté the table / the metes of the fyrste cours were broughte to the borde, and thenne the other one after a nother by goode ordenaunce & fayr. And to seye the trouth, they were 28 well and honourable served,<sup>5</sup> and of many & dyverse servyses of royall metes<sup>5</sup> / And after that they had well eten atte theyr ease / the duke naymes called reynawde, and sayd to hym, 'Goode cosin, I pray you that ye 32 wyll delibere your self for to gyve vs a good answeere

<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. iii.    <sup>2</sup> se dist ogier . . . F. orig. B. iii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. ii.

<sup>4</sup> devers les aultres dont il estoit party, F. orig. B. iii.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. iii.

of that ye have herde of vs' / 'Lordes,' sayd reynawde, 'I shall doo it in soo moche that the kyng shall have a cause to be contente of me, For I shall doo 4 all that he wyll for to have peas & his love wythall / and that <sup>1</sup>for the love of the other, my lordes, that be here now.' And thenne<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>Reynawd made to brynge the swerde of Charlemagne, and the swerdes of the twelve
 8 peres / and also the crowne & the egle of golde. And whan Ogyer sawe this, he beganne to lawghe, and sayd / 'By my soule, Reynawd, ye had here a fayre gayne yf ye had kepte it.' And whan Rychard sawe that his 12 brother wolde deliver the egle of golde / he began to saye / 'By saynte palle, my fayr brother, ye shall not doo soo / ye shall not delivere agayne that I have wonne well and truly by force of armes' / 'Broder
 16 Rycharde,' sayd Reynawd / 'lete me doo, I praye you.' 'I wyll not,' sayd Rycharde, 'by my soule / for Charlemagn hymselfe smote me whyle that I was prysoner wythin his pavylion full shamfully <sup>3</sup>wyth a staff'<sup>3</sup> /
 20 'Lordes,' sayd the duke Naymes / 'lete this a lone, And take we that Reynawde gyveth to vs in thanke, for he hath doon ynoughe.' 'By my feyth,' sayd the bysshop turpyn, 'he dooth soo.' And thenne they toke 24 the crowne of Charlemagne & all theyr swerdes ; And whan thei had theym / Ogyer sayd to Reynawde, 'My cosin, I counseyll you that ye come wyth vs, and alarde [and] guycharde<sup>4</sup> shall abyde here for to kepe your 28 castell' / 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'I feere me to sore that the kyng wolde make me to be kyllled owtrageously' / 'Come on hardly,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'For we shall lede you well and surely ; For syth that ye shall 32 be wyth vs. / ye ought not to fere noo thyng' /

Charlemagne's demand.

Reynawde consents to the conditions of Charlemagne, and delivers up the crown and golden eagle to Ogyer.

Richard is very angry with Reynawde for his concessions to the Emperor.

Ogyer asks Reynawde to come with him to Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> pour lamour de vous et de tous les aultres messeigneurs qui icy sont. Et a celle heure regnault, F. orig. B. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. Z. ii. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Richart et Maugis, F. orig. B. iii. back.

Reynawde con-
sents,

'Lordes,' sayd thenne Reynawde, 'I shall doo your commaundement vndre your assurynge.'

and they all mount
their horses.

Alarde accompanies them.

The Duchesse
entreats the Barons to protect
her husband.

Ogyer promises to shield Reynawde
from all harm.

Whan Reynawde was accorded for to goo wyth the duke Naymes / and wyth the bysshop 4 turpyn, wyth ogyer the dane, and escouff the sone of Oedon, they lighted all vpon their horses; and Reynawde mounted vyon bayarde & armed hym / And in lyke wyse dyde Alarde / And whan the duches Clare 8 sawe that Reynawde her lorde wold goo <sup>1</sup>wyth the folke of charlemain / she cam byfore them / and kneled down byfore theym, & sayd to theym / 'My lordes, I thanke you moche of the favour that ye dyde 12 shewe <sup>2</sup>to my broder rycharde & <sup>2</sup>to mawgys / now agayne I beseche you that ye wyll have reynawde for recomended, my lorde & my dere husbonde, the whyche ye lede wyth you' / 'Madam,' sayd ogyer, 'have noo 16 doubte that reynawde shall have ony harme / For we sholde not suffre it for noo thyng, for to lese bothe lyff and goodes' / And thenne they put theym to the waye for to goo thens / and reynawd toke ten knyghtes 20 wyth hym for to bere hym felishyp / Whan they were come to the ryver of balencon, thei soughte after the passage, and passed over / And whan they were all over, Ogyer begann to saye / 'Lordes, ye wote 24 well all is of evyll courage agenste reynawde, wherfore I doubte me of hym that we have broughte here wyth vs / I counseyll that we knowe fyrste the wylle of Charlemagn or ever he see reynawd' / 'Ogyer,' sayd the 28 duke naymes, 'ye speke well & wysly; we shall goo speke, ye & I, to charlemagn, and reinaude shall abyde here tyll we com agen.' 'Lordes,' sayd thenne rey-nawd, 'I shall doo that ye counseyll me / but I 32 praye you holde me that ye have promysed me / that is,
that ye shall kepe my body & my lymmes from harme.'
'Reynawd,' sayd the duke naymes / 'We shall rather

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Z. iii,      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. iv.

deye than that ye sholde have ony harme.' And thenne he and ogyer toke the waye towarde y<sup>e</sup> oost of Charlemagn / and reynawde abode<sup>1</sup> wyth the bysshop 4 turpyn & wyth the sone of oedon. Now herken of pynabell, a spye that longed to charlemagn / Wyte it that the sayd spye was at the ryver side of balencon wyth this felishyp / whan the wordes afore sayd were 8 spoken / whan the spye had wel vnderstonde all the conclucion / he stele hymself fro the company, & rode a good pas as he myght in y<sup>e</sup> world, & cam to charle-
 2magn, to whom he sayd in this maner / 'Syr, I brynge 12 you tidynges wherof ye shall be right glad' / 'my frende,' sayd charlemagn, 'thou arte welcom. I praye you telle me what tidynges ye bryng' / 'Wyte it, syre, that I have lefte Reynawd & alarde his brother at the 16 ryver side of balencon, wyth the bysshop turpyn & escouff the sone of oedon / and the duke naymes & ogyer are comyng towarde you for to aske leve yf thei shall bryng theym to you wyth surete' / 'Is it trouthe?'
 20 sayd charlemagn. 'ye, wythoute fawte,' sayd pynabel. 'By my soule,' sayd the kyng, 'I shall rewarde the for it ryght well; but kepe wel that ye shewe not this to noo man vpon thy liff, for I shall put therto
 24 a good remedy.' And thenne he beheld aboute him and saw oliver, & sayd, 'Oliver, incontynent & wythoute ony deleye / take two hundred knyghtes well horsed & well armed / and lede theym at the ryvers 28 side of balencon / where ye shall fynde reynawde & alarde / and see that ye take theym & bryng theym hether. and yf ye doo this, aske of me what ye wyll / and ye shall have it.' And thenne sayd oliver, 'sire, I 32 shall well doo your commaundement.'<sup>3</sup> and thenne he toke with hym ii hundred knyghtes, as charlemagn had ordened hym, and toke his way towarde the ryver

Naymes and Ogier ride towards the host of Charlemagne, while Reynawde remains with Bishop Turpin and Escouff.

A spy steals away from Ogier's company, and goes to the Emperor, whom he tells that Reynawde and Alarde are at the river Balencon.

The Emperor commands Oliver to take two hundred men, and go to Balencon, and bring Reynawde and Alarde back with him.

<sup>1</sup> tout seul, F. orig. B. iv.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. Z. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> comandement, orig.

of balencon / Now god thrughe his pyte save the good knyghte Reynawde & alard his dere broder / For they ben in grete perell of theyr lives. This hangyng, that oliver was goon towarde the ryver of balencon / the 4 duke naymes & ogyer came to thoost / and lighted afore the pavyllion of the kyng, & went in / And whan they sawe the kyng <sup>1</sup>they made him the reverence<sup>1</sup> / but <sup>2</sup>he said noo wordes to theim<sup>2</sup> / whan oger <sup>3</sup>sawe the 8 countenance of y<sup>e</sup> kyng<sup>e</sup>,<sup>3</sup> he sayd to him / 'Sir, what semblaunt is this that ye shewe to vs? I merveyll me gretly that ye make vs soo evyl chere, seen that we com fro thens where ye have sende vs / that was, <sup>4</sup>to 12 mountalban / where we have spoken wyth reynawd the sone of aimon, the whiche is all togyder redy for to doo all that your playsur is, and so he hath deliverd vs agen your crowne & all our swerdes / as for your egle, 16 ye shall have it whan ye wyll.' 'Oger,' sayd thenne charlemagn / 'what have ye doon of reinawd / for I am sure that ye have brought him with you' / 'syr,' sayd oger, 'it is trouth vereli, we have brought him wyth vs 20 vpon our feyth for to take suretees of you of the trews that ye have graunted hym.' 'By saynt denys,' sayd Charlemagn, 'I wyll not therof; for if I can have him ones in my handes, all the golde in the worlde shall not 24 save him, but I shall make hym deye a shamfull deth' / 'Sir,' sayd oger / 'what saye ye? I merveille me gretly of that ye have sayd' / 'damp<sup>e</sup> emperour,' sayd thenne the duke naymes, 'soo grete a kyng as ye 28 be, oughte never to have said suche wordes <sup>5</sup>as ye now have vttred wyth your mouth<sup>5</sup> for the value of half his royame / ha goddis, swete syr, gyve not to yourself

Naymes and Ogier come to the pavilion of Charlemagne,
 but he will not speak to them.

Ogier enquires of him why he is wrathful with
 them.

Charlemagne asks
 him what he has done with Reynawde,

and vows he will
 have him slain.

1-1 Ogier salua charlemaigne moult honnorablement, F. orig. B. iv. back.

2-2 le roy charlemaigne, ne luy rendit point son salut et ne luy repondit ung seul mot, F. orig. B. iv. back.

3-3 vit ce, F. orig.

4 Fol. Z. iv.

5-5 omitted, F. orig. B. v.

soo grete a blame / and yf ye doo this that ye saye /
 I promyse you that I, ogyer, the bysshop turpyn, &
 1 the sone of oedon, we shall yelde you evyll for evill, 4 and yet we shall save reynawd at our power, soo that Naymes says they will defend Reynawde with
all their power.
 ye shall not doo him harme / sith that we have brought hym vpon our feyth' / 'Now shall we see,' sayd charlemagn, 'how ye shall conne helpe hym' / 8 'Syr,' sayd oger, 'yf ye do to vs ony owtrage or dishonour, I promyse you we shall forsake the homage & the feyth that we owe to you / and we shall doo the worste that we can agenst you & agenste your royame' / 12 We shall now presently speke a lityll of oliver, that was goon to balencon for to take reynawd & his broder / Wyte it that whan Oliver<sup>2</sup> was com atte the ryver side of balencon, It happed as by fortune that Oliver finds Reynawde at the river-side of Balencon.
 16 the sayd Oliver overtoke reynawde soo nyghe, the whiche was on fote, that he cowde not have leyser <sup>3</sup>for to mount vpon bayarde / and whan reynawde saw that he myght not lighte vpon his horse by cause 20 that oliver had overtaken him soo sore, he was sore an angred of it, that almoste he wexed mad all quycke /
 And thenne he torned him towarde the bysshop turpyn & towarde escouf, & sayd to them, 'Vasaylles, ye Reynawde accuses the Barons of treachery.
 24 have betrayed me falsly, & I wolde never have beleved it / wherin ye have doon grete synne & grete evyl.'
 'Syre,' sayd the bysshop turpyn, 'I swere to you vpon my feythe that herof we never knewe noo thyng, 28 <sup>4</sup>nor never thoughte it,<sup>4</sup> & I promyse you that we shall live & deye wyth you' / and wyth this reynawde torned towarde oliver, & sayd to hym, 'Oliver, maye ye yelde me agen the goodnes that I shewed to you<sup>5</sup> in 32 the playne of valcolours / I knowe that one curtesie requyreth a nother ; For whan ye were to the grounde

<sup>1</sup> escouf, F. orig. B. v.      <sup>2</sup> de vienne, F. orig. B. v.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. iv. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. v.

<sup>5</sup> quant mon cousin maugis vous abactit es plains de vaulx de colleurs, F. orig. B. v.

Roland approaches, and tells Reynawde that he is betrayed.

Ogier follows Roland, and swears that no harm shall befall Reynawde.

Oliver advises that they should take Reynawde before Charlemagne, and beg him to make peace with the Sons.

caste, I deliverde you your horse agen, and holpe you to lighte vpon hym agen.' 'Syr,' sayd oliver, 'it is trouthe that ye saye / and I promise you that I am right sory that I have founde you now here, For I 4 knowe noo man in the worlde that wolde doo to you ony harme / but I wold be wroth wyth hym.' This hangynge, that reynawd & oliver spake togyder / there cam rowland, that was departed from the ooste after 8 oliver, for to helpe him to take reynawd / And whan he was nygh, he began to crie, 'Ha, ha / Reynawde, by my soule ye be now taken & betrayed!' And whan he had sayd this, there was ogyer behynde hym, 12 that had followed hym wyth the poynte of the spere / the whyche sayd to hym, 'By my hede, syre Rowlande, ye shall doo noo harme to Reynawde / For the duke naymes and I have broughte hym hether 16 vpon our feyth for to take the suretees of the trews that we have gyven to hym in the kynges behalve, as ye knowe he had charged vs to doo. And I telle you, syre Rowland, yf ye doo to hym ony harme, 20 ye shall doo it to <sup>1</sup>vs.' 'Ogyer,' sayd Rowlande / 'ye shall now be an evyll suretee for hym.' 'Rowlande,' sayd Ogyer, 'I make myn avow to you, that yf ye sawte Reynawde, we four<sup>2</sup> that ben here shall helpe 24 hym agaynste you' / 'Rowland,' sayd thenne Olyvere, 'I praye you that ye lete Reinawde in peas / For I promyse you he dyde ones to me a curteyus torne, and a grete playsure / And now I wyll rewarde hym 28 for it, yf it playse you / and I shall telle you what we shall doo. We shall lede Reynaude byfore Charlemagne, And we shall praye hym that he treateth hym courtesly, And we shall parforce ourselfe to make hys 32 appoyntemente. 'Lordes,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'Olyver hath spoken honestly. I counseylle that we lede reynawd to fore Charlemagne, for to see what he

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Z. v.

<sup>2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

wyll doo of hym / And I swere god, yf he wyll doo ony owtrage to Reynawde, we shall not suffre it, for to deye for it / and we shall helpe hym to save hym-4 selfe, to our power' / ¶ After all thyse wordes, they toke theym selfe on their waye / for to lede Reynawde to Charlemagne.

8 Whan Rowlande and olyver had broughte Rey-nawd in to the pavylion of the kyng Charlemagne, Wyte it that the duke Naymes, the bysshop Turpyn, Ogyer the dane / also Escouff the sone of Oedon, wente never one fote from Reynawde / But 12 whan Oliveres wolde have presented Reynawde to Charlemagne / Ogyer avaunced hymselfe / and sayd to the kyng in this maner / 'Syre, ye knowe how ye dyde sende vs four that ben here a fore you, in 16 your message to Mountalban, for to telle vnto Reynawd as ye had charged vs / To whome we dyde shew in your behalve, that yf he wolde deliver to you agayne your crowne, <sup>1</sup>and the swerdes that Mawgys had borne 20 wyth hym, and the egle of golde, ye sholde gyve hym trews for two yeres, and that ye shold doo tourne your ooste in to Fraunce agayne. Wyte that Reynawde hath doon all that we have requyred hym of in 24 your behalve / And we have broughte hym wyth vs vndre your sauff conduytte / and soo we take hym vndre our charge that he sholde have noo more harme than we sholde. Notwythstandynge, ye have made 28 hym to be taken / the whyche thyng we wolde never have thoughte that ye wolde have doon it / Seen that here ben your crowne and your swerdes / and the egle of golde ys at your playsure whan ye 32 wyll have it. And, moreover, we promysed hym that yf ye dyde to hym ony harme / that ye sholde do it to vs as well as to hym. And I promyse you, yf ye doo to hym ony harme / ye shall be gretely blamed

The Barons with Reynawde enter
 the presence of
 the Emperor.

Oliver speaks to Charlemagne on behalf of Reynawde.

and tells him, that he will regret any evil done to him.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Z. v. back.

for it of all the worlde / But and yf ye wyll werke honestly here in, and like a true emperour <sup>1</sup>and a kyng,<sup>1</sup> for to kepe that nether ye nor we be not blamed for it, sende Reynawde agayne to mountalban <sup>4</sup> wyth this that he hath taken to vs / And whan he shall be therin agayne / doo to hym the worste that ye canne' /

Charlemagne
refuses to listen
to Oliver,

'Ogyer,' sayd Charlemagne, 'ye speke for noughte, <sup>8</sup>
O and all your felawes also / For I shall not doo soo; but I shall doo after my owne wyll, thoughe ye all had sworne the contrari. And soo shall I not do of Reynawde as I dyd of the false theef <sup>12</sup> Mawgys' / And whan Charlemagne had sayd thus, he toured hym towarde Reynawde, and sayd to hym,
'Reynawde, Reynawde, I holde you now / Certes
I shal soo kepe you that ye shall not deceyve me,<sup>2</sup> <sup>16</sup> as dyd mawgis / <sup>3</sup>For I shall make you anone to be smytten / and cutte in smalle peces, 'and thenne brente all to powder.'<sup>4</sup> 'Syre,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye shall not doo soo / and god wyll' / 'Ogyer,' sayd <sup>20</sup> Charlemagne / 'wyll ye deffende agenste me my mortall enmye' / 'Syr,' sayd ogyer, 'I wyll not defende your enmyes agenste you / but I promyse you that I shall defende my trouthe agaynste all men.'<sup>24</sup>
'Syr,' sayd thenne Reynawd, 'what is your playsur that I doo / ye have called me traytour / wyte it that I was never suche / nor noo man of my linage / nor I know not in the worlde that sayth that I have <sup>28</sup> be a traytour / or that I have doon ony treyson agaynste you / but that I shold fyghte in the qu[a]rell agenste hym, body to body.' 'By my feyth,' said Charlemagne / 'I shall make it to be proved vpon you <sup>32</sup> bi force of armes' / 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'ye speke now as a kyng, and here is my gage that I gyve,

and vows that Reynawde shall be slain without mercy.

Reynawde protests his innocence of all
treason towards
the Emperor,

and says he will
fight any man to prove the truth of this,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> ne enchanter, F. orig. B. vi.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. vi.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. B. vi.

sayeng that I am as true a man as ony that is in all the world / and in like wyse all thei of my linage' / Thenne Charlemagn sayd to hym / 'Yf ye 4 gyve me seurtes / wite that I shall take vp your gage, and not elles'<sup>1</sup> / 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'I shall fynde surete ynoughe.' Thenne he tourned hym & sawe ogyer / and sayd to hym / 'sire ogyer, come forthe, 8 and ye duke naymes, and also the bysshop turpyn, and ye escouff the sone of Oedon / be my suretees, I praye you / for ye oughte to be soo / Ye knowe that I dyde never vntrewth' / 'Reynawd,' sayd the duke 12 naymes, 'we shall be suerte for you wyth a good wyll' /

finding surety in the four Barons.

Thenne sayd Reynawde, 'syre, here ben my suretees that I take you / are ye contente of theym' / 16 'Ye,' sayd charlemagn / 'I aske no more' / 'Syr,' sayd thenne Reynawde, 'who is that shall make the bataylle' / 'by my feyth,' sayd Charlemagn, 'myself shall it be' / 'Syre,' sayd rowlande / 'ye shall not doo 20 so, & <sup>2</sup>playse you / For I shall fyghte for you my selfe.' 'Syre,' sayd reynawd, 'ordeyn in your place suche as it shall playse you.' and whan he had sayd this worde / bayarde was taken agen to reynawd, 24 the whiche lighted vpon & went towarde mountalban.
 and wyth him went oger the dane, the duke naymes, & escouff the sone of oedon, and togider alarde, that had be taken as reynawde. And whan thei were 28 com nygh mountalban / guychard, rycharde, & mawgis sawe theim com, & came theim agenste / and whan rycharde sawe reynawde / he asked of him how he had doon / 'by my feyth,' sayd reynawde, 'we were not 32 welcom / For the kyng knewe that we were at balencon, where oger had left vs, and he sent anone oliver & rowlande for to take vs and were overtaken so sodenly that we cowde not lighte vpon our horses ;

Charlemagne
 accepts these terms.

Reynawde with
 the Barons return
 to Montalban,

and recount all
 their tidings to
 the brethren.

<sup>1</sup> ellis, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. Z. vi. back.

and we were broughte to charlemagn / and I promyse you he is a cruell man, fulfilled wyth all cursednes' / And thus recounted reynawde to his brethern all that ye have now herde a fore / 4

The Sons all feast merrily at Mont-
 alban,

That nyght reynawd & his company made good chere at mountalban, & made the folke of charlemagn to be wel feested by the lady clare, his wyff, right honourable / and after thei had souped wel, they went to bed 8 for that nyght; and whan the mornynge was com, that everi man was vp / reynawde & his felishyp went to here masse in the chapell of saynt nycolas, and reynawd offred iiii marke of golde / And whan the masse was 12 doon, Reynawde and all his barons asked after theyr armes for to arme them. Whan thei were well armed, reynawde toke leve of his wyff afore all the company;
 and thenne he called to hym his bredern & mawgis / 16 and sayd to them, 'My lordes, I leve this castel in your proteccyon & sauff garde / and I recomende you my wyff & my chylidren / for now I goo fight wyth the best knyght of y<sup>e</sup> worlde, <sup>1</sup>now I knowe not what shall 20 betyde of me; wherfore I prai you that ye wyll kepe well this castell / for I promyse you, yf I deye, ye shall have nede of it. here is oger that shall com wyth me, & the duke naymes also / for thei ben my suretees to 24
 the kyng charlemagne.' 'By my soule,' sayd alarde, 'ye speke for nought / for we shall goo wyth you, & we shall bere you company where somever ye goo, and soo shall we see the batayll / and how ye shall be mayn- 28 tened in your right / and yf ye have nede of helpe, ye shall fynde vs redy to your socours.' 'By saynt paul,' said oger the dane, 'alarde hath spoken wysely' / and whan reynawd sawe this, he called mawgys, and sayd 32 to him / 'My fayr cosin, I praye you that ye wyll abyde here, and that ye will kepe all well, sith that my bredern wyll com wyth me.' 'Reynawde,' sayd mawgys, and in the morning Reynawde arms himself for his approaching battle with Poland.

The brethren vow
 to accompany
 Reynawde,

and Mawgis is left to protect the Castle.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. Z. vii

'I shall doo as it playseth you / and I promyse you that mountalban shall have noo harme thrughe my defawte' / Whan regnawd had ordened all well / he toke 4 on incontynent his waye in the feliship of his bredern,
 & of the barons afore sayd. And whan they came there,<sup>1</sup> as the bataylle shold be doon, Reynaude lighted a fote, & taryed after rowland. ¶ Here levethe the 8 history to speke of reynawd, of his brethern, & of thother barons that were in the company of the sayd reynawd, And retorneth to speke of rowland, how he & reynawde made their bataylle<sup>2</sup> thone agenst thother /

CHAPTER XVII.

12 ¶ Here sheweth how reynawde faught agenst rowland, the whiche he conquered by the wyll of god, & broughte hym to mountalban, wherof charlemagn was full hevye &
 16 wroth / and also how mawgys bare the emperour Charlemagne to mountalban vpon bayard all a slepe, and delivered hym to reynawd in a bed / <sup>3</sup>where reynawd laye<sup>3</sup> /
 20 and how mawgis after this went away, & toke thabyte of a heremite, & left his kizmen, & lived pouerli, for he wold not let y<sup>e</sup> peas of reynaud to <sup>4</sup>Charlemagn / For the 24 werre hath lasted long ynoughe.

Now sheweth the tale, that whan rowland saw the day, he rose fro his bed, & wente, after he was

<sup>1</sup> au pin de montfaucon, F. orig. B. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> et comment leurs armes furent faictes et comment le chāp fust devise ne a quil demoura a la fin des armes, F. orig. B. vii. back.    <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>4</sup> Fol. Z. vii. back.

Roland prepares for his fight with Reynawde.

redy, to here masse / and offred a riche yefte vpon the awter / and whan y<sup>e</sup> mas was doon, rowland asked after his harneis for to arme him; and whan he was wel armed, he lighted a horsbacke quickly, and thenne 4 charlemagn sayd to him / 'Fair nevene, I commende you to god, that he lede you to a good waie, & kepe you fro deth & fro prison / for ye know that reynawd hath right vpon us / and we doo to hym wronge / wherfore I 8 wold not for the halfe of my royame that ony harme cam to you for it' / 'syre,' sayd rowland, 'it is to late for you to repent now, for sith that ye knowe ye were in the wronge / ye sholde not have accepted the bataylle 12 that ye have enterprysed; but sith it is so that the thing is com so ferre forthe, I can not leve it / but if it were to me grete shame; now helpe me god if it playse hym thrughe his merci' / Whan rowland had sayd these 16 wordes, he toke on his waye for to goo to the pintre of mountalban, <sup>1</sup>where as the bataille of reynawd & of hym sholde be made<sup>1</sup> / And whan he was nygh mountfawcon / he saw reynawd, that awated after him <sup>1</sup>at the sayd 20 tree<sup>1</sup> / And incontynente he began to crie vpon him, 'by god, reynawd, this day shall ye have ado wyth me; & I promyse you, that whan ye shall goo fro the felde, ye shal never doo faites of armes agenst me, nor agenst no other.' 24 whan reynawd herde rowlond crie so / he cam agenst hym, & sayd to hym / 'sir rowlond, it becometh not to suche a knyghte as ye be, for to threte me thus; & I tell you that I am here redy;<sup>2</sup> and yf ye wyll batayll, ye 28 shall have it incontynent' / 'reynawd,' sayd rowland, 'I am not com here for peas / but kepe you fro me, & ye shall doo as a wyse man' / 'Rowlande,' sayd reynaude, 'beware of me, for I am sure that I shall bryng doun 32 the <sup>3</sup>pride of you, that is soo grete.'

He approaches
Monfaucon,
where he finds Reynawde awaiting him.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Si vous voles paix vous laures a moy . . . F. orig. B. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. viiii.

Whan reynawde had sayd that worde, he spored bayarde wyth the spores, and cam agenste rowlande, and rowlande agenst reynawd / and they 4 gaaff to eche other soo grete strokes at theyr brestes that they brake bothe their speres all to peces; and wyth the rennyng that they made agenste eche other, they recounted the one the other so harde wyth theyr 8 sheeldes that reynawde muste nedes falle doun to the erthe / wyth his sadle bytwene his thyes / <sup>1</sup>by cause of the gyrtes that brake a sondre<sup>1</sup> / and rowlande lost hys styropes wythall. And whan reynawde sawe hymselfe 12 a grounde / he rose vp ryght quyckly, and lighted agen vpon bayard with oute sadle / and cam vpon rowland wyth his swerde in his hande, and gaaff him so grete a stroke that rowland felt hym selfe sore greved wythall / 16 and whan he sawe that reynawd had stonyed hym so sore / he set hande to durandall his good swerde / and ranne aspreli vpon reynawd / And whan reynawde sawe hym come / he went right fiersly vpon rowland / and 20 thenne beganne the bataylle to be harde / and sore cruell bytwene theym two / And I promyse you they lefte not one pece of theyr harneys hole / nether vpon thone nor vpon the other / <sup>1</sup>but it were all to brosten & 24 beten a sondre<sup>1</sup> / in somoche that the barons that loked vpon them<sup>2</sup> had grete pyte of thone & of thother. whan the duke naymes had beholde a longe while of this wonderfull batayll, he began to crie as lowde as he 28 coude, sayeng in this manner / ‘Ha, kyng charlemagn, ye are over cruel / for thrughe your cruel malice ye put to deth II. of the best knyghtes of the world / wherfor, ye shall ones abie or longe.’ Whan reynawde saw that 32 nyther of them two cowde not overcom the other, he sayd to Rowland, ‘Yf ye byleve me, we shall lighte doun a fote bothe, to thende that we kyll <sup>3</sup>not our horses /

The battle begins
between the two
knights.

Reynawde is
unhorsed,

but quickly re-
mounts, and smites Roland severely.

The fight continues with great fierceness.

Naymes calls on the Emperor to part them.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> thein, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. Z. viii. back.

The knights determine to fight
on foot, for fear
their horses
should be killed;

the combat is
then renewed,

but neither knight
can overcome the
other,

and they both
fall down from weariness.

The Emperor
prays God to deliver Roland
from this mortal
combat

For yf we slee theym, we shall never recover none suche nor soo good.' 'Ye saye well,' sayd rowlande / 'and I am soo contente' / And thenne they descended a fote vpon the medowe. 'Rowlande,' sayd reynawd, 4
'now are we per to per / Now it shall be seen whiche of vs two shall be mayster of the place' / And wyth this they ranne the one vpon thother as proudly as it had ben two lions. who that had seen thenne the grete 8 strokes and the dangerous that they gave to eche other / he sholde have sayd that there had be never suche two knyghtes in all the remenaunt of the worlde. whan rowlonde sawe that he cowde not wynne reynawd, he 12 came to hym, and toke hym wyth a full arme / and so dyde reynawde hym, in lyke wyse in maner of wastelynge togyder a grete whyle / wythout that the one cowde cast down the other by noo waye / And I promyse you 16 that a man sholde wel have goon a myle or ever they lefte eche other goo, whan they were cowpled ones togyder / And at the laste, whan they sawe that the one cowde not caste down the other / they lete eche 20 other goo, the one here, and the other there, for to take theyr brethe / For they were right wery, and sore traveylled so moche that almoste they / myghte not stonde no lenger / and theyr helmes, sheeldes / and 24 theyr armes were all to-cut & broken, and the grounde where they foughte thus was all to stamped <sup>1</sup>and beten wyth theyr fete<sup>1</sup> / as men had beten come there vpon.<sup>2</sup> Whan Charlemagn sawe that the one cowde not 28 overmayster the other, and how they were bothe evyll arayed / he was sore a ferde for his newew rowlande / And thenne he kneled down vpon his knees, & heved his handes togyder towarde hevyn, & began 32 to saye<sup>3</sup> / 'Good lord, glorious, that made worlde, see, hevyns, and therth / and deliverde the holy vrygyn

1-1 omitted, F. orig. B. viii. back. <sup>2</sup> vopn, orig.

<sup>3</sup> en plorant, F. orig.

1 margarete from the bely of the horryble dragon / and Ionas from the bely of the fysshe / I beseche you also that ye wyll deliver my nevewe rowlonde from this 4 bataylle mortall, and sende me suche a token wherbi I mai departe these two knightes from eche other, to the honour of the one and of the other.' Whan alarde, gucharde & rycharde sawe their broder so wery, they 8 were a ferde of his persone. And thenne they began also to praye god that he wolde kepe theyr brother Rey-nawd fro deth & from pryson / And whan they had made theyr praiers / our lorde, for the prayer of Charlemagne, 12 shewed a fayr myracle / for he made ryse soo grete a clowde, & so thyecke, that they myghte not see eche other / Thenne rowlande sayd to reinawd / 'where are ye goon, reynawd / other it is nyghte, or elles I can not 16 see never a whit' / 'Noo more do I,' sayd reynaude, 'verely' / 'Reynawde,' sayd rowlande / 'I praye you doo to me a curteys torne, and a nother tyme / I shall doo to you asmoche for you, yf ye requyre me therof.' 20 'Syr rowlande,' sayd reinawde, 'I am redy for to doo all that ye wyll requyre me of, soo that my honour be saved' / 'Gramerci, reynawde, of that ye haue graunted me / Wyte that the thyng that I wyll desire of you is 24 this, that ye bryng me wyth you to mountalban.'
 'Syr rowlonde,' sayd reynawde, 'yf ye wyll doo this / I shall be right glad therof / By my feyth<sup>2</sup> I shal goo there wyth you wythoute ony fawte, yf it playse 28 you' / 'Syr,' sayd reynawde, 'god of his goodnes yelde you the worship that ye wyll now doo to me / for I have not deserved it unto you.' 'Syr reynawde,' sayd rowlande / 'Wyte that I do this bycause that I 32 knowe well that ye be in the right, <sup>3</sup>and that ye fyghte in a goode quarell<sup>3</sup> / and I am in the wronge' / And whan rowlande had sayd this, he receyved his Alarde and Gucharde also pray for their brother's safety.

A miracle is manifested for the prayer of the Emperour, and a cloud hides the combatants from each other.

Roland begs Reynawde to take him to Montalban, because he has done wrong to fight with him.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A.A. i.      <sup>2</sup> se dist rolant, F. orig. C. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. i.

The cloud then disappears, and the two knights mount their horses.

sighte, and sawe as he dyde <sup>1</sup>a fore, and thenne he sawe vylaunche his good horse, and he lighted upon hym / and in like wyse reynawde vpon bayarde / And whan charlemagne sawe this, he was sore abashed, 4 and began to calle & crye, 'Lordes, lordes, now see! I wote not what I sholde saye / for reynawd ledeth rowland with hym. Now shall I see yf ye shall lete hym goo.' whan charlemagne had spoken thus / he 8 cam to his horse, and lighted vpon him / and he began to crie / 'Now shall I knowe who ben my frendes.' whan the barons of fraunce herde charlemagn speke thus, they spored theyr horses, & ranne after reynawd / 12

Charlemagne calls on his folk to pursue the two knights.

Whan ogyer saw Reynawde come wyth rowland that he broughte wyth hym, he was right glad, and he came agenst reynawde, and sayd to hym / 'Syre, ye have well wroughte this day that ye have taken 16 suche a proye' / 'Ogyer,' sayd reynawde / 'I promyse you rowlande hath lete hymselfe to be taken wyth his good wyll.' 'Thanked be god of it,' sayd the duke naymes. 'Reynawd,' sayd oger, 'goo your waye to 20 mountalban; and the bysshop turpyn, the sone of oedon, & I shall retorne agen / and we shall tary charlemagne that foloweth after you, and we shall doo so moche that ye shall be well at mountalban or they 24 overtake you' / 'Ogyer,' sayd rowlande, 'ye saye well / and I thanke you of your curtesie' / Whan they had thus shortly spoken togyder / reynawde & rowlande rode soo faste that they came to mountalban / It is not 28 to be asked yf rowlande was well feested at mountalban; I promise you it is not possyble to feste a prynce better nor more honourable than he was at mountalban / This hangyng, ogier was come agenste 32 kyng Charlemagne / and he dyde so moche by his fayr langage, that he helde the kyng / tyll that he thoughte that reynawd & rowlande myghte be well at moun-

Oger promises to delay the Emperor while Reynawde and Roland ride towards Montalban.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A.A. i. back.

talban by that tyme / And whan he had doon soo, he spored <sup>1</sup>his horse, and wente to mountalban after the other / Where as he myghte well goo wythoute to be 4 vnbrayed for it / for he was one of y<sup>e</sup> suretes of reynawde, as ye have herde / and whan charlemagn sawe this, he folowed hym vnto the gates / And whan he was come to the gate of mountalban / he began to 8 crye wyth a hie voys, ‘Bi god, reynawd, this that ye have doon shall avaylle you lityll, for ye shall never have peas wyth me as longe as I am man a live.’ And whan he had sayd this, he returned him fro the gate / 12 and said to oliver that was there wyth hym / ‘Oliver, goo lightly to mountbendell, and bring here all my oste / for I will besege all this castell.’ Theñne sayd oliver, ‘I shall goo there wyth a good wil, but, & playse 16 you, ye shall com wyth me, for I promyse you, if ye come not there yourself, they shall not come hether for me.’ ‘Theñne shall I goo there myselfe.’ and thus toke charlemain his waye towarde mountbendell, where his 20 ooste leye. Whan his folke sawe him come, they went agenst hym, & began to saye to hym, ‘Sir, what have ye doon wyth rowlande?’ ‘lordes,’ sayd charlemagn, ‘rowland is goon to mountalban / but I commaunde 24 you all, that incontinēt, wythout delay that my sege be transported all rounde abowte mountalban / and ye damp̄ oliver, shall bere the oriflam / and damp̄ rycharde of normandy shall lede our oost.’ Whan charlemagn 28 had commaunded all this, there was none that sayd agenst it / but set theymselve to bringe doun the tentes & pavylions / <sup>2</sup>and to trusse & lede their bagages<sup>2</sup> / and caryed all to mountalban / 32 <sup>3</sup>Rycharde of normandy went wyth twelve<sup>4</sup> thousande men to balencon, to kepe the passage of the ryver

Charlemagne follows the knights to Mountalban, and vows he will never make peace with the Sons again;

he commands all his men to lay siege to the Castle.

Richard of Normandy keeps the passage of the

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A.A. ii.                      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Quant tout lost fut trouffe . . . F. orig. C. ii.

<sup>4</sup> dix, F. orig. C. ii.

river, while all the host of Charle-
magne assemble
before Mountalban.

Mawgis tells Rey-
nawde how the Emperor has come with all his
host.

Roland sends a message to Charlemagne,

that Reynawde
and Mawgis will deliver themselves
to him, if he will save their lives.

tyll al the ooste were over the ryver. This hangynge, charlemagn had putte hymselfe a fore, for to see where he myghte best pitche his tentes and his pavylyons / for to kepe sege royall <sup>1</sup>afore the castell of Mountalban. 4 And whan all the ooste was come afore mountalban, the kynge made Incontynent his pavylyon to be set vp byfore the grete gate / And whan all the ooste was sette / the nyghte watche of the grete towre came to mawgys / 8 and sayd to hym / 'Syr, wyte that charlemagne is come wyth his oost / and he hath put his pavylyon byfore the mayster gate' / 'Is it true?' said mawgis. 'ye, with-oute fawte,' sayd the watche / 'Now care not for it,' <sup>12</sup> sayd mawgis / 'for charlemagn seketh his dommage; and he shall have it soner than he weneth' / Thenne went mawgys to reynawde / And shewed hym how charlemagne was come wyth all his oost.<sup>2</sup> And whan <sup>16</sup> reynawd herde this, he wente to rowlande, and sayd to hym / 'Syre, ye muste wyte that charlemagne your vncler hath leyde sege afore vs / but I promyse you that yf it were not for the love of you / I sholde shewe <sup>20</sup> hym that that he hath not doon well.' 'Reynawde,' sayd rowlande / 'I thanke you moche; but one thyng I wyll telle you / save your correctyon. Me semeth that I oughte to sende to myn vncler, the duke Naymes, <sup>24</sup> Ogyer the dane / and also the bysshop Turpyn, that shall shewe to hym in this maner / Syre emperour, wyte that Reynawd, for the love of you, <sup>3</sup>wyll not gyve noo yrens to your nevene, nor he <sup>3</sup>wylle not put hym in <sup>28</sup> pryson, but he maketh hym as goode chere as he dooth to hys owne selfe / And that more is, Reynawde, his bredern / and mawgys doo presente theymselfe <sup>4</sup>for to gyve theym and their castell vnto your handes<sup>4</sup> / soo <sup>32</sup> that theyr lives be saved' / 'Ye speke well and wysely,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A. A. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> et luy sestoit louge devant la maistresse porte, F. orig. C. ii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4-4</sup> de eulx rendre a vostre volente, F. orig. C. ii.

syre rowlande,' sayd reynawde / 'and soo I am redy to doo as ye wyll have it.' 'Rowlande,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'I dare not goo to hym; ye maye well ynoughe,' 4 sayd Rowlande / 'for ye be not hated of the kynge.'
 'Duke naymes,' sayd Ogyer, 'we shall goo <sup>1</sup>to Charlemagne,<sup>1</sup> yf ye <sup>2</sup>wyll doo after me' / And they accorded that they two sholde goo togyder to the kynge, for to 8 shewe vnto hym as Rowlande had devysed / And whan these two prynces / <sup>1</sup>the duke Naymes and Ogyer,<sup>1</sup> were come to the pavylion of Charlemagne, they<sup>3</sup> saluted hym reverently,<sup>4</sup> and the duke Naymes spake to hym in this 12 maner of wyse: 'Syre emperoure, your newewe Row-lande recomendeth hym humbly to your goode grace / the whiche Reynawde kepeth wythin mountalban for his prysoner not vnkyndely, but he maketh to hym as 16 goode chere / <sup>4</sup>and as grete honour he bereth vnto hym,<sup>4</sup> as he were his owne brother and his soverayne lorde;
 and all this he dooth for your love / And demaundeth of you peas,<sup>4</sup> if it playse you for to graunte it to hym,<sup>4</sup> 20 by suche maner that he shall gyve you mountalban / and the egle of golde, and he shall lete goo Rowlande at his liberte wythoute raunsom. And also he shall yelde hymselfe to you / and his brethern in likewyse / 24 and also Mawgis, for to doo your wyll wyth theym / sauff theyr lives / And they shall promyse you, yf theyr servyse playseth you, that they shall serve you agenst all men, wyth all their power and puyssaunce / soo 28 that ye shall have cause to thanke them for it.'

Ogyer and Naymes
depart with the message,

and present themselves before
Charlemagne;

they deliver the
message.

Whan Charlemagne vnderstode these wordes / he shoke all for grete angre / And beganne to saye to the duke Naymes, and to the other that were 32 come to hym, 'Flee out of my pavylion, evyll folke! I merveylle me how have ye durste come here wythin.
 And I telle you that Reynawde shall have noo peas

The Emperor is so wrath that he commands
Naymes to fly
from him.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. A.A. iii.

<sup>3</sup> thye, orig.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. ii. back.

wyth me, but yf I have mawgys, for to doo my wyll of hym.' Whan the barons vnderstode charlemagne that spake thus / they came oute of his pavyllion, and toke noo leve at hym / but retorned Incontynente to moun- 4 talban / Whan they were come there, Rowlande and <sup>1</sup>Reynawd asked theym how they had doon wyth Charlemagne. 'Lordes,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'it is no force to be asked after it / For Charlemagne wyll not 8 doo it, but yf men take to hym Mawgys, for to doo his wyll of hym' / <sup>2</sup>'Lordes,' sayd Reynawd,<sup>2</sup> 'I am sory for it / I merveyll how Charlemagn is soo harde herted ; and I make myn a vowe to god / he shall not have 12 Mawgys, thoughe I sholde deye for it' / After these wordes they wente to theyr mete, and Mawgys made theym to be served plenteously and worshyfully. And whan they had souped, the beddes were heeled, and 16 they wente anoone to bed / And whan Reynawde wolde goo to his bed / he called to hym Mawgys, and sayd to hym / 'Cosin, I praye you that ye doo make good watche to nyghte / For ye knowe that our lives lieth 20 ther vpon.' 'Syre,' sayd mawgys, 'feere not for to slepe well / <sup>2</sup>and reste yourselfe.<sup>2</sup> For I promyse you thys castell shall be well kepte by goddys grace' / And whan all the barons were a bed / Mawgys wente to the 24 stable <sup>3</sup>and, sadled bayarde / and thenne he lighted vpon hym / and he cam to the gate, and sayd to the porter, 'My frende, open the gate, for I muste goo oute a lityll / and abyde me here / for I shall come agayne soone' / 'Syre,' 28 sayd the porter / 'I shall doo soo wyth a good wyll' / Thenne wente oute Mawgys streyghte to the pavyllion of Charlemagn / And whan he was come there, he beganne to make his cherme / and broughte a slepe all 32 they that were in the oost. And whan he had doon soo / he wente to the bed of Charlemagne, and toke

The Barons return
to Montalban.

Reynawde begs Mawgis to keep watch during the night.

Mawgis goes to the pavilion of Charlemagne,
and there works
a charm upon the
Emperor,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A.A. iii. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> de regnault, F. orig. C. iii.

hym in his armes / and broughte him vpon bayarde / And whan he had doon soo / he wente his wayes whom he carries asleep to Mont-
 alban;
 agayne to mountalban / and broughte Charlemagne 4 wyth hym. <sup>1</sup> And whan he was come there agayne, he toke Charlemagne from bayarde,<sup>1</sup> and bare hym in to his chambre / and layd hym in <sup>2</sup>his bed. Whan all this was thus doon, He toke a torche and fyred it / 8 and pytched it bytwene the strawe and the bedsted / soo that it helde faste evyn byfore the vysage of Charlemagne / And after, he wente to the chambre of Reynawd, and sayd to hym, 'Cosyn, what wolde ye 12 well gyve that sholde deliver Charlemagn in to your handes' / 'By my soule,' sayd Reynawde, 'I have noo thyng but that I sholde gladly give it, soo that I myghte have hym here wythin this castell of mountal-16 ban.' 'Cosin,' sayd Mawgys / 'wyll ye promyse me that ye shall doo to hym noo harme of his body / nother your brethern, nor none of yours / and I shall putte hym into your handes evyn anoone' / 'Cosyn,' 20 sayd Reynawde, 'I promyse<sup>3</sup> you that vpon my feyth.'
 'Nowe come wyth me,' sayd mawgys. And thenne mawgys broughte reynawde in to his chambre / and shewed hym Charlemagne that was in his bed, and he shows the Emperor to Rey-
 nawde,
 24 slepte; and after he sayd to hym, 'My cosyn Reynawde, now ye have here Charlemagne, kepe hym soo well that he scape not you' / And whan mawgys had delivered Charlemagn to Reynawde / he came to the 28 stable where he had put bayarde, And toke some strawe and robbed his backe wythall, and his hede / and thenne he kyssed hym all wepynge, and toke leve of hym / And after, he wente and toke the palster and 32 the cloke, and came to the porter, and gaff hym all his other raymentes that he wered afore / and went out of mountalban / and then issues out of the Castle.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. iii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. A.A. iv.

<sup>3</sup> proimyse, orig.

¶ Now levethe the history to speke of Reynawde / and of Charlemagne a lityll / and shall shewe of mawgys, that lefte all his kynred and frendes, <sup>1</sup>and became an heremyte.<sup>1</sup> 4

CHAPTER XVIII.

¶ How after that mawgys had delivered Charlemagn in to the handes of Reynawde his <sup>2</sup>cosyn, he wente wythoute ony leve from mountalban / in to a woode beyonde the 8 ryver <sup>3</sup>of Dordonne in to an hermytage / where as he lived like an heremyte a poure liffe, for to doo penaunce for his synnes. 12

Now sheweth the history, that whan Mawgys had delivered Charlemagne for prysoner vnto Reynawde, he wente oute of mountalban wythoute the leve of Reynawde, and wythoute the knowledge of ony of the 16 castell / excepte of the porter. And wyte it, that the sayd maugys wente soo longe that he came to the ryver of Dordonne / and passed over the water in a bote / And whan he was over, he entred in to a wylde foreste / and 20 walked wythin it tyll it was none. And whan he had goon ynoughe thoru[gh] the woode / he behelde a side / and sawe a lityll hylle / and vpon it a lityll howse in maner of an heremytage<sup>4</sup> / he wente to it, and founde 24 the place <sup>5</sup>devoute and playsaunte<sup>5</sup> / For a fore the gate sprange a quycke fontaine. And mawgys wente in to the chapell / and kneled a fore an ymage of our lady

Mawgis goes over the river Dor-
dogne,

and finds a little hermitage in a
wood;

he enters,
and prays,

<sup>1-1</sup> et sen ala hors de montauban habitue moult pourement, F. orig. C. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> bon cousin, F. orig.      <sup>3</sup> Fol. A.A. iv. back.

<sup>4</sup> Quant il congneut que sestoit ung hermitaige . . F. orig.
C. iii. back.      <sup>5</sup> moult plaisant, F. orig.

<sup>1</sup>that was there<sup>1</sup> / and prayed our lorde that he wolde pardonne hym his synnes / And as he was there mak-ynge his prayer / a devocyon toke hym so grete / that 4 he made his avowe to god that he sholde dwell in that vowing to remain there and become a hermit.
 place, and that he sholde serve there from that daye forthe on, and that he sholde ete none other but suche wyld herbes as grewe in the woode. And thenne he 8 prayed our lorde that Reynawde and his bretherne myght have peas wyth Charlemagn. And whan mawgys had doon his prayer / he rose vp, and cam oute of the chapell / and toke the saddle from hys horse, 12 and the brydelle / and so lete hym goo to the grasse / and wente agen to the chapell<sup>2</sup> / ¶ But here leveth the hystory to speke of mawgis, that was become an heremyte, And retourneth to shewe of <sup>3</sup>Reynawde and 16 of his brethern, that had Charlemagne for theyr prysoner / wythin theyr castell of mountalban.

CHAPTER XIX.

¶ How the barons of Fraunce that were atte Mountalban / were sory that they cowde 20 not awake the emperoure Charlemagne that Mawgys had broughte a slepe thurgh his arte<sup>4</sup> / But whan the tyme of the charme of mawgis was passed, the kynge awoke by 24 hymselfe, And he founde hymselfe at mount-alban / he sware that he never sholde make peas wyth Reynawde as longe as he was prysoner. And how Reynawde lete hym 28 goo agayne to his oost vpon his horse

<sup>1</sup> qui estoit moult devoete, F. orig. C. iv.<sup>2</sup> pour faire ce quil auoit en pensee, F. orig. C. iv.<sup>3</sup> Fol. A.A. v. <sup>4</sup> et apourte a Montauban, F. orig. C. iv.

CHARL. ROM. XI.

2 D

bayarde / wherof Reynawde repented hym afterwarde ryght sore. For soone after that, charlemagn dyde besege mountalban of so nyghe / that he famysshed Reynawde 4 and his bretherne wythin, wyth his wyff and chyldren.

Reynawde asks
counsel of his brethren, what they shall do with
the Emperor.

Richard counsels
that he shall be hung immediately.

Reynawde counsels for peace with
the Emperor.

In this party sheweth the history, that whan mawgys had delivered Charlemagne in to the handes of 8 Reynawde / and that he was goon as ye have herde, Reynawde called to hym his brethern / and sayd to theym / 'Come hether, my fayr brethern / telle me what we shall doo wyth Charlemagne, that we holde 12 now in our handes / Ye knowe how longe that he hath dommagd vs / and hath doon to vs grete harmes wythoute reyson ; wherfore me thynketh that we oughte to avenge vs vpon hym, sith that we have hym.' 'Sire,' 16 sayd Rycharde, 'I canne not saye what ye wyll doo of
hym. But, and ye wyll beleve me, he shall be hanged forthe wyth / For after he were deed / there nys no man in all Fraunce that we sholde feere ony thyng' / 20 Whan reynawd vnderstode the counseyll<sup>1</sup> that rycharde his brother had gyven hym, he loked doun towarde therthe, and began to <sup>2</sup>thynke sore / And whan Rycharde sawe hym muse soo, he asked him what he thought / 24 and yf he cared who shold doo execucyon vpon the kyng / <sup>3</sup>'For,' sayd Richard<sup>3</sup> / 'ye shall not lacke for that, for none other<sup>4</sup> shall hange him but myself / and that I shall doo evyn a noone / yf ye wyll deliver hym 28 vnto me.' After these wordes, reynawd ryghted hys hede vp, and sayd, 'My bredern, ye know well that cha[r]lemayn is our soverain lorde / And of thother parte, ye see how rowland, the duk naimes, oger the dane, the 32

<sup>1</sup> counseyll, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. A.A. v. back.
<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. iv. back.      <sup>4</sup> ether, orig.

bysshop turpyn, & also escouff the sone of oedon, are wythin for to make our poyntment wyth Charlemagn / for they know well that we ben in the right, & the 4 kyng in the wrong. And thus yf we kylle hym, be it with ryghte or wyth wrong, all the worlde sholde renne vpon vs; nor never, as longe as we lyve, we shall not be wythoute werre.' And whan reynawd had sayd this / 8 alard spake in thys maner / 'Broder, ye have spoken wysely; but ye see that we canne not have peas-wyth Charlemagne by noo wyse. Me semeth that we oughte to aske it of hym ones for all; and yf he wyll 12 not / lete vs kepe hym prysoner'<sup>1</sup> / 'Brother,' sayd gucharde, 'ye saye well, but my herte telleth me that he shall never make peas with vs nor love vs' / 'Lordes,' sayd rycharde, 'me semeth that we have a 16 goode hede of Reynawde oure broder, thanked be our lorde / the whiche hath governed vs right well hereto / Lete hym shyfte with the kyng as he wyl, and that that he wyll shall be doon' / 'By my feyth,' sayd 20 Alard, 'Richarde speketh well' / And whan they were all accorded to that / that Reynawde sholde doo, <sup>2</sup>the foure brethern wente to the chambre where Rowlande was,<sup>2</sup> to whom Reynawde spake in this wyse, 'Syre 24 Rowlande, aryse, I praye you. that ye wyll sende for Ogyer, the bisshop Turpyn, and for <sup>3</sup>all other that be here wythin <sup>4</sup>of the folke of Charlemayne;<sup>4</sup> For I wyll telle you one thyng' / And whan Rowlande sawe Rey- 28 nawde <sup>4</sup>and hys bretherne<sup>4</sup> atte that tyme of the nyghte <sup>4</sup>come in to hys chambre,<sup>4</sup> he was merveyllled. Nevertheles he sente for all his felawes / as Reynawde had tolde hym / And whan they were all come, Reynawde 32 stode up and sayd / 'Lordes, ye ben all my frendes, Alard advises that they should demand peace from Charlemagne, or keep him prisoner.

The Sons all go to the chambre of Roland,

<sup>1</sup> le sans le faire mourir par telle maniere que jamais ne nous fasse guerre ne ennuy, F. orig. C. iv. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> Ilz laisserent le roy en dormir et alerent en la chambre de rolant, F. orig. C. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. A.A. vi. <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. iv. back.

god gramercy and you / wherfore I wyll not hyde no thyng from you / Ye muste knowe that I have here wythin a prysoner / by whom I shall have peas, and all myn herytaunce agayne.' 'Reynawde,' sayd Rowlande, 4
 'I praye you tell me what he is ; For here is noo man / but that wolde fayne ye sholde doo well.' 'By my soule,' sayd Reynawde, 'it is the grete emperour Charlemagn, to whome all Fraunce belongeth.' And 8 whan Rowland vnderstode these tydynges, he was sore merveyllled of it, and sayd, 'Reynawde, ye telle me now a wondrefull thyng / How have ye taken myn vncler soo lightly ?<sup>1</sup> telle me, & playse you, how ye had 12 hym here wythin / have ye taken hym by force of armes ?' 'Naye, verely,' sayd Reynawde<sup>2</sup> / 'telle me thenne how, I praye you,' sayd Rowlande. 'Wyte it,' sayd Reynawde,<sup>2</sup> 'that I wote not how mawgys my 16 cosyn dyde to nyghte / but wel I wote that he hath broughte the kynge here wythin,<sup>3</sup> oute of hys pavyllion,<sup>3</sup> and hathe layd hym in a bed / in a chambre, where he is now fast a slepe.' 20

and Reynawde
 relates to them
 the capture of the Emperor.

Rowland is sore
 abashed at these
 tidings.

Whan Rowlande and all his felawes herde these tydynges, they were gretly abashed<sup>4</sup> / how it myghte be that mawgys sholde brynge the kynge there / <sup>3</sup> 'I merveylle moche herof,' sayd the duke naymes<sup>3</sup> / 24
 'For ye knowe well that the kynge made hym selfe to be kepte bothe nyghte and daye well sure.' 'Lodes,' sayd thenne oger / 'all this hath doon our lord for the love of reynawd, by cause he setted hym all to <sup>5</sup>mis- 28 cheeff <sup>3</sup>agenst Reynawde,<sup>3</sup> and that the werre hathe lasted to longe, the whiche shall now be left, wherof I thanke god for my parte / For many goode knyghtes

Oger says this has happened
 because the war
 has lasted too
 long.

<sup>1</sup> Car de le auoir pris en bataille ne en champnē son ost et pavillion oncques ne fut si recreant, F. orig. C. v.

<sup>2</sup> richart, F. orig. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Seigneurs dist le duc naymes bien fait nostre seigneur a ceulx quil luy plait, F. orig. C. v.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. A.A. vi. back.

have loste theyr lives for it' / And whan Ogyer had sayd thus / Reynawde toke Rowlande and the other / The Sons with all the barons enter
the chamber of
Charlemagne,
who still sleeps.
 and broughte theym, alwayes spekyng, vnto the cham-4 bre, where Charlemagne laye so faste a slepe that they cowde not awake hym for noo thyng that they cowde doo to hym, For mawgys had chermmed him soo harde /
 And whan the barons sawe the kyng so harde a 8 slepe / <sup>1</sup>they wondred full sore vpon it, and <sup>1</sup>they were gretely abashed on it. Thenne spake rowlande fyrste, and said, 'Reynawde, where is mawgys that hath wroughte soo wel to nyghte? I praye you lete hym 12 come here / and that he awake myn vncler Charlemagne oute of his slepe / And whan he shall be awaked, we shall all falle atte his fete / and shal crye hym mercy /
 And soo I praye you<sup>2</sup> that thoughe yf ye holde myn 16 vncler in your handes / that ye wyll not be the prowder for it in your wordes.' 'By my feythe, syre Rowlande,' sayd Reynawde / 'I wylle that ye knowe / I sholde rather deye than that I sholde saye to my soverayne 20 lorde a fowle worde; But I shall put me, my goodes, and all my brethern to his wylle / to the ende that it wyll playse hym to graunte vs peas wyth hym / And I wyll goo fetche Mawgis to you / ther to doo wyth 24 hym what ye wyll' / And thenne Reynawde wente and soughte Mawgys, the whyche he cowde not fynde / Reynawde goes forth in search of Mawgis.
 wherof he was full sory / And whan the porter wyste that Reynawde soughte after mawgys, he came to hym 28 and sayd, 'Syre, ye seke hym for noughte, for he wente hys wayes oute ryghte now' / 'And how knoweste thou of it?' sayd Reynawde. 'Syre, wyte it that this nyghte he made me open the gate / and he wente oute 32 vpon <sup>3</sup>your horse bayarde / And he had not / taryed longe whan he broughte a grete man and a bygge vpon

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. v.

<sup>2</sup> pour dieu et pour lamour de moy, F. orig. C. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. A.A. vii.

The porter tells him that Mawgis has gone from the castle and has not returned again.

the horse necke afore hym / <sup>1</sup>and wente in, I wote not where<sup>1</sup> / And soone after he came agayne vpon a nother horse / and he had clothed himself pourly. And thenne he made me to open the gate, and he wente out, and he <sup>4</sup> came not sith agayne. And all this is trouthe that I telle you.'

Reynawde weeps
tenderly for his cousin,

and tells the barons of Mawgis's departure.

Richard bemoans
the los of Mawgis,

and would have
slain Charle-
magne,

Whan Reynawd had vnderstonde thise wordes, he was soo wrothe that he wyste not what to saye <sup>8</sup> nor doo ; For he knewe well by hymselfe that Mawgys was goon his wayes, by cause he wolde noo lenger abyde the wrathe of Charlemagne.<sup>2</sup> Thenne beganne Reynawde for to wepe full tendrely for his cosin that <sup>12</sup> was thus goon / And all wepynge, he came agayne to the barons / and sayd to them how Mawgys was goon awaye wythoute his knowledge,<sup>3</sup> wherof he was soo wrothe and soo sori that he wente almoste oute of his <sup>16</sup> mynde. And whan Alarde, Guychard / and Rycharde had well vnderstonde this, they beganne to make grete moone / and sorrowed full sore. And thenne Rycharde beganne to saye, 'Ha, my fayr cosyn Mawgys, what <sup>20</sup> shall we doo from hens forthon, sith that we have loste you / We maye well saye that we ben dyscomfyted, For ye were our salvacyon, our socours / and our hope, our counseylle, our refute, our defence / and our gujde / <sup>24</sup>
For it is not yet longe agoo that I sholde have deyed an evyll deth yf I had not be socoured thorughe your helpe / Alas ! all the hevynes that ye bere of the wrathe that Charlemagu hath agenst you, cometh oonly by vs' / <sup>28</sup> And whan he had sayd soo, he knacked his teeth for angre, and sayd / 'We ben now well all loste, syth that we have loste Mawgys.' And wyth this, he sette hande to his swerde, and wolde have slayne Charle- <sup>32</sup> magne ; <sup>4</sup>but Reynawde drewe hym a syde, And the duke

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. v.

<sup>2</sup> ne estre en sa mala grace, F. orig. C. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> knowleche, orig. <sup>4</sup> Fol. A.A. vii. back.

Naymes and Ogyer sayd thenne to hym, 'Rycharde, Rycharde / refrayne your courage / For it were not well doon for to kylle a man that slepeth; And also, afore
 4 that we shall departe hens, we shall sette all atone, and god wyllle.' ¶ Shortely to speke, Oliver and the duke naymes spake soo fayr to Rycharde, that they made hym promyse theym that he sholde doo noo
 8 harme to Charlemagne / Nevertheles Rycharde lefte not to make grete sorowe for his cosyn<sup>1</sup> mawgys that he had loste; For all theym that sawe hym make soo grete mone, had pite to see hym. It was not merveylle 12 yf Rycharde made sorow for Mawgys, For I promyse you he had grete nede of hym not longe after, And soo had all hys brethern / as ye shall here /

16 Alle thus as the four sones of Aymon made theyr mone for the love of theyr cosyn maugys, The duke Naymes beganne to speke / and sayd in this wyse: 'By god, lordes, ye doo not well for to make soo grete sorow!<sup>2</sup> I praye you leve this hevynes / And lete vs
 20 begynne to speke of your peas that muste be made wyth the emperour charlemagne, that an ende maye be had of this werre that hathe endured soo longe' / 'By god,' sayd Rowlande, 'ye be passynge slowe thervpon.
 24 And also we muste fyrste have hys merci, or ever we move ony thyng of the peas / For ye wote well that I left him by cause that peas shold be made'<sup>3</sup> / 'syr,' sayd the duke naymes, 'ye speke wysely and well / but 28 how shall we speke wyth hym wythoute Mawgys were here / we can not awake hym / And but yf god remedyeth it / we shall never speke wyth hym.' But all thus as the barons speke in thys wyse, The charme 32 that Mawgys had sette vpon Charlemagne was come but Reynawde restrains him.

Naymes begs the Sons to restrain their sorrow for Mawgis, and consider how peace may be made with Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> cosym, orig.

<sup>2</sup> car je ne vis jamais riens gagner en perte que lon fasse pour en demener dueil, F. orig. C. vi.

<sup>3</sup> qui a trop dure, F. orig. C. vi.

at an ende, <sup>1</sup>and the strength of it <sup>2</sup>was passed<sup>1</sup> / And The Emperor awakes, sodeynly Charlemagne beganne to move his body, and arose anone vpon his fete / and ryght sore abasshed, loked all a boutte hym / And whan he sawe that he was <sup>4</sup> atte mountalban, in the subjectyon of Reynawde the
 and is wrath when he finds himself at Montalban; sone of Aymon / he was sore an angred / and made suche sorrow for it / soo that all they that were there, trowed that he had be mad, <sup>1</sup>and from hym selfe.<sup>1</sup> And <sup>8</sup> whan hys wyttes were come to hym agayne, he knewe he swears not to make peace with the Sons.
 well that mawgys had doon it to hym, and sware that,
 as longe as he were man on live, he sholde make noo peas tyll that he were oute of mountalban / and that <sup>12</sup> men had broughte mawgys to hym<sup>3</sup> / And whan Rycharde vnderstode this that Charlemagne sayd, he Richard demands of him how he dare threaten them, seeing he is their prisoner. beganne to saye in this wyse / 'How the devyll dare ye thus speke / syre, ye see well that ye be our <sup>16</sup> prysoner / And yet ye threten vs / I make to god myn a vowe and to saynte peter, were not that I have promysed / that I shall not doo to you noo harme atte this tyme, I sholde stryke the hede from the body of <sup>20</sup> you' / 'Holde your peas,' sayd Reynawde, 'lete the kyng say his wyll, <sup>1</sup>ye are over besy in your wordes<sup>1</sup> /
 And lete vs all pray hym that he wyll pardonne vs,
 For the werre hath lasted to longe; cursed be he that <sup>24</sup> beganne it / For grete evylles and harmes are happeth therby' /

Reynawde was wyse and well taughte for to styлле thus hys bretherne, to whome he sayd / 'My <sup>28</sup> lordes my brethern, yf it playse you / ye shall come wyth me / for to crie mercy to our sovereyne lorde the kyng Charlemagne.' 'Reynawde,' sayd alarde / 'we shall doo all that ye wyllle.' 'By my feythe,' sayd the <sup>32</sup> duke naymes, 'My lordes, ye doo wysely, and I pro-myse you that all goode shall come to you therof' /

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. A.A. viii.

<sup>3</sup> pour en faire sa volente, F. orig. C. vi. back.

Thenne reynawde and all his bretherne, and Rowlande, The Sons, with Roland and the other barons,
 and oliver, and Ogger the dane, the duke Naymes, the 1 bysshop Turpyn / and Escouf the sone of oedon / be-4 ganne all to falle on theyr knees byfore the emperour / And Reynawd spake fyrste / and sayd in this maner of wyse : ‘ Noble emperour, have mercy of vs ! for I and plead for mercy and peace from Charlemagne.
 my brethern, we yelde vs vnto you for to do your 8 playsure of vs / and your wyll be so that our lives be saved / And there is noo thyng but that we wyll doo<sup>2</sup> it for the love of you, if it playse you to graunte vs peas wyth you. And for that pyte and pardonne that 12 god gaaf vnto mary magdalene whan she washed his fete in the house of Symeon / goode syre, have pyte of vs ! And yf it playse you not to pardonne me / atte the leest pardonne my brethern, And take theym agen 16 their londes / and I shall gyve you mountalban, and bayarde, my good horse ; And soo shall I goo in to the holy londe, I and Mawgys, where we shall serve to the temple of our lorde.’ And whan Charlemagne herde 20 reynaude speke thus / he blastred all for angre / and sayd, ‘ by that goode lorde that made me / yf all the The Emperor will not consent to peace until Maw-
gis is delivered
to him.
 worlde speke to me therof / yet sholde I never consente me to noo peas / but I have mawgis in my handes for 24 to doo my wyll vpon hym.’<sup>3</sup> ‘ Alas,’ sayd thenne reynawde /
 ‘ now have I herde that worde bytyng, wherof
 I am all dysperate / For I shold rather lete my selfe be hanged / than that I sholde consente to the deth 28 of mawgis my good cosin ; For he hath not deserved towarde vs that we sholde betraye him / but rather he were worthy by reysen for to be lord above vs’ / ‘ Reynawd,’ sayd thenne charlemagn / ‘ thynke not, 32 thoughe I am your prysoner, that ye shall make me doo ony thyng agenst my wyll.’ ‘ syre,’ sayd reynawde / ‘ wyte it that myn entent is to meke my selfe

<sup>1</sup> Fol. A.A. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> dooo, orig.

<sup>3</sup> a celle fin que je luy face tout detrancher, F. orig. C. vii.

towarde you / for I have lever that we suffre wrong of you, than ye of vs / now tell me, sir, how I shall deliver you mawgis, that is our liff, hope, socours, our com-forte, our sheelde, <sup>1</sup>our spere, and also our swerd / our 4 brede, our wyne, and our flesshe / also our refute, our mayster, our guyde / and our defence in all places / wherby, syre, I telle you, that yf ye had all my brothern in your prison / and that ye sholde make theym to be 8 hanged, and that mawgis were wythin my power & wyth me / yet wold I not yelde hym vnto you for to quyte wythal my bredern. And also I swere you, vpon my feyth, that I wote not where he is goon : god wote 12 it.' 'Ha,' sayd the kyng charlemagne, 'goddys curse have he / for I am sure he is here wythin you' / 'he is not,' sayd reynawd, 'I take it vpon my baptyse' / And thenne reynawde tordned hymselfe towarde row- 16
 lande & the other barons, & sayd to theym / 'Lordes, I beseeche you for god, that it wyll playse you to praye our sovereyne lorde the kyng, that he wyll have mercy of me & of my brethern / to thende that peas maye be 20 had in fraunce, yf it playse him' / And thenne naymes, that was knelinge vpon hys knees / and that herde that reynawde had sayd, & wyst well that he spake but wel, sayd to themperour in this wyse / 'Sire, I praye 24 you that ye wyll not be dy[s]playsed of that I shall telle you / ye knowe, sire, that I am surete for reynawde / and soo is ogyer the dane; but me semeth that we oughte now to be dyscharged therof / <sup>2</sup>sith that ye be 28 here present wythin his castell; <sup>2</sup>but a nother thyng I wyll telle you / me thynke that ye ought to take that<sup>3</sup> therle reynawd proffereth to you, or that any more harme come to you therof; and so helpe me god, ye 32 shall doo well / And all they of your courte shall be Reynawde replies that he would sooner all his brethren were hung than Maw-

 gis given up to Emperor.

Naymes fall on his knees before
 Charlemagne,

and begs him to accept the conditions of Rey-
 nawde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. i.

<sup>2-2</sup> comment savez, F. orig. C. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> belle offerte, F. orig. C. vii. back.

gladde of it' / And whan the barons herde this that naymes had sayd to the kyng, they spoke all & sayd, 'Syre, doo that the duke naymes hath tolde you, for 4 he hath gyven you goode counseyll and true; And yf ye doo it not, ye shall come to late for to repente you of it.'<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Whan Charlemagn vnderstode this that the duke 8 naymes had sayd to hym, he was right wrothe for it / For hys herte was soo harde astonyed wyth grete angre, that he tooke noo hede of good counseyll; And he sware by saynt Denys of fraunce that he sholde not 12 doo it for noo man / but yf he had fyrste mawgys in his handes, for to doo hys wyll over hym. And whan reynawde herde these wordes, he bluste red in his face for angre, and rose vp from knelyng, his brethern & all 16 the other barons also. And thenne reynawde said to rowlande & to all the other lordes that were there /
 'Syre, I wyll well that charlemagne knowe my wylle <sup>3</sup> & myn entente<sup>3</sup> / the whiche I shall shewe afore hym 20 vnto you. Wyte it, that sith I can fynde noo mercy in hym / I praye you that ye wyl not blame me fromhens forthon yf I seke my right, For I shall seke it in all the maners that a true knyghte oughte to doo' / And 24 whan Reynawde had sayd this, he tourned hym towarde the kyng / and sayd to hym / 'Syre, ye maye goo hens whan it playseth you / for by my soule ye shall have noo harme of me now / for ye be my soverayne lorde; 28 <sup>4</sup>and wyth good wyll<sup>4</sup> we shall be in good peas wyth you' /

Charlemagne
 swears he will never accept these
 terms of peace.

Reynawde gives
 the Emperor his freedom.

The barons of fraunce that were there, wondred sore of the grete kyndenes of reynawd / Thenne sayd 32 the duk naymes, 'have ye herde the grete humylite of the noble knyghte reynawde?' 'By my soule,' said

<sup>1</sup> Et de ce faire vous prions, C. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. i. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4-4</sup> Et quant dieu plaira . . F. orig. C. viii.

Richard is very angry at the escape of the
Emperor,

rowlande<sup>1</sup> / 'reynawde saythe merveyllously / <sup>2</sup>I wolde not have trowed that he sholde ever have fared soo fayr wyth charlemagne<sup>2</sup> / And whan rycharde vnder-stode that / that his broder reynawd had sayd, he spake <sup>4</sup> in this wyse : 'Broder Reynawde, I holde you mad.
what wyll ye doo / ye see that we have in our handes this vengable kyng / the whiche we maye kille, or elles suffre hym to live; & yet he is set so sore to pryde, <sup>8</sup> <sup>8</sup>that he wyll doo no thyng that his good counseyll telleth hym / but he thretneþ vs alwayes more & more / and ye wyll lete hym goo thus away. Surely, brother, yf he scapeth vs soo, he shall yet angre vs <sup>12</sup> right sore; and I promyse you, yf he had vs as we now have hym, he sholde make vs to deie shamfully; not all the golde in the worlde sholde not save vs therfro / And therefore I telle you that ye doo grete foly to lete <sup>16</sup> hym goo thus awaye / For, & ye wyll, ye shall now make our peas; but me semeth ye seke none other but your deth / Wherof I pray god, yf ye suffre hym thus to goo awaye / that he maye make you deye a shamfull <sup>20</sup> deth' / And whan reynawde herde his broder speke soo, he was wrothe, & sayd to hym in angre / 'holde your peas, brother / for he shall goo his wayes quyte / wyll you or noo; and the peas shall be made <sup>4</sup>whan he <sup>24</sup> wyll,<sup>4</sup> & no soner it shal not be, <sup>5</sup>for there vnto he shall not be compelled of me<sup>5</sup> / and go you hens from me / <sup>5</sup>for your grete wordes dysplayseth me<sup>5</sup> /

and fears they will all be slain.

Reynawde orders
Bayard to be saddled for
Charlemagne,

Whan reynawd had sayd this / he dyd call a <sup>28</sup> gentyllman of his, to whom he sayd / 'goo lightly, wythoute ony taryenge, to the yoman of myn horses, and byd hym bryng me my horse bayard, For I wyll that my soverayn lord ryde vpon hym vnto his <sup>32</sup> oost, for he rode never vpon no better horse.' And

<sup>1</sup> olivier, F. orig.

<sup>2-2</sup> Je ne leusse jamais cuide, F. orig. c. viii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. B.B. ii. <sup>4-4</sup> quant dieu plaira, F. orig. C. viii.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. C. viii.

when rycharde herde this, he went fro thens all swellynge wyth angre as a fiersfull lion, bycause he knewe that Charlemagne shold goo soo / And wyte it, that 4 the kynge charlemagne herde & vnderstode well all thise wordes, but he durste not saye noo thyng / soo sore he fered the fiersnes of the yonge rycharde.
 This hangynge, cam there agen the gentyelman that was 8 goon for bayard, whiche he brought wyth hym. And thenne Reynawd toke his good horse Bayard,<sup>1</sup> and came to Charlemagne / and sayd to hym / 'Syre, ye may lighte whan it playse you, and goo atte your 12 lyberte / for to <sup>2</sup>comforte your folke / whiche I am sure / ben full sory for the takynge of you' / And when charlemagn saw this, he lighted anone vpon bayarde, and went oute of mountalban for to goo to his oost / 16 And reynawde conveyd hym to the gate of mount-alban. and whan the kynge was goon, he made the gate to be shet anone. And the frensheman that sawe their kynge come agen, they were ryght glad / 20 and receyved hym worthely. and after, they asked hym how it went wyth him, and yf he had graunted the peas / 'Lordes, it is well wyth me, god gramerci, but of peas I have made none, nor never shall as longe 24 as I am man a live, for noo man that shall speke to me of it / but yf I have the traytour Mawgys, for to doo wyth hym my wyll' / 'Syr,' sayd some of his barons, 'how have ye be deliverde?' 'by my 28 feyth,' sayd charlemagn, 'Reynawd hath deliverde me agenst the wyll of his bredern, all quyte at my liberte.' 'Syr,' sayd the barons, 'have ye not seen rowlande, oliver, the duke naymes, the bysshop 32 turpyn, ogyer the dane, nor escouf the sone of oedon?'
 'ye, surely,' sayd charlemagne, 'but they have all forsake me for the love of reynawd; wherof, bi that god that hyngre vpon the crosse, yf I can have them who mounts upon him and departs

 from the castle.

The Frenchmen
 welcome him
 gladly.

<sup>1</sup> par le frein, F. orig. C. viii. back.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. ii. back.

agen, I shall shewe theym that they have not doon well.' and whan he had sayd thus / he lighted from bayarde, & made hym to be broughte agen to reynawd / And whan reynawd sawe bayarde, that 4 charlemagn had sent hym agen, he called rowland & his felawes, & sayd to theym / 'Fayr lordes, I knowe well that ye be not in the grace of the grete kynge charlemagn / for the love of me / but I wyll not 8 that ye have mawgre for me nor for my brethern / and therfor, fayr lordes, I quyte you all quarelles that I maye laye vpon you and gyve you leve to goo whan it playse you.' And whan the duke naymes 12 vnderstode the kyndnes of the hert of Reynawde, that was <sup>1</sup>soo noble / he thanked him highly, and kissed & enbrased him for grete love / and wolde have kneled doun afore hym / but reynawd wold not suffre hym / 16 Thenne the duke naymes began to saye, 'lete vs thynke to goo after the king charlemagn your vncler / sith it playseth reynawd to gyve vs leve.' 'naimes,' sayd rowland / 'how can we doo this / shall we leve 20 reynawde, the whiche ye see myn vncler wyll dystroye wrongfully?' 'Syr,' sayd the duke naymes, 'here me, yf it playse you. I counseill that we goo hens / and whan we shall be afore charlemagn / we shall 24 aske hym how reynawd dyde deliver hym; for yf we speke to hym of peas, he shall be wrothe wyth vs; but whan he shall remembre the grete goodnes & curtesi of Reynawde / his herte shall be molifyed / 28 and it can not be but he shall doo to hym som grace & favour / for he shall knowe well<sup>2</sup> that hys hert is overgrete / <sup>3</sup>and that he hath doon to reinawd grete wrong'<sup>3</sup> / 'Certes, sir naymes,' sayd the barons / 'ye 32 speke wysly, and ye gyve right good counseyll' / And

Reynawde allows
the barons to depart,

and Naymes promises to promote the cause of the Sons with the Emperour.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. iii.

<sup>2</sup> quil a grant tort et trop dur cueur, F. orig. D. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. D. i.

when they were accorded to the counseile of the duke naymes / Rowlande asked after his horse, and eche of the other barons also. And whan they were 4 redy for to lighte on horsbacke / there cam my lady clare, the wyf of reynawde, that kyssed rowlande, oliver, & all theother barons. and after, she sayd to them in this maner: 'Lordes that be here present, 8 I beseche you in the name of god, & for his blessed passyon, that it playseth you for to purchace the peas of my lord reynawde / and semblably of his brethern, towarde the grete kyng charlemagn. Ye 12 knowe, my lordes, that the kyng doth to my lord grete wronge, and also ye know the grete curtesie & the kyndnes that my lord my husbonde hath shewed vnto Charlemagn / and well ye wote that 16 yf my lorde had not be / his brother richarde wolde have stryked the hede fro the body of hym' / 'Madam,' <sup>1</sup>sayd the duke naymes, 'doubte not / For and god be playsed, the peas shall be made wythin thise 20 thre dayes.' And thenne they lighted all on horsbacke / and the brethern of reynawde conveyed them to the gate. and reynawde taryed after theym vpon the brydge / and whan they were come to the sayd 24 bridge / Reynawde sayd to theym, 'My lordes, I comende you to god / I maye no lenger goo wyth you / prayeng that ye wyll have me in your remembrauncea.' Thenne all the peres of fraunce that were 28 there began to wepe tenderly / <sup>2</sup>and toke their leve of reynawde, the noble knyghte<sup>2</sup> / and after they toke their waye towarde the oost of charlemagn. And whan themperour sawe theym com, he called to hym 32 his barons, & shewed them they that were comyng /
 And whan the barons sawe theym, they merveyllid

Lady Clare begs
 the barons to intercede with Charlemagne for peace towards
 her husband.

The Barons take leave of Rey-
 nawde with much
 sorrow.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. iii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> en luy commandant a dieu disant regnault dieu vous begnia. Et si vous aye en sa garde, F. orig. D. i.

gretly, & had grete fere, for they wist not what it was / but [Gu]ydellon the erle sayd / ' By god, we have recoverde rowland & his felawes.' ' Ye,' sayd charlemagne / ' goddys curse have they!' This hangyng, 4 rowlande & his felawes cam tofore charlemagne / and lighted a fote / and incontynente they kneled humbly afore the kyng / and thenne the duke naymes began to speke fyrste, & sayd, ' Noble emperour, we are come in 8 your presence for to crie you mercy, besechyng you for god that it wyll playse you to take vs vnto your good grace, for we have doon noo thynge agenst you / but that it was for your wele. But sith that we 12 have knowen that your wyll was not to have peas / we have forsaken Reynawd & all his brethern; nor never, whyle we ben a live, they shall have noo socours of vs' / ' Lordes,' sayd Charlemagn, ' I par- 16 donne<sup>1</sup> you; but I telle you, yf we tary here longe styll / we shall have lityll gaynes therby. wherfore, I praye you that we goo assawte mountalban bothe by daye & by nyght, by suche maner that he be taken of 20 vs incontinent, and they all that<sup>2</sup> ben in it broughte to deth.' ' Syr,' sayd the duke naymes, ' ye sai well / but and yf ony mysfortune happeth to vs, as it hathe doon here a fore tyme, I promyse you it shall be to 24 you grete dommage; and me semeth it were moche better to have peas than for to contynewe the werre.'

And whan the barons of fraunce herde this that the duke naymes had sayd to the kyng / they 28 began to crye wyth an highe voys / ' Syre emperour / we praye you that ye wyll doo this that naymes counseyllith you, For he gyveth you good counseyll.' Whan Charlemagne herde the crye that his folke 32 made to hym, he came to the duke Naymes, that was kneeling afore hym / and toke hym vp / and in like wyse his newew rowlande, & all the other, and sayd to

<sup>1</sup> pardonue, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. iv.

Roland and the other barons kneel before the Emperor, and Naymes implores for pardon, and vows that they will never succour the Sous.

them, 'My lordes, ye knowe that I have pardonned you wyth ry[g]ht good wyll / but I wyll well that ye know, but yf ye kepe yourselfe from helpynge of 4 my enmyes mortall / I shall angre you vpon your bodies ; For I hate theym so moche, that yf I shold abyde here all my liff / I shall dystroye them.' And wite it, that Charlemagne was glad that he had 8 recovered his nevwewe rowlande & his other peres ; how be it, he made no semblaunt of it. And he sayd yet agen / that he shold never departe from his seege tyll that he had taken mountalban & alle the four 12 sones of aymon / wherof he shall doo sharpe iustyce, and shall doo brezne mawgis the false traytour /
 'Syre,' sayd rowlande, 'I promyse you that mawgis is not wythin mountalban / for he fereth you somoche 16 that he dare not abyde you, leest ye sholde make hym to be hanged, by cause he dyde stele you so falsly oute of your oost.' 'Ha, god,' sayd Charlemagne, 'whan shall I see that I have hym for to doo my 20 wyll of him, For thenne the sones of aymon sholde soone be agreed with me.'

Charlemagne promises to graunt
 the request of Naymes;

but vows he will take vengeance
 upon the Sons
 and Mawgis.

Thenne whan the kyng charlemagn had devysed longe ynoughe, he gaff leve to all his barons for 24 to goo agen in to theyr tentes for to see theyr folke.
 And whan the morow cam / all the barons came agen
 to charlemagne / and whan the kyng sawe them togyder wythin his pavyllion / he was therof gladde / 28 and spake to theym thus / 'Lordes, I have beseged mountalban as nere, as ye see ; and I am not disposed for to parte hens, nother for colde, for hete, nor for hungre, vnto the tyme that I have taken hym by 32 fyne force / the whiche thyng shall be lyghtly doon / for I am sure that thei shall waunt vytaylles wythin / And worse is for them, thei have lost the traytour mawgys, whiche was theyr hope and comfort. wher-

He tells his folk of his intention of starving the Sons into submission.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. iv. back.

fore, I saye that they can not holde it longe agenst my power.' whan the barons herde that charlemain thretened reynawde soo sore / there was none of them but they were sory for it / for the moost parte 4 of them loved reynawde, for the worthynes & the kyndnes that was in him. Therne spake the duke naymes, & sayd to themperour, 'Sir, ye say that they of mountalban be dyspurueyd of mete, and that 8 ye shall not departe fro the siege tyll that ye have taken the castell, & that is a thyng that shall be doon lightli. but I promyse you, yf ye tary to their vitaylles be doo, ye shal lie here lenger than ye wene 12 of / Wherefore, sir, I beseche you, syr, that it wyll playse you to byleve my counseyll, yf it semeth you good / fyrst take hede to the curtesy that reynawde hath doon to you; for ye wote well that yf he had 16 not be, his brother Rycharde sholde have slayn you / al the gold in the worlde sholde not have saved you / Item, thinke also in the grete mekenes that he hath alwayes shewed to you / also for the grete trust 20 that he hath had in you / he lened you his good horse bayard, that hath no matche in all the world / sir, yf ye overthynke wel al, ye shall <sup>1</sup>fynde that noo man dyde never to none other soo grete curtesie as 24 reynawd hath doon to you. and of that other parte, he & his bredern ben suche knyghtes, as everi body knoweth / I swere to you, sire, by all halowen, that or ever ye shall take mountalban, Reynawde & his 28 bretherne shall bere to you suche dommage, wherof ye shall be wroth. And yet ye oughte well to take hede how we waist & dystroye the countrey & the felde, and grete good ye doo dispende / whiche 32 for your honour were better to be employed vpon the sarrasins, than vpon the four sones of aymon / for the sarrasins ben now in rest, makyng grete ioye for

The barons are very grieved when they hear the Emperor's determination, and Naymes remonstrates upon the injustice of the war, and says it were better to employ their arms upon the Saracens than

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. v.

the cause of this werre / and they do wel, For werre bath lefte them / and it is come among ourself so horrible & soo cruell, that many noble and worthy 4 knightes ben deed therof.' continue so cruel a war.

The kyng charlemagn was sore abashed / whan he herde the duke naymes speke so, and it moved his blode full sore, & becam pale as a white 8 cloth for the grete wrathe that he had at his herte, and casted a side his sighte angrely vpon the duke naymes, & sayd to hym by grete wrath, 'Duke naymes, by the feyth that I owe to that blessed lady 12 that conceyved the sone of god in her virgynyte / that if ther be ony man soo hardy to speke more to me of acorde to be made wyth the four sones of aymon, I shall never love him, but I shall angre hym on his 16 body / For I am not disposed to make peas with them for noo thing that can be sayd / but I shall hange them what soever it cost me, or I departe from this siege.' Whan the barons herde charlemagn speke thus 20 proudly / they were sore mervyllled of it / and lefte to talke of this matere. But whan oger sawe that all the barons helde them styлле, he began to saye to the kyng charlemagn / 'Cursed be the hour <sup>1</sup>that 24 reynawd suffred not rycharde to smyte of your hede / for ye had not thretened him soo now' / And whan charlemagn herde that oger sayd to him / he bowed his necke, & loked dou[n]warde all pensifull ; & sin he said, 28 'now, lordes, make you redy, and see that every man fall to his armures / for I wyl now gyve assaute to mountalban' / And whan the frenshemen herde the commaundemente of the kyng, they made noo tary-32 enge, but went & armed theymsel. And whan they were all redy, they cam in good ordynaunce, and broughte ladders & other instrumentes wyth them <sup>2</sup>for to sawte wythall the castelle,<sup>2</sup> & engynes for to breke

In great anger the Emperour replies,

that nothing
shall make him
consent to peace
with the Sons,

and commande
the assault to be made upon
Montalban.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. v. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. D. iii.

doun the walles, and presented them byfore charlemagn for to acomplisse hys wyll / and whan the kyng sawe them soo well appareylled, he commaunded them to goo sawte the stronge castell of 4 Mountalban.

Reynawde commands his men to arm themselves.

And assone that reynawd saw his enmyes com, he called his broder alard, & sayd to him, ' Broder, I pray you take bondy, my good horne, & blowe in it 8 strongly / to thende that our folke arme theymselwhan thei here it, for here comen the frenshemen for to sawte vs.' Whan alard vnderstode the commaundement of reynawde / he toke bondy, and blewe in wyth 12 soo grete a wynde thre tymes, that all they of the castell herde it / and were all abashed wyth; and wythoute ony taryeng they went & armed theymsel, and lightly gate vpon the walles for to defende the 16 castell. Nevertheles, the frenshemen came nere, & entred in to the dyches as hogges doon in a myre / and dressed vp their ladders to the walles / But wyte it, that they of wythin the castelle beganne to 20 deffende so strongly with castyng of stones, that thei dommaged sore the frenshemen, so that many of them lay deed within <sup>1</sup>the dyches; for reynawd & his bredern dyde there so grete faytes of armes that no body 24 myght endure their strokes / who had seen the poure duches & her yong children at that sawte brynge stones to reynawd & to his bredern vpon the walles, he wolde have had pyte of it / For the two yonge 28 sones of Reynawde sayd to their vncler / ' holde our vncler these stones / for they ben grete ynoughe.' Suche defence made they of mountalban, that they overthrewe theym that were vpon y<sup>e</sup> ladders to the 32 botom of y<sup>e</sup> diches, all deed & sore wounded / and whan the kyng charlemagne sawe this, he was wrothe, for he knewe the<sup>re</sup>ne well that he sholde never take

The Frenchmen assault the castle fiercely, but are driven back.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. vi.

mountalban by force, nor also the noble knyghtes that were wythin it / as Reynawde & his bredern /
 And therefore he made the trompet to be blowen / 4 to calle his folke abacke, wyth so grete angre that he was almost mad / and whan the frenshemen herde blowe the retrete, thei were glad, for thei were shrewdly handled; and I promyse you that charle-8 magne lefte suche a company deed wythin the dyche that he long after was / full sory for it

Charlemagne
 withdraws his
 folk,

Whan Charlemagn & all his folke were wythdrawn agen / he began to swere saynt denys 12 of fraunce that he shold never departe thens tyll he had famysshed Reynawde & his bredern<sup>1</sup> wythin the castell of mountalban / and thenne he commaunded, that a fore every gate of the castell shold be layed two 16 hundred knyghtes / for to kepe, that noo body myghte in nor oughe / but he shold be take / And whan reynawd sawe that, he kneled down vpon his knees, and heved vp his handes towarde heven, & sayd, 'Good 20 lord, that suffred deth on y<sup>e</sup> crosse, I beseeche you that ye wyll graunte vs that grace that we mai have peas with charlemain & save our lives.' and whan richard herde the prayer of reynawd, he toke hede to it, & sayd, 24 'Brother / I promyse you yf ye wolde have beleved me, we <sup>2</sup>sholde now have be in good reste & peas / For Charlemagn wolde have be glad therof for to save his liff / Ye knowe that our cosyn mawgys broughte him 28 not here for none other cause to be our prisoner / but to the entent that we sholde make our peas; but ye wolde not take hede to it / whan we myghte have had our wyll; and I promyse you we shal not now doo as 32 we wolde.'

and vows he will furnish the Sons within their
 castle.

Richard rebukes Reynawde for not having made
 terms with Charlemagne when he was their
 prisoner.

Themperour charlemagn abode soo long at the siege afore mountalban / that they that were wythin it

<sup>1</sup> et tous ses gens, F. orig. D. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. vi. back.

Great famine prevails in Mont-
alban,

and the men die daily in the streets.

Richard grieves
because he did not slay Charle-
magne,

had grete nede of vytaylles / for he that had ony mete, he hyd it incontynent. and soo grete scarstee of vitaylles was there wythin a while, that men cowde gete there noo mete for golde nor for silver / <sup>1</sup>And many other fell 4 doun at grounde here, & there soo feynt for hungre,<sup>1</sup> that it was grete pyte for to see / for the derthe was there soo grete, that thone broder hydde his mete from the other / and the fader fro the childe / and the childe fro 8 y<sup>e</sup> fader, & fro the moder / And shortly to speke, I promyse you, that the pour folke deyed for hungre by the stretes / and with this, was soo grete stenche wythin mountalban of the deed were there, that noo man cowde 12 endure it. And whan reynawde sawe this, he was sory for it. and thenne he dyde do make a grete charnell, wherin he made all the deed bodies to be buryed. And whan richarde sawe so grete mortalite wythin the castell 16 of mountalban, thurgh the cause of the grete dert<sup>h</sup> that was there / and sawe his broder reynawd in so grete distresse / he cowde not forbere / but he said to hym,
'by god, my broder now gooth it worse than ever it 20 dyde! it had be moche beter if ye had byleved me /
For yf ye wolde have suffred me to slee the kyng Charlemagne / we sholde now not have be in this myscheef and grete poverte that we have now / nor 24 your folke had not deied for hungre as thei doo' / and thenne he <sup>2</sup>began to wepe tenderly / and sayd, 'Alas!
why doo I complayn other? I myghte well complayn myselfe, sith that I must deye, & be put in to the 28 charnell as the pourest of vs all. Ha, mawgis, my fayr cosin / where be ye now? ye faylle vs at our nede; for & ye were here wythin wyth vs, we sholde not be famyshed for hungre / and also we sholde not doubtte 32 moche the kyng charlemagn; for I wote well that ye

<sup>1-1</sup> Et commença le pays a lentour a deffailir de viures, F. orig. D. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. vii.

sholde gete vs vitaylles ynoughe to live vpon, for vs & our men / and now we muste deye for hungre, as the wulff sholde vpon a see / for charlemagne hateth vs 4 more than he dooth the sarrasins. And therfor it is not for vs to wayte after pyte of hym / for he is over cruell a kyng vpon us' /

and complaints of his hardnes and cruelty.

8 Charlemagn,<sup>1</sup> by the reporte of som folke / knew the grete derthe & scarste of vytailles that was wythin moutalban / wherof he was right glad / and called to hym his folke / and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, now can not reynawde escape / but he shall soone be taken & 12 hanged / and the false richarde drawn at an horse taylle / and alarde & guycharde also, and theyr worthy-nes shall be lityll worthe to theym.'

16 And when the kyng charlemagn had sayd thise wordes, he sent for all his peres & barons / and whan they were all come wythin his pavyllion / he was glad of it, & sayd to theym, 'Lordes, thanked be god that I have brought moutalban so lowe, that reynawd 20 & his knyghtes have no more vitaylles in it / and now they shall yelde theymselpe at my wyll, mawgre their teeth, for the moost parte of theyr folkes ben deed for hungre / and yet [they] deyen dayly, and ye must wyte 24 I wil that reynawde be hanged & his bredern also, but first I wyl that Richarde be drawn atte an horse taylle / And soo I charge you that none of you be so hardy to move my wyll to the contrary. For I wyll that it <sup>2</sup>be 28 doon as I saye' / Whan the duke naymes, rowlande, oliver, oger, the bysshop turpyn, & escouff the sone of oedan, that were there, herde the kyng speke thus, thei were right sory, for the love of reynawde & of his 32 bredern / and loked doun, & sayd no worde at al, for fere that they shold be shent of the kyng / and oger wyth grete peyne kept his eyen fro wopyng, leest charlemagn shold not perceyve his sorowfull herte.

The Emperor
rejoices over the distress in the castle.

His barons grieve
for the sore plight
of the Sone.

<sup>1</sup> Charleamgn, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. vii. back.

Here ye ought to wyte that, duryng the tyme that charlemagn laye at the sege afore mountalban persecutyng the four sones of aymon, Reynawde, alarde, guychard, & Rycharde / aymon their fader helde the 4 party of the kyng agenste his children, for he had promysed hym to doo so / as ye have herde above / but wyte it, that whan he herde how the emperour thretned his children, how be it that he had forsaken theym, he 8 was wrothe for it / for he knewe well, if his children deyed soo he sholde never have ioye after that. For what soever werre he made agenst them, he loved them kyndly, as the fader oughte to love the childe, 12 for <sup>1</sup>nature maye not lie. And therefore he toke soo grete sorow, whan he herde of his sones that they were thretned to be hanged, that he almost fell doun deed to the grounde ; and of the grete sorow that he had, cowde 16 not kepe himself, but he sayd / ‘ Syr emperour, I beseeche you that it wyll playse you to bryng my chyldren to right / For thoughe I have forsake them / yet are thei my sones of my body begoten’ / ‘ holde your peas, 20 aymon,’ sayd charlemagn / ‘ for I wyll that it be so doon of theym / For reynawd dyde slee my newewe berthelot, that I loued so moche.’ And after he tordned hymself, & sawe the barons that spake thone to thother, 24 & sayd to them / ‘ Lordes, leve your musyng ! for I tell you for a trowth, that I shall not leve to doo herin my wyll, for no man that speketh / ye wote wel it is iij yere goon sith we beseged this <sup>2</sup>castel first, and ever sin have 28 layen here, where we have lost many of our folke / wherfore I commaunde you, that eyther of you doo make engynes for to bryng doun this grete towre & all the remenaunt also / For wyth suche maner we shall 32 abashe them gretly / and ye, my newew rowland, ye shall doo make of the engynes vii. and oliver shall doo make vi. the duke naymes iiiii. the bysshop turpyn &

Duke Aymon is wroth with the Emperor for this treatment of the Sons, and in great sorrow Implores Charlemagne to forgive them.

The Emperor will not listen, but in anger commands his barons to make engines for the assault of the castle.

<sup>1</sup> nature, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. B.B. viii.

oger the dane other iiii.' / 'and ye duke aymon,' sayd y<sup>e</sup> kyng charlemagn, 'ye shall make thre' /

4 How shold I now doo this, good lord,' said thenne aymon, 'for, sir emperour, ye knowe well that they be my chyldren, nother truanes nor knaves / but be the best knyghtes of the worlde / and soo I tell you, syr, that yf I sawe theym deye / I shold forgoe my 8 wyttes for angre.' And whan charlemagn herde aymon speke thus, he was wroth, & began to gnawe on a staff that he helde in his hande, & after sayd / 'By that god that made me, yf there be ony of you that gaynsayth 12 my wyll, I shall stryke of his hede wyth my swerde' / 'syr,' sayd the duke naymes, 'angre not your selfe / For that that ye have commaunded, shall be doon incont-16 nent' / Whan the barons vnderstode the commaunde-ment of charlemagne / thei went their waye for to do make the engynes that the kyng had commaunded, the whiche were anone made redi, and these engynes were for to cast grete multytude of stones / And as sone that 20 thei were made, thei were set for to cast agenste mountalban, and in [a] short tyme they damaged it full sore / and soo I promise you that wythin the castel were made grete cryng of wimen & of children / and 24 for fere of the stones, thei went & hid them vnder the grounde; and so thei of moutalban endured this mischeff aslong as thei had ony morsell of mete / And I ensure you that there was soo grete dert<sup>h</sup> & soo grete 28 mortalite that men wyst nomore where to laye the deed / For the <sup>1</sup>charnell was all full / Alas, who had seen soo yonge bachelers / that for feintnes went lenyng vpon their staves through moutalban for lacke of mete / 32 he wold have had grete pyte / For a fore that the castell was beseged, they were so strong & soo myghty that none cowde have overcom them; but they were thenne

The barons obey
the Emperour,
and the engines
are filled with stones and cast against Mont-
alban.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. B.B. viii. back.

soo feble that they felle where thei wente, musselinge in the grounde as hogges.

Reynawde sorrows for his folk,

and deplores
the absence of
Mawgis.

The Duchess
counsels Reynawde to slay one of their horses
for them to eat.

And whan reynaude saw the grete pyte that was amonge his folke, he had of it grete sorow, bicause 4 he myght not put noo remedy thereto; and thezne he began to say in himselfe, 'O good lord, what maye I now doo / now I see well that my wytte avaylleth me noo thyng / for 'I wote not where to seke vyttaylles / 8 Alas god! where may maugys be now, that he knowe not my grete nede, & the outrage that Charlemagne doothe to vs' / And whan the good lady Clare sawe her lord reynaude, that complayned hymself soo piteusly / 12 she began to saye vnto hym in this wyse, 'Forsooth, my lord, ye do not well for to dyscomfyte yourselfe soo sore / for ye discourage vs all wythin; moreover, I promyse you that here ben yet wythin moo than a 16 hundréd horses / I praye you lete one of them be kylled, and ye, myselfe, & our poure children shall ete of it, for it is more than thre dayes agoo that they nor I ete ony thing that dyd vs good / and whan she had sayd this 20 she fell doune in a swoune at the fete of reynaude her husbonde, for grete feblenes for lacke of mete. And whan reynawde sawe her fall, he toke her vp anone in his armes, and after that she was come agen to herself / 24 she sayd, all wepyng / 'Alas, dere lady mary, what shall I poure wretche doo, for all my herte faylleth me / And almoste wyll my soule departe, all soo sore is my body famysshed. Alas, my chylde, who 28 sholde ever have wende that ye sholde have deyed for hungre' /

<sup>1</sup> Whan Reynawde sawe the grete dystresse wherin hys wyff was, he had grete pyte of her, and 32 the teeres began to falle over the chekes of him, and all wepyng he wente to his stable / and there he made a horse to be slayn, the whiche he made to be dressed for Reynawde departs

to the stable,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. i.

mete to hys folke / but I promyse you that horse flesshe lasted not longe afore theym / For they were men ynow to ete it vp lightly. And here ye must knowe that all 4 the horses that were wythin mountalban were in lyke wyse eten one after a nother except four, that is to wyte, bayarde, & the horses of the thre brethern of Reynawde, the whiche four horses they wolde not ete 8 by cause they wolde not be a fote / And whan Rey-nawd sawe that there was noo more thyng that they myghte ete / he called his bredern, & sayd to theym, ' Fayr bredern, w[h]at shall we doo ? we have noo more 12 fode to take vs to, but oonly our four horses that are lefte vs alive. Lete vs doo kylle one of theym that our folke maye ete wyth vs. 'By my hede,' sayd richard, 'that shal not be myn / and yf ye have lust 16 to it, lete yours be slayn / for ye shall not have myn.
 And yf ye have grete myscheef, ye be well worthy / For thrughe your pryde we are brought in this plighte / by cause that ye lete goo the kynge charlemagne ; for 20 and ye had byleved me, this grete myshappe had not befalle vs ' / This hangyng, came the lityll Aymon, the sone of Reynawde, that sayd to rycharde in this maner, ' Holde your peas, myn vncke / for that thyng that may 24 not be amended / men oughte to lete it passe in the best wyse ; For it is to shainfull to reherse that / that is passed ; but doo as my fader commaundeth you / and ye shall doo well. For ye doo not well to angre him 28 soo as ye doo ; and thoughe he hath myssed of his entente, he hath boughte it dere ynoughe, as well as we.
 Yf the kyng charlemagn hath adommaged you long, it may <sup>1</sup>well hap that god shall helpe you, or ought long, 32 yf it playse hym ; and I byleve certeynly that he shall doo soo / for the kindeness that my lorde my fader dyde shewe vnto charlemagne, whan he had hym here, can never be loste, as I wene.'

and orders a horse to be slain
 for food.

All the horses
 are then killed
 except four.

Richard will not have his horse
 killed,

and complains of the folly of Rey-
 nawde.

Aymon, Rey-
 nawde's son,
 rebukes his uncle
 for speaking thus.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. i. back.

Richard embraces him, and gives leave for his
horse to be slain.

Grete pyte had richarde of his neveve whan he herde hym speke thus wysly / and toke hym betwene his armes, and kissed hym all wepyng / and thenne he said to reynawde / 'Broder, commaunde my 4 horse to be slayne whan it playseth you / and gyve som comforte therwithall to this folke, and to my lady your wyff, & to my yong nevevs, <sup>1</sup>your children <sup>1</sup> / For my lityll neveve that is here, hathe well deserved to 8 ete of it / for the good counseyll that he hathe gyven to me now.' 'Brother,' sayd alarde, 'lete be slayne whyche ye wyll of the thre / for it were to grete adomage yf bayarde sholde deye ; and also I tell you 12 that I had lever deye my selfe, than that bayard sholde be slayne / 'Broder,' sayd guchard, <sup>2</sup>'ye saye well ;' and anone the horse of richarde was kylled & dressed to their mete / <sup>1</sup>and soo in lyke wyse was doon wyth 16 the horses of y<sup>e</sup> two other brethern ; <sup>1</sup> and full savourly it was eten / And whan reynawd sawe that there was no mete more, he wist not what he sholde doo, for he was more sory for his bredern, & for his wyff, <sup>1</sup>& his chil- 20 dren <sup>1</sup> / than he was for hymselfe ; and began to say in this wyse / 'Alas, what shall I do ? I am vaynquyshed & overcome wythout ony stroke. It had be better for me that I had byleved my broder rychard, for I had 24 not be now in the myserye & grete nede where I am in atte this hour / Now I see well that charlemagne hath chased me soo moche that he hath betrayed me wythin his gynnes / wheroute I can not scape ; and I knowe 28 well that I oughte not to be complayned / for I have made myself y<sup>e</sup> rodde wherwith I am beten ; and yf I sholde repente me therof, it shold proufite <sup>3</sup>noo thyng, for I com to late for to do so.' whan rychard saw his broder 32 reynawde make suche sorowe, he knewe well his mynde, & was right sory for hym, so that he shoke all for

All the horses
are eten except Bayard.

Reynawde be-wails his sad fate,
and that of his
people.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Richart, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. C.C. ii.

sorow, and wüst not what he sholde say. For if reynaunaude wolde have had of his owne flesshe, rychard wolde well have given hym of it, yf he myght have be 4 comforted therwith / <sup>1</sup>Thenne spake gucharde, that other broder, & sayd,<sup>1</sup> 'My <sup>2</sup>good<sup>2</sup> bredern, what shall we doo / we shall yelde ourself, <sup>3</sup>or elles deye here for grete rage of hungre<sup>3</sup> / and we maye noo more fromhens 8 forthon / <sup>2</sup>but oonly wayte after deth'<sup>2</sup> / 'What saye ye, <sup>2</sup>broder gucharde?'<sup>2</sup> sayd reynawd; 'wyll ye yelde your selfe to the most cruell king of the worlde<sup>4</sup> / for he shold make vs all to be hanged shamfully. Yf ony 12 pyte cowde be founde in hym, I wold yelde me gladly; but there ys none in him, and therfor I am delivered that we shall not yelde us to him / we shalle rather ete my children, & after our bodyes / But alwayes yf ye wyll 16 ete bayarde, I am therof content for to passe the tyme forthon, for I have ofte herde saye that a day respyte is worthe moche.' But, nevertheles, what soever he sayd / he had no courage to ete bayarde / for it was all 20 his socours / 'Broder,' sayd alard, 'I counseille that we ete bayard, rather than we shold yelde vs in to the handes of charlemagn / for he is to cruell, nor he shall never have mercy of vs.' And whan reynawde sawe 24 that they wolde ete bayarde his good horse, he toke for it suche a hertly sorowe that he almoste fell in a swoune to therthe; but he toke togyder his strengthes, & stode vpryghte, and began to saye / 'Fayr bredern / what 28 wyll ye doo / wyll ye ete bayarde, my noble horse, that soo ofte hath kepte vs from deth, and from perell mortall / I praye you, that a fore ye slee hym / that ye slee me / For I may not see hym dey; and whan ye 32 have slayn me / slee hym hardely. And yf ye wyll not Gucharde proposes that they should yield

 themselves to Charlemagne.

Alarde advises
 that they should
 eat Bayard.

Reynawde says he
 would rather die
 than kill his horse.

<sup>1-1</sup> Quant il ent este une grant piessse en celle detresse il dist a ses freres, F. orig. D. vii.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3-3</sup> puis que nous ne savons plus que faire, F. orig. D. vii.

<sup>4</sup> et au plus orgueilleux, F. orig. D. vii.

doo<sup>1</sup> soo, I forbode you, in as moche as ye love me, that ye touche not bayarde. For he that shall hurte hym / shall hurte me.' And whan the duchesse herde Reynawde speke thus, she wiste not what to doo / thenne 4 she sayd to hym in grete wrathe, 'Ha, gentyll duke debonayr / and what shall now doo your children / wyll you that they deye for hungre, for fawte of your horse? For it is thre dayes passed that they ete ony 8 mete; shortly shall theyr lives come atte an ende / myn also / For my hert cleveth me in my body for fyne force of hungre. And soo shall ye see me deye presently / but yf I have socours' / Whan the children 12 herde the moder speke thus, they sayd to Reynawde, 'Goode fader, for goddys love deliver your horse! For he shall deye as well for hungre / And it is better that he deye fyrste than we afore hym.' And whan alarde 16 guycharde and Rycharde herde theyr newewes speke thus, rycharde spake / and sayd to his brother, 'Ha, gentyll duke, for god suffre not that your children nor my lady, your wyffe, deye for hungre, and we also.' 20 And whan Reynawde herde his brother Rycharde speke so to hym, his herte tendred with all ryght sore / and felle to wepe, and sayd / 'My fayer bredern, syth that it playse you that bayarde shall deye, I praye 24 you go and slee hym' / And whan they were all accorded that bayarde sholde be slayn<sup>2</sup> and eten,<sup>2</sup> they wente streyghte to the stable / where they founde bayarde / that casted to theym a grete syghe / And 28 whan Reynawde sawe that, he sayd he sholde rather slee hymselfe / than that bayarde sholde deye / that many tymes hathe saved hym from deth / And whan the chyldren had herde this / they retourned agayne to 32 theyr moder wepyng, and all deed for hungre.

Thenne whan Reynawde sawe that hys chyldren were goon / he wente to bayarde, and gaff hym a

The Duchesse
rebukes her husband,

and says they will all starve
if Bayard lives.

Reynawde relentes,
and tells his brethren to slay
Bayard.

Reynawde, when he sees Bayard,
will not have him
slain;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. ii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

lityll hey, <sup>1</sup> For he had none other thyng to gyve hym.
 And thenne he came to hys brethern, and founde Alard holdyng Aymon his nevewe that wepte / and Rycharde 4 helde Yon, and Guycharde the duchesse, that in his armes was swouned, and sayd to theym / 'Alas, for god mercy, I praye you take in you corage tyll nyghte.
 And I promyse you that I shall doo so moche, that we 8 shall have mete / and god wyll.' 'Brother,' sayd Alarde, 'we muste suffre it, wyll we or not' / Soo longe abode the knyghtes that the nyghte came / and whan it was come / Reynawd sayd to his brethern / 'My brethern, 12 I wyll goo speke to our fader / for to see what he shall saye to me / and yf he shall lete vs deye for hungre' /
 'Brother,' sayd rycharde, 'I wyll goo wyth you, yf it playse you, and ye shall be the more sure that I be in 16 your company.' 'My brother,' sayd the good knyghte Reynawd, 'ye shall not so. For I will goo there alone / and yf I brynge you not mete, I shall thenne deliver you bayarde.' and whan Reynawd had sayd this, he 20 made hymselfe to be well armed, and lighted vpon bayarde, and well secretly went oute of mountalban, and came to his faders pavyllion / the whiche he knewe well / For he had aspyed it from above the grete towre 24 while it was day. And it happed so that he founde his fader aymon out of hys pavyllion all alone, waytynge yf he myghte by ony way vnderstonde some tyd-ynges pryvely of the castell / And whan reynawde 28 sawe his fader / he sayd to hym, 'What arte thou that goo now at this tyme of the nyghte all alone?' And whan aymon herde hym speke, he knewe hym anone, & was righte glad / but he made of it noo semblaunt / 32 and sayd to hym / 'but what art you thiself, that goost at this owre so hie mounted.' Whan reynawd herde his fader speke, he knewe hym well, & sayd to hym, 'Syr, for god have merci vpon vs / for we deye <sup>2</sup>all for

he promises to get them meat,

and proposes to go to his father
that night.

He mounts
Bayard,

and goes to the tent of Aymon.

Aymon recognizes
his son,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. C.C. iii. back.

and Reynawde
prays him to succour his folk.

hungre! and all our horses ben all redy deed & eten, and soo we have nomore but bayarde, that shall not deye as longe as I live / For rather I sholde lete me be slayn / For to me & to my brethern 4 he hath often saved our lives. Alas, fader, yf ye will not have mercy on vs, have mercy of my yonge children !'

Aymon declares
he cannot help
him, because of his oath to the Emperor.

' Ha, fayr sone,' sayd aymon / 'I canne not helpe 8 you of no thyng / but goo your waye agen / for I have you forsworne, ye wote it well / and therefore I wolde not doo agenste myn othe for all the good in the worlde / and my herte is right sory that I maye not 12 helpe nor gyve you socours.' 'Syr,' sayd reynawde, 'you speke yll / sauff your reverence. For I promyse you, yf ye gyve vs noo socours, that my wyff, my children, my brethern, and myself shall deye for rage 16 of hungre, or ever thre dayes ben passed / For it is all redy more than thre dayes, that none of vs ete ony mete / and so I wote not what I shall doo / Alas, ye be our fader, soo oughte you to comferte vs / For I 20 wote well, yf the kyng have vs, he shal make vs all to be hanged, and deye shamfully, whiche were not your worshyp; wherfore, fader, ye oughte not to faylle vs, yf the lawe of nature is rightwys / My fader, for god 24 have pyte & mercy vpon vs, and holde not your courage agenst your pour children for it were grete cruelte; and also ye knowe well that charlemagne dooth to vs grete wrong, for to persecute vs as he dooth' / Whan Aymon 28 herde reynawde speke thus, he had grete pyte of hym / and was soo sory that almoste he felle down in a swoune to the erthe. and after he began to beholde his childe reynawde;<sup>1</sup> & sore wepyng, he sayd to hym / 32 'Fayr sone, ye have sayd trouthe that the kyng dooth you grete wrong / and therfor a lighte fro your horse, & entre wythin my pavylion, and take what it playse

Reynawde still implotes him to have pity on
them.

Aymon gives Reynawde leave to take what he

<sup>1</sup> reynawrd, orig.

you / for noo <sup>1</sup>thing shall be sayd nay to you / but I shall not gyve you nothyng, for to save my othe' / And whan reynawd herde his fader speke soo, he descended 4 a fote, & kneled byfore him / and sayd 'an hundred gramercies, dere fader' / and thenne he entred wythin the pavlyon of his fader, and laded bayard wyth brede, & wyth flesshe, both salt & fresshe / and wyte 8 it that bayard dyde bere more than x other horses shold have doon. And whan reinawde had well laded bayarde wyth vitaylles, he toke leve of his fader, & went agen to mountalban / it is not to be asked what welcom 12 reynawd had of his bredern, of his wyff, & of his men / and wyte it that whan they sawe hym brynge soo moche vitaylles / thei swouned all for ioye to the erthe / And whan reynawd sawe this, he wende thei 16 had ben deed for hungre. Soo began he to make grete sorowe, & not wythoute a cause / and while that reynawd sorowed & made grete mone, his bredern began to com agen to theimselfe, his wyff, & also his two 20 children. And whan reynawd sawe theym all vpon their fete, he was glad, & presented to theym mete for theym, & for his folke. and thei thenne made grete ioye, & ete their fyll at their ease / And whan they had 24 eten well, thei went to slepe, except reynawd, that wold kepe watche himself. And on the morne whan the day was com, they rose & went to here masse / and after the masse was doon, they fell to their mete agayn, 28 and ete all that was left over, evin of that reynaud had brought. and whan the next nyght was come, aymon, that cowde not forgete his children / made his stywarde to com byfore hym, & sayd to him / 'ye knowe how I 32 have forsworne my chyldren / wherof I am sory that ever I dyde soo ; but it is sayd, that at the nede the frende is knowen / I lete you wyte that my children ben yonder wythin in grete poverté & mysease, and will from his pavillon.

Reynawde lades Bayard with provisions, and returns to the Castle.

They all feast joyfully at Mountalban.

Aymon calls his steward,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. iv.

how be it that I have forsworne them / I oughte nor maye <sup>1</sup>not faylle them / we have thre engynes that charlemagne hath made me doo make for to hurt with my children, wherof we have dommaged them asmoche <sup>4</sup> as we myghte / now must we helpe theym after their dommage / And I shall telle you how : see that ye put wythin the engynes brede & flesshe, bothe salt & freshe, in grete plente in stede of stones / and lete this be cast <sup>8</sup> in to the castell, for yf I shold deye myself for hungre, I shall not fayll them aslong as I have wherof to helpe them / and also I repent me full sore of the harme that I have doon to them / for all the worlde ought to <sup>12</sup> blame me therof wyth good right, <sup>2</sup>and we ben in the wronge.' 'Sire,' sayd the stiwarde, 'ye saye well / for ye have doon so moche agenste them, that all the worlde blameth you therof / but incontynente I shall <sup>16</sup> doo your commaunderment' / And thenne the styward, went & made the thre engynes to be fylled wyth vitaylles, & after, he badde the governer to caste them in to mountalban / And ye must wyte that many of <sup>20</sup> thoost blamed aymon sore, that he made his engynes to be caste agenst his children / for they wende it had be stones. And whan the nyght was passed, & that reynawd was vp / he went here & there wythin the <sup>24</sup> castell, and founde foyson of vitaylles that his fader had cast / wherof he was ryght glad, & sayd / 'Good lord, blessed be you / now see I well that they that have their truste in you, can not fare amys.' and thenne he called <sup>28</sup> his bredern, his wyfe, <sup>3</sup>& his childern,<sup>3</sup> & sayd / 'My bredern, ye see how our fader hathe pite of vs' / And thenne he made the vitaylles to be gadred vp, & put in a sure place / and soo they ete therof at theyr ease, for <sup>32</sup> they had well grete nede therof, for they were so sore and orders him

 to fill three engines with food
 and let them be cast into the Castle.

The steward
 obeys his command.

Reynawde in the morning discovers all these provisions, and is very grateful
 to his father.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> Car mes enfans ont le droit, F. orig. E. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

an hungred that it was grete pyte / And wyte it that aymon made cast so moche vitayll within mountalban, that thei of within had ynoughe for thre monethes 4 wyth good governaunce.

Now we must vnderstonde that charlemagne had some knowledge howe the olde duke aymon had gyven vytaylles to hys children, wherof he was sore an 8 angred, & made aymon to com incontynent afore hym, & sayd to hym, 'aymon! who maketh the so bolde to gyve ony mete to myn enmyes mortall? I know well all thy wyles / thou mayst not excuse thyself; but by 12 the feyth that I owe to god I shall avenge me soo well are nyght, that yf I may, ye shall lese your hede for it' /
'Syr,' sayd the duke aymon, 'I wyll not denye it; for I telle you truly, yf ye shold make me deye, or be brente 16 in a fyre, I wyll not faylle my chi[l]dren aslong as I maye helpe theym. <sup>2</sup>For my children be no theves, tray-tours, nor no murdrers, but they ben the moste valiaunt knyghtes of the worlde, & the truest.<sup>2</sup> and wene not you 20 to slee my children in suche maner! ye have to long wrought your foly if it wold suffyre you' / Whan charlemagne herde aymon speke thus / he was angri wyth it, and for grete wrathe he loked as fire, & almoste he 24 smote aymon. And whan the duke naymes sawe this, he avauanced hym forthe, & sayd / 'Sir, sende home aymon, for ye have kept hym here tolong; ye ought well to vnderstonde that aymon wyll not see his 28 children to be destroyed, and therfor ye ought not to blame him nor smyte hym;' after that charlemagne herde the duke naymes speke, he sayd to hym /
'Naymes, sith that ye have iudged it, ye shall not be 32 gaynsayd;' and thenne he tordned hym towarde the duke aymon, & sayd to hym / 'Now goo forth oute of myn oost / for ye have doon me more domnage than prouffyte' / 'sire,' sayd the duke aymon / 'I shall Charlemagne discovers Aymon's

gift to Reynawde,

and denounces
him wrathfully.

Aymon swears he will not fail his children.

Naymes counsels
the Emperour to send Aymon to his home.

Aymon is dismissed.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. v.

<sup>2</sup> Damps roy, F. orig.

gladly doo your commaundement' / And anone he went & lighted on horsbacke, and after sayd to the peres of france, 'Lordes, I praye you all that ye wyll have my children for recommended / for they ben com of your 4 blode, and lete the kyng <sup>1</sup>see well to / For yf he make my children to deye by suche grete vengeance as he hath sayd / yf I sholde be-come a sarrasyn, and dwelle in affryque all the dayes of my liff, I shall stryke of his 8 hede ; for none other gage I wyll not take' / And whan aymon had sayd thus, he went oute of the ooste in to fraunce to his countrey, well hevvy by cause he lefts his children in soo grete poverte / And Charlemagne, that 12 sawe aymon goo thus quyte, and that he had garnysshed mountalban of vytayllis, he was full angry for it / Soo studyed he vpon this a longe while / and whan he had studyed longe ynoughe, he was soo sory that 16 none myghte be more / and retourned hymselfe towarde his barons / and sayd, 'Lordes, I commaunde you that ye breke all our engynes / For by theim I have myssed to have the castell of mountalban.' And In[con]tynente 20 the barons made breke the engynes, as the kynge had commaunded / And by all thus Reynawde abode a longe while in good peas, but theyr vytaylles began sore to mynysshe / And whan Reynawde sawe that / 24 he was sory / and beganne to complayne in hymselfe, and sayd, 'Good lorde, what shall I doo / I knowe that atte longe reznynge we shall not mowe holde, and soo shall charlemagn have noo mercy of vs, but he shall 28 make vs deye. Alas, mawgis, where be you? For yf ye were wyth vs, we sholde doubte noo thyng, nor I sholde not suffre this grete distresse that I have' / All thus as Reynawde complayned hymself / thenne came 32 alarde, that was so feble, that wyth peyn he myghte stande vpon his fete, and sayd to Reynawde / 'Reynawde, for the love of god make bayarde to be slayne /

He recommends
his children to the Peers,

and vows vengeance on those who shall harm
them.

The Castle is again furnished,

Reynawde fears
they will all die.

Alarde prays that Bayard may be
slain.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. v. back.

For I maye noo lenger live wythoute mete / nother yet my brethern.'

4 Thenne whan reynawd herde his brother alarde speke thus / he was right sory for it, & toke his swerde, & went <sup>1</sup>to bayarde for to slee him / And whan bayarde saw reynaude, he began to make grete ioye / Reynawde goes to Bayard, who makes signs of joy when he sees
him.
and whan reynaud sawe the chere that bayarde him 8 made / he sayd to him, 'ha, bayarde, goode beest / yf
I had the herte for to doo the harme, I were welles cruell.' and whan yonnet, the yonger sone, herde that / he cryed to his fader, 'sir, wherfore tary ye, that ye 12 slee not bayard, sith he must deye, for I wexe madde for hungre / and so I tell you, yf I have not shortly som fode ye shall see me dey afore your eyen / and yet my moder & my broder also / for we may no lenger 16 live thus, soo harde we ben famyshed' / And whan reynaude herde his sone speke to hym soo, he had grete pyte of hym / & grete sorowe in his hert / and soo he had of bayard that chered hym somoche.
20 Theerne wyst not reynawd what he sholde saye nor doo, and soo began to thynke a longe while / And whan he had bethought himself longe ynoughe / he advysed hym how bayarde shold not deye. And Reynawde cannot slay his horse,
but sends for a bason, and draws
his blood instead, 24 theerne he called after a basin, and made baiard be leten blode moche / and after he had lete him blode ynoughe, reynawd stopped the vayne, & gaff the blode to alarde for to be dressed; and whan it was soden, 28 they ete all a lityll therof, whiche gauf them grete which his folk eat.
sustenaunse. And to say the trouthe / reynawd & his folke were well four dayes wythout ony other fode.
And whan came to the fifthe day, that thei wold haue 32 baiard lete blode agen / he was soo feble that he cast noo blode at all. and whan the duches sawe that, she began to wepe tenderly, & sayd / 'Sire, for god, sith that he gyveth no more blode, lete him be slayn / and

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. vi.

soo shall ete your pour children of him, that deyen for grete hungre, & I also' / 'Madame,' sayd thenne reynawd, 'I wyll not doo so / For bayarde hathe borne vs goode company in oure liff, and so shall he do tyll 4 thour of our deth, for we shall dey alle togyder.' And ye oughte to knowe that Reynawd <sup>1</sup>and his company were brought soo lowe / that they wayted none other but deth / the whiche was theym nyghe ynoughe, whan 8 an olde man that was amonge them, cam & sayd to reynawd, 'Sir, what shall it be / I see that you & mountalban shall be destroyed / but in you is not the fawte, for it hath be well defended aslong as ye myght, 12 as it apereth, and syth that I see ye may nomore doo / come after me, & I shall shew you a waye, where through we shall well all goo out wythoute ony danger / and I wyll well that ye knowe mountalban was ones made, & 16 shit afore ye dyde make it / and the lord that buylded it first, lete make a waye vnder the erth, that bryngeth folke vnto the wode of the serpent; and I was a yong childe whan that way was made, and I know well 20 where it lieth / doo dygge where I shall shewe you, and ye shall fynde it wythout ony fayll, and thus shall we goo fre wythout ony danger' / whan reynawd herde these wordes, he was so gladde of it that none myght 24 be more / so that he forgate his hungre withall, & sayd, 'O fayr god, that all made, blessed be you! Now have I founde that I desired; for I shall goo to ardeyn, whiche I ought to love dere.' and thenne he toke the 28 olde man by the hande, & made hym to bring him to the <sup>2</sup> place where he sayd / and there he made to be dygged in therth, & founde y<sup>e</sup> waye that the olde man said / wherof he was right glad / and thenne he went 32 to the stable, & put the saddle vpon bayard, & after brought him to the weye / but wyte it that bayard was soo feble that he scante cowde goo the pase. And

An old man tells Reynawde of a passage out of the Castle, whereby they can save themselves by flight.

He shows the men where to dig for the passage.

Reynawde saddles Bayard,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> the repeated in text.

thenne reynaude, his wyffe, his bredern, his children, & the remenaunte of his folke, put themself to the way vnder therth, so that noo creature a live abode wythin 4 the castell.

Grete plente of torches made reynawd to be fired,<sup>1</sup> that they myght see the beter wythin y<sup>e</sup> cave as thei went, and he <sup>2</sup>ordened his forwarde of that few 8 folke that he had / and wente forthe in good ordenaunce wyth his baner displayed / and he with his bredern made the reregarde<sup>3</sup> / And whan they had goon a longe while thrughe the cave, that was wyde & 12 large, reynawd made his folke to tary, & sayd to his bredern / 'mi bredern, we have doon evyll / For we have lefte behynde vs kyng yon in the prysoñ / certes
I sholde lever deye than that I shold leve hym soo / 16 for he sholde deye there for hungre as a famysshed woulfe / and that were to vs grete synne.' 'By god,' sayd richard, 'he hath well deserved it, for <sup>4</sup>of a man that is a traytour, men oughte not to have pyte' / 20 'Broder,' sayd reynawde, 'ye saie yll.' and thenne he retorned again, & cam to the prison where the kyng yon was / whiche he toke out & broughte wyth hym.
And whan the duchesse sawe her broder the kynge 24 yon com, she sayd to hym / 'Ha, broder, ye are right yll come to me / for all the harme that we have suffred, cometh thrugh cause of you / I am sorry that ye be not deed rotyn wythin the pryson, for ye have well 28 deserved it.' 'Madame,' sayd reynawde, 'lete that alone, I praye you, for he shall not dey if I maye, For I have doon to hym homage, wherfore I ought to obey
hym. and how be it he hath wroughte full yll agenst

and with his wife and children, and the remainder of his folk, goes through the passage.

After they have gone some time Reynawde discovers the absence
of King John;

he returns, and brings John out
of the Castle
prison.

<sup>1</sup> quant luy et ses gens furent dedens la cave, F. orig. E. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. C.C. vii.

<sup>3</sup> Quant Regnault eut bien ordonne sa besongne ilz se mirent a la voye par dedens la cave qui estoit grande et plan-tureuse, F. orig. E. iii.

<sup>4</sup> yf, orig.

vs, yet shall I never be forsworne agenst hym' / whan his bredern herde him speke thus / they sayd to hym / 'broder, ye speke well & wysly, and ye doo that ye ought to doo / nor ye shall never be rebuked of vs for 4 it; doo therin as it playseth you' / And after these wordes thei went on their waye /

The knyghts find themselves in the wood of the serpent.

Reynawde's
son swoons
from hunger.

His father comforts him by promises of food.

So longe went these knyghtes, that thei cam oute of the cave, and founde theymself at the woode of 8 the serpent, evyn at the sprynge of the daye / and assone as thei were issued oute of the sayd cave, thei were glad / bycause that they were soo scaped fro charlemagne. Yonnet thenne, the lityl sone <sup>1</sup>of Rey- 12 nawd, swooned there for grete hunge / And whan Reynawd sawe that, he was right sory for it / and toke hym vp and sayd / 'Fayr sone, I praye you be a good chere, for we shall have soone mete grete plente' / 16
And whan he had sayd this, he toke his other sone aymon in his armes, & recomforted hym moche / and whan reynawd had doon soo / he loked about hym, & knew wel where they were. and he sayd to his 20 brethern / 'Lordes, me semeth that we ben nygh the hermytage of my good frende bernarde.' 'sire,' sayd alarde, 'ye saye trouthe, but what shall we doo?'
'Broder,' sayd reynawd, 'I counsell for the moost 24 profytable that we goo there / and we shall abyde there tyl the nyght be com / and thenne we shall take our way towarde ardeyn; for I counsell not that we goo by day / and also it can not be but the hermyte shall 28 have some mete whiche we shall gyve to my wyff, & to my children' / 'Broder,' sayd alarde, 'by my feyth ye speke wel.' and thenne they put theimself to the waye / and they had goon but a lityll that they founde 32 the hermytage; but as they wente all thurgh the woode, they departed thone fro the other as wylde bestes, etyng the herbes and the gresses as it had be

They all go
towards the monastery,
and on the way
eat wild herbes
and apples,
because of their great hunger.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. C.C. vii. back.

apples or peeres, so grete hungre they had. And whan Reynawd sawe this, he was sory, & called theym agen, & sayd, 'Lordes, ye doo not well for to separe thus the 4 one from the other, For it myghte lightly tourne vs to dommage / I praye you that every man calle other, & gadre yourself togyder / and lete vs goo in to the hermytage / For we shall fynde there bernarde, that 8 shall make vs good chere, I wote it well'<sup>1</sup> / And whan they were come there / Reynawde knocked at the gate / And whan bernarde herde it / he cam anone, and sawe Reynawde and hys folke / wherof he was ryght gladde / 12 and came and kyssed Reynawd. And after he sayd vnto hym / 'Fayre lorde, ye be <sup>2</sup>ryght welcome / of whens come you / and how is it wyth you?' / 'My frende bernarde,' sayd thenne Reynawde, 'Wyte it that 16 I have lefte myn herytaunce by fyne force of hungre, and soo I goo to Ardeyne<sup>3</sup> / For I canne none otherwyse doo atte this tyme / And I pray you that yf ye have ony mete, that ye, for godys sake, wyll gyve it to 20 my wyffe / and to my children, For they ben soo sore famysshed that they dey for hungre, but yf they have some mete.'

Reynawde gains admittance at the monastery, where he finde his friend Bernard, who joyfully receives him.

24 Whan Bernarde<sup>4</sup> vnderstode these wordes of Reynawde, he had of hym grete pyte / for the dystresse wherin he sawe Reynawde & his folke / And of the other parte, he was gladde whan he wyste that they were scaped oute of the dangeours of Charle- 28 magne / and anone he wente to the duchesse, & sayd to her / 'Madame, ye be right welcome / I praye you doubtte noo thyng, For ye be arryved in a good place / for to take your reste atte your ease' / And 32 thenne he wente in to his chambre, and broughte oute

Bernard is grieved for the sufferings of the Sons;

<sup>1</sup> quant regnault eut se dist chescun se ralia ensemble et sen vont vers hermitage, F. orig. E. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. C.C. viii.

<sup>3</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> larmite, F. orig.

he sets bread
and wine before
them.

brede and wyne / and all suche as god had sente hym / And after he sette hym besyde Reynawd, and sayd to hym / 'Lorde, take a worthe suche vytaylles as god hathe gyven to me! there they ben / I shall 4 gyve you mete in dyspyte of Charlemagne' / 'Gramercy, syre,' sayd Reynawd / 'here ben good tydynges for vs; but whan the nyghte is come, we shall goo to Ardeyne.<sup>1</sup> For I doubtte sore that Charlemagne shall 8 aperceyve that we ben departed / For yf god graunte me that I may bryng me and my company to Ardeyne / I shall not sette a rotyn appull for all the power of Charlemagne / for I shall well deffende me agaynste 12 hym.' 'Syre,' sayd the heremyte, 'ye saye well / I praye god that he wyll fulfyller your wyll.' All that daye soiourned Reynawd and his folke wyth Bernarde the heremyte / the whiche served and <sup>2</sup>comforted theim of 16 all his power. and also he gaf of the otis of his asse to bayarde,<sup>3</sup> as moche as he myght ete. And whan the nyghte was com, Reynawd wolde departe / and bade fare well to the heremyte. and whan the heremyte 20 saw that they wold goo awaye, he founde the meanes that they had thre horses, wherof the duchesse had thone / and the children had the other tweyne / And thus reynaude wyth his felishyp went on theyr waye 24 so long that they cam to ardeyne.<sup>1</sup> And whan they of the cyte wyst that their lord was com, that they had desired so longe / they were well glad, & cam agenste hym in fayr company, and receyved hym honourable / 28 and conveyd hym vnto the fortresse. and after they went & made feest thorughe all the towne / like as god had descended there, <sup>4</sup>for grete ioye that they had of theyr lord reynawd.<sup>4</sup> And whan the barons of the 32 londe wyst that theyr lord reynawd & his bredern were

Reynawde says he shall defy Charle-
magne when he reaches Arden.

At night they all take farewell of Bernard,

and set forth for Arden.

The people of the city welcome
them gladly.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. C.C. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> qui estoit si rescreu, F. orig. E. iv. back.

<sup>4</sup>—4 omitted, F. orig.

come to ardeyn,<sup>1</sup> they were glad / and cam soone [to] see hym / and to hym they made reverence / But here levethe the history to speke of reynawde, of his bredern, 4 his wyff & his chyl dren, that were in ardeyn<sup>1</sup> well at ease / for they grete hungre was ceassed / and shall retorne to speke of charlemagn & of his xii peres / for to shewe how he entred in to mountalban, after 8 that reynawd was departed.

CHAPTER XX.

¶ How Charlemagn, after that he had beseged mountalban, and had famysshed reynawd & his brethern / knewe that they 12 were goon, and had habandouned the place,<sup>2</sup> and were goon to Ardeyne,<sup>1</sup> He wente there and beseged theym agayn,
 But or ever he had pyghte his siege, 16 Reynawde / and his bredern made an yssue vpon hym and hys folke, and slewe many of theym, And toke prysoner Richard the duke of mormandy.<sup>3</sup> &c./

20 <sup>4</sup> In this party sheweth the history, that whan Charlemagne was at the siege / byfore mountalban, sore an anged that he cowde not take Reynawd ne his bredern / Nowe it happed on a daye that Charlemagn 24 rode nighe the castell for to wyte how they bare theymself withiñ mountalban. And whan he was nyghe,<sup>5</sup> he loked vp to the walles, and sawe no body

Charlemagne
 rides towards the Castle of Mont-
 alban, where he sees no one on the wall;

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> luy et ses freres sa femme et ses enfans par dessoubz terre, F. orig. E. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> pert de france dont charlemagne fut moult dolant, F.
 orig. E. v.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. D.D. i.      <sup>5</sup> du chastel, F. orig.

he thinks all the people are dead.

that was there / as they were wont to be / And whan he saw that / he was abashed of it, and came agen to his pavylion / and sent incontynent for all his barons / and whan thei were come, he sayd to theym / 'Lordes, 4 it is well nyghe eyghte dayes a goo / that I sawe noo body vpon the walles of mountalban / wherfore I beleve that alle they of it be deed.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'it were good that men wyste the trowth 8 of it / sende thider, syre, yf it playse you' / Whan charlemagn herde this, he lighted anone on horsbacke / and all his barons wyth him, and went to mount-alban / And whan they were come to the gate / they 12 made semblaunt to gyve a sawte to the castell / but reynawde was to ferre for to defende it<sup>1</sup> / and thenne Charlemagn wende verely that Reynawde & all his had been deed for hungre & grete distresse / and he made 16 to be broughte there a longe ladder, and righted it to the walles. And incontynent rowlande mounted vp<sup>2</sup> first of all / and after him ogyer, olivere, & the duke naymes. And whan they were vpon the walles, they 20 behelde wythin, and they saw nother man nor woman, and soo they went down from the walles / and yede & opened the gate / and made charlemagn to come in, & all his folke / But wyte it that Charlemagne wente in 24 as angry as ony man myghte be. And whan he was wythin & founde noo body / he was sore merveyllid, that he wyste not what he shold say nor doo. Soo went he vp to the dongeon, & he fonde there noo<sup>3</sup> body / 28 wherof he was more merveyllid than he was a fore, and thenne he began to saye / 'Bi my soule, lordes, here is grete merveyllid, & well the devyllid werke / wyte it that Reynawde is goon, & all his bredern, and 32 all his folke also, and all this hathe doon that theef

The barons mount
the walls,

and open the gate
for the Emperor
to enter.

<sup>1</sup> Quant Charlemaigne vit ce que nessun ne se apparissoit pour le chastel defendre, F. orig. E. v.

<sup>2</sup> vs, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. D.D. i. back.

mawgys, that hathe ben here wythin / for it can none otherwyse be.'

4 After that Charlemagne had sayd these wordes / he begañ to walke wythin the castell, sekyng all Charlemagne seeks for the Sons
in the Castle, aboute to see yf he myghte fynde reynawd or ony of his brethern. And soo longe he went thus here & there, that he founde the waye there as they wente and discovers the passage underground;
8 oute / and whan the kyng charlemagne sawe the cave, he was sore abashed wyth it / and called ogyer the dane, & sayd to hym, 'Ogyer, here is the waye where thruhe the traytours are goon awaye; and all thys 12 hath doon me mawgis / For he hathe made this cave in dyspyte of me, Wherof he maketh my herte to breke in my bely.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes /
'ye blame mawgys; but thys cave sheweth not that 16 it hathe be vnmade this hundred yeres passed / and I telle you for certeyn that sarrasins made it fyrste.' Whan charlemagne herde these wordes, he began to smyle wyth an angry face / and cursed theym that 20 made the cave / and was merveyllously an angred, For he knew wel that reynawd & all his company were goon oute at the same hole / and soo he was dysmyssed of his purpose. he sayd thenne to his folke, 'Now 24 goo lightly in, and seke where this hole brynge men vnto, for I shall not be at myn ease tyll I knowe it' / And whan rowlande vnderstode charlemagne / he put hymself wythin the cave / and made lighte a grete 28 mayne of torches for to see in it. and after rowland wente with grete plente of frenshemen, that folowed hym / And thei wente soo longe tyll they came at thende of the cave, and founde <sup>1</sup>theymsel in the wode and finds himself in the wood.
32 of the serpent / And whan rowlande was come out of the cave / he loked about for to know where they were, but he cowde not hymself knowe it. and thenne he sayd to hys folke, 'Lordes, me semeth that

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. ii.

for to goo ony forder for to seke after reynaud / it were but foly, for he knoweth well the countrey, and we wote not where to goo' / 'Syre,' sayd his felawes, 'ye saye well; therefore lete vs retourne to charlemagn 4 your vncl, for to telle hym what we have founde wythin this cave.'

Whan rowland & his felawes were accorded, they returned that way that they were come. 8 And whan ye kynge sawe theym come oute agen / he asked of theym what they had founde, and yf they had founde ony yssue to goo oute of the cave / 'Syre,' sayd rowland, 'ye, wythout faylle / Wyte that reynawd 12 & his folke are scaped you / and they have bayarde wyth them / for here ye maye see the paath' / And whan the kynge charlemagne knewe the trouthe, how reynawd & his company were goon, he was soo gretly 16 an angred that none myght be more / and the same hour he sent his messagers in all his londes & countres, for to wyte yf he myghte vnderstonde ony tydynges where reynawd & his bredern were become. And 20 whan he had doon this, he commaunded that his osteshold dyslodge / and that they shold come all to mountalban. And whan the barons herde the kynge, they dyde his commaundemente / and cam all to 24 mountalban, & lodged theym as wel as they cowde / and abode there well six dayes, makyng grete ioye that reynawd & his brethern were thus expelled out of it. And as the barons were devysing wythin mountalban, 28 there came a messenger to fore charlemagne, and salved him as to hym apperteyneth / and to hym he sayd in this wyse, 'Syre, wyte it that I have seen Reynawd, Alard, guchard, <sup>1</sup>& Rychard, ledyng grete ioye wyth 32 grete company of knyghtes / kepinge a grete courte wythin the cyte of ardeyne<sup>2</sup> / Where as reynawd gyveth grete gyftes to every one, and I am sore

Roland relates to the Emperor how Reynawde and his folk have escaped.

All the host of Charlemagne lodge themselves in Mountalban.

A messenger brings tidings of the Sons in Arden.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

mervelled where he hath gotten soo grete tresour.
 And also is there wyth hym the kyng yon of gascoyn / and that more is, I telle you for certeyn, 4 that Reynawd hathe made a grete assemble of folke for to defende him agenst you, yf ye goo in ony wyse for to assaylle hym' /

8 The kyng was moche angry whan he herde hys messenger / soo sware he by saynt denys he sholde never lie in noo bed tyll he had beseged ardeyn<sup>1</sup> / And whan he had sayd soo, he commaunded to his barons that every man sholde trusse his bag-12 gage / and that they sholde take on theyr way streyghte to ardeyn<sup>1</sup> / And whan the barons herde charlemagn speke soo, they toke on theyr waye wythoute any more taryeng,<sup>2</sup> towarde ardeyne<sup>2</sup> / and rode soo longe tyll that 16 they came to mountargweyll / that was not ferre from ardeyne<sup>1</sup> / For men myghte see from thens the steples of the towne. There was lodged the oost of charlemagne that nyghte / but I proymse he dyde doo make 20 good watche, for doubte of the four sones of aymon.
 And whan the daye was come / charlemagne dyde set his folke in good ordenaunce / and wyth his baner dysplayed they rode towarde ardeyne<sup>1</sup> / And whan rey-24 nawde wyste that charlemagn was come for to besege theim wyth in ardeyn,<sup>1</sup> he began to swere that he sholde not lete him beseged, as he had doon wythin mountalban. For rather he wolde fyghte wyth charle-28 magne / And yf it maye soo falle that he come in his handes, he shall not have pyte of hym as he had to fore tyme, by cause he had founde hym soo cruell, and wythoute pyte / 'Brother,' sayd thenne Rycharde, 'now 32 I see you speke like a knyghte / and by the feyth that I owe vnto you / I promyse you that, or ever charlemagn shal besege vs, I shall slee moo than an hundred

The Emperor
 determines to besiege the city

The Frenchmen
 assemble near
 Arden.

Reynawde swears
 he will not be besieged again.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. D.D. iii.

Richard vows to slay more than a hundred of the Emperor's folk.

of his folke. And, but yf god faylle vs / we shall doo suche a thyng that shall be to the grete hurt and dysplaysure of hym / wherof he shall be sori all the dayes of his liff / For he is not manered like a gentyll mañ / 4 For the more that he is prayed / the lesse he dooth.' 'Brother,' sayd alarde,<sup>1</sup> / 'ye speke well & honestly, And I shall conne you thanke for it aslong as I live.'

Reynawde summons his folk, and issues out of the city.

Ye oughte to wyte that whan reynawd sawe that 8 charlemagne come for to besege hym wyth a grete puyssaunce of folke / he was noo thyng abashed wyth it. But<sup>2</sup> he made incontynente bondy, his good horne, to be blowen / and made his folke to be arryved 12 redely, that were in grete nombre, and made theym yssue oute of the cyte / And whan his armye was assembled in the feeldes / it was a noble thyng for to see. And thenne he ordeyned his bataylles by good or- 16 denaunce as a wyse fyghter / And after that he had doon soo, he called his brethern, and sayd to theym, 'My fayr brethern, this daye is the daye that we shall deye, or elles doo soo moche that we shall brynge the 20 werre atte an ende / Wherfore, I praye you that every of vs shewe hym selfe a goode knyght ; for in you is all my truste. And soo I promyse you that I have lever deye worthily in bataylle, than for to be hanged sham- 24 fully as a theffe. My brethern, I praye you come alle nyghe me / for I wylle that we ben the firste that shall smyte vpon our enmyes.' 'Brother,' sayd alarde, 'we shall doo your commaundement / doubtte ye not of it / 28 and goo forth whan ye wylle' / And whan they were soo agreed, Reynawde dyde chuse an hundred of the beste knyghtes of his felawship, and sayd to theym, 'Sires, I praye you that ye wyll be with me in the 32 firste bataylle, and ye shall doo me grete honoure.'<sup>3</sup> 'Syre,' sayd the knyghtes, 'we shall gladly doo your

He charges his brethren to fight valiantly, as it is better to die in battle than be hung shamefully;

he chooses 100 knyghts for his body guard,

<sup>1</sup> par la foy que je vous doy, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Bnt, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. D.D. iii. back.

commaundement, and we shall not leve you as longe as liff is in vs; and so we thanke you of the grete worshyp that ye doo to calle vs in your company.

4 For we knowe well that we can not fare amys as longe as we be wyth you.'

Whan Reynawd had ordeyned well his bataylles / he made none other taryeng / but went the 8 forrest of all, the sheelde atte the necke / and the spere in the fyst, and was mounted vpon bayarde, that behelde proudly about hym, makyng grete noyse / And thenne reynawd gaff hym the spore / and wente

and, mounting Bayard, rides
towards the Emperor's folk.

12 fayr vpon the folke of charlemagne. And whan charlemagne sawe bayarde comyng, that made so grete bruyte / and reynawde vpon his backe that came in soo fayr ordenaunce / he was sore abashed of it / and sayd in 16 hymselfe / 'O, goode lorde / and where the devyll have all redy had the four sones of Aymon so many folke as I see here now wyth theym? I byleve it is some devylls werke; for I had not lefte many wyth theym

Charlemagne
fears for his men
when he sees
the forces of Rey-
nawde.

20 late a goo. And now reynawde is soo puyssaunte that he fereth me noo thyng. But I promyse god, all this shall not avaylle hym / but I shall doo iustyce vpon hym & his bredern or oughte longe' / And thenne he 24 made his bataylle to be sette in ordenaunce in the beste wyse that he cowde / and lighted on horsbacke for to come fyghte wyth reynawde / And whan the duke naymes sawe that Charlemagne was soo madde that 28 he wolde go fyghte wyth Reynawde, he wente to hym and sayd / 'Syre, Syre, what ys that ye wylle doo? I promyse you it were grete foly for to fyghte wyth these folke / and it were better that ye sholde make peas

Duke Naymes
counsels the Emperor to make peace with the
Sons.

32 with Reynawde / For I am sure that Reynawde shall doo all that ye wyll commaunde hym. And I telle you well, that yf we fyghte wyth theym, that ye shall 1 see many knyghtes to traylle theyr bowelles thorughe

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. iv.

the feeldes / wherof it shall be grete harme to the one party / and to the other. And suche shalle the losse be, that it shall not be recovered agayne' / 'Naymes,' said the kyng Charlemagne, 'lete this alone / For I 4 shall doo none other wyse, for no man that liveth. I sholde rather lete me to be dysmembred.' And whan the duke Naymes had vnderstode his wordes, he was full sory of it / and lefte his spekyng therof. And 8 from that hour, Charlemagne delibered hymselfe for to fyghte / and always he rode forthe in grete wrathe.

Charlemagne refuses his advice in anger.

And whan Reynawd sawe that the two oostes were approached sore nyghe, thone the other / as to 12 hande and hande, he sayd to his brother Rycharde, <sup>1</sup>that was nexte hym,<sup>1</sup> 'I wylle goo speke wyth the kyng Charlemagn, for to wyte of hym yf he wyll pardonne and take vs vnto his grace. For yf he wolde 16 doo soo / I sholde doo enterly all his wylle & playsure, as to our soverayne lorde' / 'By god, brother,' sayd thenne Rycharde, 'ye be not worthe a botelle of heye / For the herte is all redy faylled in your bely' / 'Goo 20 forthe, myschaunte,' sayd thenne Reynawde / 'thou wote not what thou sayste, For I wylle goo there; noo man shall kepe me therfro / and yf he refuseth the peas whan I shall axe it of hym, I shall make myn a vowe 24 to god that I shall nevermore requyre hym therof' / 'Brother,' sayd Alarde, 'ye saye well and wysely, goo there hardely / and doo therin your wylle' / And thenne Reynawde made none other delaynge / but he smote 28 bayarde wyth the spores, and wente incontynente towarde the kyng Charlemagne, and sayd to hym, 'Syre, for god mercy suffre, yf it be your playsure, that we have peas and accorde wyth you / that this werre 32 that hath lasted solong maye fynysse, and that your wrathe be putte awaye from vs, yf <sup>2</sup>it playse you / and I shall be redy to doo all that ye wyll / and also I shall

Reynawde determines to speak to the Emperor, and demand his forgiveness;

he presents himself before Charlemagne, and pleads for peace.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. E. viii.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. D.D. iv. back.

gyve you bayarde my good horse.' Thenne sayd the kyng to hym / 'goo fro me, false gloton / the devyll spede the / for all the worlde shall not conne kepe the, 4 but that I shalle slee the.' 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'ye shall not doo soo / and god wyll / for I shall defende me well / And wyte it, sith that it is com to this / ye shall not be spared of vs / but we shall do the worste 8 that we can.' 'Smyte, knyghtes,' sayd the kyng / 'I shall never prayse you yf this evyll gloton scape me now' / and whan reynawd sawe this / he sayd, 'Syr kyng of fraunce, I defye you!' and forthwyth he 12 spored bayarde / and ranne wyth his spere vpon a knyghte / whiche he smote soo harde in the breste, that he overthrewe hym deed to therth. And after that he wente agen to his folke. And whan Charlemagne 16 sawe this, he cryed wyth an hie voys, 'smyte, knyghtes! now shall they be dyscomfyted' /

The Emperor
insults him
wrathfully,

and calls on his knights to slay
him.

Reynawde returns
to his folk.

Thenne whan rowlande herde the kyng charlemagne crye thus / he spored after reynawde, and many 20 other knyghtes also / but they overtoke hym not / Whan rycharde sawe his brother come, he cam hym agenst / and sayd to him, 'Brother, what tydynges brynge you / shall we have peas or werre?' 'Broder,' 24 sayd reynawde, 'lete vs doo the best that we can, for peas we shall not have' / 'Brother,' said thenne richard, 'god blisse you for the tydynges that ye brynge! for I thinke to doo this daye suche a thyng wherof charle- 28 magn shall be angry' / 'Brother,' sayd reynawde, 'I praye you that ye shewe yourselfe vertuous & stronge agenste our enmyes.' Whan the kyng charlemagne sawe that it was tyme to set vpon, he called hastily the 32 duke naymes, & sayd to him / 'Naymes, holde my cryflam, and thynke to smyte well and valiauntly as a worthy knyght ought to doo at ether hande in keping 1 my worshyp, and herof I praye you hertly' / 'Syre,'

Roland spurs
after Reynawde with many other
knights,
but cannot reach
him.

Charlemagne
commands Naymes to fight
worthily.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. v.

sayd the duke naymes, 'ye nede not for to praye me, for I am bounde to doo the same, but it greveth me that ye have not doon otherwyse / that is, that ye sholde have graunted to the peas; for the werre hathe lasted 4 to longe.' 'Naymes, I commaunde you that ye speke nomore therof to me / for while I live they shall have noo peas wyth me.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'I am sory for it / Now lete see what ye shall doo / for I 8 goo to bataylle firste of all; and loke that ye folowe me yf ye wyll, for I shal put me in suche a place, wherof ye shall be sore mervyllled, and not wythout a cause / for there nys noo man so oolde / but he sholde soone 12 gete hete there wythin a lityll while. Now folowe that wyll!'

Whan Reynawd save the oryflame of fraunce com / he broched bayarde wyth the spores, and ranne 16 among the thickest, and smote a knyghte soo harde that he cast hym doun deed to the erthe / And after, he tordned hym towarde his folke, and chered theym honestly, and thenne he went agen vp on his enmyes, 20 and of them he overthrewe foure, one after a nother, and vpon the fyfte<sup>1</sup> he brake his spere<sup>2</sup> in to many peces, & hurted hym right sore<sup>2</sup> / and anone he set hande to his swerde, & smote a knyghte wyth vpon his helme soo 24 strongly, that he cleved hym to the teeth / and forthwyth he smote a nother<sup>2</sup> wyth suche strengthe<sup>2</sup> that he made fle the hede fro the body of hym / And after he had doon thise two strokes, he cried 'ardeyn'<sup>3</sup> as hie as 28 he cowde, for to reioysse his folke. And whan he had cryed soo / he sayd to theym / 'Now vpon theym, goode knyghtes / For this daye we shall avenge the grete shame that charlemagne hathe doon to vs soo 32 longe wythout ony reyson.' And whan alarde, guycharde, & Rycharde herde reynawd speke thus / they

Reynawd cheers on his folk, and fights fiercely in the battle;

he cries on high 'Arden,' calling on his knights to drive back their enemies.

<sup>1</sup> quartriesme, F. orig. E. viii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. E. viii. back. <sup>3</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

ranne vpon their ennyes by suche <sup>1</sup>a maner that eche of them overthrew vii knightes at that enpraynt. who that had be there than, he sholde have seen grete faytes 4 of armes doon of the four sones of aymon / For after that they were ones assembled togyder / the folke of charlemagn myght not endure a fore theim / For rey-nawd & hys bredern went smytynge at eyther hande, 8 and felde theyr ennyes down sterke deed as bestes / soo that the moost parte of them were slayn or dis-comfyted /

The Sons repulse
the Freuchmen with great slaughter.

12 Whan the kyng charlemagn sawe the grete damage that the foure sones of aymon bare to hym / he was right sore an angred for it. And wyth grete wrathe he went & ranne vpon the folke of reynawd, & smote a knyghte soo vengably that he cast hym down 16 deed to the erthe / and brake his spere all in peces.
And after, he toke his swerde in his hande, wherof he dyde merveyllles of armes / so moche that his folke prayed hym for it, for he bare hymself there valiaunt 20 & stronge / And wyte that this merveyllous bataylle was soo cruell that it was grete pite for to see.

Charlemagne
rides towards the
folk of Reynawde,
and fights with marvellous
strength.

U It is trouth that rowlande was a ferde for his vncl charlemagn, that he sholde be overthrown, whan 24 he saw hym in the presse, wherfor he went anone nyghe hym / and soo dyde oliver, ogyer, & all the xii peres, for to kepe that he sholde have noo harme. And whan the grete bataylles were assembled one agenst thother, 28 ye sholde a seen there a sharpe & a hevy bataylle, so that it was pyte for to see / for sin that rowland, oliver, & all the xii peres of fraunce were com in the medle / they begann to make soo grete slauhter of the folke of 32 reynawd, that they made theym leve the place / and whan reynawd & his brethern saw that, thei medled them so sharpely amonge the frenshemen that every man made them way ; for they raught no man / but

Roland fears for the safety of his vncl Charle-
magne;

the XII peers
surround him,

and fight so
valiantly that the
folk of Reynawde
give way before
them.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. v. back.

thei threw hym deed to therthe, somoche that there was no thing but trembled a fore them. ye ought to wyte, that fro thour of prime vnto thoure of <sup>1</sup>none, endured this mortalle bataylle / that none wyste who 4 sholde have the better of it / But whan none was passed, the folke of Reynawde began to wythdrawe theymself, for they myghte nomore. And for to saye the trowth, yf the folke of reynawd wythdrewe theym / 8 they were not to be blamed for it / for charlemagn had foure tymes more folke than reynawde, besides the twelve Peres that were suche knyghtes as men well know / But this that the Folke of reynawd dyd, was 12 for the good ensample that they sawe in reynawde & in his bredern / And whan the noble knight perceyved that his folke wythdrewe theymself, he came to him that bare his standarde, & sayd to him / 'My frende, 16 ryde towarde ardeyn<sup>2</sup> in the wysest wyse that ye can, for this day we have foughte right sore / and it is tyme that we goo reste ourself.' 'Sire,' sayd the knight, 'I shall well doo your commaundement.' and incontynent 20 he toke his waye towarde ardeyn.<sup>2</sup> And thenne reynaud called his bredern, & sayd to theym, 'lete vs be behinde <sup>3</sup>for to kepe our folke,<sup>3</sup> for otherwyse we are lost' / 'Brother,' sayd rycharde, 'doubte not / for as longe as 24 god gyveth liffe to you & to bayarde, we nede not fere noo thyng' /

The Sons withdraw towards
Arden.

Whan charlemagn sawe that reynawd & all his company was goon / he cried wyth a hie 28 voys, 'now after, lordes, after! for now ben they dyscomfyted' / But this worde <sup>3</sup>of Charlemagne<sup>3</sup> was cause that many a worthy knyghte loste his life / For suche dyde folowe after Reynawd that payd derely for 32 it, For Reynawde and his brethern slewe moo than an hundred that folowed after theym / And wolde Charle-

Charlemagne calls
on his men to follow them,
for which cause
many a knight is slain by Rey-
nawde and his
brethren.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. vi.      <sup>2</sup> dordonne, F. orig. F. i.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. F. i.

magne or noo, Reynawde and his bretherne entred agayne wyth theyr folke wythin Ardeyn.<sup>1</sup> And ye muste knowe that Rycharde, the brother of Reynawde, 4 iousted wyth Rycharde, the duke of Normandy, by the 2 gate of Ardeyne,<sup>1</sup> as they wolde have entred in / And there the duke was overthrowen, the whiche was taken prysoner by Rycharde the brother of Reynawde / and 8 broughte hym in to the cyte, mawgre the folke of Charlemagne / And whan Reynawde and all his folke were wythin Ardeyne,<sup>1</sup> he made the gates to be shytte / And after, went and dysarmed them for to take some 12 ease / For they had well nede therof.

Richard, Duke of Normandy, is taken prisoner by
 the Sons.

Ye oughte to wyte, that whan Charlemagn saw that the four sones of Aymon had saved theymselfe, and that they had taken Rycharde the duke of 16 normandy prysoner, that was one of the twelve peres / he was so angry that noo man canne be more / For he feered sore leste Reynawde sholde make to deye rychard of normandy. and whan he saw that he 20 myghte doo none other, he commaunded that the cyte sholde be beseged of all sides ; the whiche thyng was incontynente doon as he had commaunded / And thenne sware charlemagne, that he sholde never leue 24 his siege vnto the tyme that he had taken the cyte, and the four sones of Aymon to be hanged shamfully /
 'Syre,' sayd Rowlande, 'ye knowe that I am he that most hath hurted the four sones of aymon, nor 28 never I spake to you of peas bytwene you & theym / but fro hens forth reyson commaundeth me that I sholde speke & move therunto / Syre, ye know well that it is a goo XV yeres & more that ye have werred 32 wyth the foure sones of aymon, and we had alwayes the worse of the werre / and not without cause / for reynawd & his bredern are valiaunt knyghtes, nor they

The Emperor
 fears that Duke Richard will be
 slain ;

he commaunds
 the city to be besieged.

Roland counsels
 for peace with Reynawde,
 as the war has lasted xv. years ;

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig. F. i.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. D.D. vi. back.

be not to be lightly brought to dyscomfyture<sup>1</sup> / And I promyse you, if ye had werred solong vpon the sarras-syns, as ye have doon on the four sones of aymon, ye shold have be lord of the moste parte of theim / 4 whiche had be to you more worship & les damage.
 & wors is, ye know how richard of <sup>2</sup>normandy, one of the beste knyghtes that ye had, is taken; and yf otherwyse it happeth to hym than well, it shall be to 8 you grete dyshonour and blame, For therof ye shall see all fraunce in a rore & trowble / but yf ye put som remedy therto;<sup>3</sup> and I telle you, yf I were in the cas that Reynawd is in, I sholde slee hym / Syth 12 that I myghte have noo peas wyth you / Wherfore, syre, yf ye wyll byleve me, for your honoure & for your prouffyte, ye shall sende worde to Reynawde, that he deliver you agayne Richarde of normandy 16 all armed vpon his horse, and ye shall make peas wyth hym. and I promyse you, syre, he shall doo it gladly wythall that ye wyll commaunde hym / and soo shall all his brethern also.' 'rowland,' sayd 20 thenne the kynge / 'wylle ye saye ony thyng more' /
 'Naye, syre,' sayd Rowland. 'And I swere you vpon my feyth,<sup>4</sup> that the four sones of Aymon shall never have peas wyth me / and soo I telle, that I fere me 24 not for Richarde of normandy, For Reynawde sholde rather put oute bothe his owne eyen than that he durste doo to Rycharde ony harme vpon his body' / And whan the barons herde Charlemagn speke soo / 28 the teres began to falle down from theyr eyen, for grete feere that Rycharde of normandy, theyr pere, sholde have ony harme / After all these thynges, Rey-nawd & his bredern were within ardeyne,<sup>5</sup> makyng 32

he advises Charlemagne to ask for the deliverance of Duke Richard on
 terms of peace.

The Emperor
 declines all conditions
 of peace,
 and vows Rey-
 nawde will never dare to hang the Duke.

<sup>1</sup> comment lon cuide, F. orig. F. ii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. D.D. vii.

<sup>3</sup> Car le dit richart de normandie a moult de grans amyx et parente, F. orig. F. ii.

<sup>4</sup> dist Charlemaigne, F. orig. F. ii.

<sup>5</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

grete ioye / And after they were all oute of theyr harneys, Reynawd ordeyned good watche vpon the walles of the cyte. And thenne he made come the 4 duke Rycharde of normandy a fore hym, and sayd to hym in this maner / 'Duke Rycharde, ye know well that the kyng dothe grete wronge for to trouble vs soo as he hath doon, and yet dooth wythout ony resonable 8 cause / And therfor I tell you for certeyne / but yf ye make vs to have peas, thynke not to live ony lenger / For I shall doo smyte of your hede, and <sup>1</sup>your body to be hewed in four quarters' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke 12 Richarde of normandy, 'I am in your dangeour, soo may ye doo of me your playsure / Ye have taken me by werre / and none otherwysc. yf ye doo to me otherwyse than ye ought of ryght of werre / ye shall 16 have dishonour for evermore / And soo I wylle well that ye knowe, that as longe as I live / I shall not faylle charlemagne for noo fere of dethe' / Whan Reynawde herde Rycharde of normandy speke thus, 20 he refreyned a lityll his wrathe; and thenne he commaunded that he shold be put in yrons wythin his chambres, and that he sholde be well kept & curtesly, and that he be well served of that apperteyneth to his 24 estate / Thenne was the duke Rycharde all thus in prison / but he was well served of all goode metes; and he had good company for to playe to what game that he wolde. And also the good duchesse clare dyde 28 visite hym often, and recomforted hym with her fair langage /

Reynawde tells Duke Richard he
 will be slain,
 unless Charlemagne puts an end to the war.

Duke Richard is treated courteously
 as a prisoner of war.

Whan charlemagne had beseged the cyte rounde aboute, and sawe that by noo sawtynghe he 32 myghte not gete it / he dyde doo make grete engynes for to caste stones in / But what somer that he dyde, Reynawd & his bredern, and also his folke yssued oute often, as well by nyghte as by daye, vpon

The Emperor
 devises great engines for the assault of the city.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. D.D. vii. back.

the folke of the kyng Charlemagn / and dyde hym grete dommage / For reynawd toke noo man but he kepte him for prisoner / for to see yf he myghte have peas wyth charlemagn by meanes of theim. and 4 whyle that charlemagn had layd his siege thus afore ardeyne<sup>1</sup> / the kyng yon of gascoyn fell sike a bed of a grete sikenes / and<sup>2</sup> shrofe him of all his sinnes / prayenge god to have pyte & mercy on hym / and 8 after he had be long sike, he deyed / god pardonne his soule! And wyte that reynawde made hym to be buried worshipfully, as to a king perteyneth / but ther was no man that wept<sup>3</sup> for hym / For all they of 12 the cyte hated hym, by cause of the grete treyson that he had doon to the four sones of Aymon. Now leveth the history to speke of this matere, and retorneth to speke of mawgys, that was in his hermytage, 16 that served our lorde wyth good herte, somoche that he had forgotten Reynawd, his bredern / and his frendes.

King John dies within the city, and is buried honourably as a king.

CHAPTER XXI.

¶ How mawgys, he beynge in his hermyt- 20 age / came hym a wylle by a vysion that he had by nyghte in his slepe / for to goo see reynawd & his bredern,<sup>4</sup> And how he mette wyth ii marchauntes, that vii 24 theves had robbed in a wood, of whiche theves the sayd mawgys slewe fyve / and deliverred to y<sup>e</sup> marchauntes all their good agayn / And after this he wente to ardeyne<sup>1</sup> 28 for to see reynawd & his bredern /

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig. F. iii.    <sup>2</sup> add orig.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. D.D. viii.

<sup>4</sup> Au matin se mist a chemin, F. orig. F. iii.

Now sheweth the history, that whan mawgis was in his hermytage, and had watched soo long aboute his prayers to god, he felle a slepe<sup>1</sup> / and him 4 semed in his slepe that he was at mountalban, & sawe reynawd & hys bredern, that cam agenst hym, and made their complaynte to hym of charlemagn, that wolde take fro theim the goode horse bayarde / but reynawd had 8 hym fast by the brydle / and wolde not lete it goo / And wyte it, that mawgys had soo grete sorowe in his dreme, that he awoke wythall all wrothe, and arose on his fete incontinent / And thenne he sware our 12 lorde he sholde never ceasse to goo / tyll he had seen reynawde and his brethern, his good cosyns / And whan mawgys had sayd soo, he made none other taryenge, but he shet the dore of his chapell, and toke 16 his wede & his staffe, and wente on his waye all soo sone as he myghte / And abowte the hour of noone he founde hymselfe in a grete woode / where he founde two men, that wente makynge evyll chere<sup>2</sup> and 20 grete sorowe / and whan mawgis sawe theym, he cam to theym, & sayd, 'God be wyth you' / and one of theim answered & sayd / 'certes, god is not wyth vs / but rather the devylle; For vnhappy was that hour 24 that ever we cam in to this wode; for we ben vndoon for ever' / 'Goode sires,' sayd mawgys, 'what eyleth you that ye speke so' / 'Good man,' sayd the one of the two, 'a lityll byfore you are theves, that hathe 28 robbed vs of our clothe,<sup>3</sup> and have sleyn one of our felawes / by cause he spake to theim angrely' / Whan mawgys herde thise pour marchantes speke thus, he had grete pyte of theim, & sayd to theym / 'my 32 frendes, come wyth me / I shall praye the theves, in our lordes behalfe, that they wyll deliver you agen your goodes / and yf they wyl not doo it, I shall Mawgis, while in his hermitage,

 dreams of Rey-
 nawde,

and vows he will go to him.

He finds himself
 in a wood,
 and sees two merchants who are in great
 sorrow;

they tell Mawgis
 that thieves have robbed them,
 and slain one of their men.

<sup>1</sup> en son oratoyre, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. D.D. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> que nous pourtions vendre, F. orig. F. iii. back.

Mawgis says he will fight the robbers;

the merchants
mock him,
seeing his poor
appearance.

Mawgis encounters the thieves,

and demands
them to restore
their stolen goods.

be wroth with them / and soo I shall fyghte wyth theym aswell as I can / wyth my staff, for to wyte yf theyr hedes ben softe or harde.' Whan the marchantes herde mawgis saye soo / they began to loke 4 vpon hym, yf they cowde knowe hym; <sup>1</sup>but they myghte not knowe what he was <sup>1</sup> / Thenne spake to hym one of theym in this maner / 'and what devyll is that ye say? <sup>2</sup> thou art but a man alone all naked, 8 & thei ben all armed / and also ye can scantly heve vp your staff.' 'lete this fole alone,' sayd that other,
'see ye not how his eyen goo in his hede.' and thenne they sayd to mawgys, 'Broder, goo thy wayes, 12 and lete vs in peas / or elles I shall gyve the suche a stroke wyth this staff that thou shalt fele it well' / and whan mawgis sawe the marchante speke thus to hym, he sayd / 'Broder, thou doost not well to speke 16 to me so / for by force thou can not gete oughte of me' / And thus departed mawgys fro the marchautes, & went his way somoche that he overtoke the theves, & sayd to them, 'lordes, god save you / I pray you 20 tell me why ye take away y<sup>e</sup> goodes fro thise marchantes: ye know wel that it is not <sup>3</sup>yours / Wherefore, I praye you, lete theym have agayne theyr marchan-dyse, and god shall conne you thanke' / Whan the 24 theves herde mawgis speke to theym thus / they were angri for it, And behelde vpon mawgis from over the sholder, as he had be a sarrasyn / Thenne spake the mayster of the theves, <sup>4</sup> & sayd to mawgys / 'Goo thy 28 waye, hourson / or elles I shall gyve the suche a stroke wyth my fote that I shall breste the herte wythin the bely.' And whan mawgis herde this, & knewe that the theeves fered nother god nor his 32 moder / he was right an angred / And heved vp his

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. F. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Ils sont sept et . . . F. orig. F. iii. back.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. E.E. i.

<sup>4</sup> qui estoit de mauuaise part, F. orig.

palmers staffe, & smote the mayster thief wythall vpon his hede soo strongly, that he caste hym doun deed to the grounde. And whan thother theves sawe 4 their mayster deed / they ranne all vpon mawgys for to have kylled hym / but mawgys areched theym so wyth his staffe, that he slewe fyve of theym wythin a lityll while / and thenne the other tweyne beganne to 8 flee awaye thurgh the wood. And whan mawgys sawe that they forsoke the place, he followed theym not / but cryed vpon theym, 'Ha, false theves, tourne agen for to deliver your thefte where ye toke it.' 12 And whan the marchantes herde mawgys crye thus, they came Incontynent towarde hym / and they founde that the theves that had robbed theym were deed / And thenne they sayd the one to the other, 16 'here is a good pylgryme ! I wene it is my lorde saynt martyne.'

He slays
 fyve of them,
 and the others
 fly from him
 through the wood.

Whan the marchantes sawe this that mawgis hadde doon, they were ryght gladde of it / Soo came 20 they to warde mawgys, & kneled byfore hym, & cryed mercy of that they had sayd to hym. 'Lordes,' sayd mawgys, 'yf ye gaff me grete wordes, soo dyde the theves moche more, For they called me "rybawde, 24 truaunt, & hoursone;" but they have boughte it right <sup>1</sup>dere, as ye may see,<sup>1</sup> and I am ryght sory that two of <sup>2</sup>theym are scaped from me. Stonde vp thenne, & take wyth you your goodes agen / and god be with you ! but 28 I pray you, telle me, or ye goo, yf ye wote not where is charlemagn '<sup>3</sup> / ' Syre,' sayd the marchautes, ' We wote well that charlemagn hathe taken mountalban / but we promyse you he hath not yet taken none of the four 32 sones of aymon ;<sup>4</sup> for they were goon oute wyth theyr

The merchants
 kneel before Mawgis, and crave his pardon
 for having mocked
 him.

Mawgis enquires
 of them about
 Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup>—1 omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> ai vous en savez ne se Il a pris montauban et les quatre filz aymon qui estoient dedans, F. orig. F. iv.

<sup>4</sup> ne les gens, F. orig. F. iv.

The merchants
relate to him
how Charlemagne
lays siege to Arden.

Mawgis goes through the host
of the Emperor,
and arrives at Arden;

he finds the Sons
at supper;

folke thourghe a cave vnder the ertlie, that they founde vnder the walles of the castelle, vnto the cyte of ardeyn,<sup>1</sup> where as they ben now / And charlemagn hathe layd their his siege afore theym / and wylle not make no 4 peas wyth Reynawd <sup>2</sup> nor wyth his bredern <sup>2</sup> / ' Certes,' sayd mawgys, ' I am sori for theym, for they ben good knyghtes & true.'<sup>3</sup> Whan mawgys vnderstode that charlemagne had beseged Reynawd within ardeyn<sup>1</sup> / he 8 comended the marchauntes to god, and toke his waye towardre ardeyn;<sup>1</sup> and soo moche he wente, that he came in to the ost of charlemagn, and went streyght towardre the cyte, and made semblaunt to be sore feble / for he 12 went lenyng vpon his staff / And whan the folke of charlemagne sawe mawgys goo thus / thei loked sore vpon hym, and sayd the one to the other / ' that pyl-gryme is like to goo ferre / he can not stonde vpon his 16 fete' / ' By my othe,' said a nother, ' it myghte well be mawgys, that is soo dysguysed for to dysceyve vs' / ' It is not soo,' sayd thother / ' mawgys is not a live' / And while that they devysed thus togyder, mawgys cam nere 20 to the wycket of the gate, and founde the meanes that he gate in anone / And whan he was wythin ardeyn,<sup>1</sup> he wente to the palays / where he founde Reynawd, & the duchesse his wyffe, and bothe theyr children, aymonet 24 & yonnet, and ther vncles, his cosins, with a grete meiny of noble knyghtes, that were all at theyr mete.
Whan mawgys had loked a while vpon theym / he lened agenste a pyler that was in <sup>2</sup>the myddes of the 28 halle<sup>2</sup> <sup>4</sup>afore reynawde. Thenne began he to loke agen vpon his fayr cosins, that he loved so moche above all thynges of the worlde. And whan the maryshall of the halle sawe mawgis, wenyng to hym that it had be 32 a pour hermyte / he commaunded that he sholde be

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig. F. iv.    <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. F. iv.

<sup>3</sup> les quatre filz aymon, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. E.E. ii.

served of his dyner, for goddys sake<sup>1</sup> / And whan he is given food mawgys sawe the mete that was broughte him / he sayd / as a poor pilgrim.
 ' My lordes, I beseche you, for the love of god, that ye 4 wyll playse you for to bryng me som broun brede & water in a treen dyshe / and thus I shall be served as to me apperteyneth, For I dare not take none other mete' / And whan the stywarde <sup>2</sup>of reynawde<sup>2</sup> sawe that / he 8 made him anone to be brought all that he wold have / Thenne toke mawgys the broun brede, & made soppes in water<sup>3</sup> / and ete of it wyth goode apetyte. And whan reynawd sawe this poure man afore hym, that 12 lived soo pourly, and was soo lene & so pale / he had of hym grete pyte / Soo toke he a dysshe that was before hym, that was full of venyson / and sente it to hym by a squyre of his, that presented it to him, saieng 16 thus, 'holde, goode man, the duke sendeth you this' /
 ' God yelde hym,' sayd Mawgys. and thenne he toke & set the disshe afore hym, but he ete noo thyng of it.
 And whan reynawd sawe that, he was gretly merveyllid / 20 and sayd to hymselfe / ' God, who is that goode man that liveth soo harde a lif? yf he were not soo lene, I sholde saye it were myn cosin mawgys<sup>4</sup> / but a nother thyng sheweth me that it is not he / For he wolde 24 not hyde hymself from me in noo wyse.'

Reynawde perceiving his poor appearance, sends him venison off his own table,

but Mawgys will not eat it.

Reynawd behelde style mawgys somoche, that he lefte his mete for to loke vpon hym / And whan the tables were take vp / and that everi man had eten 28 at his ease, they wente to their warde to defende the towne as they were wounte to doo / in their harneys.
 And whan Reynawd saw <sup>5</sup>that every man was goon /

<sup>1</sup> Et que on luy appourtast et pain et vin aussi de cher a grant plante la quelle chose fust Incontinent faicte ainsi que le seneschal lauoit commande, F. orig. F. iv. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> dedens ung anap de bois, F. orig. F. v.

<sup>4</sup> qui nous a fait souffrir maintes detresses, F. orig. F. v.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. E.E. ii. back.

Reynawde goes towards Mawgis
after supper,
and asks him
whether he is his cousin or not.

Mawgis reveals
himself, to the great joy of Reynawde.

Mawgis tells him
he has vowed to live poorly all his life.

and that there was noo body wythin the hall for whom he wolde leve to saye his wylle, he wente to mawgis,<sup>1</sup> & sayd to hym, 'goode hermyte, I pray you, for the reverence of that god that ye serve, that ye tell me yf 4 ye be mawgis or noo / for ye are well like hym' / Whan mawgis herde reynawde speke thus to him / he cowde hide himselfe noo lenger, and sayd all on hie / 'Cosin,
I am mawgis without doubt / I am com to se you, and 8
I am glad that I see you, & also all your bredern in good plight.' And whan reynawd vnderstode that it was his cosin that he loved mooste of all the men in the world, and that had kept him dyverse times from perell 12 & dangeur / he had not be sooglad yf men had gyven hym the halve of all the worlde / Soo went he & kyssed him more than a C. tymes, & after he sayd to hym in this maner : 'fayr cosin, I praye you that ye wyll doo of 16 this cope that ye were vpon you / For my eyen can not see you thus poorly arayed.' theñne answerde mawgis to him, & sayd / 'My cosin, be not dysplayseed of that I shall telle you / ye must wyte, that I have made my 20 vowe to god, that I shall never ete but alonly brede & wylde herbes, & that to my drynke I shall take none other but water / and that I shall never were, the dayes of my liff, none other clothes but suche as this is ; for I 24 have gyven myself vtterly to serve & love our blessed savyour & his gloryous moder, for to bryng my soule to salvacyon in the blisse that ever shall laste.'

Whan Reynawd herde his cosin mawgys speke 28 thus, he was in a thoughte whether it was mawgis or noo, For he cowde not knowe hym well, by cause he was soo sore apayred of hys persone, And began to loke well vpon hym agen. And he sholde 32 never have knowen hym, yf it had not be a lityll liste that he had by his right eye. And after that <sup>2</sup>he had very knowlege of him / he made grete ioye for hym.

<sup>1</sup> et luy nust ses bras au col, F. orig. F. v.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E. E. iii.

 And he prayed hym agen / sayenge in this wyse /
 'fayr cosin, I praye you for the love of the feyth that 4 ye owe to me, that ye wylle telle me the trouthe of that I shall aske you.' 'Syre,' said mawgis, 'I shall telle it you gladly' / 'Cosin,' sayd reynaude, 'I wolde wyte where ye have be, ever sith that ye wente fro me / and 8 from whens ye come now' / 'Syr,' sayd mawgys, 'sith it playse you to wyte of my livynge, I shall shewe it you wyth a goode wylle. Ye ought to knowe, my fayr cosin, for certeyn that I have made myselve an hermyte, 12 and I have lefte the worlde for to serve hym that made me, & the blessed virgyn mary, <sup>1</sup>his moder,<sup>1</sup> for to have pardonne of my synnes that I have doon in my life /
 For I have don many grete evylles agenst my creatour / 16 and by me are deed so many folke, wherof I knowe that our lorde is gretly wrothe agenst me' / After that Reynawde had herde mawgis speke thus / he had so grete pyte on hym that the teres felle alonge his chekes 20 fro his eyen for love of his good cosin. And thenne he called his bredern, & sayd to theym / 'come hither, my brethern, and ye shall see your cosin mawgis' / And whan alarde, guchard, & rycharde herde thyse 24 wordes / their hertes rose in their belies for ioye, and ranne all to mawgys, & kyssed hym full swetely / And whan the duchesse wyste that mawgis was com, she came anone there as he was, and kyssed hym / wepyng full 28 sore <sup>1</sup>for ioye that she had to see hym<sup>1</sup> / And thenne cam there Aymonet & Yonnet, that made grete ioye, <sup>1</sup>and welcomed hym<sup>1</sup> / And thrughe all the cyte was anone knowen the comynge of the valiaunt mawgys / 32 wherof many folke came to see hym. But he was soo changed / and soo apayred, that it was pyte for to see.
 Thus was Reynawde well glad of the comynge of his goode cosyn / And after that <sup>2</sup>they had made grete ioye

Reynawde asks
him to relate his history since he left them.

Mawgis says he has become a hermit.

Reynawde calls
his brethren,

who receive Mawgis gladly.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E. E. iii. back.

a longe whyle / Reynawde called his brother Rycharde, & sayd to hym / 'Brother, goo fette anone a goode gowne for our cosin mawgys, and lete hym be brought a payr of shone that ben wyde ynoughe, for I know 4 well that his fete ben sore' / and thenne he sayd to hys wyffe / 'Lady, aryse / and fette hym suche linnen as he nedeth' / 'Syre,' sayd she, 'he shall have of the beste ynoughe anone.' And whan mawgys herde this worde, 8 he sayd to Reynawde, 'Syre, I telle you truly, that I have sworne that I shall never were shone, nor linnen clothes abowte me / But doo to me, if it playse you, to gyve me a newe sloppe and a large hode, a palster well 12 yrende, & a male / and therwyth ye shall well contente me; And thenne I shall comende you to god / and I shall goo my waye. For I am not comen here but only for to see you / wherof my desire was sore sette vnto' / 16 Right sory was Reynawde whan he herde mawgys say soo, in somoche that almoste he was swoninge for sorowe
 'Reynawd,' sayd thenne mawgys, 'leve your sorowe,
 For I have gyven myselfe to god vtterly, for to brynge 20 my soule to blysse of heven / And soo wylle I goo to the holy londe, for to serve to the temple of Iherusalem,<sup>1</sup> and for to vysite the holy sepulcre of our lorde / And whan I have doon so, I shall come agen to see you,<sup>2</sup>and 24 god spare me my liffe.<sup>3</sup> And thenne I shall goo agayne to myn hermytage / and shall live there as a beest wyth rootes & wyth wylde herbes, as I dyde byfore that I came here' / Whan Reynawde herde this, he was sory 28 for it / and sayd to mawgys in this wyse / 'Fayr cosyn, for god, take wyth you a gode horse, and money ynoughe / For ye shall have all thys of me' / 'Holde your peas,' sayd mawgys / 'I wylle not therof / for whan 32

Reynawde orders
rich clothing for his cousin.

Mawgys will not have any but such as befitte a
pilgrim;

he says he shall leave them again
soon,

and go to the Holy Land.

Reynawde is very grieved for his cousin.

<sup>1</sup> trois ou quatre ans. Et si dieu me donne la grace que Je puisse la venir Je me tray toute ma poine pousee servir, F. orig. F. vi.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted. F. orig. F. vi.

I have brede / it is to me ynoughe / For all my hope is in god / to whome I praye that I maye come agayn hole and 'sounde' /

4 After all these thynges thus sayd, Mawgys prayed Reynawd that he wolde make haste to make hym be deliverde suche thynges as he had desired of
hym. And Reynawde dyde soo, syth that he myghte 8 not make hym to take none other thyng wyth hym / And whan the morowe came / and that mawgys had his newe sloppe and his hode / he toke his palster, and his newe male that reynawde had gyven hym / he wente & 12 herde masse / and after the masse / he toke his leve of every one, and wente on his waye. And reynawde conveyed hym vnto the wyket of the gate of the cyte, and kyssed him; and in like wyse dyde all his brethern / 16 and also the duchesse clare and her chyl dren / And whan they had all kyssed mawgys, he comended theym to god / and wente oute of the towne, and wente forth the ryght waye. But he was not ferre goon, whan he 20 was advyronned rounde abowte hym wyth the folke of the kynge Charlemagne / And the one sayd to the other, 'here is the heremyte that we sawe yesterdaye, but he is now better clothed than he was atte that 24 time / It myghte be well mawgys, the cosin of reynawd, that hathe mocked vs dyverse tymes.' 'Certes,' sayd the other, 'It is he verely: lete vs slee hym / and we shall doo wel' / 'we shall not,' sayd some / 'For this 28 man semeth to be an hundred yere olde / It can not be / but that he muste be a goode man, and it were synne to doo hym harme' / All thus as these folke said these wordes, Mawgis herde all that they sayd, and helde his 32 peas, But wente on his waye styлле thourghe the ooste withoute ony lettyng of ony man. ¶ Here levethe the histore<sup>2</sup> to speke of mawgys, that wente in to the holy londe, And retorneth to speke of Charlemagne, that had

Mawgis departs
on the morrow.

The folk of
Charlemagne
wonder if it is Mawgis,

although he looks
so old.

Mawgis departs
safely through the host.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. E. iv.

<sup>2</sup> histore, orig.

besege<sup>d</sup> ardeyn<sup>1</sup> / by cause that reynawd & his brethern were wythin.

CHAPTER XXII.

<sup>2</sup>¶ How reynawde wolde doo hange rycharde of normandy, by cause he myghte not have <sup>4</sup> peas wyth the kyng charlemagne / And how the twelve peres requyred Charlemagne to make peas wyth reynawde.<sup>3</sup> And how they lefte charlemagne by cause he <sup>8</sup> wolde not make peas / And how he sente worde to theym that they sholde come to hym agen, And he sholde make peas wyth reynawde /<sup>4</sup> 12

In this party sheweth, that the king Charlemagne was at the siege afore ardeyn<sup>1</sup> sore an angred, that he myghte not knowe how rycharde of normandy dyd. Soo sent he for all his barons for to com to hym ; and <sup>16</sup> whan they were come in his pavyllion, he sayd to theym / ‘ Lordes, I see well that it gooth yll wyth me, by cause I see that Reynawde hathe not sente me agen rycharde of normandy / and he myghte well have deliverde hym <sup>20</sup> fre & quyte, and have sende hym vnto me, for all the harmes that he hathe doon to me.’ ‘ Uncle,’ sayd rowland, ‘ I merveylle gretly of that ye saye. Ye shewe well to vs that ye be wythout counseylle. By the <sup>24</sup> feith that I owe to you / I promyse you ye shall never see rycharde of normandy / but if ye pardonne reynawde & his bredern. Dyverse tymes he hathe meked hymselfe vnto you / and hathe be alwayes redy to fulfille <sup>28</sup>

Charlemagne complains of Reynawde's treatment of Duke Richard.

Roland implors the Emperor to make peace for the sake of the Duke.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> pour auoir leur compaignon le duc richart de normandie a la quelle chose charlemaigne respondit quil non feroit riens dont Ilz furent si marris quil le laisserent, F. orig. F. vi. back.

<sup>4</sup> Iroit oultre mer son pain querant, F. orig. F. vii.

your playsure / and ye wylle not take hym to your grace. Be not thenne merveyllid yf Reynawde shewe now some dyspyte agenste you. For, and ye consydre 4 well the grete curtesy that he hathe doon vnto you, namely, whan he had you atte hys wyll wythin mountalban, and that he delivered you, and suffred you goo quyte & free from hym atte your libertee, ye sholde 8 doo for hym otherwyse than ye doo. But syth that Reynawde seeth that he maye not fynde noo mercy in you / he wylle not lese his <sup>1</sup>curtessye, But he shall doo the worste that he canne / as ye maye well perceyve 12 the experyence of it every day / For he dommageth vs daily, and kepeth his prysoner the beste knyghte that ye had / that is, Rycharde the duke of normandy / the whiche I wene be deed by this tyme.' 'Nevewe,' sayd 16 the kyng Charlemagne, 'I promyse you that Reynawde hath not put hym to dethe / But he kepeth hym well atte his ease & wyth grete honoure.' 'Syre,' sayd thenne the duke Naymes, 'syth that the wordes ben 20 come to this, I must telle you my minde.<sup>2</sup> Syre, yf Reynawde bereth you dommage / ye canne not blame him for it / For he hathe prayed you soo many tymes humbly that ye wolde have mercy on hym / And ye 24 wolde never here hym / But ye have alwayes shewed your self the moost prowde kyng of the world agenste hym, and the moost angry; and ye wylle byleve noo counseylle. And soo I telle, yf Reynawde hathe not 28 made to deye Rycharde of normandy, he is the kyndeste man of the worlde / But I byleve better that he is deed than otherwyse; For noo man here canne telle whether he be deed or a live.'

32 Whan the kyng Charlemagne herde the duke Naymes speke thus / he knewe well that he tolde hym trouth / Soo beganne he to syghe sore / and

Charlemagne will not believe that Duke Richard
 will be slain.

Naymes also counsels the Emperor to make terms with Rey-
 nawde:

<sup>1</sup> Fol. E. E. v.

<sup>2</sup> quil me semble estre vray, F. orig. F. vii.

all the Barons appeal to him.

Charlemagne
orders three of his Barons to go to Arlen and tell Reynawde to yield
up Duke Richard
and Mawgis.

The Barons
depart, bearing
olive branches in token of peace.

to these wordes came forth the bysshop Turpyn & Ogyer the dane / that sayd in this maner / 'Syre, wyte it verely that Naymes telleth you trouthe / For Reynawd hathe a goode cause to be angry wyth you.' <sup>4</sup> And whan Charlemagne herde his barons speke thus / he was all abashed of it / And called the duke Naymes, the bysshop Turpyn, Ogyer the dane / and Escouff the sone of Oedon, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, 8 I praye you goo to Ardeyne<sup>1</sup> / and telle Reynawde in my behalve, that he wylle sende me Rycharde of normandy / And <sup>2</sup>whan he hathe doon soo / that he delyver Mawgys in to my hande, <sup>3</sup>for to doo my wylle <sup>12</sup> of hym<sup>3</sup> / And thenne he shall have peas wyth me<sup>4</sup> all the dayes of my liffe' / 'Dere syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'ye sende vs for noughte / For I wote well that mawgys is goon from Reynawde / it is thre yeres <sup>16</sup> passed and more / And yf Reynawde wolde deliver hym / he maye not / For he knowe not hymselfe where he is' / 'Naymes,' sayd the kyng / 'ye shall atte leste here what Reynawde shall saye to you / And <sup>20</sup> ye shall also knowe how Rycharde of normandy dooth' / 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes, 'sythe that it playse you that I shall goo, I am well contente / but I praye our lorde that we maye retourne agen hole and sounde <sup>24</sup> of our persones / wythoute to be dyshonoured' / Whan the barons sawe that Charlemagne wolde that they sholde goo to Ardeyne<sup>1</sup> for to doo his message, they durste not saye there agenste / And so they wente <sup>28</sup> theder anone,<sup>5</sup> and eche of theim bare in his hande a branche of an olive tree in token of peas / And whan they came to the gate, they founde it open for theym /

<sup>1</sup> dordonne. F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. v. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> et si luy rendray sa terre et tiendray ses deux enfans auccques moy, F. orig. F. vii. back.

<sup>5</sup> et ne cesserent jusques a ce quilz furent a dordonne, F. orig. F. vii. back.

For Reynawde had seen theym come fro fer. e. Wherefore he commaunded that the wycket sholde be open. And whan the barons sawe the lityll gate open / thei
 4 went in to the towne / and came to the palays / And They enter the palace, whan Reynawde wyste that they were come within the palais, he wente and layd hymselfe down on a bed wyth his legges crossed, and sware god & his moder
 8 that he sholde not praye Charlemagne of noo thyng, For he had doon hym to grete harme. For thrughe the kyng charlemagne he had lost his goode cosin mawgis, & mountalban / that he loved somoche. This 12 hangynge, cam there the messagers of kyng Charlemagne a fore Reynawd / Whan the duke Naymes, that was the formeste, sawe Reynawde, he saluted hym and salute Reynawde, giving him the message from the Emperour. honourably.<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>And after, he sayd to hym / 'Syre Reynawde, the kyng sendeth you worde by vs / that ye sende
 16 hym agayn Rychard the duke of normandy / And more over, he sendeth you worde, that yf ye wyll deliver hym mawgis, ye shall have peas wyth hym all the dayes
 20 of his life / And he shall delivere you agayne all your londes. And he shall kepe bothe your children in his courte wyth hym, & shall make them knyghtes wyth his owne handes' / 'My lordes,' sayd Reynawde / 'ye 24 be ryght welcome to me, as the knyghtes of the worlde that I oughte to love beste. But I mervylle me gretely of charlemagn / that sendeth me thise wordes ; for every man knoweth well that I have not mawgis / But by 28 hym I have loste hym / And wolde god that I had here Charlemagne, as well as I have Richarde of normandy / And yf he wolde not graunte me peas wyth hym / I promyse you he sholde leve his hede for a 32 pledge / Soo sholde I be thenne avenged of all the grete harmes and dommages that he hathe doon to me /

<sup>1</sup> et puis luy dist, Sire dieu soit avecques vous et vous gard de mort et de prison, F. orig. F. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E. E. vi.

syth that I have be made knyghte of hym / Lordes, I wende that Charlemagne had be more curteys than he is. For yf I had wyste that he wolde have be soo felle vpon me <sup>1</sup>and my brethern,<sup>1</sup> I sholde well avenged 4 it vpon hym / But it is to late to repente me that I dyde not doo / Wherfore, that ye voyde oute of my paleys, and goo telle your kynge that I have not mawgys / But I have loste hym for hym / and also 8 yf I had hym he sholde not have hym / And by cause I have thus loste my goode cosyn mawgys for hym / I shall make tomorowe Richard the duke of normandy to be hanged vpon the cheef gate of this 12 cyte, in the dyspyte of hym; for no lenger respyte he shal not haue of me, how be it that he is of my linage. & I telle you / com nomore here / nor no man of Charlemagne / For I promyse you, I shall stryke of 16 the <sup>2</sup>hedes of as many as shall come from hym to me, <sup>3</sup>wythoute ony fayle.<sup>3</sup>

Reynawde replies that he has lost Mawgis through the cruelty of Charlemagne, therefore he shall hang Duke Richard next day.

Whan ogyer the dane sawe Reynawde soo angry, and that he answerde soo proudly, he mer-20 veylled sore / And drewe hymselfe by Reynawde / and sayd to hym / 'Fayr cosin, I praye you that ye wylle shewe to vs Rycharde of normandy / to the ende that we maye telle Charlemagne that we have seen hym.' 24 'Ogyer, I have well vnderstande you,' sayd Reynawde, 'but ye shall never see hym afore that I have hanged hym. And yf Charlemagn be angri wyth me for it / lete him avenge it yf he canne / <sup>1</sup>for I defye hym & all 28 his power;<sup>1</sup> and goo you hens anone! For, by my soule, yf ye abyde here ony lenger, it shall repente you full sore' / And whan the barons sawe that Reynawde was soo fervently wrothe / they durst noo lenger tary there, 32 but toke leve of hym / and wente oute of the cyte / and

Ogyer asks to see the Duke,

Reynawde refuses until he shall see him hung.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. vi. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> car puis que lon este en folie lon la doit maintenir, F. orig. F. viii. back.

wente lightly to the ooste of Charlemagne that awayted after theym. Whan the kynge sawe the barons come, he sayd to theym, 'Lordes, ye be welcome / what 4 tydynges brynge you? have ye not seen Rycharde of normandy?' 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes / 'Reynawde dooth you to wyte, that aslong as he maye ryde vpon bayard / ye shall not have mawgys / for he 8 hathe loste hym by you / And for vengauunce to be taken of the same / Reynawd sendeth you worde by vs, that he shall hange tomorowe rycharde of normandy vpon the gret gate of his towne; and thus shall be doon 12 of all your men that he shall take. and yet he sayeth more / yf he had you aswell as he hathe rychard of normandy / that yf ye wolde not graunte hym peas, ye sholde leve with hym your hede for a pledge.'<sup>1</sup> Whan 16 rowlande herde the wordes that naymes had reported to his vncler charlemagne / he sayd / 'Syre, be not displeased of that I shall telle you / me semeth that ye shall <sup>2</sup> never see the duke Rycharde; and all for your 20 pryde. Syre, we fynde in holy scrypture that god curseth the frute that never is rype / thus shall it be by you, that never wylle rype, nor condescende to noo peas wyth the four sones of aymon, the best knyghtes 24 of the worlde / that so many tymes have praied for it humbly & full pyetously / Wherfore I swere to you vpon all halowes, that yf the duke rycharde be hanged / ye shall lose honour & worship all your liff dayes.' 28 Whan charlemagne herde his newewe rowlande speke thus, that sayd that rycharde of normandy sholde be hanged, he was soo myschevously an angered, that he gnewe the nayles of his handes / for grete wrathe / And 32 ye oughte to wyte that charlemagne was soo angry atte that tyme / that yf he had had ony maner of staffe in his hande / he wolde have gladly smyten rowlande /

Duke Naymes
 relates to Charlemagne how Rey-
 nawde will hang Duke Richard,
 and all who fall
 into his hands.

Roland tells the Emperor that for his pride the Duke will be
 slain.

<sup>1</sup> ne aultre chose nen prendroit, F. orig F. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. vii.

Charlemagne
replies
that Reynawde
dare not hang
the Duke.

But whan he saw that he myght not accomplishe his wylle / he called his barons / and sayd to theym / 'Lordes, ye wene to make me a-ferde wyth your wordes / I am no childe for to be thus abasshed / and 4 soo I swere you by my feythe, that yf Reynawd were soo hardy to doo ony harme vnto richarde of normandy, I sholde hange hym wyth myn owen handes / he & all his linage, that none sholde be lefte a live' /<sup>1</sup> 8

Ryght sore wrothe was the kyng charlemagne whan he herde telle that reynawde wolde make Rycharde the duke of normandy to be hanged / But whan ogyer herde charlemagne swere thus, that sholde 12 hange all the linage of Reynawde / he cowde not absteine himself, but that the teres felle doun fro his eyen ; and thenne he sayd to the bysshop turpyn, 'Syre, what thynke you by our kyng, that sayeth by his grete 16 pryde that he shall hange vs all ; for all that he dothe, procedeth but of enuye & pride / but god sende me deth yf I care for his wrathe ! for if reynaud hathe not lied to vs, he shall <sup>2</sup>doo be hanged to morowe rycharde 20 of normandy in suche a place where as Charlemagne shall mowe see hym hange wyth his eyen' / This hangyng, the duke naymes sawe that the kyng was angry, and he sayd to hym / 'Syre, wyte it that we all be 24 sore abasshed, that ye threte vs of one parte, & reynawd of the other / And I merveylle me not of reynawde, for he is soo wrothe, for by cause that ye have made hym lose mawgys, that noo man myghte be 28 more / And I promyse you, for grete angre he shall make rycharde of normandy to be hanged ; and as to you, namly, he wolde stryke of your hede yf he had you in the cas that he hath rycharde now / and yf he 32 hangeth rycharde, what maye we doo therto / that ye threaten vs somoche therefore / wherfore I counseyll all my

Duke Naymes
again remon-
strates with the Emperour for his conduct towards
the Sons,

<sup>1</sup> ne Il ne se sauroit eschapper en espaigne qui este tant grant, F. orig. G. i.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E. E. vii. back.

felawes that are of the linage of reynawd, that we goo our wayes, and that we lete you shyfte of the werre of the four sones of aymon / 'By god,' sayd thother peres 4 of fraunce, 'naymes speketh well, <sup>1</sup>and he gyveth vs good counseyle' / <sup>1</sup> and is so wroth that he advises the departure of the Barons from the

 war.

Thenne whan Charlemagne sawe his barons soo sore moved / he wyste not what he shold doo, but 8 gaff them leve to wythdrawe theym selfe vnto the morowe, <sup>1</sup>that they sholde retorne to him ; <sup>1</sup> and he hymself went to his bed / but al nyghte he coude not fall a slepe / but wentled in his bed without ony rest / 12 and wyst not what to doo / and whan the daye cam, he rose from his bed, and sent for all hys barons. And whan thei were come, he sayd to theim, 'Lordes, what shall we doo of reynawde, that wylle hange the duke 16 rycharde of normandy afore myn eyen?' 'Syr,' sayd theenne the duke naymes, 'for noughte seketh one counseyll, that will not put it to effecte / why aske ye counseyll, sin that ye wylle doo noo thing but after 20 your owne hede / but, & ye wylle byleve me, I swere you on my feith that all good shal com therof / Sir, make peas with <sup>2</sup>reynawde, and ye shall have the duke rycharde / and also ye shall have the good love of all 24 your men / for there is none but he is wery of the werre / and they have raison.' 'Naymes,' sayd the kyng, 'I wylle not doo it! holde your peas therof, for that shall be the last worde that ever I shall saye' / 28 'Syre,' sayd rowland / 'by my soule ye doo grete wrong / for yf ye suffre the good duke rycharde to be hanged, that somoche hathe loved you & doon grete honour, it shall be to you grete shame ; and soo I swere to you vpon 32 all halowes, that yf I see hange rycharde of normandy, I shall parte out of your oste fro your servyse / and I shall goo soo ferre that ye shall never have helpe of me' / 'Rowlande,' sayd oliver, 'wene not that I shal

The Emperor
 gives his Barons
 leave to withdraw.

Next day he asks
 them what he shall do for Duke
 Richard.

They all advise him to make peace with the
 Sons,

and declare they will depart if he will not consent
 to end the war.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. viii.

abyde after that ye are goon / for the kyng dooth grete wronge to reynawde our cosin' / Full sore an angred
 was the kinge to here thise wordes ; but he helde thenne his peas, & sayd never a worde. And wyte it, all thoost 4 was moved by cause thei fered sore leest reynawde shold make rycharde of normandy to be hanged / for he was wel beloved of the folke of charlemagn / & also he was
 of a grete kynred & a noble linage. 8

This mornyng, thenne, reynawde that was wythin ardein,<sup>1</sup> after that he had herde his masse / he called his thre bredern, & sayd to theym, ' My bredern /
 It gooth full yll wyth vs that we can have noo peas 12
 with charlemagn / but sith it is thus com / by the feyth that I owe to the olde aymon, oure fader, I shall angre him ryght sore / For I am sure, yf he had vs in his handes, he wolde vtterly dystroye vs wythout pyte / 16
 And therefore I am dysposed for to doo the worste that I can agenste hym. For now, afore his eyen, I shall hange y<sup>e</sup> duke Rycharde of Normandy / For I am well sure that Charlemagne shall wexe fyre angry for it, 20 whan he shall see hym' / ' Broder,' sayd alarde, ' I praye you, as moche as <sup>2</sup>I can, that ye wylle not <sup>3</sup>doo as ye saye, For I shall hange hym myselfe yf ye wylle.'
 ' brother,' sayd reynawd, ' I wylle wel.' ' Now com- 24
 maunde,' sayd alarde, ' that the gibet be dressed all hie vpon the gate, that charlemagn & all his oost may see him.' Shortly to speke, reynawd dyde doo make the gybet in suche a place that charlemagne myghte see it 28
 as well as he had be by / And wyte it, that rowlande was the firste man that perceyved it / and whan he sawe this, he began to crye as hie as he myghte /
 ' Syre, sire! now see how they wylle hange the duke 32
 richarde wyth grete shame / alas, he hathe shrewedly employed his tyme in your servyse, And now he is full

Reynawde prepares to hang
 Duke Richard;

the gallows is prepared in sight
 of the Emperor's
 host.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

yll rewarded for it / and also it is a shrewed ensample
 to all them that serve you !' 'Alas,' sayd oliver, 'now shall the goode duke rycharde be hanged wyth grete 4 shame, for I see the gybet righted vp' / 'Holde your peas,' sayd charlemagne, 'they doo all this but for to make me abasshed, and that they myghte have peas wyth me ; but for all this, thei shall not have it / and 8 soo I promyse you they dare doo hym noo harme of his body.' Thus recomforted charlemagne hymself, wenyng that reynawd had not durst hange the duche richarde. This hangynge, rowlande,<sup>1</sup> that had the thyng 12 at herte, behelde alwayes towards the towne, and sawe that men ryghted the ladder to the gybet / thenne sayd he to oliver,<sup>2</sup> 'Ha, oliver,<sup>2</sup> true felawe & good frende, yonder I see the ladder that is set vp all redi for to 16 hang richarde of normandy / full yll he hathe bestowed
 his good servyse wyth charlemagne.' 'Syre oliver,' sayd
 rowland, 'ye saye well trouthe, god save Richarde !'

Roland laments
 over the fate of
 the Duke.

20 After that the ladder was ryghted to the gybet above, vpon the hyghe gate<sup>3</sup> of ardeyne<sup>3</sup> / Reynawde called ten of his folke / and sayd to theym,
 'Galantes, goo fet me the duke rychard / For I wylle that he be hanged Incontynente.' 'Syre,' sayd they 24 'we shall doo your commaundement.' And they wente
 in to the chambre wh[e]re the noble duke of normandy was / and founde hym playng atte the ches wyth yonnet, the sone of Reynawd / and thenne thise men 28 toke hym, and sayd / 'Syre duke, com forth ! for Reynawde hathe commaunded that ye shall be hanged incontynent.' Whan the duke rycharde of normandy herde thise felawes speke thus to hym, he loked vpon 32 theym over the sho[l]der / and wolde not answer to theym, but sayd, 'my fair yonnet, hast you for to

Reynawde tells x
 of his folk to fetch
 the Duke ;

they enter his chamber where he is playing chess with Johanet,

and comma-nd
 him to come with
 them.

<sup>1</sup> oliver, F. orig. G. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Rolant, F. orig. G. ii. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. F.F. i.

abyde after that ye are goon / for the kyng dooth grete
 wronge to reynawde our cosin' / Full sore an angred
 was the kinge to here thise wordes ; but he helde thenne
 his peas, & sayd never a worde. And wyte it, all thoost 4 was moved by cause thei fered sore leest reynawde shold
 make rycharde of normandy to be hanged / for he was wel beloved of the folke of charlemagn / & also he was
 of a grete kynred & a noble linage. 8

This mornynge, thenne, reynawde that was wythin ardein,<sup>1</sup> after that he had herde his masse / he called his thre bredern, & sayd to theym, ' My bredern /
 It gooth full yll wyth vs that we can have noo peas 12
 with charlemagn / but sith it is thus com / by the feyth that I owe to the olde aymon, oure fader, I shall angre him ryght sore / For I am sure, yf he had vs in his handes, he wolde vtterly dystroye vs wythout pyte / 16
 And therefore I am dysposed for to doo the worste that I can agenste hym. For now, afore his eyen, I shall hange y<sup>e</sup> duke Rycharde of Normandy / For I am well
 sure that Charlemagne shall wexe fyre angry for it, 20
 whan he shall see hym' / 'Broder,' sayd alarde, 'I praye you, as moche as <sup>2</sup>I can, that ye wylle not<sup>3</sup> doo
 as ye saye, For I shall hange hym myselfe yf ye wylle.'
 'brother,' sayd reynawd, 'I wylle wel.' 'Now com- 24
 maunde,' sayd alarde, 'that the gibet be dressed all hie
 vpon the gate, that charlemagn & all his oost may see him.' Shortly to speke, reynawd dyde doo make the gybet in suche a place that charlemagne myghte see it 28
 as well as he had be by / And wyte it, that rowlande
 was the firste man that perceyved it / and whan he sawe this, he began to crye as hie as he myghte /
 'Syre, sire! now see how they wylle hange the duke 32
 richarde wyth grete shame / alas, he hathe shrewedly
 employed his tyme in your servyse, And now he is full

Reynawde pre-
 pares to hang
 Duke Richard;

the gallows is
 prepared in sight
 of the Emperor's
 host.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. E.E. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

yll rewarded for it / and also it is a shrewed ensample
 to all them that serve you !' ' Alas,' sayd oliver, ' now shall the goode duke rycharde be hanged wyth grete 4 shame, for I see the gybet righted vp' / ' Holde your peas,' sayd charlemagne, ' they doo all this but for to make me abashed, and that they myghte have peas wyth me ; but for all this, thei shall not have it / and 8 soo I promyse you they dare doo hym noo harme of
 his body.' Thus recomforted charlemagne hymself, wenyng that reynawd had not durst hange the duche
 richarde. This hangynge, rowlande,<sup>1</sup> that had the thyng 12 at herte, behelde alwayes towarde the towne, and sawe that men rygthed the ladder to the gybet / thenne sayd
 he to oliver,<sup>2</sup> ' Ha, oliver,<sup>2</sup> true felawe & good frende, yonder I see the ladder that is set vp all redi for to 16 hang richarde of normandy / full yll he hathe bestowed
 his good servyse wyth charlemagne.' ' Syre oliver,' sayd
 rowland, ' ye saye well trouthe, god save Richarde !'

Roland laments
 over the fate of
 the Duke.

After that the ladder was rygthed to the gybet 20 Above, vpon the hyghe gate<sup>3</sup> of ardeyne<sup>3</sup> / Rey-
 nawde called ten of his folke / and sayd to theym,
 ' Galantes, goo fet me the duke rychard / For I wylle
 that he be hanged Incontynente.' ' Syre,' sayd they 24 ' we shall doo your commaundement.' And they wente
 in to the chambre wh[e]re the noble duke of normandy
 was / and founde hym playng atte the ches wyth
 yonnet, the sone of Reynawd / and thenne thise men 28 toke hym, and sayd / ' Syre duke, com forth ! for Rey-
 nawde hathe commaunded that ye shall be hanged
 incontynent.' Whan the duke rycharde of normandy
 herde thise felawes speke thus to hym, he loked vpon 32 theym over the sho[l]der / and wolde not answer to theym, but sayd, ' my fair yonnet, hast you for to

Reynawde tells x
 of his folk to fetch
 the Duke ;

they enter his chamber where
 he is playing
 chess with Jounnet,

and commaund
 him to come with
 them.

<sup>1</sup> oliver, F. orig. G. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Rolant, F. orig. G. ii. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. F.F. i.

playe, for it is tyme that we goo to dyner' / And whan these galantes sawe that rycharde of normandy answered noo worde vnto theym / they began to take hym on everi side, & said to hym / ' Aryse vp, duke rycharde / 4 for in dyspyte of charlemagn that loved you somoche, ye shall be hanged now' / Whan the duk rycharde saw that these sergautes had hym thus by the arme / and helde in his hande a lady of yvery, wherwyth he wolde 8 have gyven a mate to yonnet / he wythdrewe his arme, & gaff to one of the sergautes suche a stroke wyth it in to y<sup>e</sup> forhede that he made him tomble over & over at his fete. and thenne he toke a roke, & smote a nother 12 wythall vpon his hede that he all to broste it to the brayn. and after that, he smote another of them wyth his fiste so grete a stroke that he breake his necke, and felle deed to therthe / And whan the other sawe theyr 16 felawes thus arayed, they began to renne awaye. And whan rycharde sawe theym goo, he cryed to them :
 ' Fle, rybawdes, goddys curse have you / come not here again' / And whan he had said soo, he sayd to yonnet, 20 that was all abashed / ' Playe well, my childe / for ye shall be mated / I trowe these truautes were dronken, that thus wolde have had me awaye, but I have well gyven them their parte.' And whan yonnet herde 24 him saye so / he durst not speke agenst<sup>1</sup> it, by cause he sawe hymselfe soo sore an angred / but played wyth his roke that he sholde not be mated / but he myght not save the mate / Whan the duke rycharde had mated 28 yonnet, he called a yoman that was there / and sayd to hym / ' Goo, take these carles that lien here deed, and caste them oute at the wyndowes' / The yoman dyde incontynente his commaundement. For he durst 32 doo noo thyng there agenst, for doubt he sholde have fare as the other, that he had seen slayen in his presence /

The Duke slays
three men,

and the rest
escape hastily.

Duke Richard
finishes his game
of chess with Jonnet,

then orders the dead bodies of Reynawde's men
to be thrown out of the windows.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. i. back.

Alarde was the same tyme oute of the castell, and awayted that rycharde were brought to hym, that he mighte goo hange hym / and he saw how the deed 4 were cast downe oute of the wyndowes of the towre / wherof he was wrothe, and wente to reynawde, & sayd to hym / 'Syre, I knowe that the duke rycharde wylle not lete hymselfe be take. and ryght dere it shall coste 8 or he be broughte to the gybet / see how he hathe slayne your men / and how he hath caste theym oute atte the towre at the wyndowes' / 'Brother,' sayd reynawde,
 'the duke rycharde is to be doubted in his takynge / 12 lete vs goo to the helpe of our folke, for elles they ben in daungeur of their lives' / And thus as they wolde have goon / they that he had sente for to take rycharde came there vnto hym. and whan they saw reynawde, 16 they sayd to hym, 'By god, sire, the duke rycharde shall not be take wythoute grete stryfe, For he hathe slayne thre of our felawes / and whan we saw that / we fledd awaye, and lefte hym playeng wyth your sone 20 yonnet.' Whan reynawd vnderstode this / he was ryght angry for it, and sware by all halowes, that yf he had not peas that day wyth charlemagne / rycharde of normandy sholde not scape hangyng, what somever it 24 sholde hap therof / And whan he had sayd these wordes, he went towarde the towre where richard <sup>1</sup>was / and his bredern went wyth him / for thei wold not leve him.
 and also XL men well armed, for to take the duke 28 rycharde, yf he wolde defende hymself / whan reynawd was come to the gate of the towre, he made it to be opened, & went in, and whan he was wythin, he sayd to the duke rycharde, 'Vassall, why have you slayn my 32 men?' 'cosin,' sayd richarde, 'now here me, if it playe you / It is trouthe that X rybawdes cam here ryght now / and layd hande vpon me; and they sayd, that ye had thus commaunded theym / whiche thyng

Alarde complains of this treatment
to Reynawde.

The men arrive
from the Duke,

and tell Reynawde
how three of them
have been slain.

The Sons all depart in anger
for the chamber of Richard.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. ii.

I coude not byleve. For & ye had sayd soo, it shoulde have be spoken contrary. so made I them to flee oute of this chamber in grece haste and sawe of them I wote not how many. be cause I myghte not absteyn 4 me<sup>1</sup>, and yf it semeth you that I have don amys, soo take ye amendes vpon me. But I wyll wel, that ye wite that I woulde not have don to you suche a shame as ye have don to me, yf I had had you as ye have me. 8 reynawde, yf I have don amys in ovy manner / I am redy to make amendes for it but ye knowe it is no reyson that no carle shall indige suche a man as I am / for that longeth to a kyng, to a duke, or to an erle. the 12 custume is suche ye wote it well. Yf the kerles have harme<sup>2</sup> be it that have medled theym wyth it, none ought to blame me therefore' / 'By god, rycharde,' sayd theyne reynaud, 'ye shall saye what ye wyll, but trust 16 me yf I have not this daye peas wyth charlemagne, I shall make you to be hangid in suche a place where that charlemagn may see you'<sup>3</sup>. And whan reynawd had sayd this, he made richard to be take / and made 20 his hande to be bounde fast, and after sayd to him, 'I telle you, on my feyth, that if I have not this daye my peas wyth charlemain, that for no preching that ye can make, nor for noo man of the worlde, I shall not 24 leve, but I shall make you deye a shamfull deth.' 'By my 'soule, reynawd,' sayd richard, 'I fere me not that ye shall doo that ye saye, for ye dare not doo it as long as charlemagn is a live' / Whan reynawde herde the 28 duke richard speke thus / he was so wrothe that he loked all blacke in the face for angre / and theyne he said to richarde, 'by that god that made me, ye shalle soone knowe what I dare do, & whether I am cowarde 32

Duke Richard
 defends his conduct.

Reynawde declares he shall be hung unless peace
 is concluded with
 Charlemagne;

<sup>1</sup> Puis les fis jecter hors de sceans par ses fenestres, F. orig. G. iii. back.

<sup>2</sup> harmt, orig.

<sup>3</sup> et si ne vous pour donner ayde ne secoura, F. orig. G. iii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. F.F. ii. back.

or hardy' / And thenne he made hym to be brought whereas the galohous were righted / and thenne he sayd to hym / 'Rychard, I wyl that of two thynges<sup>1</sup> ye 4 chose thone yf ye lust / that is, that ye make me have peas with charlemagn, or elles that ye helpe me agenst him / and, but yf ye doo this / wyte that I shall make you hanged & strangled, and I shall not leve you for 8 all this that ye be of my linage. And yf ye wylle take my parte agenste the kyng Charlemagn, ye shall be deliverde forthwyth.'<sup>2</sup> ¶ 'By god, reynawd,' sayd thenne rycharde, 'now have I herde you speke like a 12 childe / wene ye that I shall do that ye saye for fere of deth? certes, nay. for the kyng charlemagn is my sovereyn lorde, and of him I holde myn herytage / and thoughe he dothe wronge to leve me here / I oughte 16 not to faile hym therefore<sup>3</sup> / But, & ye wylle do well / lene me a messenger, the whiche I shall sende to charlemagn & to his barons, for to wyte yf he be disposed for to lete me deye here shamfully.' 'By my feyth, 20 rycharde,' sayd reynaud, 'ye speke now wysely' / and thenne he called one of his folke, & sayd to hym,
 'Goo & do that rycharde of normandy shall telle you.'
 'My frende,' sayd rycharde to the messenger, 'ye shall 24 goo to charlemain, & tell him on my behalve / that I praye hym as to my sovereyn lorde, that yf ever he loved me, that he wylle pardonne reynaude. And I shall take vpon me to make amendes for hym / yf he 28 hathe in ony thyng mysdoon agenste hym / as the twelve peres of fraunce shall iudge him / And yf he wylle not doo soo, that he<sup>4</sup> wylle loke hederwarde /
 And he shall see me hange shamfully / Of that other 32 parte, ye shall saye to rowland, & to all my felawes, he has Duke Richard brought to the gallows.

Duke Richard
asks for leave to send a messenger
to Charlemagne.

Reynawde grants
his request,

and Richard commands the messenger to pray the Emperor for peace
with the Sons,

<sup>1</sup> thtnges, orig.

<sup>2</sup> car puis apres feray grant dommage a charlemaigne se vous me volez ayder de tout vostre pouvoir, F. orig. G. iv.

<sup>3</sup> mais le tort quil aura de moy il le trouvera au jour du Jugement, F. orig. G. iv.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. F.F. iii.

and tell Roland
and the 12 Peers
that it will be unworthy of them to let him be hung.

The messenger
goes to Charlemagne and
delivers his message.

Roland implores
the Emperor not to suffer Duke Richard to be
hung:

that yf ever they loved me, that thei wylle shew to charlemagn that it shal be a grete shame to hym, yf he suffreth that I deye thus shamfully' / 'syre,' sayd the messenger, 'doubt not, I shall doo your message well' / 4
After these thynges thus sayd / the messenger wente oute of the towne to the oost of charlemagn, the whiche he founde<sup>1</sup> full of thought / And whan he sawe him / he made hym reuerence / and after sayd to hym, 'Syre, 8
<sup>2</sup> wyte it that richarde the duke of normandy recomendeth hym humbly to you / and prayeth you as hertly as he can, & as to his sovereyn lorde, that yf ever ye loved hym, that ye wylle shewe it now / for he mystreth 12 well of it / For yf reynawd have not peas this daye, torne your sighte vpon yonder gate, after that I am com home agen / and ye shall see him hange shamfully' / And whan the messenger had sayd this to the 16 kyng / he loked abowte him, and sawe the twelve peres / and sayd to theim, Fyrst to rowlande / and after to the other / 'Lordes, the duke rycharde prayeth you, rowlande, and all ye in generall, that yf ye ever 20 loved hym, that ye wylle praye Charlemagne that he wylle make peas wyth reynawd, or otherwyse he is deed without mercy' / And whan rowlande herde this, he spake fyrste to the kyng, and sayd, ' Syre, for god I 24 praye you / suffre not that ye be blamed. Ye knowe well that how the duke rycharde is one of the beste knyghtes of the worlde, and he hathe best served you at your nede. For god, sire, make peas wyth rey- 28 nawde / for to recover suche a knyght as is the duke rycharde of normandy / for grete shame it were to you for to lete hym thus deye.' And whan the duke naymes, and the bysshop turpyn, ogyer, escouffe, the 32 sone of oedon / and olivere of vyen herde <sup>3</sup>Rowlande

<sup>1</sup> en son pavillon, F. orig. G. iv.

<sup>2</sup> dieu vous saul aussi la belle compaigne, F. orig. G. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. F.F. iii. back.

speke soo, They beganne to saye to the kynge / 'By god, sire, yf ye wylle not make peas with reynawd for to recover our felawe the duke Rycharde of normandy / 4 ye shall lose moche by it / For wythin shorte tyme ye shall see your londe dystroyed afore you' /

all the 12 Peers
plead likewise
for Richard's life.

Whan Charlemagne sawe that his peres were thus moved for love of Rycharde of normandy / 8 and that they accorded all for to make peas / he wende for to have goon oute of his mynde / And sware by grete wrathe as a man mad, that Reynawde sholde never have peas with hym / but yf he had mawgys to doo his 12 wylle wyth hym. And whan he had sayd so, he toured hym towarde the xii peres of fraunce, and sayd to theym,
 'My frendes, take noo fere for Rycharde of normandy /
 For Reynawde sholde sooner lete to be drawe one 16 of his eyes oute / than he sholde do him ony harme or shame' / 'Syre,' sayd the bysshop Turpyn / 'ye are besyde your selfe / For ye see all redy that Rycharde is iudged to dethe' / 'Bysshop,' sayd Charlemagne, 'ye 20 speke well folyshly. Knowe ye not well that Rycharde of normandy is of the linage of Reynawde. I promyse you he dare not doo hym harme by noo maner' / 'By god, syre,' sayd Oliver, 'ye have well payed vs by 24 your sayenge. Why dare not Reynawde hange the duke Rycharde? For I knowe somoche by him that, yf he had you as he hathe Rycharde / He durste well hange yourselfe and all vs.' 'Syre Oliver,' sayd the 28 messenger / 'I swere you on my feyth, that Reynawde ceased not all this daye to praye the duke Richarde that he wolde forsake charlemagne / and he sholde save his life, wherof the duke Richarde of normandy wolde doo 32 noo thyng / but spake grete wordes to Reynawde.' And whan the messenger had sayd thus / he sayd to the kynge, 'Syre, gyve me leve to goo, of it playse<sup>1</sup> you, and telle me what I shall saye to rychard of normandy from you.'

Charlemagne, in great wrath,
swears he will not make peace unless Mawgis is delivered up to
him.

The messenger
asks leave to return.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F. F. iv.

Charlemagne sends him back without an answer to his appeal, and will not believe that Reynawde dare hang the Duke.

'Frende,' sayd Charlemagne, 'ye shall telle hym on my behalve, that he put noo doubte in noo thyng, For Reynawde shall not be soo hardy to doo hym ony harme.' Whan the messenger, that was a wyse knyght, 4 vnderstode charlemagne, he cowde not absteyn hymselfe, but he sayd to hym / 'Syre emperour, ye be overproude; but I promyse you that reynawde setteth lityll by your pride / and I make you sure that alarde 8 wayteth well for my comynge agen / For he wolde not take a hundred thousande pounce for to leve rychard, but that he sholde hange hym his owne handes' / And assone as he had sayd soo / he went his wayes wyth- 12 oute ony leve takynge of the kyng, streyghte to ardeyn.

The great wrath of the Peers, because of the anger of Charlemagne.

Whan the xii peres sawe the messenger goo wyth an ill answer / they were full sory for it. 'Ha, 16 godys,' sayd ogyer, 'how the devyll the kyng is felle, & harde of herte / that wylle nother peas nor concorde / I am well sure that his pryde shall be cause of a shamfull dethe to rychard.' 'Oger,' sayd rowland, 'ye saye 20 trouthe, but, & I see him hang, god never helpe me at my nede yf I abyde after it wyth charlemagne whiles I live' / and whan he had sayd soo, he went to thother peres, & sayd to theim, 'Lordes, what shall we doo / 24 shall we lete thus rycharde be hanged? our felawe, one of the best knyghtes of the worlde, & moost hardy / for thrughe his prowes he is there as he is. Never noo fowle worde issued oute of his mouth / alas, we shall 28 now see hym hange wyth grete shame. certes, yf we suffre it, we ben shamed for ever.'

Roland determines to leave the service of the Emperor;

Rowland,<sup>1</sup> as a man dysperate, cam thenne to the kyng all wrothe, & sayd to hym in this maner / 32 'Syr, by my soule, I goo now oute of your servyse wythout your leve.' and after he sayd to ogyer, 'Oger, what wyll ye doo / wyll ye com <sup>2</sup>wyth me / and leve

<sup>1</sup> Roluand, orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. F.F. iv. back.

this devyll here / For he ys all beside hymselfe <sup>1</sup> / ' By my hede, rowlande,' sayed ogger, ' ye saye trouthe / I shall never in my liffe abyde wyth hym / but I shall 4 go gladely wyth you where ye wyll. And I shall not leve you for no man in the worlde / syth that he suffreth that suche a valiaunte man shall deye, as is the duke Rycharde of normandy, that he loved somoche.
 8 He sholde soone doo soo by vs / for he is a man that hathe in him nother love nor pyte.' And whan Olyver of vyenne vnderstode these wordes, he stode vp / and said / ' Lordes, I wyll goo wyth you / I have dwelled 12 here to longe.' ' And I also,' sayd the duke Naymes / and like wyse Escouff the sone of oedon / And whan the byshop turpyn sawe this / he casted a grete sighe, and sayd, ' By my feythe, Charlemagn, It is evyll to 16 serve you / For of gode servyse ye doo yelde an evyll rewarde / as it is well seen now by the duke Rychard of normandy, that hathe served you so well and so truly / And yf I dwelle ony lenger with you, I praye 20 god punyssh me for it.'

Ogier also threatens to leave him,

and other of his Peers,

because of his treachery to the good Duke.

Thenne whan Charlemagne saw his peres that were soo sore moved wyth angre agenste hym / he sayd to theym / ' Lordes, have noo doubte of noo thyng / 24 For the duke Richarde shall have no harme.' ' Syre,' said the duke naymes, ' ye doo grete wronge for to saye soo / for a fole never byleveth <sup>2</sup>tyll he fele sore.<sup>2</sup> wene you to make vs foles wyth your wordes / We see the 28 galohous made vp for to hange our felaw / wherfore I tell you that a mischef take me if I dwel wyth you ony lenger.' whan the duke Naymes had sayd soo, he went oute of the pavyllion of charlemagn, and in likewise all 32 the peres of fraunce wyth him / and went in to his tent, the whiche he made to be pulde doun inconty-

All the Peers
 depart from the host of Charle-
 magne,

<sup>1</sup> Pour ce que luy avons tant obey et tant de fois prie et pour ce il sen tient si fier et si orgueilleux, F. orig. G. v. back.
<sup>2-2</sup> tant quil a pris, F. orig.

ment / And whan they of the oost of Charlemagn sawe that, they were sore <sup>1</sup>affrayed. And ye oughte to wyte that they were so sore moved wythin a lityll while, that there abode in the oste of charlemagn not one <sup>4</sup> baron nor knyghte, but oonly the pour simple gentyllmen / and comyn people. Whan Rowlande sawe this, he wente on his wayes wyth the other peres / And wyte it, atte that hour the oost of Charlemagne was <sup>8</sup> made lesse than it was afore by XL thousande men.

which is reduced by XL thousand men.

Reynawde, that was vpon the hyghe gate of Ardeyn, sawe soo grete nombre of folke comyng togyder / soo called he to hym the messenger, that was but comen <sup>12</sup> fro charlemagn / and sayd to hym in this maner / 'Come here, messenger, telle me what Charlemagne hathe sayd to you.' 'Syre,' sayd the messenger, 'wyte it that ye have myssed of peas / For Charlemagne wyll <sup>16</sup> noo thynge of it, But he sendeth you worde by me, that ye be not soo hardy (vpon the eyen of your hede) to doo ony harme to the duke Rycharde of normandy' / And whan he had sayd this / he tourned hym towarde the <sup>20</sup> duke Rycharde, and sayd to hym, 'Syre duke, now maye ye knowe how moche Charlemagne loveth you / Wyte it for certeyn that ye gate nother helpe nor socours of hym ; and for the love of you, Rowlande and <sup>24</sup> all the other peres of fraunce ben full sore an angred wyth hym. For ye maye perceyve it well by their tentes that ben pulled down / And soo I am sure that the moost parte of the oost shall departe for the love of <sup>28</sup> you / And soo shall not abyde there, but oonly the erle Guynellon and his linage / For theyr tentes ben ryghted, and all thother broughte down' / Whan reynawde wyste that the frenshmen were angrī wyth Charlemagn for the <sup>32</sup> love of the duke rychard of normandy / he chaunged his corage, and cowde not kepe hym from wepyng. And after he tourned hym towarde Rycharde of nor-

The messenger relates to Reynawde Charlemagne's answer to him.

Reynawde relents of his conduct towards the Duke.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. v.

mandy, and sayd to hym, <sup>1</sup>‘for god, my cosin, I praye you to pardonne me the grete shame that I have doon to you’ / ‘Reynawde,’ sayd Richarde, ‘I blame you 4 not, for I wote well ye can not doo therto / For the grete pryde & cruelnes of Charlemagn is causer of all this.’ Whan reynawde had cryed mercy to the duke Rycharde / he vnbounde him; and alarde & guycharde 8 cam to helpe him / for they were all glad that richarde was deliverde / notwythstandynge afore that they were dysposed for to make hym deye shamfully / And whan they had doon, Reynawd sayd / ‘cosyn rychard, lene 12 vpon this walle, and we shal loke what charlemagn wylle doo’ / ‘Syre,’ sayd the duke rycharde, ‘ye saye wel, lete vs see it’ /

and craves his pardon.

The Sons rejoice
over the release of
Richard.

16 Whan Charlemagn sawe that his barons went awaye as it is sayd / he was sory for it, that he wexed almoste madde all quycke for angre, and helde a demye launce in hys hande, the whiche beganne to gnawe wyth his teeth, so angry he was. And whan 20 his wrathe was a lityll goon / he called a knyghte, and sayd to hym / ‘Now lighte on horsback lightly / and ryde after rowlande & after the other barons, & telle theim in my behalve, that they com speke wyth me, 24 and I shall be demened as they wylle theymself / and that I shalle pardonne reynawd yf they wylle come agen to me.’ ‘Syre,’ sayd the knyghte, ‘blessed be god, that hath brought you to this mynde.’ And 28 thenne this knyghte toke an horse, and rode hastely after the twelve peers of fraunce.<sup>2</sup> And whan Reynawde, that was wyth the duke rychard vpon the gate of ardeyne, apperceyved this,<sup>3</sup> he sayd to the duke of 32 normandy / ‘cosin, I see come a knyghte<sup>4</sup> oute of the

Charlemagne
sende a knight
after his Peers to beg their return.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> si roydement quil sembloit que la terre deust fendre dessouls les piedz de son cheval, F. orig. G. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> chevalier qui cheuavchoit si roydement, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> moult vistrement, F. orig.

pavyllion of charlemagn / I byleve that he gooth to the twelve peres of Fraunce for to make theym to retourne agayne / I wene we shall <sup>1</sup>have this daye peas, and god byfore / 'Syre,' sayd Richard,<sup>2</sup> 'ye shall have peas 4 mawgre all them that letteth it / I oughte to love derely my felawes that ben cause to kepe me from dethe / and also to have peas.' Wyte it that the knyghte rode so faste that he overtoke Rowland / and all the 8 other peres, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, the kynge sendeth you worde by me that ye wyll retourne agayne / and he shall pardonne reynawde for the love of you / And for goddys love come lightly / For he 12 never lefte wepyng syth that ye wente your waye from hym.' 'Naymes,' sayd Rowland, 'lete vs retourne agayn / For I hold the peas made / wherof this sorowfull werre shal faylle that hathe lasted soo 16 longe.' Whan the duke Naymes herde Rowlande saye soo / he was glad of it, and Ioyned his handes towarde heven, and sayd / 'Good lorde Ihesus, blessed be the tyme that it hathe playсед for to tourne the corage of 20 our kyng / and that this vnhappy werre is broughte atte an ende.' And whan the duke naymes had sayd this / they returned agayn towarde charlemagn.

The knight
 delivers his message,

and they all go back to Charle-
 magne.

Reynawde perceives their
 return,

and hopes that peace may be accorded with
 them.

And whan reynawd apperceyved that the twelve 24 peres wente agayn to Charlemagne / he sayd to the duke Rychard of normandy, 'Cosyn, the barons retourne agayne / I by-leve that the peas shall be made, and that we shall mowe well goo soone at our liberte. 28 now shall reynawd may say that I & my bredern ben at his commaundemente / and shall be as longe as we ben men an live.' Well gladde were the barons on the one parte / and of the other, By cause that god had 32 suffred that the peas sholde be made / And whan charlemagn sawe his barons come agen, he went agenste theym & sayd / 'Bi god, my lordes, ye are welle full

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. vi.

<sup>2</sup> Reynawde, orig.

of grete pryde that ye make me to be com peaisible 1 wyth reynaud<sup>1</sup> agenst my wyl; ye knowe that I have hated him somoche that I maye not see him, <sup>2</sup>but I 4 shall be angry by cause of his pryde that is soo grete.

Wherfore, yf ye wylle that I make peas wyth him, I wyll that he goo into the holy londe pourly clothed on fote / And soo I wylle have his horse bayarde. And I shall 8 retourne agayne to his bretherne all their livelode oute of my handes. Therefore, yf thus he wylle doo / I shall falle to peas, and accorde wyth him, and elles not. For I make myn a vowe to god that I shall never do other-12 wyse therin / than I telle you now. And therefore loke well whiche of you shall doo this message.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes / 'I shall goo to Reynawde wyth a good wylle / yf it be your playsure that I goo 16 to hym.' 'Naymes,' sayd Charlemagne / 'It playseth me well' / And thenne Incontynent the duke Naymes rode to ardeyne<sup>3</sup> / And whan Reynawde saw hym come, he knewe hym well / and wente hym agenst / and soo 20 dyde the duke rycharde / and all the brethern of Reynawde / Whan the duke Naymes sawe the noble barons come agenste hym, he lighted from his horse anone / and wente and kyssed theym all, and after he 24 had doon soo, he sayd / 'Reynawde / Charlemagne sendeth me to you with his gretynge' / 'God yelde hym,' sayd Reynawde / 'Now have I that I have desired soo longe / Naymes, shall I have peas?' 'Ye,' 28 sayd the duke naymes, 'vndre a condycyon / whiche
 I shall telle you. It is that ye must goo pourly clothed, and beggyn your brede for goddys sake in to the holy londe, and soo shall ye leve bayarde wyth charle-32 magne / And this doon ye shall have peas / And he shall gyve agayn your heritages to your brethern.'
 'Duke Naymes,' sayd Reynawde, 'ye be ryght welcome /

Charlemagne dictates to his Peers
 his terms of peace
 with Reynawde.

Duke Naymes
 rides to Arden
 with the tidings
 of peace;

he delivers his message to Rey-
 nawde,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. F.F. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

who promises to fulfil the Emperor's commands.

Duke Naymes and Richard rejoice over his concessions.

Roland admires the goodness of Reynawde, who will sacrifice himself for his brethren and his folk.

Naymes presents Bayard to the Emperor;

he tells him how well Duke Richard fareth.

And I promyse you that I am redy to doo the commaundemente of the kyng. And yf he wylle have of me ony thyng more by ony wyse, I shall in every poynt fulfyll his wylle if it be possyble / <sup>1</sup>for me to doo 4 it / Now shall I be a goode trewaunt / for I can well aske brede whan me nedeth' / Whan the duke Naymes herde Reynawde speke thus, he was well gladde of it, and so was the duke Rycharde, that they sawe the 8 noble Reynawd agreed to the wylle of Charlemagne / soo moche as for to be-come a poure begger for to have peas. And after that Reynawde was thus accorded herto, he went into his stable and toke bayarde, and 12 deliverde hym to the duke Naymes / and thenne he toke his baner, and bare it on high vpon the highe towre in token of peas. And whan Charlemagne sawe the baner of Reynawde, he shewed it to rowlande / 16
'Ha god,' sayd Rowlande / 'how meke is Reynawde, and good of kynde, to have made peas in this maner of wyse. Blessed be Ihesus that hathe gyven hym that wylle for to goo now a fote, wherof I playne hym 20 sore' / 'Rowlande,' sayd ogyer / 'Reynawde is a lambe full of mekenes / and in him are all the gode condycyons that a knyghte oughte to have.' This hangynge, came there the duke naymes that broughte bayarde 24 wyth hym / and presented hym to charlemagne / and sayd to hym / 'Syre, Reynawde is redy for to doo all that ye have commaunded hym / and he shal departe to morow yf ye wyll, syth your playsure is soo.' 'I 28 wylle well,' sayd charlemagne / 'but telle me where is the duke Rycharde, For I wylle knowe it.' 'Syre,' sayd the duke Naymes / 'wyte that the duke Rycharde fareth well, and is abyden wyth Reynawde / for he 32 wylle conveye hym whan he gooth' / And wyte that reynawde, thys hangynge, made grete chere wyth his folke at his case, and after sayd to theym / 'Lordes /

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. vii.

I beseche you be not sory that I goo / for I have made this peas more for you than for me. I praye you that ye holde well togyder till I com agen.' And whan he 4 had sayd this to them / he wente to his chambre, & 1 vnclouted hymselfe from his goode raymentes / and caste vpon him a pour mantell, and a payer of bygge shone wel clouted / and made be broughte to hym a 8 palster well yrened for to bere in his hande. And ye muste wyte that the duke rycharde was styлле wyth hym, to whome reynawde commended his wyfe and hys chyl dren / and all his brethern / And that he wolde 12 praye the kynge that he sholde. have theym for re-comended / And whan he had arrayed hymselfe so he came towarde the halle to the duchesse hys wyfe.

Reynawde clothes
 himself in poor
 garments,

and commends
 his wife and children to the care of Duke
 Richard.

16 Whan the noble duchesse clare sawe her husbonde soo arayed in his beggers clothyng / she toke suche sorowe for it that she felle down in a swonne to the erthe as she had be deed. And whan reynawde saw her falle, he ranne for to take her vp / and after 20 sayd to her, ' Lady, for god take it not soo sore at your herte / For I shal soone come agen, and god byfore / And wyth you shall my brethern abyde that shall serve you as theyr lady / And soo I telle you that I am so 24 glad of the peas, that me semeth that I am come agen all redy / Madame, my dere wyfe, I praye god kepe you from all evylles' / And with thys he kissed her full swetly / and thenne he toke on his waye. And 28 whan the duchesse sawe hym go, she toke for it soo grete sorowe that she swouned agen / and abode thus a longe while, that all her gentylwymen wene she had ben dead / And after she was come agen to herselfe 32 she made grete mone for her lorde reynawde. For she scartched her face / and pulled her heres from her hede for grete sorow / And whan she had made soo moche sorowe / she sayd, ' O gode husbonde reynawde, whos

The Duchesse
 swoons with sorrow at her husband's departure;

and mourns his loss with great grief.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. vii. back.

like is not in all the worlde of goodnes / god be wyth you / For I wote wel that I shall never see you.' And whan she had sayd these wordes she went in to her chambre, & toke all her noble raymentes & caste them <sup>4</sup> <sup>1</sup> in a fyre; and whan they were all brente, she toke a poure smocke, and caste it <sup>2</sup> abowte her / And sayd she sholde never were no other clothes tyll she sawe her lorde husbände agen. 8

The three Sons with Duke Richard convey Reynawde on his way to the Holy Land;

he begs them to return and comfort the Duchesse.

Alarde embraces him in great sorrow.

Duke Richard vows to protect and befriend the Sons until Reynawde returns to them.

After that reynawd had taken leve of his wyfe / he departed. the duke rychard, his bredern, and his folke conveied hym a grete waye / alwayes spekyng that it was pyte to here / and whan reynawd thoughte <sup>12</sup> that they had goon ferre ynough with him, he tordned him towarde them, & sayd, 'Lordes, I praye you humbly that ye retorne home agen / for aslong as ye be wyth me I am not at my ease / goo your waye in the <sup>16</sup> name of god, & recomforte my wife the duchesse, that wepeth so sore. & to you, my bredern, I comende her & my children also.' Wyte it that whan reynawde had sayd this / there was none that cowde take leve of him, <sup>20</sup> soo full of sorrowe they were / except alarde, that sayd to him, 'My dere broder, I praye you hertly that ye come shortly agen / for your departyng is so hevy to me that I trowe I shall deye for sorow' / and whan <sup>24</sup> alard had sayd soo, he embrased his brother, & toke leve of hym, makyngre grete sorow. and so dyde rycharde of normandy, to whome reynawd sayd / 'my cosin, I comende you ones my wyfe agen, & my children / and <sup>28</sup> all my bredern, For they ben of your blode; well ye knowe it.' 'Reynawd,' sayd the duke rycharde / 'I promyse you, & swere as a knyghte, that I shall helpe & deffende theym agenst all men except agenst the <sup>32</sup> kyng; and doubt not for theym, for thei shall want noo thyng.' ¶ Now levethe the history to speke of Reynawd, that went to the holy londe arayed as ye have herde /

<sup>1</sup> Fol. F.F. viii.    <sup>2</sup> hit, orig.

And retorneth to speke of hys brethern, how they came to the kynge Charlemagne / wyth the duke rycharde of normandy /

CHAPTER XXIII.

4 ¶ How after that reinaude was departed fro ar-dein<sup>1</sup> to make his viage beyonde see clothed pourli as a pilgrim,<sup>2</sup> asking<sup>3</sup> his mete for god sake, the duke of normandy toke alarde,<sup>4</sup> 8 guycharde, & rychard / and brought [t]hem wyth him to charlemagne / whiche receyved them honourably / and toke vp his siege / and went agen to parys. But whan he came 12 to the cite of lege, vpon the ryver of meuze / he made bayarde to be caste in it / with a mylle stone at the necke of hym. But men sayen that baiard scaped oute / and 16 that he is a live yet in the forest of ardeyn.

In this party sheweth the history, that whan reynaude had put hymselfe to the waye as ye have herde / Richarde of normandy & his brethern came agen to 20 ardeyn,<sup>1</sup> full sory<sup>5</sup> for reynawd<sup>5</sup> / where as they founde the good duchesse clare, that made grete sorowe<sup>5</sup> for her lordes departynge.<sup>5</sup> And whan they were come agen there / the duche richard toke the duchesse by the 24 hande, and began to recomforte her / and soo many fayr wordes he sayd vnto her that she slaked a lityll her sorowe / and after this, the duke rycharde sayd to the brethern of reynawd in this maner / ‘Lordes, goo 28 make you redy, and we shall goo to charlemagn.’ ‘Sir,’ sayd the thre brethern / ‘lete vs, whan it playse you.’

Duke Richard and the three brethern
return to Arden.

The Duke comforts the poor Duchess.

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> pilgrim, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. F.F. viii. back.

<sup>4</sup> baiart, F. orig.      <sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

and thenne they went, & toke on the beste clothyng that they had; And I promyse you they were thre fayr knyghtes. and after they were well appareylled / they mounted eche of theym vpon a palfrey of hye 4 price, right fayr, without ony armes / And for to speke shortely, they issued oute of ardein,<sup>1</sup> & cam to the pavylion of charlemagn / and whan the kyng sawe them, he was right glad, Soo commaunded all his 8 barons that they sholde goo agenste them / 'Ha, god,' sayd rowland / 'now comen the thre brethern well sorry / certes, they haue a cause / for they have loste theyr helpe, socour, & hope. Now I see that the duke 12 richard cometh with them / wherof he dooth wel / for he is their kennesman.'

The Sons and Duke Richard depart for the tent of Charlemagne;

<sup>2</sup>Ye oughte to wyte that the thre bredern of reynawde came to the pavylion of charlemagne 16 welle honestly arayed. and whan they were afore the kyng, thei kneled humbly at his fete / and alarde speke firste, & sayd / 'Syre, reynawd our broder recomendeth him humbly to your good grace, and salveth you as his 20 soverayne lorde / and he sendeth you Rycharde, the duke of normandy, whiche ye see here; and soo he prayeth you that ye wylle have vs for recomended / for he hathe taken his waye towarde the holy londe for 24 taccomplyshe your commaundement.' 'Frende,' said the kyng charlemagn, 'ye be ryght welcom / Syth that it playseth our lorde that we shall be frendes, I shall doo for you, and shall brynge you all to honour, 28 as it aperteyneth to suche knyghtes as ye ben / And yf god wylle bringe reynawd sauf agen from his vyage, I shall holde hym as dere as I doo myn owne newew rowlande / for he is replenyshed wyth grete worthynes' / 32 'Syre,' sayd rycharde, 'god brynge hym agen!' Whan the kyng had thus spoken wyth the bredern of reynawde / he cam to the duke richarde of normandy, & they all kneel before the Emperor, and Alarde tells him how Reynawde has departed for the Holy Land.

Charlemagne receives their tidings graciously;

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. i.

kyssed him more than X tymes / and whan he had feested hym ynoughe, he sayd to hym / 'Duke richarde, I praye you that ye wyll telle me what 4 pryson gaaff you reynawde, and what metes for to ete?' 'Syr,' sayd the duke of normandy, 'by the feyth that I owe to god & to you, I had better pryson, & was more at my ease, than ever knyght was, for I 8 was served of the same that reynawd was / and som-tyme better; and soo I promyse you, sire, that the gentyll duchesse, his wife, made me grete chere and good company wyth her two fayr children / Sir, I 12 beseche you, yf ever ye love me, that ye wylle worshyp Alarde & his brethern, yf it playse you, For they have doon to me grete honoure / And they<sup>1</sup> have gyven me grete yestes / And yf it playse you, ye<sup>2</sup> shall have the 16 goode duchesse and her children for recomended, for she is the humblest lady of the worlde / and the moost wise' / 'Rycharde,' sayd charlemagn, 'wyte it that I shall not faylle theym aslonge as life shall be in 20 my body / and whan the children of reynawd shal be in age for to be made knightes, I shall dowbe theym to it myn owne handes wyth grete worshyp / and god spare me liffe, and soo shall I gyve theym landes 24 ynoughe for to mayntene theyr astate' / 'Gramercy, sir,' sayd the duke rycharde / 'and god yelde you!'

and kases Duke Richard with much fervour.

Duke Richard
 implores the Emperor to befriend
 the Duchesse Clare
 and her children.

The Emperor
 promises to make the sons of Rey-
 nawde knights in due time.

Whan they had devysed all ynoughe of the thynges afore sayd, the kyng charlemagne 28 commaunded that he sholde be dyslodged; and anone his commaundemente was doon, and thenne every man put hymself to the way towarde his cuntry. And whan the kyng sawe that it was tyme, he mounted on 32 horsbacke, and toke on hys waye towarde the cyte of lege / and whan he was come in lege, he lodged hym vpon the brydge of the ryver of meuze. and whan the mornynge was come / he made be broughte afore hym

Every man prepares to depart to
 his own country.

<sup>1</sup> thya, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. l. back.

Charlemagne orders Bayard to be thrown into the river Meuse with a great stone fastened at his neck.

The Frenchmen sorrow over the fate of the gallant horse.

Bayard contrives to break the stone round his neck, the goode horse of reynawd, bayarde / And whan he saw hym he began to saye in this wyse / 'ha, bayarde / bayard / thou hast often angred me, but I am come to the poynt, god gramercy for to avenge me / and I pro- 4 myse the thou shalt now abyte it full dere the tourment & felony that I have often tymes had by the.' And whan the kynge had sayd so / he made a grete myllstone to be fastened at the necke of bayarde / and 8 thenne made hym to be caste from the brydge doun in to the <sup>1</sup>water / And whan bayarde was thus tumbled in the ryver, he sanke vnto the botome of it. And whan the kynge sawe that, he made grete Ioye, and soo sayd, 12 'Ha, bayarde, now have I that I desired, and wysshed soo longe / For ye be now deed, but yf ye drynke oute all the water' / And whan the frenshe men <sup>2</sup>sawe the grete cruelnes of Charlemagn, that avenged himselfe 16 vpon a pour beest, they were yll contente / And thenne spake the bysshop Turpyn, and sayd / 'Ogyer of danmarke, what thynke you by charlemagn? he hathe well shewed atte this tyme a grete parte of his grete felony' / 20 'sire,' sayd ogyer, 'ye saye trowth / he hathe doon to grete foly for to make dey suche a goode beest as this horse was' / 'Syr,' sayd oliver to rowlande / 'Charlemagne is now woxen all folisshe' / 'ye saye full trowth,' 24 sayd rowland, 'I perceyve it full well' / and for to say the trouthe, there was none of the twelve peres, but he wepte for love of the good horse bayarde / But whosomever was sory for it / charlemagne was glad of it. 28 Ye oughte to know that, after that bayarde was cast in the ryver of meuze / he wente to the botom, as ye have herde / and myghte not come vp for by cause of the grete stone that was at his necke, whiche was horryble 32 hevy / and whan bayarde sawe he myght none other wyse scape, he smote soo longe and soo harde wyth his fete vpon the myll stone that he braste it / and came

<sup>1</sup> reviere de muse, F. orig. H. ii.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. ii.

agen above the water / and began to swimme / soo that and swims to land; he passed it all over at the other side. And when he was come to londe, he shaked hymselfe for to make 4 falle the water from hym, and began to crye hie, and made a merveyllous noyse / and after, began to renne so swyftely as the tempeste had borne hym awaye / and entred in to the grete foreste of ardeyne. And he escapes into the forest of Arden, 8 when the kyng charlemagn sawe that bayarde was escaped, he toke soo grete sorowe for it, that almoste he lost his wytte for angre ; But all the barons were glad of it. Thus, as ye have herde, escaped bayarde oute 12 of the handes of Charlemagne / And wyte it for very certain that the folke of that cuntry sayen / that he is yet a live wythin the wood of ardeyne. But wyte it, whan <sup>1</sup> he seeth man or woman, he renneth anone awaye, 16 soo that noo body maye come nere hym / And after all thyse thynges, the kynge Charlemagne, as angry as he was, departed from meuze, and wente in to a chapell that was nyghe / and called to hym all his barons, and 20 gaaff theym leve to goo in to theyr countreys, wherof they were ryght gladde / For they were sore desyrynge for to see theyr wyves, theyr chyldren, and theyr londes <sup>2</sup> /

where the folk of the cuntry say he lives now, and will not allow either man or woman to approach him.

CHAPTER XXIV.

24 ¶ How Reynawde<sup>3</sup> founde mawgys his cosyn, as he wente by the waye for to accomplishe his vyage to the holy sepulcre, in the countrey of Constanstynoble / And how thei 28 wente together to Iherusalem / whiche the

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G.G. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> mais a tant laisse le compte a parler de charlemaigne et de ses barons et retourne a parler du noble regnault qui este en son voiage pour aler aultre mer, F. orig. omitted in Caxton.

<sup>3</sup> fust departy de dordonne de ses freres de sa femme et enfans en moult grans regretz et lamentacions pour aler oultre mer acomplir son voiage ou saint sepulere il . . . F. orig. H. ii. bk.

admyralle of perse had taken by treyson vpon the crysten. But reynawde & his cosyn mawgys dyde somoche wyth the folke of the countrey, that the cyte Iherusalem was goten 4 agayne by the crysten people.

Reynawde departs for the Holy Land, and arrives at Constantinople;

he lodges with a holy woman, who tells him another pilgrim is there.

Reynawde finds that the pilgrim is Mawgis, and the constans embrace each other.

Now telleth the histori that, after that reynaud was departed from ardeyne<sup>1</sup> for to goo in to the holy londe, he wente soo moche by his iourneys that he came 8 to Constantynoble, and lodged hym in an holy womans howse / whiche served hym as well as she cowde / and gaffe hym suche mete as god had gyven to her / And after, she washed his fete as she was wounte to doo to 12 other pylgrymes / And whan this good woman had doon soo / she toke Reynawde by the hande / and broughte him into her owne chamber / and sayd to him / ‘Good man, ye shall lie here, for in my other 16 chambre ye maye not be / for there is a poure pylgrym that is sore syke.’ ‘Dame,’ sayd reynawde, ‘lete me see that pylgryme that ye speke of, whiche is soo syke.’ ‘wyth a gode wille,’ sayd the poure woman, 20 ‘ye shall see hym. For I promyse<sup>2</sup> you there is grete pyte in hym.’ And thenne she toke reynawde by the haude, and brought hym to the pylgryme that was in his bedde / And whan reynawde sawe hym, he knew 24 wel that it was his cosyn mawgys, wherof he was ryght glad; soo beganne he to speke to hym / and sayd / ‘Frende, how is it wyth your persone?’ And whan mawgis herde reynawde speke to hym, he lepte oute of 28 his bedde, as he never had be soke, and enbrased reynawde more than twenti tymes, and after sayd to hym, ‘Cosyn, how is it wyth you / and what adventure bryngth you here in this poure clothyng that ye have 32 on / telle me, yf it playse you / have ye had peas wyth

<sup>1</sup> dordonne, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. iii.

the kynge Charlemagne! 'Cosyn,' sayd reynawde / 'ye, by suche a maner as I shall telle you.' And thenne Reynawde tells him of his treaty
 with Charle-
 magne.
 he rehersed hym all the maner as ye have herde above /
 4 and all the treaty that he had wyth Charlemagne<sup>1</sup> /

Whan mawgys vnderstode the wordes of Reynawde, he was ryght gladde of it / And thenne he embraced agayne reynawd, and sayd to him, 'I am 8 now hole, for the gode tydynges that ye have broughte to me, And therefore I am dysposed to goo wyth you / Mawgis says he shall journey with him to Jerusalem.
 and doubt not we shall not dey for hungre / for I am mayster for to begge<sup>2</sup> brede<sup>3</sup> / And the goode woman 12 sawe that thyse two pylgrymes made so grete feest the one to the other, she thoughte it myghte none otherwise be but thei were of grete linage, and that they had had some grete a doo togyder, and she sayd to theym / 16 'Fayre lordes, I see that ye knowe well eche other / wherfore I pray you telle me what ye be / and from whens ye come.' 'Goode woman,' sayd mawgys, 'syth that ye wylle knowe of our beyng / I shall telle you a parte 20 of it / Wyte it thenne that we ben two pour gentylmen that are banysshed oute of fraunce, Soo muste we goo in suche habyte as ye see in to the holy<sup>4</sup> londe; and we ben cosins germain / and we shall doo our vyage togyder, 24 yf it playse god.' And whan the lady, <sup>5</sup> that gode woman,<sup>5</sup> vnderstode this / she had grete ioye / Thenne made she to bryng theym mete ynoughe / and wyne / Mawgys, that syn so long had dronken noo wyne, dranke some The woman of the house brings the Pilgrims meat
 and wine,
 28 that nyghte for love of Reynawde. Shortly to speke, none myghte say nor thynke how grete fest made the and they feast together joyfully.
 two cosyns to eche other. And whan the daye was come, Reynawde & mawgys arose / and toke leve of 32 the holy lady, and put theymselve to the waye. And

<sup>1</sup> sans laisser ung seul mot, F. orig. H. iii.    <sup>2</sup> bedge, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Et moy se dist regnault seulement que je aye fain, F. orig.
 H. iii.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. G.G. iii. back.    <sup>5-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. iii. back.

Reynawde and Mawgis arrive at Jerusalem;

they see a grent
host surrounding
the city,

at which they
marvel greatly.

They inquire the cause of it from an old man.

The old man
replies that the Christians besege
Jerusalem,

which has been taken by the Admiral of Persia
through treason,

wyte that somoche wente the two pylgrymes by theyr iourneyes, that they came nyghe the cyte of Iherusalem, and were but a lityll myle fro it / soo that they myght see well the temple and the towre of davyd, and the 4 moost parte of Iherusalem. And whan mawgys & reynawde sawe that, they were ryght gladde of it / and yelded graces vnto god that he had suffred theym to come soo nyghe the holy cyte. Whan they had doon 8 thus theyr prayers / they wente on theyr waye for to have goon wythin Iherusalem; But they were goon but a lityll whan they sawe a grete oost abowte the cyte, evyn afore the towre of davyd / Where were many 12 pavylions of the crysten, that were there for to fyghte with the admyrall of Perce, that by force helde the cyte of Iherusalem / Reynawde dyde tary whan he sawe the oost that was afore the cyte, and sayd to hys 16 cosyn mawgys, 'Cosyn, what folke is yonder, as ye thynke / for it semeth a grete oost a fore Iherusalem / are thei sarrasyns or crysten? what saye you?' 'Surely,' sayd mawgys, 'I canne not telle, and I am sore mer- 20 veylled what it maye be' / Thus as reynawde and mawgys spake togyder / there cam an olde man rydyng<sup>1</sup> that way that came from the oost. And whan reynawde sawe hym <sup>2</sup>he wente hym agenste / and sayd to hym / 24
'God save you, gode man / telle me, and playse you, What be they afore the holy cyte; are they crysten or sarrasyns?' 'Pylgryme,' sayd the olde man, 'they ben crysten that have beseged Iherusalem / and canne not 28 take it / but ye maye well goo wythoute parell' / 'Now telle me,' sayd Reynawde, 'who is wythin Iherusalem' /
'Wyte it,' sayd the olde man, 'that the admyrall of perce hath taken it by treyson.' 'And how hath he 32 taken it by treyson?' sayd reinawde. 'Wyte,' sayd the olde man, 'that the admyrall arrayed hym as a pylgryme, and many of his folke wyth hym / and wente

<sup>1</sup> sus ung rousin, F. orig. H. iv.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. iv.

in to the cyte one after a nother / And whan they were all wythin, they blewe an horne ryght hyghe, and set hande to theyr swerdes / and foughte strongly, soo that 4 they were maysters of the cyte or ever the kynge thomas cowde be armed, nor his folke / the whiche cowde not save theymselfe wyth suche fewe folk / as was lefte hym a live / <sup>1</sup>but he was taken prysoner / and 8 anone all the countrey rose vp, and have beseged the cyte as ye see ; and I truste wyth the grace of god that the cyte shall be take shortly' / 'Now telle me,' sayd reinawde, 'yf they of the cyte come oute often vpon 12 the crysten.' 'Ye,' sayd the olde man, 'for they ben moche folke wythin ; and the thyng that most greveth vs, is that our folke have noo hede nor noo lorde. And ye wote well that folke that have noo hede nor noo 16 lorde can doo but lityll goode' / And whan reynawde herde this worde, he began to smyle, and after he sayd / 'Fare well, goode man / we wylle goo there for to see what shall happe of it' / And whan he had sayd soo, 20 he toke on his waye wyth his cosyn mawgys / and ceased not tyll they were comyn wythin the oost / And whan they were come there / every man loked vpon reynawde, that was soo fayr a pylgrym, <sup>1</sup>and so 24 talle a man.<sup>1</sup> And reynawd loked here <sup>2</sup>and there / and wyste not where to put hymselfe. Thenne he advysed hym, and sayd to mawgys / 'My cosin, we must see that we have a lityll reede or some other thyng / for to 28 make vs a lodges there at one corner of the walle' / and whan reynawde had sayd so / mawgys ceased not tyll he had made a lityll lodges / This hangyng, that they made theyr lodges / thadmyralle of Perce yssued oute 32 of Iherusalem wyth well thre thousande fyghtyng men / And entred in to the crysten oost towarde saynt stevyns chirche.

and the King
 Thomas taken
 prisoner,
 whose folk sur-
 round the city.

Reynawde and Mawgis go into
 the host of the Christians,
 who regard them
 with surprise.

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. iv. back.

Earl Geoffrey fights the Persians valiantly,
and many are
slain.

And thenne when the good erle of rames, & walleran of fayete, & geffrage of Nazareth sawe that, they ranne anone to theyr harneys. And I telle you that therle Iaffas of rames was soone armed, sooner than 4 thother, and incontynente he ranne vpon the turkes / and began to crie 'Iaffa' as hie as he cowde / and smote vpon the persans / and dommagd them sore, for he was a valiaunt man in armes. And whan all 8 they of the oost were armed / thenne began there a bataylle of the one parte, and of the other, ryght cruell / Thenne came there<sup>1</sup> geffrage of nazareth / whiche entred amonge the thyckest of the sarrasyns, and began faste 12 to smyte theym deed<sup>2</sup> to the erthe / Shortly to speke, this batayll was ryght grete & mortall / for there were many speres broken, & many sheldes cloven; and of the one parte and of the other, many men overthrown 16 to the grounde. And ye oughte to wyte that <sup>3</sup>waller-aven of fayete smote there deed mani a panym,<sup>4</sup> soo that it was wonder to see his faytes of armes / for noo persante durste abide afore hym / And whan the admyr- 20 alle sawe this / he sayd to hymselfe / that he sholde never set noo thyng by hymselfe / but he sholde avenge vpon geffray that soo tourmented his folke.<sup>5</sup>
And anone he toke a spere in his hande / and went 24 agenste geffray / And whan <sup>6</sup>geffraye sawe that, he ranne asprely vpon hym / and thei gafe eche other suche strokes in their sheeldes, that bothe theyr speres flew in many peces<sup>7</sup> / and wyth this cours was thad- 28

The Admiral
fights with Geoffrey,

<sup>1</sup> le conte de rames monte sus ung destrier, F. orig. H. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> ainsi comment loupz les brebiz, F. orig. H. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> geoffroy de nazareth, F. orig. H. iv. back.

<sup>4</sup> et de turcz, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> Amiral de perse eust moult le cuer dolant de ce quil veoit que geoffroy luy faisoit a luy et a ses gens, F. orig. H. iv. back.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. G.G. v.

<sup>7</sup> si se en contrerent si grans coups lung contre lautre quil enconuint tomber lamiral, F. orig. H. iv. back.

miralle overthrowen from his horse to therthe, but who throws him from his horse;
 geffraye of nazareth abode in the arsons of his saddle /
 And whan the admyrall sawe hym on the grounde, he 4 was angry for it / soo rose he vp lightly, & set hande to his swerde, and made grete semblaunte for to deffende hymself. and whan geffraye of nazareth sawe thys / he torned hym towarde thadmyralle, & smote hym so 8 grete a stroke with his swerde vpon his helme, that he astonyed hym / And whan geffray sawe that he made no defence / he bowed his body towarde hym, and toke the admyrall by the helme, & wolde have broughte 12 him awaye / And whan thadmyralle sawe that he was take, he cryed 'Perce' as lowde as he myghte, soo that his folke herde hym, & ranne there as he was / and his folk rescue him and set him
again upon his
horse.
 deliverde hym from the handes of geffray, and set hym 16 vpon a horse, & brought him wyth theym / whan thenne reynawd sawe that the bataylle was soo cruell, he sayd to mawgis, 'Alas, cosyn, yf I had my harneys,
 I sholde goo gladly socour our folke, for it is that thyng 20 that I have moost desired / as that I myghte bere armes agenste the sarrasins' / 'Theinne,' sayd mawgys to hym, 'ye are not wyse to say so / ye wote how we ben but Mawg a dissuades him.
 traveyllid of our pylgrimage / and that it is tyme that 24 we rest vs a lityll / And also the werre shall not be ended soo soone / but that ye may prove yourselfe in armes afore the holy cyte <sup>1</sup>of Iherusalem be wonne <sup>1</sup>/ wherfore I pray you rest yourselfe this nyghte / and to 28 morowe, & god byfore, we shall be fyght our enmyes / for I have delibered that I shall be noo hermyte aslonge as we ben togyder, but I shall helpe you wyth all my power. But one thyng I telle you, that never whyle 32 I live, I shall cast noo charme <sup>2</sup>more, for I have pro- Mawgis vows never to work with charms
again.
 mysed it god, & all the sayntes, to whom I pray to kepe me therfro / but I telle you that I love you so hertly, that if I sholde be dampned / yet shold I com

<sup>1</sup>-1 omitted, F. orig. H. v.      <sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. v. back.

Reynawde laments over the loss of Bayard and his good sword.

out of my hermytage for to socour you yf ye had nede' /
 ' My cosin,' sayd reynawde, ' I thanke you of your good wyll / and I knowe well ye saye trowth, that we have mystre of reste / but I can not kepe myself / but I 4 must goo to batayll<sup>1</sup> / Alas, that I have not bayarde, & flamberde my good swerde / for I shold do thys daye that god shold comne me thanke of it' / Ryght sory was reynawde that he had nother horse nor harneys for to 8 helpe the crysten folke.

The Admirall withdraws his men into the city, the Christians chase them, and slay many at the entrance of the city.

Thys hangyng, that reynawd & mawgys spake togyder, therle of rames, geffray of nazareth, & walleraven<sup>2</sup> made grete slaughter of the turkes & of 12 the persans. And whan thadmyrall sawe this,<sup>3</sup> he withdrewe his folke agen in to the cyte of Iherusalem / For he myghte noo lenger suffre the grete harme and hurte that the crysten made hym / And whan the 16 crysten sawe that the sarrasyns were dyscomfyted / thei chased theym sharply / and slewe so many of theim that none canne telle the nombre / And thenne therle Iaffras, that was a worthy knyghte & a wyse / 20 he wente to the gate of saynt stevyn / and kepte him there wyth his folke. And whan the turkes came for to save theymselvf wythin Iherusalem / therle Iaffra went agenst theim / and kept the passage that they 24 myght not entre at theyr ease wythin the cyte / and there agen were many of theym slayne. And whan the admirall saw that, he was an angred for it, and toke a nother way to the cyte, towarde the gate foere / 28 and it happed thenne that the turkes passed afore the lodges of reynawd, and by the grete prees & stampyng of their horses y<sup>e</sup> lodges of reynawde was broken and marred / Wherof reynawde was angry. 'Thenne Rey- 32 nawde loked abote hym / and founde noo thyng for

<sup>1</sup> en nulle guise, F. orig. H. v.      <sup>2</sup> conte de Jaffes, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Il en fust moult dolant . . . F. orig. H. v.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. G.G. vi.

to fyghte wythall / but a forke that susteyned vp their lodges / that was grete & stronge. And he toke it anone with bothe his handes, & mounted vpon a 4 walle that was bi the waye ; and as the turkes passed by, he layed vpon them wyth that grete staff / and smote them doun two & two at ones, as swynes. and to say the trouthe / reinaude being thus vpon that 8 broken wall, slewe moo than a hundred of theym as they passed bi hym. And whan mawgys sawe that reynawde dyde soo well / he toke his palster & cam vpon the wall by hym, and began to smyte wyth both 12 his handes soo grete strokes / that they that he raught felle deed to the grounde. While that reinaude & mawgis dyde these faytes of armes, cam there therle of 16 sarrasyns wyth all dyligence, Whiche sawe the grete quantyte of deed sarrasins / that reynawde & mawgys had slayen vpon the way by their prowes / in so moche that almoste men cowde ryde nomore that way, 20 for the grete hepe of turkes that lay deed there, wherof the sarrasins were sore abashed.<sup>1</sup> thenne the erle of rames shewed to geffray of nazareth the grete slaughter that the two pilgrymes had doon,<sup>2</sup> & mer-24 veylled of him that helde the forke, that he was soo grete & soo valiaunt a man / and in like wyse that other that helde the palster, that was not so grete.
 ‘See,’ sayd he, ‘how the way is covered abowte theym 28 wyth this cursed folke ; I byleve that they ben felawes.’ ‘Ha, goddis,’ sayd geffray / ‘I merveylle what folke they are. I byleve that god hathe sente theym to vs for our savyng / or elles they ben over 32 hardy fooles, seenge that they ben all naked / and fere not the deth.’ ‘Syre,’ sayd the erle of Rames / ‘What so ever they ben, they doo like worthy men. God

Reynawde seizes
 a fork, which lies near, and makes great slaughter of the Turkes as they pass ;

Mawgis joins him
 and fights fiercely.

The Earle marvel
 over the prowess
 of Reynawde and Mawgis ;

and wonder at their strange
 appearance.

<sup>1</sup> que sus les mors, F. orig. H. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> sur le chemi», F. orig. H. v. back.

all mighty kepe theym from hurte, dangeur,<sup>1</sup> and from 2 evyll combraunce / For they have well greved our enmyes; And I shall never be at myn ease tyll that I have spoken wyth theym, for to wyte what folke they 4 be / and fro whens they come.'

Grete was the chassee that the erle of Rames, geffraye of Nazareth, and walleraven<sup>3</sup> made after the turkes & persans, For ryght grete slaughter 8 they made of theym or they were wythdrawen wythin Iherusalem / For they lefte not the chassee tyll they were wythin the gate force / Whan reynawde sawe that all the sarrasyns were passed / he caste after theym 12 his grete staffe / for he cowde doo no more to theym.
 And after he bethoughte hym / and descended from the walle / and sayd he wolde not lese his forke, and fet it agayn / for it sholde serve for to make his lodgys 16 as it dyde byfore. This hangynge, the erle of Rames came from the chasinge agayne / and soughte the two pylgrymes for to speke wyth theym / and he founde theym where they were makynge of theyr lodges / 20 Thenne he behelde theym well, and sayd no thyng.
 And whan he sawe that they were soo grete and so well shapen / pryncypally reynaud / for he waunted noo thing, he lighted from his horse and toke theym 24 by the hande, and made theym to sitte beside him / Whan they were set, the erle sayd to Reynawde /
 'My frende, I praye you telle me trouthe of that I shall aske you / By the feyth that ye owe to the 28 temple where ye purpose to goo, telle me your names, and what ye be, and of whens ye come / and why ye goo soo pourly arrayed.' 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'syth that it playse you to wyte of our beyng / and 32 of our name / I shall telle it you wyth a goode wylle /
 Now wyte it that I am called reynawde of mount-

The Earl of Rames advances towards the Pilgrims,

and takes them
 by the hand;

he asks Reynawde
 who he is,
 and why he is thus poorly clad.

<sup>1</sup> dargeur. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> et le conte de Jaffes, F. orig. H. vi.

alban, but charlemagn hathe casted me therfrom wrongfully. the duke aymon is mi fader, & am now com in to <sup>1</sup>the holy londre for to serve our lorde agenste his 4 ennyes, for thus hathe commaunded me doo, Charlemagne, my soverayn lorde / whan I made peas wyth hym. And that worse is, I muste nedes come thus pourly arrayed, as ye see, beggyng my brede where 8 soo ever I goo or come / where agenst I wolde never goo for to have peas' / Whan the erle of Rames vnderstode reynawde, he was gladde of hym / and heved vp his handes toward hevyn / <sup>2</sup>and thanked 12 god<sup>2</sup> / and after sayd / 'O, noble knyghte Reynawde of mountalban, the beste knyghte of the worlde, take here my homage / For I gyve myselfe vnto you, and all my goodes' / And whan reynawde sawe this, he 16 sayd to the erle of rames, 'Stande vp / for ye prouffer me owterage' / 'By god,' sayd the erle, 'I shall never aryse tylle ye have graunted me a thyng.' 'Syre,' sayd reynawd, 'I graunte it you wyth a goode wyll, 20 and wyth gode herte' / 'Gramercy,' sayd the erle / and thenne he stode vp and sayd to reynawde, 'Is it trouth that ye have peas wyth the grete kyng charlemagne / Alas, where ben your brethern, the 24 worthy knyghtes / and mawgys your cosyn, in whome ye have soo grete truste, and your goode horse bayarde?' 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'wyte that I had peas wyth the kyng Charlemagne of the werre that so 28 longe hathe lasted, by suche maner as I shal tel you / that it is, that I muste come here in suche clothyng as ye see vpon me. and here is mawgys my cosyn, that is comen heder wyth hys free wyll / for he is not 32 constrayned therto / for the kyng charlemagn weneth he be deed longe a go, and my brethern ben abyden wyth my wyffe & my children, For the kyng hathe returned all our livelode vnto them agayne' / And Reynawde relates to him his history.

The Earl offers homage to Reynawde, and enquires after his brethern and Mawgis.

Reynawde tells of the hard conditions imposed on him by Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G.G. vii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

The Earl rejoices
over the coming
of Reynawde,

when the erle vnderstode the trouthe of all, he was ryght gladde of it / soo that he beganne to crye wyth <sup>1</sup>a highe voyce, 'Ha, duke Reynawde of mountalban / how gretely be you welcome here to vs / as the moost <sup>4</sup> valiaunte knyghte of the worlde / blessed be the good lorde that hathe conduytte you hether / And I praye you for god that ye receyve my homage / so shall ye save the worshyp of the kyng thomas, that is <sup>8</sup> now prysoner there wythin the cyte<sup>2</sup> / for and ye be our capytayne and our hede / I put noo doubte but we shall soone take Iherusalem, And thus shall the kyng Thomas be delivered <sup>3</sup>oute of the handes of the <sup>12</sup> false sarrasyns<sup>3</sup> /

as he may save
King Thomas.

There came all the barons of Surry, that were full gladde of the comynge of reynawde of mount-alban, to whome they made grete reverence, and feested <sup>16</sup> hym ryght highly. And shortly to speke, they all prayed hym to be theyr lorde / and hede captayne / and that he wolde guyde theym as therle of Rames had doon afore / And whan reynawde sawe that all <sup>20</sup> the barons of Surry desyred & prayed hym so sore for to receyve theyr homages, he sayd vnto theym / 'Lordes, syth that it playseth you for to doo me this grete honour / I take it, sauff always the ryght of <sup>24</sup> kyng Thomas / whyche is your soverayne lorde.'
'Syre,' sayd the barons, 'we wyll have it thus' / And thenne he receyved theyr homages / and whan he had receyved theym / the erle Rames kneled byfore hym, <sup>28</sup> and sayd, 'Syre, I wyll that ye gyve me now that thyng that ye have graunted me.' 'Syr,' sayd Reynawde, 'say what it is / and ye shall have it.' 'Syre,' sayd therle of rames, 'it is that ye wyll woushesauff <sup>32</sup>

Reynawde accepts
the proffered homage of the Barons of Surrey.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. G.G. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> a ses felons mescreans le quel Il ont prins depuis que sommel cy-devant, F. orig. H. vii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

to be lodged in my pavylyon, and that ye spende none other good but myn / And yf ye wylle gyve any thyng / I shall deliver it to you / and I shall gyve 4 you syx of my knyghtes for to serve you<sup>1</sup> / ‘Good erle of rames / gramercy of the worschyp that ye doo to me<sup>2</sup> / thenne the <sup>3</sup>erle toke Reynawde by the hande, and broughte hym in to his pavylyon / and made hym 8 to be served as his soverayne lorde. And whan all the barons had conveyed Reynawde to the pavylyon of the erle of Rames, they toke leve of hym, and wente agayne in to theyr pavylyons / and thanked god that 12 he had sente theym suche a knyghte<sup>4</sup> and soo valiaunte a man to be theyr capytayne and theyr lorde<sup>4</sup> / And thenne, whan the erle of rames sawe that all the barons were goon to theyr pavylyons, he made to be 16 broughte there many good horses & fayr palfrays, and ryche raymentes of dyverse colours, furred wyth ryche furies, and all maner of good harneys / for the werre ; curaces, and ryche helmes / and noble swerdes / and 20 grete plente of plate, bothe of fyne golde & of sylver ; and all thys he presented to reynawde / But he wolde take noo thyng but onely a complete harneys for his body / and a swerde that he chose there amonge all, 24 and an horse. And all the remenaunte he made to be dealed to the poure knyghtes<sup>5</sup> that had mystre of it<sup>5</sup> / and whan the erle of rames sawe that Reynawde had taken but one horse, one harneys, & one swerde / he 28 sayd vnto him / ‘ Syre, for god take on you a nother raymente / for ye wote well it apperteyneth not to suche a man as ye be for to goo clothed as ye doo.’ ‘ Syre,’ sayd reynawde / ‘pardonne me & it please 32 you / for I shall never were none other rayment but

The Earl leads Reynawde to his tent, and serves
 him honourably ;

he orders horses
 and rich garments
 to be brought to
 him.

Reynawde only takes a set of armour and a horse, the rest he divides between
 the poor knyghts.

<sup>1</sup> de tout leur pouvoir, F. orig. H. vii.

<sup>2</sup> de si beaux dons car Il ne sont mye a refuser, F. orig. H. vii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. G.G. viii.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. vii.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. vii. back.

this that I have now on / tyll that I have kyssed the holy sepulcre wherin god was put after that he was broughte doun from the crosse' / 'Syre,' sayd thenne the erle, 'doo as ye wyll' / And thenne he wente 4 to mawgys, & sayd to hym, 'I praye you put awaye this cap & this hode / and take other raymentes' / 'Syre,' sayd mawgys thenne, 'I praye you be not dysplayseed / yf I fulfille not your desyre at this time, 8 for I tell you that I have promysed<sup>1</sup> that I shal were no <sup>2</sup>other clothe as longe as I live, <sup>3</sup>but suche as the same is'<sup>3</sup> / Thenne whan the erle sawe that Reynawde nor mawgys wolde not take none other raymentes for 12 noo thynge that he cowde saye vnto theym, he was sory for it. And thenne he made the tables redy for to goo to souper / And whan they had souped, the erle Rames called walleraven of ffayet, and geffray of 16 nazareth<sup>4</sup> / and sayd to theym, 'Now thynke for to doo well, syth that god hathe sente to vs suche socour'<sup>5</sup> / And whan the barons herde the erle speke thus / they answerde, 'we shall doo our beste, by the grace of 20 god' / And thenne every man wente to his pavylion, and made grete plente of torches to be fyred, soo that it was merveilles of the light that was in the oost / and every man began to daunce & disporte theymselfe 24 abowte theyr tentes & pavyliions a longe while, <sup>6</sup>for ioye of the comynge of reynawde<sup>6</sup> / And whan the turkes that kept the towre of davyd saw the grete light that was in the oost of the crysten / thei were 28 all merveyllid of it. Thenne some of them went & shewed it to theyr mayster & lorde / And whan thad-

Mawgis refuses to accept rich clothing from the Earl.

The Christians
 light their torches
 and daunce,

rejoicing over the arrival of Rey-
 nawde.

<sup>1</sup> a nostre seigneur, F. orig. H. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. G.G. viii. back. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. vii. back.

<sup>4</sup> et le conte Jaffez, F. orig. H. vii. back.

<sup>5</sup> que de regnault et de maugis. Et me semble que en lonneur de dieu nous devons faire ceste nuyt chescun en sa tente grant lumiere de sierges en louant dieu du secours qwil nous a envoie. F. orig. H. vii. back.

<sup>6-6</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. viii.

myrall herde the tidynges / he began to crye hie, & said / 'O machomet, what eileth now that vnhappy folke that make soo grete feest / I byleve that they 4 ben as the swāne is whan he shall deye, for I am sure they shall one of these dayes be all slayn / and therfore thei make so grete ioie.' And whan barbas the admyrall had sayd this, he sware by machomet, afore 8 all his barons, that he shold make an yssue on the morowe for to hewe all the cristeyn in peces. 'Syr,' sayd an olde paynim / 'beware your flesshe well of a grete kerle that is there newe come amonge theym, the 12 whiche bereth a grete forke in his hande / For yf he hit you, ye are but deed. I am well sure that all they of thoost make this ioie for that lorden' / 'I know hym not,' said thadmyrall to y<sup>e</sup> panyim, <sup>1</sup>'but and I 16 can hit hym wyth my branke of stele / I shall make hym leve his grete hede behynde hym for a pledge <sup>2</sup>tylle he cometh agen<sup>2</sup> / for he is naked, and therfore he maye not endure agenste me.'

The Admiral
 swears to subdue
 the Christians on
 the morrow.

20 Whan the kynge Thomas, that was there prysoner, sawe the grete feest & the ioie that the crysten made, he wyste not what he sholde thynke / but sayd to hymselfe / 'Ha, goddys, what have now 24 my folke that they make suche a noyse / and suche a sporte / Alas, doo they not remembre me / I byleve better ye than nay, for the feest that they make now is for somewhat.' Wyte it that they of Rames & of 28 Iapphes / and of all the countrey aboute Iherusalem, whan thei sawe the grete lighte, they wende that the cyte had be sette a fyre; and some were sore a ferde leest thoost had a doo. Thus was all the countrey 32 abashed / but they that were in the oost cared but lityll for it / And whan they had sported theymselfe enough, they ordened the watche / and after went to reste. And whan the daye was come, the barons rose

King Thomas
 marvels over the
 mirth of his host;

he grieves lest his men should have forgotten him.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H.H. i.

<sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. H. viii.

The Barons rise early next day and salute Reynawde as their captain.

and wente to the pavyllion of reynawde / whiche was vp & redy. and they salved hym reverently / and after sayd vnto hym thus / 'Syre, what thynke ye that we must doo? shall we assaylle the cyte or noo' / 4 'Lordes,' sayd the duke reynawde / 'me semeth that it were goode for to gyve to it a sawte, For we have grete avantage a fore hande, for he that shall deye in the sawtyng of the holy cyte, he shall be saved wythout 8 doubtte.' whyles that the barons devysed thus togyder for to gyve a sawte to the cyte / the admyrall of perce made to open the gate foree, and yssued oute of the towne wyth ten thousande fyghtyng men well armed / 12 And whan reynawd & the barons of surry knewe it, they ranne to theyr harneis / Reinawde was armed incontynente / and toke his helme & his swerde, <sup>1</sup>and lighted vpon his horse that therle of Rames had given 16 him. And whan reynawde was on horsbacke / mawgys armed hym also / and mounted on horsbacke, and began to crye, 'Barons of surry, be not dysmayed in noo wise / for I promyse god I shall never retourne 20 to be hermyte, yf the turkes be not dyscomfyted & overthrowen' / And after he had said soo, he wente to geffraye of nazareth, & sayd to hym / 'Baron, kepe you by reynawde; for yf all thother knyghtes in the 24 feliship were suche as ye be, barbas sholde be dyscomfyted or none.' and whan all the barons were all armed & well on horsbacke / thei ordeyned theyr bataylles as well as they cowde. And themne came 28 thadmyrall barbas, that smote in to thoost of the cristen. The fyrste bataylle of the sarrasyns was conduytted by a kynge / that had to name margarys, that was lorde of the towre of Talles, whiche was 32 ryght cruell, and bare in his armes a dragon pyctured wyth an horryble figure.

The Admiral issues forth from the city.

Reynawde and Mawgis assemble their folk together, and exhort them to fight valiantly.

The Admiral advances towards the Christian host.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H.H. i. back.

Whan the kynge margarys sawe it was tyme to smyte vpon the crysten / he spored his horse wyth his spores & ranne agenst reynawde / And whan 4 reynawde saw him come / he sayd to therle of rames,
 'here cometh one to seke his dethe wyth grete hast; ye have don me grete honour, but this kynge shall have dyshonour for your love at the first' / And whan 8 reynawd had sayd this / he spored his horse / and ranne agenst margarys so harde that nother shelde nor quyras coude not save hym, but he shoved his spere thurgh the breste & overthrewe sterke deed to the 12 grounde / and whan reynawde had gyven that grete stroke, he sayd, 'Goo thy waye to helle, the devylle spede the, and bere felishyp to thy predesessours that went there afore the!' and after, he put hande to the 16 swerde, & smote another sarrasyn<sup>1</sup> soo harde thurgh the helme that he clove him to the teeth / and forth withal he raughte a nother<sup>2</sup> vnder the bavere soo that he made his hede to flee fro the sholders / And whan he had 20 slayn thise thre, he cried, 'mountalban / <sup>3</sup>vpon thise paynymys!'<sup>3</sup> And whan mawgis herde him / he put himself amonge the turkes soo courageusly / that the fyrste that he encountred he sent hym down in to helle, and 24 thenne toke his swerde in his hande & dyde merveylles of armes<sup>4</sup> / soo that he slewe soo many turkes that reynaude & the barons merveylled gretly. thenne sayd reynaude to therle of rames, 'what saye you by my 28 cosin mawgys / sawe you ever soo good an hermyte' /
 'By my soule,' sayd therle, 'he is to be comended / blessed be the wombe that bare him, & thour that ye ben come in to this londe / for now I am wel sure that 32 Iherusalem shall be recovered, and the kynge Thomas deliverde oute of prison, <sup>3</sup>wyth the grace of god'<sup>3</sup> /

Reynawde slays
King Margary;

he cries on
'Mountalban,'
and fights the pagans bravely.

Earl Rames commends the courage
of Mawgis;

<sup>1</sup> sarrasyns, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H.H. ii.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. i.

<sup>4</sup> et lors commença a frapper a destre et a fenestre, F. orig. I. I.

CHARL. ROM. XI.

2 L

he calls on his Barons to smite
the Saracens
hardly.

Whan therle of rames had sayd this to reynawd / he spored his horse wyth the spores, & smote a turke suche a stroke that he made thyren of his spere to apere at the backe of hym, that felle deede to therth / and after he 4 toke his swerde in his hande, & began to crie ' rames ' as hie as he cowde, sayeng, ' Barons, smyte now a goode, for the persans shall be now vturli discomfyted / yf god kepe the valiaunt reynaude of mountalban & his 8 valiaunt cosin mawgys / Now is thour come that the traytour barbas shall fynysse his life, that thus betrayed the holy cyte of Iherusalem by his false wytte.' The<sup>ne</sup> dyde sette on the barons of the londe, whiche began to 12 make merueylles of armes agenst the sarrasins / Who had seen that tyme reynawde & mawgys, how they made waye to theym that cam after theym, he wold have merueylled gretly / For I promyse you none durste 16 abyde afore them, were he never so hardy or valiaunt, but he was slayn of theym. After reynawde & mawgys was therle of rames, geffraye of nazareth, & walleron of fayete<sup>1</sup> wyth their <sup>2</sup>folke, and they made merueylles of 20 armes agenst their ennyes. and whan the sarrasins sawe that thei cowde not abide the grete dommage of <sup>3</sup>that the cristen<sup>3</sup> bare to them / they put theymself to flight towarde the cyte /<sup>4</sup> 24

The Saracens fly towards the city
discomfited.

Whan thadmyrall barbas saw that his folke were discomfyted, he was angry / for it, and sayd / ' hoursons! why do ye flee thus away / knowe ye not that I am your lorde, that shall defende you agenst 28 this vnhappy cristens / Where is margarys becom that I see hym not?' 'sire,' sayd one of the sarrasins, 'he is deed at the first iousting that he made' / and whan thadmyrall herde this, he wende to have gon out of his 32

The Admiral
hears of the death
of King Margary,

<sup>1</sup> et le conte de Jaffes, F. orig.    <sup>2</sup> Fol. H.H. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> que regnault et maugis. F. orig. I. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> pour avoir garison. Et disoient que a mahomet ne pleut quilz actendissent le grant villain. Car il les mectoit tous a mort, F. orig. I. i. back.

wyt, and sayd, 'who is that hath borne me soo grete harme as to slee the noble kyng margarys / Is it not the grete kerle with the forke' / 'ye, sir,' sayd his 4 folke / 'for he is called the best knyghte of the worlde / and also he hath brought this daye to deth many of your men with his handes' / Moche sori was thad-myrall for the dethe of margaris, and swore the god 8 mahom that he shold perse the hert in his bely / And whan he had made this othe, he gaaf the spores to the horse, & put himselfe to the medle / and the first he recounted was walleron of faiete, to whom he gaff 12 suche a stroke through the sheelde that he made his spere hede to apere oute at the backe of hym, & slewe him deed to therth. And whan thadmyrall had gyven that stroke, he put hande to his swerde & shoved him 16 amonge the thyckest / crieng 'perce' as hie as he cowde / and sayd, 'barons! smyte vpon this vnhappy cristen, for now shall they be discomfyted.' And whan therle Iaffas & geffray of nazareth sawe that thad-20 myralle fared soo fowle wyth the crystens / they put theym in to the prees amonge the sarrasins, and there was grete slaughter made of bothe partyes; but at the laste the crystens had ben shredly handled yf Rey-24 naude and mawgis <sup>1</sup> had not come lightly there / Reynaude, that sawe this harde batayll, shoved himself among the thickest, as a wolfe amonge a flocke of shepe, and smote a persante that was cosin to thad-28 myrall / that had to name Orrende, & gaffe him suche a stroke wyth his swerde / that he made his hede to flee well a spere lengthe from his body, wyth helme & all / And after he smote a nother that was newew to 32 malbon / soo that he s'lew both horse & man <sup>2</sup> with one stroke<sup>2</sup> / To say the trouth, reynaude made there soo grete merveylls of armes, that all the paynyms were sore abashed / for he had his shelde caste behynde

and vows venge-
 nance against
 Reynawde;

he makes great
 havoc among the Christians.

Reynawde and Mawgis socour
 their folk,
 and slay great numbers of the enemy.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H.H. iii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. ii.

his backe, & helde the rayne of his horse aboute his arme, & helde his swerde wyth bothe his handes, and habandoned hys body, smytyng merveyllous strokes on ether side vpon y<sup>e</sup> sarrasyns, soo that he smote noo 4 stroke but he slewe <sup>1</sup>a turke or <sup>1</sup>a paynym / And whan thadmyralle sawe the grete greeff that reynawd bare to his folke, he sware his god appolin / he sholde never ete mete tyll he had slayn the grete vylayne / 'Syre,' 8 sayd theenne the kyng alebrondy to him, 'I pray you leve this enterprise, for I telle you for very certeyn that yf ye goo afore him he shall kille you wyth one stroke.' Theenne sayd thadmyrall to hym / 'yf I had 12 now a good guysarne in my hande, he sholde as lityll endure myn efforte as shold a boye / For & I brynge hym not down / I shall never requyre to bere any armes more, nor to ryde vpon ony horse more' / 16

The Admiral swears to conquer Reynawle when they meet.

Moche cruell & harde was the medlinge<sup>2</sup> / mawgis was there that made grete occysion fro thone side & fro thother. And whan reynawd saw mawgis that dyde so well, he was glad ; and so smote he a turke 20 vpon his helme suche a stroke / that he cloved his hede in two peces / and soo he smote a nother at the sides so that he cleved all his rybbes / and cut all togyder a sonder his body / and after this he smote a <sup>3</sup>nother soo 24 that he hewed his hede clene of, and one of his armes ; and whan he had slayn thise thre wyth one enpraynt, he cried, 'mountalban,' sayeng, 'smyte, barons / for the sarrasins, both turkes & persans, ben deed & over- 28 throwen / and thynke to avenge your lord thomas / whiche is soo excellent a kyng.' And whan thadmyrall barbas herde crie 'mountalban' / this worde abashed hym more than ony other thyng / for he 32 knew well theenne that he that his men called 'the grete

The Christians fight so valiantly that no men can withstand them.

The Admiral hears the cry of 'Mountalban,' and knows who fights against him ;

<sup>1</sup>-<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. ii.

<sup>2</sup> dune part et daultre, F. orig. I. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. H.H. iii. back.

carle <sup>1</sup>wyth the forke<sup>1</sup> was the valiaunt reynawd of mountalban / of whome he had herde speke of many tymes afore that / and that he was the best knyght of 4 all the worlde / and whan he knew this / he wolde full fayn have be agen in perce ; and theenne he toke his he retires towards
the city ;
 waye anone towarde the cyte as a man discomfyted <sup>1</sup>& overthrowen<sup>1</sup> / and drewe to the gate foere for to have 8 gon in to it<sup>2</sup> / but the valiaunt erle of rames pursued hym so nygh that he suffred hym not goo at his wyll / but is pursued by Earl Rames ;
 And whan thadmyrall sawe that he was soo sore pursued / he was aferle to be take / and soo smote his 12 horse wyth his spores, & gate into the cyte wyth grete payn, and lefte all his folke behynde, <sup>1</sup>& saved himself ;<sup>1</sup> he regains the city, but many of his folk are slain.
 but the moste parte of his men were there slayn<sup>3</sup> / And whan reynawde wyst that thadmyrall of perce was soo 16 scaped / he was ryght sory for it ; and theenne he loked abowte him, & sawe there a grete pece of tymbre that had XV fote of lengthe / he lighted doun a fote and toke the balke and trussed it vp afore hym vpon his 20 horse necke, as lightly as it had be som pece of welowe.
 Thenne he sayd to theim that had victory as wel as he,
 ‘ Lordes, folow me yf it playse you.’ ‘ wyth a good Reynawde calls
on the Barons to follow him :
 wyll,’ sayd the barons / ‘ for we shall never leve you 24 nother for deth nor for liffe.’

Now wyll I telle you why Reynawd dyde take the balke a foresayd / Ye oughte to wyte / that Reynawd <sup>4</sup>bethought well that thadmyrall barbas sholde 28 not make the gate to be shet after hym / for love his folke shold com in that were out, and therefore bare reynaude the grete balke or beme, to the ende that yf he founde the gate open, he sholde put it vnder the

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> pour soy garentir de regnault, F. orig. I. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Car regnault et maugis et le conte de rames et geoffroy de nazareh et le conte de Jaffes en firent si grant destruction que peu eschappa, F. orig. I. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. H. H. iv.

porte colisse, that it sholde not be shet lightly agen. And after he had bethought himself therof, he went on his waye <sup>1</sup> wyth the cristens<sup>1</sup> as fast as they cowde reyne toward the gate <sup>2</sup> of Iherusalem<sup>2</sup> / where thadmyralle <sup>4</sup> had saved hymself / and whan he came there, he sawe the gate open, wherof he was glad ; soo toke he thenne his beme, & put it vnder the port colisse / soo that it myght not be lete down / nor the gate cowde not be <sup>8</sup> shet nother. But ye maye well knowe that reynawd dyde not this wythout grete traveylle, for there was so many bodyes both quycke & deed in his waye / that he myght not well helpe hymself ; but one thyng <sup>12</sup> helped hym well ; for whan the sarrasins sawe hym, they were soo ferde of hym that they made hym waye / and fled all afore hym.

he takes a large beam and lays it under the port-cullis, so the gate of the city cannot be shut ;

Whan the noble knyght<sup>3</sup> reynaude sawe that the <sup>16</sup> porte colisse was well faste vpon the beme that he had brought there, wythout ony taryeng he put hande to his swerde and put himselfe wythin Iherusalem. And whan he was in, he began to crye as lie as he <sup>20</sup> myght / 'mowntalban, <sup>2</sup> mowntalban ! the cyte is wonne'<sup>2</sup> / and made there soo moche of armes that mawgys, the erle of Rames / <sup>2</sup> and many other barons<sup>2</sup> gate in by fyne force / And whan the sarrasins sawe that the crystens <sup>24</sup> were wythin the cyte / they putte themself so to flighte, and hydde theym wythin the houses / where as they myght, for to save theyr lives / and alwayes reynaude was at the gate for to kepe thentre / They that were <sup>28</sup> vpon the grete towre <sup>4</sup> of davyd,<sup>4</sup> cryed fast to the other sarrasins that they sholde shet the gate / sayenge that yf the grete lorden entred <sup>5</sup> wythin they sholde be all lost / And whan reynawde sawe that a grete parte of <sup>32</sup> the cristens were wythin Iherusalem, he sayd to mawhe enters Jerusalem, followed by the Barons and Mawgis.

The Saracens hide themselves through fear.

<sup>1-1</sup> luy et tous les aultre barons, F. orig.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> knyghht, orig.

<sup>4-4</sup> du portal, F. orig. l. iii.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. H.H. iv. back.

- gis / 'Cosyn, kepe well this passage, and I shall goo at a nother gate for to make it open' / 'Cosyn,'<sup>1</sup> sayd mawgis, 'goo your waye hardely / and doubte noo 4 thyng / I shall well kepe this path.' Thenne departed reynaude, acompanied wyth many valiaunt cristens, and went vnto a nother gate, whiche he founde wel garnysshed wyth panymys; but reynawd, thrughe his 8 prowes, put them anone to flighte, and gate the gate open. Thus as ye here was doon / for all y<sup>e</sup> sarrasins lost their lives / and was recovered agen the cyte of Iherusalem / thrughe the grete prowes of the noble 12 Reynawde of mountalban / And whan thadmyrall sawe this / he wende to have wexen mad all quycke, and fared as he had be oute of his wytte, and cursed his goddis mahomet<sup>2</sup> & appolin,<sup>2</sup> and pulled his heres of his 16 berde,<sup>2</sup> and rente all his raimentes,<sup>2</sup> and<sup>3</sup> / after he sayd /
 'By apollo, sovereyn god, yf thomas helpe me not to save my life / I shal make him to be slayn incont-nyent.' and thenne he sent for the kyng thomas, & 20 sayd vnto hym, 'Kynge thomas, ye must chuse of two thynges thone / that is, that ye must save my liff that I maye go to perce agen wyth two<sup>4</sup> of my men in my felishyp, or elles ye to be now cast oute of this wyn-24 dowes down' / Thenne sayd the kyng thomas / 'and playse you, ye shall have pacyence that I may speke wyth my folke.' 'goo on,' sayd thadmyrall, 'to theym at this wyndow, For noo ferder ye shall not goo, and 28 deliver you lightly' / Thenne wente the kynge thomas to the wyndowes, and sawe reynawde of mountalban & mawgys come, that cam all the forrest for to sawte the towre of davyd / where he was prysoner to the 32 admyrall / And whan he sawe reynawde & mawgis the forrest of all, he knewe them<sup>5</sup> not / and loked

Reynawde departs
for another gate
of the city which he gains.

The Admiral
curses his evil
fate,

and vows to take revenge on King
Thomas;

he tells the King
that unless he will protect him,
he shall be thrown from the window
of the tower.

<sup>1</sup> Sire, F. orig.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. iii.

<sup>3</sup> Quant Il eut asses demene son dueil Il dist, F. orig. I. iii.

<sup>4</sup> troisieme, F. orig.      <sup>5</sup> Fol. H.H. v.

Thomas appeals to Geoffrey of Nazareth, who is within the city;

he fears he will perish when he hears of a strange knight in command of his folk.

Earl Rames assures him of Reynawde's fidelity.

He tells him who Reynawde is,

ferder / and sawe therle of Rames behynde theym, whiche he knewe not well / and thenne he aspyed geffraye of nazareth,<sup>1</sup> wherof he was glad whan he saw hym, and thenne he began to crie / <sup>2</sup>' Lorde of naza- 4 reth,<sup>2</sup> loke vp to your kyng that is here prisoner; thad-myrall barbas sendeth you worde, that yf ye lete hym not goo sauff in to his countree & royaume of perce wyth two of his men with him / he shall cast me now 8 doun oute of this wyndowes' / Thenne answerde to hym therle of rames / 'ha, good kyng, god save you / ye wote well that a good man ought not to make ony lie. It is trouthe that yesterday we made our governer 12 & maister of that lord that ye see here afore vs / whiche is the best knyght of the worlde, and to him ye must showe your nede, for wythoute hym / we maye noo thyng.' And whan the kyng thomas vnderstode this 16 tidyng, he wexed almost out of his wyt for sorow / by cause he wende none other but he shold dey an evyll deth. thenne sayd he to the erle of rames in grete angre, 'Ha, erle of rames / have ye betrayed me 20 soo / that ye have made a nother lorde than me.'
 'Syr,' sayd therle to hym agen, 'doubte noo thyng, for we have doon soo / your right & honoure is alway saved in this behalve; nor ye shall not lese noo thyng 24 of your owne / for the good knyght hath ynoughe in fraunce, and ye must knowe that he hathe taken this cyte, he & his felawe; and take noo suspexion of him, nor of vs / for I am sure he shall doo evyn as ye wylle 28 yourself / for he is here for none other cause but for to deliver you / for assone as he shall have visite the holy sepulchre of our lorde, he shall goo agen to fraunce.' Thenne sayd the kyng thomas / 'lordes, how is the 32 knight named?' 'Syre,' sayd therle of rames, 'he is called Reynawde of mountalban / the sone of the duke

<sup>1</sup> et le conte Jaffes, F. orig. I. iii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> Seigneurs, F. orig.

aymon, and the beste knyghte of the worlde. For he is suche a knyghte that the grete kyng Charlemagn myght never greve him / and yet <sup>1</sup>have they mayn-4 tened the werre XV.<sup>2</sup> yeres <sup>3</sup>& more,<sup>3</sup> thone agenst thother / and soo hath he doon soo many noble & grete faytes of armes duryng that werre, that the renomnee therof is flowen over alle the worlde' / 'Erle of rames,' 8 sayd the kyng / 'I pray you that ye will tell him in my behalve, thys that I have said <sup>3</sup>to geffray of nazareth.'<sup>3</sup> 'sire,' said therle, 'with right good wylle I shall doo soo.' And thenne he went to reynawde, and shewed to 12 him all that the kyng had sayd. 'lordes,' sayd reynawde, 'we shall not doo soo / but lete vs sawte the towre / for at the worst fall / we shall alwayes well have that apoyntment that thadmyrall asketh / And 16 soo I telle you, yf we sawte well / the towre shall be lightly wonne by force of armes / and we shall deliver the kyng thomas at our owne wylle / and soo shall we slee barbas that thrughe treyson toke the cyte.' 'sire,' 20 sayd therle rames / 'we shall doo your commaunde-ment / doubte not of it.'<sup>4</sup> Thenne commaunded reynawde that the tower sholde be sawted of all sides, and made <sup>5</sup>grete plente<sup>6</sup> of <sup>5</sup>ladders to be righted agenst it, 24 and he hymselfe began first to clime vp, with his shelde for to cover him with ; and after hym went mawgys, & thenne therle of rames / and after theim geffray of nazareth, & well thirty<sup>7</sup> knyghtes more ; <sup>8</sup>and men with 28 crosbowes & other archers abode byneth for to shote vpwarde / where they sawe the sarrasins loke out<sup>8</sup> / and whan thadmyrall sawe reynawde that wold have com and how even Charlemagne

 could not conquer
 him.

King Thomas
 sends his appeal
 to Reynawde
 forthwith.

Reynawde commands the tower
 to be assaulted,

and is the first
 to mount the ladders.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. H.H. v. back.    <sup>2</sup> .XVII., F. orig. I. iii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. iii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Moutl estoit regnault preudomme car Il ne voloit point de mauvais plait . . . F. orig. I. iv.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.    <sup>6</sup> pleute, orig.

<sup>7</sup> .XX., F. orig. I. iv.

<sup>8-8</sup> Le viel conte de Jaffes demoura au bas avecques les archiers et arbalestiers, F. orig. I. iv.

The Admiral
fears for his safety;

he seizes King
Thomas,

and vows to cast
him from the tower unless Rey-
nawde will grant
him a truce.

The Barons beg Reynawde to save their king.

Reynawde commands the Admiral to leave
King Thomas,
and then he shall be allowed to return into Persia.

in to the towre, he was sore a ferle / soo wüst he not what he sholde doo, but raune to the kyng thomas & caught hym by the neck, & sayd to hym / 'By apollo, thou & I shall lepe both atones oute of this wyndowe' / 4 'sire,' sayd the kyng / 'kyll not yourself nor me also / for I shall make the sawte to ceasse' / 'I wyll well that ye doo soo,' sayd thadmyrall / 'but ye shall com with me' / Soo toke him by the [neck<sup>1</sup>] & had him to the 8 wyndow, and sayd all hie, 'Reynawd of mountalban, I shall angre you / For I shall cas<sup>2</sup>te the kyng thomas doun yf ye pardonne me not / and I shall slee myself wyth him, for I maye well deye after suche a kinge' / 12 And whan the duke reynawde sawe that the kyng thomas hyng thus / the hede dounwarde, <sup>3</sup>all redy for to fall<sup>3</sup> / he had grete pite of hym, and sayd to himselfe / 'Ha, good lorde, what shall I doo / for if I leve 16 the sawte it shall be grete shame / for the towre is almost taken / and of the other parte it shall be grete mysshap yf the good kyng thomas take dethe for it.' Thus, as reynawd was vpon the ladder thynkyng what 20 he myght best doo / all the barons of the londe began to crye to reynawde, 'swete sir, for god suffre not that our kyng lese his liff<sup>4</sup> / soo it were grete shame to vs & to you also.' 'Lordes,' sayd reynawde, 'by the feyth 24 that I owe to my bredern & to my cousin mawgis, I wolde not that the kyng sholde take deth for me' / and whan he had sayd so / he cam doun fro the ladder, and after cryed to thadmyrall / 'Leve the kyng thomas 28 & doo hym no harme / for ye shall be delivered bi suche a covenawnt that ye and your two<sup>5</sup> men shall goo on fote in to perce, & ye shall leve here all your goodes.'
'By mahom,' sayd thadmyrall, 'I wyll not doo soo / 32 but shall ride on horsbacke, I & my ii<sup>5</sup> men / and so

<sup>1</sup> Jambes, F. orig. I. iv. Neck in Copland Ed.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H. H. vi. <sup>3-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> si hontusement, F. orig. I. iv. back.

<sup>5</sup> troyes, F. orig. I. iv. back.

shall ye gyve me saufconduyt vpon your feyth, and yf ye wylle not doo thus, I shall lete fall doun the kyng thomas.' 'Admyrall,' sayd reynaude, 'that ye aske, I 4 graunt it to you vpon my feyth / for ye have wyth you suche a pledge that ye shall not be touched at this tyme for me.' thadmyrall was ryght glad whan he herde reynaude speke thus; so drew he vp the kyng 8 thomas agen, & sayd to hym, 'kyng thomas, ye shall goo quyte fro me;' and thenne he went doun wyth the kyng / and opened the gate / and wente oute, he & his two<sup>1</sup> men / There was made grete ioye bitwene 12 the king thomas and Reynawde, And after, of all the other barons of <sup>2</sup>surre / and the grete thanks that the kyng dyde to reynaude & to mawgis are not for to be named; and the langage that was bytwene them are 16 to longe to be recounted. After this, thadmyrall toke his saufconduyt & went his waye towarde perce. Here of hym is made none other mencyon. and after he was goon / the kyng thomas, reynaude, & wyth all thothre 20 barons went togyder in to the towre / and whan they were com vp / the kyng thomas kneled afore reynaude. 'sire,' sayd reynaude, 'ye ought not to doo soo.' 'Yes, verely,' sayd the kyng / and whan rey-24 naude sawe that / he wexed red for shame, & toke vp the kyng<sup>3</sup> / and thenne the kyng colled him & sayd,
 'Blessed be our lorde, that brought you in this londe,
 For ye have socoured Iherusalem the holy cyte / <sup>4</sup>& 28 brought myselfe out of the sarrasins handes<sup>4</sup> / Now tell me, & playse you, yf ye have made peas wyth charlemagn the grete kyng of fraunce / that hath doon you soo grete hinderaunce.' 'sire,' sayd reynaude, 'ye / 32 and by cause of the peas I am com here / beggyng my bred, & pourli arayed'<sup>5</sup> / and whan the king thomas

King Thomas and Reynawde meet joyfully after the departure of the Admiral.

King Thomas
 professes his gratitude towards
 Reynawde,

<sup>1</sup> troys, F. orig. I. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. H.H. vi. back. <sup>3</sup> par la main . . F. orig. I. iv. back.

<sup>4</sup> et moy oste de prison, F. orig. I. iv. back.

<sup>5</sup> comme voyez, F. orig. I. v.

and vows to reward him for his services.

herde him speke, he had grete pyte of hym / and sware by the holy sepulcre that he sholde araye hym honourably, as to hym apperteyneth, for to retourne <sup>1</sup>in to fraunce<sup>1</sup> / after that the kyng had said this worde, they <sup>4</sup> cam down fro the towre of davyd for to go to the holy sepulcre. And ye oughte to wyte that they made grete feest thrughe out the cyte of that was soo be-fall /
The<sup>ne</sup> went they all to the holy sepulcre / for to <sup>8</sup> yelde thankes to our lorde of the cyte, that was recovered fro thandes of the sarrasins.<sup>2</sup> And whan all this was doon, the barons of surre toke leve of the kyng, of reynaude, & of mawgys / and after went every man <sup>12</sup> to his place in theyr countrey / And the kyng toke reynaude & mawgis / and broughte them to his palays / where he fested them a hundred dayes honourably.
<sup>3</sup>And this hangyng, he shewed theym all the countrey <sup>16</sup> <sup>1</sup>about Iherusalem ;<sup>1</sup> and whan reynawde had sported him ynoughe wyth the kyng thomas / he wolde departe for to goo agen in to the marches of fraunce / And whan the kyng sawe that, he gaff to reynawd many riche <sup>20</sup> yefftes / as horses / silkes, golde and silver / and many other thynges in grete plente. and ye oughte to wyte that mawgys wolde take noo thyng / nor chaunge his hermytes araye in no wyse, but arayed hym agen as a <sup>24</sup> pilgyrme & bare fote, wherof reynawd was sory / The kinge made a shyp be redy honourably atte the haven of Iaphes.<sup>4</sup> Reynawd, full tenderly wepyng, toke leve of the kyng & of his barons / and entred in to the ship / <sup>28</sup> And wyte it, that by fortune of wedryng, they were well eyght monethes vpon the see<sup>5</sup> / and at last they

Mawgis and Reynawde are feasted honour-
ably by the king,

who gives them
many rich presents before their departure for France.

Thomas takes leave of them
with much
sorrow.

<sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> omitted, F. orig. I. v.

<sup>2</sup> felons payens, F. orig. I. v.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. H.H. vii.

<sup>4</sup> pour enmener regnault. Quant tout fust prest le bon roy thomas convoya regnault jusques au port de Jaffes. Et aussi le conte rames et geoffroy de nazareth qui estoient bien dolans du departement de regnault. Quant ilz furent au port de Jaffes . . . F. orig. I. v.

<sup>5</sup> sans pouvoir prendre terre, F. orig.

toke lond at a towne called palerne; and whan they had taken lond / reynaude commaunded that y<sup>e</sup> ship shold be vnlade / and all thus as they vnladed the 4 ship, the kyng of palerne / <sup>1</sup>whiche was called simon of puyll,<sup>1</sup> loking out at a wyndow of his castell<sup>2</sup> / the<sup>3</sup>ne sayd to theym that were about hym / 'I see yonder in the haven a ship setteth her gode a londe, and it can 8 not be but there must be som grete man in it / for I see horses that ben had out, & grete riches / I can not say what it may be, but it were pilgrymes.' The<sup>3</sup>ne he commaunded a horse for to be made redy, for he 12 wolde sporte hymselfe to the haven side.<sup>3</sup>

After eight months' on the sea they reach Palermo.

King Simon of that town perceives the ship arrive, and goes down to the port;

The valiaunt kyng simon of puyll, wythout ony more taryenge / came to the see syde<sup>4</sup> wyth many a noble knyghte in his company / And w[h]an he was 16 come to the haven / he founde reynawde, that was come a londe. and assoone as the kyng sawe him / he knewe him well / wherof he was right glad / And also reynawde knewe well the gode kyng Symon.
 20 Soo the<sup>3</sup>ne embraced they eche wyth other, <sup>5</sup>made grete chere thone to thother / 'Reynaude,' sayd the kyng, 'ye be ryght welcom / I pray you com lodge in my castell, for thadmyrall barbas is entred in my londe, &
 24 wasteth it dayly. I fought yesterday wyth hym / but he drove me out of the feelde shamfully, & dyde grete harme to my folke. and I am sure he shall come to besege me tomorow; and I had thoughte to have 28 sende for socours towarde charlemagn / but sith that god hath brought you here / I fere not the kyng, <sup>1</sup>nother his admyrall<sup>1</sup> of perce' / 'Syre,' sayd reynawde, 'I make you sure I shall helpe you wyth all my

he meets Reynawde, whom he knows, and welcomes gladly.

Simon tells Reynawde how his land is wasted daily by the Persian admiral.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> et vist comment lon dechargeoit la nef. Lors dist a ung chevalier qui la estoit le quel se appelloit Symon de pueille et a ceulx qui entour luy estoient . . F. orig. I. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> pour congnoistre que ce feroit pour le loger avecques luy, F. orig. I. v. back.

<sup>4</sup> aus son cheval . . F. orig. <sup>5</sup> Fol. H.H. vii. back.

Reynawde vows to help him
against the Admiral.

A knight ap-
proches the king,
and announces
the arrival of the Admiral before Palermo.

Reynawde arms himself for the
battle,

and Mawgis also.

power. and if thadmyrall come tomorow, he shall not mysse of batayll, for I shall never ete brede tyll I have dyscomfyted him.<sup>1</sup> Thenne the kyng simon brought reynawd to his palays / where he made him 4 gode chere / and thus as simon <sup>2</sup>fested reynawde<sup>2</sup> / cam there a knyghte that was called ymes / that sayd to the kyng simon, 'Sir, thadmyralle of perce<sup>3</sup> is come byfore palerne wyth soo grete folke that all therth 8 is covered wythhall.' whan the kyng vnderstode thise tydynges, he was sory for it, & reynawde g'ad.
Thenne sayd reynawde to the kyng, 'sire, I pray you be not abashed of noo thyng, for thlis day shall ye be 12 avenged, and god before, & the holy sepulcre, fro whens I cam but late.' and whan the kyng herde reynawd speke so, he made be cryed that every man sholde arme himself.<sup>4</sup> and whan reynawde sawe that, he sent 16 for his harnes, and armed hym / and sware the body of god he sholde doo greef to thadmyrall that daye / sithe that he had founde hym agen. and whan mawgis saw reynawd wolde arme him for to fight, he sayd 20 to him / 'My cosin, I am yet dysposed for your love to bere armes, for I cowde not suffre you in dangeour.' And whan the kyng simon herde mawgis speke so, he said him grete thanke / and went & embraced hym, & 24 after sayd / 'By my soule, here is a good hermyte / For <sup>5</sup>whan it was nede, he put well hande to the swerde' / 'sire,' said reynaude, 'ye saye well trowth / and I promyse you men shold fynde in the worlde but 28 fewe suche knyghtes as he is one' / After all thise thynges sayd / every man toke his harnes; and the kyng all armed went to mawgis, & sayd all laughyng,

<sup>1</sup> mal entra oncques en peulle luy et ses gens, F. orig. I. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> le roy de peulle faisoit grant feste pour lamour de regnault, F. orig. I. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> nomme barbas, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> et fist esmouvoir la ville, F. orig. I. vi.

<sup>5</sup> Fol. H.H. viii.

‘My frende mawgis, I pray you that ye wyll bere my standarde this day’<sup>1</sup> / ‘syre,’ answerde mawgis, ‘yf ye take me it, I promyse you I shall have it in suche 4 a place that ye shall swete or ever ye shall com to me.’
 And whan the kyng herde mawgys speke so, he was right glad therof / and the<sup>ne</sup> he toke him his baner.
 And whan mawgys had it in his hande, he sayd to the 8 kyng / ‘sire, now folowe me that wyll / for this day shall thadmyrall be dyscomfyted, yf it playse god’ / And whan mawgis had said soo / he gaffe the spores to his horse, & put hymself amonge the sarrasins as a 12 lion. Reynaude followed him nyghe, & recounted a persan, whom he smote wyth his spere soo grete a stroke that he made hym tomble deed to the grounde, 2 wherof thother were sore abasshed;<sup>2</sup> & after he put 16 hande to his swerde, & shoved himself in to the gretest prees, and smote on eyther side of hym vpon the persans soo merveyllouse strokes that they were gretly merveyllled wyth it, for all they that he hit / he 20 brought them to their endynge / and whan thadmyrall sawe the grete efforte of armes that Reynaude made agenste his folke, he sayd to a nevewe of his that was by hym / ‘By mahom, I sawe not yesterdaye that 24 grete man of armes / nother he that bereth now the baner <sup>3</sup>of symon<sup>2</sup> / from whens the devyll are they com that soo gretly greveth vs / I see wel they be som straunge knyghtes / I am alle redy soo ferde of them 28 that all the blode in my body trembleth.’ This hangyng, the king simon & reynawd made grete slaug[h]ter of sarrasins<sup>3</sup> / But whan thadmyrall sawe that his folke<sup>4</sup> bare theimself soo yll, he wyst not whether he 32 wolde flee or abyde / The<sup>ne</sup> cam reynaude brekyng

King Simon asks Mawgis to bear
 his standart,
 to which he willingly consente.

The battle begins,
 and the Persians
 suffer terribly.

The Admiral
 cannot discover
 who the strange
 knyghts are who fight so bravely;

<sup>1</sup> car a meilleur chevalier que vous ne la scauroie vailer, F. orig. l. vi.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.
<sup>3</sup> Et Illecques eut vue merveilleuse meslee d'une part et daultre . . . F. orig. l. vi. back.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. H.H. viii. back.

he hears Reynawde call on Moutalban, and knows aginist whom he is fighting.

the prees / that cryed as lowde as he cowde 'mountalban' / And whan thadmyrall herde that crie / he was soo sore a ferde that he myst not whether to goo, but said, 'by machone & by appolin, I byleve that this 4 devyll helpeth himself wyth som devilyr, For I lefte hym in Iherusalem, and now he is here.'<sup>1</sup>

Thenne whan thadmyrall barbas knew that he that made soo grete greeff to his folke, was reynawde<sup>2</sup> 8 of mountalban / he shoke all for fere, & sayd to his nevewe, 'By machomet my god, we have doon yll to come here for to make werre agenst the kyng simon, sith that he hath this devyll reynawde of 12 mountalban; for his like is there not in all the world of knyghthode. now wold I be well in my ship in the myddes of the see / for if I abyde him, he shall make an ende of me.' 'Syr,' sayd his folke, 16 'have noo doubte of that grete vylayn / For & he come ones in our handes, he shall not lightly scape vs.' 'lordes,' sayd thadmyrall / 'ye wote not what ye saye; ye know not the grete prowes of reynawde; for & 20 we were ten tymes moo folke than we ben / yet sholde not we endure agenst him. and therefore, by the feyth that I owe to machomet, I wylle abyde here noo lenger.' And whan he had sayd these wordes / he 24 torted the bridell / and assone as he myghte, fled towarde his galleys, and all his folke after hym. And whan reynawde sawe that the paynyms were discomfyted, he began to crie / 'after, mawgis, after / for the 28 truauntes<sup>3</sup> are dyscomfyted.'<sup>3</sup> And whan he had sayd so, he put himself to the chase, and the kyng simon after him / and went castyng doun sarrasins as bestes / And wyte that they slewe soo many of 32 theym<sup>4</sup> / that men shold not bileve the nombre / but

The Admiral flies hastily to his ship, pursued by Reynawde and Mawgis, who

<sup>1</sup> ou je lay trouve par mon peche et sommes en voye de estre perduz se mahom ne nous ayde, F. orig. I. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> reynawde, orig. <sup>3-3</sup> sont tous mors, F. orig. I. vii.

<sup>4</sup> autant quilz peussent estre es gallees . . . F. orig. I. vii.

they cowde not take thadmyrall, <sup>1</sup>for he wa; the cannot overtake him.
 formest<sup>1</sup> /

<sup>2</sup>Barbas, thadmyralle of Perse, whan he founde 4 hymselfe saved in his ship / he began to loke a londe, & sawe the grete dommage<sup>2</sup> that reynawd & mawgis made of his folke / for all the shores of the see were full of sarrasins slayne, wherof he had grete 8 sorowe. Soo began he to pulle his heres of his berde / and cursed thour that ever he was borne / Reynawde cam to the shores, & sawe thadmyralle was saved / wherof he was full sory, & wyst not what he sholde 12 doo more to him / but he made to be cast boltes of wilde fyre in to the galley of the admyrall, soo that he brent the moste parte of it / and barbas was fayne to entre in to a nother shyppe. And ye oughte to wyte 16 that all the sarrasins that bode a londe, lost their lives / Whan the kyng Symon saw that he was to his above of hys enmyes, he was ryght glad of it / soo ranne he & embraced reynawd, & after sayd to hym / 'Rey-20 nawde, I knowe well that I am kyng by your prowes / for & ye had not be, thadmyralle barbas had dystroyed me, and had made an ende of me / wherfore it is reyson that ye be rewarded for it / And therefore, 24 reynawd, I make you lorde of all my goodes & of all my londe' / thenne sayd reynawd, 'Syre, I thanke you moche of your good wylle / For we be not that have dyscomfyted the sarrasins. It was god, & 28 none other, for we be not soo puyssaunt, I & mawgys, for to doo it wythout hym' / And whan they had thus spoken togyder a longe while at the see side / the kyng toke reynawd wyth the one<sup>3</sup> hande, & 32 mawgys wyth thother / and went towarde the cite.
 And whan they were com there / the kyng made the gayr to be broughte, and presented it to rey-

He bewails the evil fate of his men, who are nearly all slain.

King Simon offers Reynawde his land and all his goods as a reward
 for his bravery,
 which is refused
 by him.

<sup>1-1</sup> se sauvast dedens sa nef, F. orig. I. vii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. i.      <sup>3</sup> tone, orig.

A great feast is then held in the town to the honour of Reynawde and Mawgis.

The two knights take leave of the king and his barons, and journey to Rome, where they confess to the Pope;

they then depart for Arden, where they are joyfully welcomed by all the people there.

nawd & to mawgys / wherof reynawde & mawgys wolde take no thing, but gaf it to the pour knyghtes / and incontynent mawgys toke agen his hermytes wede / <sup>1</sup>Thekke began the feest to be the <sup>2</sup>grete <sup>1</sup> 4
<sup>3</sup>for the victory that god had gyven them / The chere that the kyng made to reynaude in his paleys is not for to saye, for it was grete. and for to make shorte tale / Reynawd was honourably feested the 8 space of four dayes / And thenne he wolde departe / and asked leve of the kyng / wherof the kyng was full sory / by cause he wold byde no lenger. and whan he saw that he wolde goo, he gaff hym many fayr <sup>12</sup> yeftes, and made his shyp to be garnysshed wyth moche good vytaylles. And whan this was doon / Reynawd toke leve of the kyng simon <sup>4</sup> & of his barons / and the kyng conveyed reynawd to the ship. <sup>16</sup> And whan he came to the partyng / the kyng simon kyssed reynawd, <sup>5</sup> sore wepyng / and after went agen to palerne / and reynawde dyde doo hale vp saylle, & toke the see / and ceased never tyll he came to rome. <sup>20</sup> and there they toke londe, and he & mawgis went & confessed them to the pope. and whan thei were confessed / they retourned agen in to the shyp / and toke theyr waye towarde fraunce / Shortly to speke, <sup>24</sup> they dyde soo moche by theyr iourneis, that they cam to ardeyne about none. and whan the peple of ardeyn <sup>6</sup> wyst that reynaude & maugis were comyng, they were never soo glad / and went to alarde, & sayd, 'wyte <sup>28</sup> that your broder reynaude, our lorde, is come / and also mawgis, your cosin, hole & sounde / <sup>4</sup>thanked be god!' <sup>4</sup>

<sup>1-1</sup> Puis apres la feste commença et les dances et tous aultres esbatemens par toute l'acite . . . F. orig. I. vii. back.

<sup>2</sup> there in Copland.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. I.I. i. back.

<sup>4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> et puis maugis, F. orig. I. viii.

<sup>6</sup> dordonne, F. orig. I. viii.

And thenne whan alarde & his brethern herde these tydynges of theyr broder reynaude that was come, they had almost swoned for grete ioye that 4 thei had, and anone wente to the gate of the towne agenst their broder / but they founde hym that he was alrede wythin the towne / and whan they sawe hym / they ranne hym agenst. and alarde embraced 8 him fyrst, wepyng / and after kyssed hym by grete love; and in like wyse dyde guycharde & richarde / and thenne they kyssed mawgis, their good cosin /
 And whan thei had thus <sup>1</sup>welcomed him, they went 12 togyder in the paleys / and whan they were there / alarde sayd to reynaude, 'Fayre broder,<sup>2</sup> telle vs how ye have founde our cosin mawgis.' 'Broder,' sayd reynawde, 'I found him in constantyn noble by 16 fortune.' and thenne he began to reherse vnto theym alle his adventures that he had sin he becam pyl-gryme / and whan he had tolde all / he loked on his broder alarde in his face, & sawe he<sup>3</sup> was pale, whiche 20 gaff him suspsectyon, & sayd / 'Fayr broder, how is it with my wyff & my children? I merveylle me moche that I see theym not here' / 'broder,' sayd alarde,
 'have noo doubte for them / for they ben hole & 24 sounde at mountalban / and wyte it, that sith your departyng we have doo repayre agen the towne / and have doon garnyssh the castell wyth vitayll ynoughe / for fere of werre, yf ony thyng had happed vs amys.' 28 And thenne whan reynawde herde good tidynges of his wyff & his children, he was right glad of it; and soo he kneled down and thanked god of it.

The 3 brethern
embrace Rey-
nawde and
Mawgis,

and lead them
into the palace.

Reynawde relates
all his adventures
to them,

and then asks
after his wife and children.

Alarde tells him
his children are safe at Montalban.

Whan reynaude knew that his wife & his children 32 were well, it recomforted hym moche / and began to make good chere; but whan he sawe that his

Reynawde is comforted at these tidings,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. I.I. ii.

<sup>2</sup> vous soyez le tresbien venu . . . F. orig. I. viii.

<sup>3</sup> ehe, orig.

but seeing how
and his brothers
look, he enquires
the reason.

Alarde tells him
of the death of his wife,

who sorrowed so much for her husband's absence
that she died.

Reynawde asks
to be shown his wife's tomb.

brederen made noo grete ioye,<sup>1</sup> he merveilled moche / soo torned himself towarde alarde that sighed sore, & sayd to hym, 'Broder, I awayte for to here som hevvy tidynges; I trowe that that ye have tolde me is not <sup>4</sup> trouthe; and yf ye telle me not how is it of all, I shall goo fro myself / and therefore I pray you tell it me, for I wyl knowe it' / And alarde sawe that reynawde helde hym so short, he began to wepe full tendrely, <sup>8</sup> and thenne said vnto hym / 'Sire, sith that it playse you that I telle you the trouthe / I shall doo soo / Wyte it that my lady, your wiff, is deceased oute of this worlde <sup>2</sup>vnto god.<sup>2</sup> For ever sin that ye departed, she ceased <sup>12</sup> not her sorowe for no thyng that we cowde doo or shew <sup>3</sup>vnto her / And thenne she cast all her clothyng in to a fyre, & wolde never were vpon her / but a sory mauntell & a smocke; and soo longe she wept & <sup>16</sup> sorrowed, day & nyght, that she deyed at last / wherof
I am sory for it, for she was the goodlyest & fayrest of all the worlde.' Whan reynaude vnderstode these wordes, he swounded down to therth for grete sorow that <sup>20</sup> he toke at his hert of the deth of <sup>2</sup>the good duchesse clare,<sup>2</sup> his wyfe / and whan he was come agen to hymselfe, he began to wepe, and sayd, 'Ha, kynge charlemagne, how well maye I hate you, for by you have I <sup>24</sup> lost my wyff / for she is deed by cause she see that ye chassed me out of fraunce wyth soo grete shame as to make me goo a fote / begging my brede like a trewauant / but I know well that my sinnes ben cause of all this.'<sup>4</sup> <sup>28</sup> And whan reynaude had made his mone / he sayd to alarde, his broder / 'fayr broder, I pray you come & shewe me the tombe where my wyff is begravyn?'
'broder,' sayd alard, 'wyth a gode wille I, shall doo <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1</sup> mais faisoient macte chiere . . F. orig. I. viii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig. <sup>3</sup> Fol. I. I. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> A dont qui eut fust liez maugis ne fust pas joyeux. Si fust si marry quil ne scauoit que faire, F. orig. I. viii. back.

soo.' And thenne he brougte him to the chirche where his gode wyfe the duchesse was buryed / And whan reynawde came there / he swouned thre tymes 4 vpon her tombe ; and whan he was come agen to hymself / began to make grete sorow / for he rented his clothes & pulled his heres / And whan he had sorowed longe / he sayd, as a man replenysshed wyth sorowe,
 8 'Ha, god, what a pilgryme I am ! I byleve there is none in the worlde more vnhappy than I am. Now see I well that I have lost all my ioye & my comferte / sith that I have loste the fayreste lady of the 12 worlde, & the goodliest'<sup>1</sup> / And as he was spekyng these wordes / came there his children / aymonet & yonnet, that kneled byfore theyr fader. And whan reynawd sawe theym knelinge a fore hym, he wende 16 his herte sholde have breste. Soo toke he them vp, and kyssed theym by grete love, all wepyng, and after 20 sayd to them, ' My fayr children, see that ye be good men / for I fere me that ye shall mysse me soone.'
 24 and whan reynawd had said this to his children, he began to make more sorow than he had doon afore, & soo dide mawgis. Thenne began y<sup>e</sup> sorowe thrughe all the towne right grete, and lasted x dayes without 28 ceasse / and whan cam to the xiii.<sup>3</sup> daye / Reynawde toke his waye towarde mountalban / that was almost as well peopled as it was or the werre beganne / And mawgis habandouned never reynawd whersomever he 32 went, but he went alwayes on fote in his hermytes aray / and as they went thus to mountalban / the bredern of reynawd & his children went on fote for to bere company to mawgis their cosin. And whan they 32 of mountalban knewe the comyng of their lorde / they were right glad of it / and made all the stretes for to Alarde takes him into the church, where they mourn over the loss of lady Clare.

The people of Arden mourn for ten days, and then Reynawde and Mawgis depart for Mountalban.

<sup>1</sup> que oncques fis dieu ne men scet ne gre ne grace, F. orig. I. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I. I. iii.

<sup>3</sup> onzieme jour, F. orig. L. i.

They are received with great joy by
the inhabitants,

be hanged wyth fayr clothes;<sup>1</sup> and they cam agenste hym all togyder, makyng grete ioye / and made hym grete reverence, and welcomed him honourably / and reynawde receyved them gladly, & made them good 4 chere / For at that tyme he dyssymuled his sorowe that he had at his hert, bycause he sholde not discom-forte his folke, that soo grete ioye made for his comyng there. And also they of mountalban welcomed mawgis 8 honourably / by cause they loved hym of olde very well. And thenne they brought reynaude, makyng grete ioye, vnto the castell / and whan reynaude founde hymselfe wythin his castell of mountalban, he was glad 12 of it, and came to a wyndow & loked down in to the towne / and saw that it was as well pepled as ever it was / and had merveylle of whens somoche peple was com there for to dwelle; & he was right glad of it / for 16 he wende never to have seen mountalban in that plight <sup>2</sup>as it was byfore the werre began.<sup>2</sup> <sup>3</sup>After that the feest was ended, reynaude called his bredern, & said <sup>4</sup>vnto them / 'Lordes, I holde me distroyed for love of the 20 gode duchesse / whiche I have loste, wherof I am right hevvy for it, for love of the grete goodnes that I have knowen in her / I make my vowe to god, that never while I live I shall never mary agen.' 'cosin,' sayd 24 mawgis / 'ye doo well / but I praye you recomforte yourself / for ye knowe well that a thyng that maye not be amended must be lefte alone' / 'cosin,' sayd reynawde, 'ye saye well / and I shall doo soo' / Whan 28 reynawd, his bredern, & mawgis had doon grete chere that daye at mountalban, mawgis on the morow next toke leve of his cosins, & went agen to his hermytage; and who bring Rey-

nawde into the Castle.

He calls his brethren, and makes a vow that he will never marry again.

Mawgis takes his departure next
day,

<sup>1</sup> et de plusieurs riches draps tant de foye que de laine, F. orig. L. i. <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Et pendant ceulx de montauban demenoient grant feste merueilleusement mais regnault ne pouvoit faire bonne chiere pour chose quilz sceussent faire, F. orig. L. i.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. I. I. iii. back.

whan he wolde departe / he sayd to reynaud, 'Cosin, remembre you well, that for you are dede soo many folke / for whom ye be beholden to pray god that he wylle 4 have mercy on their soules' / and whan mawgys had sayd soo / he toke his waye, & wolde not suffre no body to conveye him ; and he dyde somoche by his iourneys that he came to his hermytage / where he lived a holy
 8 life ; for after he was com agen to his hermytage / he ete never but herbes & rotes of the wode ; and in this maner of wyse lived maugis the space<sup>1</sup> of vii. yeres, that he sawe nother man nor woman / And whan it cam to 12 the viii. yere, the good mawgis decessed fro this worlde / aboute ester. Ihesu for his pite pardonne his soule ! ¶ Here levethe the history to speke of mawgis, whom god pardonne, and tourneth to speke agen of 16 reynaud, of his bredern, and of his children, how they were made knyghtes.

and goes back to his hermitage ;

he lives in solitude, eating only herbs and roots for the length of vii. years, when he dies as a holy man.

CHAPTER XXV.

¶ How reynaude sent his two sones to the kyng charlemagne moche honourably / for 20 to be made knyghtes at paris.

In this party sheweth thistory / that after that mawgis was returned to his hermytage, Reynawde was ever after sory for hym & also for his wyffe. But he 24 <sup>2</sup>recomforted hymselfe aswell as he myght wyth his bredern. A longe while abode reynaude wyth his bredern, makyng as good chere as he cowde / and wyte it, that about that tyme deyed tholde duke aymon, 28 whiche lefte grete goodes to hys children. But shortly to speke, reynaude departed & gaaff all his goodes, as well that that he had of his owne / as that was fallen bi the deth of his fader aymon, vnto his bredern, except oonly that he retheyned for hymself<sup>1</sup> the castell & townne of<sup>1</sup> mountalban / and founde the wayes that thei were all maryed noble & richely. Who that sholde speke of the bredern of reynaude & of theyr dedes, it 4 were to longe to be recounted. Reynawd thenne dwelled longe at mountalban wyth his children / whiche he endoctryned & taughte in all good & vertuous maners aswell as he cowde, and norysshed theym tyll that 8 they were men / and cowde bere both sheelde and spere. And vpon a daye he had theym to the feelde on horsbacke / and made to be brought there speres & sheeldes for to assaye theymself / and toke wyth hym xx. 12 knyghtes / whom, whan thei were comen in the feelde / he made his children to iouste wyth / And ye ought to wyte that the two sones of reynaude iousted aswell as though they had be hauntyng the werre x. yeres & 16 more. And when reynawd saw that they dyde so wel, he called theym afore hym / and afore the knyghtes, & sayd to them / 'My fayr children / thanked be our lorde / ye ben talle men, and well made of body / It is 20 now tyme that ye were made knyghtes; wherfore I wyll that ye goo serve the kynge charlemagn, our soverayn lorde / whiche shall make you knyghtes. For of more noble hande ye can not be dowbed to the noble 24 ordre of knyghthode.' 'Syr,' sayd aymonet / 'we are redy to fulfyll your wyll in every thyng that ye commaunde vs' / 'fader,' sayd yonnet, 'ye saye well to vs / for it is tyme that<sup>2</sup> we folowe the werres; but sith it is 28 your playzure to sende vs to charlemagn, we must goo there honourably / but it can not be wythout grete cost' / 'My sone,' said reynaude, 'care not for the cost / for we have good ynoughe / gramercy our lorde, for 32 to bring you there acordyng to your astate; and I promyse you / I shall sende you there or I be vii. nyghte Reynawde dwells a long time at Mountalban teaching his sons to bear arms worthily.

The old Duke Aymon dies and leaves a rich inheritance to his children.

<sup>1</sup> spade, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. iv.

He tells them it is time they were made knights by Charlemagne, and promises to send them to Paris in a week's time.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. L. ii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. iv. back.

elder, as honourabli as ony went thider sin my tyme' /
 'fader,' sayd the children / 'we are redy to goo whan it plaise you' / Whan reynaude had said this to his 4 children, he went home agen to mowntalban well ioyfull of his two sones that proved so well; and whan he was wythin his castell, he called his stiwarde & said to him / 'Stywarde, I commaunde you that ye 8 araye my chyldren honorably & richely of dyverse maners of clothyng, <sup>1</sup>& of thinges that longeth to them<sup>1</sup> / for I wyll sende them to ye court of the kyng charlemagne, for to be made knyghtes of him / and see 12 that they goo as honestly <sup>2</sup>as ony went thider this xx. yeres'<sup>2</sup> / 'My lorde,' sayd the stiwarde / 'I shall well doo your commaundement, sith that it plaiseth you / for ye have ynoughe clothes full riche of your owne of 16 diverse colours.'

he orders his steward to prepare rich clothing
 for his children.

Whan the stiwarde herde the commaundement of his mayster / wythout ony tarieng / he dyde right well alle that was commaunded him by reynaude / 20 for he made to be redy many palfreys & coursers well barded & covered wyth riche clothe of golde, wyth belles of silver & gylte in grete plente / and purveyd for two goode harneyses all complete / <sup>1</sup>for speres & 24 swerdes, & for all suche other thynges as aperteyneth<sup>1</sup> for the two yong bachelers. Shortly to speke, it was not possyble to aray better two yonge squyres than the
 ii. yonge sones of reynaude were by the purvyauce of 28 his stiwarde / and whan all thinges were redy / he brought theym bifore his maisters.<sup>3</sup> And whan reynaude sawe this, he was glad, & sayd, 'by god, <sup>4</sup>stywarde /
 I conne you thanke / that ye have purveyd so well 32 for mi children.' and reynawd made V.C knyghtes

The two yong
 sons of Reynawde
 are honourably
 arrayed,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2-2</sup> quil en y ala jamais point, F. orig. Z. ii. back.

<sup>3</sup> a regnault son maistre, F. orig. Z. ii. back.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. I. I. v.

and v. hundred knights are in readiness to accompany them
to Paris.

Reynawde
charges his sons
to spend their money honestly,

and to treat
all women
courteously,
so shall they be praised of men.

He tells Johnnet
to honour and reverence his brother as his elder.

well redy to bere company to his sones. And whan they were all redy, reynaude caled his sones, & sayd to theym / ' my fare sones, ye be well apoynted / thanked be god, and here is a fayr bende of noble men to bere 4 you feliship / And therefore ye shall now go to the court of charlemain our grete kynge, whiche shall make you grete chere & honour for my love. my chyl dren, ye be of hie linage & right noble, and therefore beware 8 that ye doo noo thing agenst your noblenes / ne that myght retourne to ony shame to me nor to your linage / and I commaunde you vpon the feyth that ye owe to me, that the monei that I deliver to you now / 12 ye dyspende it honestly, and spare not to doo good therwyth to pour gentylmen & yonge bachelers <sup>1</sup>that wold fayn com to worship<sup>1</sup> / and whan ye have all spended it honestly / sende to me for more, and ye 16 shall have ynoughe; and above this, I charge you that ye serve god alwayes afore ony thing that ye have a doo;<sup>2</sup> and that ye speke no worde fowll out of your mouth to no ladi nor to damesell / worship your better, 20 & love your neyghbour, and soo shall you be praysed of every man. Moreover, I charge you that ye live frendly togyder as ii bredern ought to doo / and to you, yonnet, my fayr sone / I commaunde you that ye bere 24 honour & reverence to your<sup>3</sup> broder / for he is your elder / that know ye well.'

Thenne sayd yonnet, 'fader, be you sure I shall serve my dere broder as I wold doo you / that 28 are my lorde & my <sup>1</sup>dere<sup>1</sup> fader.' 'By my feyth, fayr sone,' <sup>1</sup>sayd reynaud<sup>1</sup> / 'yf ye doo soo, ye shall be praysed for it,<sup>4</sup> whersomever ye com or goo. But yet one thyng I forbede you / that ye speke not to moche, 32

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> je vous sa recommande les povres crestiens, F. orig. Z. ii.
back.

<sup>3</sup> chier, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> toute vostre vie, F. orig. Z. iii.

for yf ye doo the contrary / the frenshemen shall saye / that ye be not like in condicions to your parentage'<sup>1</sup> / 'Fader,' sayd the <sup>2</sup>children, 'we have 4 suche a trust in our lorde god that he shall kepe vs from all thyng that is contrary to his wylle, and that we shall soo governe vs / that ye shall gladly avowe vs for your children / and all they of the court of 8 charlemagne shall love vs, but yf they wylle do wrong' / And whan reynaude herde his children speke soo, he was right glad therof, and drewe them aside, & sayd vnto theym / 'My fayr children, ye goo now 12 in to fraunce / remembre well hereafter all whiche I shall telle you now / Ye must knowe that there ben in the court of the kynge charlemaine a grete linage of folke that never loved vs but litill, the whiche are 16 of grete power / thei be of maunte / I charge you that ye nor goo nor com wyth theym / for noo thing that they can telle you / and if they hurt you by ony wyse, see that ye revenge yourself wysly, and shew 20 them that ye be the sones of reynaude of mount-alban' / 'Fader,' sayd the children / 'doubt not we shall not suffre that ony outeraige be doo to vs, yf we maye.' 'Fayr children,' sayd reynaude / 'knele afore 24 me' / and they kneled anone byfore their fader; & Reynawde gaff them his blessinge, and after kissed theym wepyng many tymes, & gaaff theym leve / and after tordned him towarde his knyghtes, & sayd, 'My 28 lordes, I commende to god, & praye you that ye tende well my children / and suffre not that ony wrong be doon to them to your power / for ye know well that we ben hatred in fraunce; and I pray you gyve them 32 alwayes good counseyll / and that they be alwaies courteys, gentyll, & liberall of their goodes / for a prince covetous was never praised.' and whan reynaud

They promise their father to obey all his commands.

Reynawde warns them against his enemies that they will meet
at Charlemagne's
court;

he gives them his blessing,
and takes leave of them, weeping
sadly.

<sup>1</sup> car jamais nous ne sermonoyent volentiers, F. orig. Z. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. l.I. v. back.

had sayd this, he wythdrew him sore wepyng ¶ Thus levethe thystory to speke of reynawd & of his bredern, and retorneth to shew of his children, that were goon to the court of the kyng charlemagn. 4

CHAPTER XXVI.

¶ How after that the kynge <sup>1</sup>charlemagn had receyved full swetly the sones of reynawd, thei fought with the sones of folques / and discomfited them in thile of our lady, 8 wythin paris, bycause thei had layd treison vpon reynaud their fader / for cause that he had slayn folques in the playn of valcolours /

Now sheweth the tale, that after that aymonet & 12 yonnet were departed<sup>2</sup> fro their fader, thei rode somoche by their iourneis / that they cam to paris / and lodged them by the paleys / And whan thei were lodged / the ii children clothed theimself honestly, & 16 all their folke / and the<sup>ne</sup> thei went wyth their feliship, holdyng eche other by thandes, to the paleys<sup>3</sup> / And whan the barons of charlemagn sawe com the two bredern so richely arayed, & suche a goodly feliship 20 of knyghtes after theim, they merveylled gretly what thei myght be / so sayd thone to thother / 'here be two fair children, and by liklihode they shold be bredern / and they must be of som hie linage' / The 24 barons the<sup>ne</sup> folowed theym / whan they mounted to the palays / And they entred wythin the grete halle, where they founde the kyng charlemagn / that devysed with som of his barons; and there was the duke 28 naymes, richard of normandi, salamon of breten, ogyer

Aymonet and Johynet arrive at Paris,

and go to the palace.

The barons
wonder whose sons they are accompanied by
so many knights;

they follow them
into the palace,
where Charlemagne is seated
with many of his
barons;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. I. I. vi.    <sup>2</sup> de montauban, F. orig. Z. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Et devez scauoir quilz ressembloient bien enfans de prince, F. orig. Z. iii. back.

of denmarke, therle ganellon / and also constans & rohars / whiche two hated reynaud of mountalban right sore, for they were the sones of foulques of morillon, that Reynaud had slayn in the playne of valcolours, when he <sup>1</sup>& his bredern<sup>1</sup> defended them so well at the roche mountbron / Thise ii. bredern, constans & rohars, had grete name in the courte / but their hertes were full false / and the kyng charlemagn loved them well for their prowes & grete knightehode / Wyth charlemagn were also many other grete pryncis & barons / wherof the boke maketh noo mencyon, <sup>1</sup>For it were to longe a thyng to be recounted<sup>1</sup> /

amongst them Constant and Rohart, the sons of Foulques, who are enemies of Reynawde.

<sup>2</sup>Thenne whan the ii bredern, <sup>1</sup>the sones of Reynawd of mountalban,<sup>1</sup> were com in to the hall / they sawe the kinge among his barons. soo went they vnto hym, & kneled doun afore hym, and kyssed his fete / and theñne aymonet spake first, & sayd / 'Syre, god gyve you good liff & longe / and kepe from evyll all your noble company / Syre, we are com to you for to have thordre of knyghthode / <sup>1</sup>yf it playse your gode grace to give it vs<sup>1</sup> / for of noo better hande than is yours we can not have it; wherfore, sir, we besече you humbly for god, & for the love of our fader, that it wille please you to reteyne vs in your servyse vnto the tyme ye gyve the sayd ordre of knyghthode' / 'Who ben you,' sayd the king, 'that speke thus?' 'sire,' <sup>1</sup>sayd aymonet<sup>1</sup> / 'we are the sones of reynawde of mountalban'<sup>2</sup> / And whan the kyng charlemagne vnderstode that they were the sones of reynaude,<sup>4</sup> he rose vpon his fete lightly, & receyved them honourably, and after sayd vnto them, 'My children, ye be right welcom / and how fareth your fader?' 'sire,' sayd the children / and beg for the honour of knight-hood from his hand;

Aymonet and Jolinnet kneel before the Emperour,

they tell him they are the sons of Reynawde.

Charlemagne then receives them with joy, and

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.                      <sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. vi. back.
<sup>3</sup> a qui dieu doit bonne vie, F. orig. Z. iv.
<sup>4</sup> de montauban, F. orig.

enquires after
their father.

'he dooth well, thanked be god / and he recomendeth him right humbly to your good grace, besechyng you that ye will have vs for recomended / and we have left him at mountalban / but he draweth now sore to age.' 4
'Thus gothe the worlde, my children' / sayd the kyng, 'every man muste take in it an ende.' Moche glad was the kyng charlemagne of the comyng of the two sones of reynawd,<sup>1</sup> and right gladly he loked vpon theym for the 8 love of their fader; for the more he behelde them, and the more fayrer he founde theym, & better liked theym, and well he loved them, bycause they were like the fader; and whan he had loked vpon them ynoughe / 12 he sayd to his barons / 'Lordes, if the children wold forsake their fader / they cowde not, for never children were more like to him / than they;' <sup>2</sup> and whan he had sayd soo, he torned toward <sup>3</sup>the children / and said to 16 them / 'Fayr children, ye shal be made knyghtes at all tymes whan ye wyll / for the love of your fader, my good frende / and I shall gyve you moo londes than your father hathe, and for love of you / I shall make an 20 hundred knyghtes more wyth you, for ye ben of suche
a stocke come / that ye ben worthy to be honoured, praised, & holden dere' / And thenne whan the duke naymes, rowlande, & olivere that came there, & all the 24 other peres of fraunce saw that they were the two sones of reynawd of mountalban, they were ryght glad of it / and thenne every man kyssed theym by grete love, and asked theym how reynaude & his bredern dyde / 28
'Lordes,' <sup>4</sup>sayd aymonet, <sup>4</sup>' what are you that be so glad of our comyng' / 'children,' sayd the duke naymes /
'we ben all you[r] kinnesmen.' And thenne the duke naymes tolde them all their names / and whan the 32 children knewe what they were / thei meked theymself

The Emperor
promises to make them
knyghts, and grant them a larger portion of land.

The peers rejoice
over the arrival of Reynawde's sons,
and embrace
them with great
gladness.

<sup>1</sup> de montauban, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Et cuyde quilz feront une fois bonnes gens se ilz vivent leur cage, F. orig. Z. iv.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. I.I. vii.

<sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

byfore them honestly; and after, yonnet sayd to them /
 'Lordes, our fader greteth you well, and prayeth you that ye wylle have vs for recomended as your kynnes-4 men.' And thezne whan the barons herde the two children speke soo wysly / they were glad of it, & also of their comynge. But the ii. sones of foulques of moryllon were full sory & wroth for it. 'bi my soule,' 8 said constans to his broder rohars, 'the fader of these two children slewe our fader / wherof the hert in my body swelleth highe for angre that I see them here; nor my eyen can not loke vpon them'<sup>1</sup> / 'broder,' sayd 12 rohars, 'nor I nother, by my trouth / but I counseyll not that we fyghte wyth them not here, for it were foly. But lete vs awayte a tyme & place covenable / for sith that they shall dwelle here / we shall avenge vs 16 vpon them' / 'Broder,' sayd constans, 'lete vs doo one thing that I shall telle you / whiche is easy for to doo, that ye shal call thone of treyson, & I thother, saiong <sup>2</sup>that theyr fader slewe our fader by treyson.
 20 And also we shall prove that their fader wrought treyson agenst the kinge charlemagn' / 'Broder,' sayd rohars / 'ye speke well: we must suffre a while tyll we see how they shall bere theimself in court / for & they 24 doo any otherwyse than they ought to doo, we shall mow kille them, & be not blamed for it.' After this doon / ye ought to knowe that the children of reynawde of mountalban / bare theimself full honestly in court, 28 for all y<sup>e</sup> barons loved them dere, save oonly the two sones of foulques of morillon, wherof aymonet & yonnet perceyved it right well / and spake not wyth them / nor haunted them not. It was grete merveylle of the 32 grete yeftes that <sup>3</sup>the sones of aymon<sup>3</sup> gaff to the barons & gentylnen of the court charlemagn, as were fayr

The two sons of Foulques are envious at the reception accorded to the sons
 of Reynawde,

and vow to revenge the death of their father by accusing Rey-
 nawde of treason.

The sons of Rey-
 nawde give costly
 gifts to the barons
 and gentlemen of the court, and

<sup>1</sup> Et si ne feray jamais liez jusques je naye ung occis, F. orig. Z. iv. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. vii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> les enfans de regnault, F. orig. Z. v.

are greatly praised
by all assembled
there.

The Emperor
loves them for their good behaviour,
and makes them
the carvers of his dishes.

Charlemagne
presents Johnnet
with a handsome
knife;
returning to his place Johnnet pushes Constant,

who for this offence wrathfully
calls him the son of a traitor.

horses, & harneys, & many clothes of silke of dyverse colours / and in likewyse they gaff to the ladyes & gentilwymen fair gownes of clothe, of gold, & of silver. And of thother part they kept a grete astate 4 & goode hous to all pour gentylnen & esquyres / and dyde somoche good that they were gretly prayed of every man / What sholde I telle you more / the children of reynaude dyde somoche in the court of the 8 kyng charlemain, that of all the worlde they were loved / and pryncipally of the kyng charlemagn / Whan the kyng sawe that they behaved theym soo well & so wysly in his court / he was ryght glad of it, 12 soo loved he theim moost of ony yong knightes of his court, and made theim his keruers afore him / And thenne whan the ii sones of folques sawe that the kyng loved theim so moche, they were full angry / in somoche 16 that they wexed mad all quycke for it / and soo sware by grete angre that they shold slee theim, or ever they sholde goo from the courte. It happed soo that on wytsondaye evyn, as the kyng was atte Parys, and wolde 20 <sup>1</sup>kepe open court, and there were aymonet & yonnet wyth thother barons in the hall / This hanging, aryved there a knyghte of almayn, that presented to the kyng a fayr knyff, after the facyon of the londe. thenne called 24 the kyng yonnet, & gaaff it hym by grete love / and whan yonnet had receyved this yefte of the kyng, & as he sholde have goon to his place agen, he shoved constants wyth his elbow agenst his wyll; and whan con- 28 stants sawe that yonnet had doon soo / he had grete dyspite at it / and sayd, 'what is this? must there be somoche set bi thise two boyes, the sones of a traytour / whiche ben not worthe a roten apple / and thys one is 32 all redi becom soo proude that he hath now shoved me wyth his elbow by grete envy & pryde.' moche other langage constants sayd by yonnet, whiche he ought not for to saie. And whan yonnet herde that constans had called him the sone of a traytour / he was sore an angred. So cam he to hym, & sayd, 'constans, 4 ye have lerned a fowle crafte / that ys, that ye can speke shrewdly wythoute a cause lawfull. why for I have herde that ye have called me & my broder the sones of a traytour / and that the kyng knowethe well 8 that our fader slewe yours by treyson / wherof I wylle ye wyte that ye lie falsly / but your fader dyde assaylle our by treyson / as a traytour / come of the linage of traytours. But god wold not that my fader sholde 12 deie soo, nor myn vnclcs. My fader slewe your fader, it is trouth; but it was in his defendyng of his body / and he dyde thekke as a noble knyghte / as he is / and yf ye be soo hardy that ye wylle mayntene that he 16 dyde it by treyson / here I cast now my gage afore this noble companye / sayeng that ye have lied falsly / <sup>1</sup> save the reverence of the kinge, and of his felishyp.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Fol. I.I. viii.

Johnnet advances towards Constant, and tells him he lies in calling his father a traitor;

he throws down his gage before the assembly.

Thekke whan the kyng charlemagn sawe that none 20 of the barons sayd noo thyng of the striffe of yonnet <sup>2</sup>and of constans / he was angry for it, & sayd / 'Constans, ye doo grete wrong for to saye that I & the twelve peres of fraunce knowe well that reynawde 24 of mountalban slewe your fader by treyson. holde your peas,' sayd charlemagne. 'For yf ye knewe well how the matere is, ye sholde not speke of it / wherefore I commaunde you, in asmoche as ye fere to angre 28 me, that ye make amendes to yonnet of that ye have sayd / or elles voide incontynent my court & my royaume / for ye have trowbled all my courte / wherof I am not contente.' And whan rohars herde this that 32 the kyng charlemagn had sayd to constance his broder / he was angry, and soo rose on his fete and sayd, 'Sire, I am redi for to prove vpon aymonet that his fader slew our fader by treyson, and here is my gage' /

Charlemagne rebukes Constant for his accusation against Reynawde, and commaunde him to apologize to Johnnet for his words.

Rohart rises and throws down his gage, stating his willingness to fight Aymonet.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.
CHARL. ROM. XI.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.I. viii. back.
2 N

The sons of Reynawde beg the Emperour to accept their gages.

Charlemagne consents to the battle taking place.

'Rohars,'<sup>1</sup> sayd Charlemagne, 'here ye take a wronge waye, and it shall be to you over late whan ye shall repente it.' whan aymonet & yonnet vnderstode thysse wordes / they kneled afore charlemagn, & sayd to 4 him / 'Sir, for god we pray you right humbly that ye take the gages that rohars hath cast / for wyth goddys grace we shall well defende our fader of the treyson / that they put vpon him.' 'Children,' sayd the kyng / 8
 'sith it playse you that I take them / I shall doo soo' / and thenne the kyng charlemagn toke the gages / and constans avauuced hymself & sayd / 'Sire, we vnderstonde that we shall fyght two & two, thone 12
 agenst thother.' ¶ whan the kyng charlemayn had taken the gages of bataylle of constans & of rohars, he asked theym who shold be their seurtes? thenne lept forth the traytour guenellon, berenger, escouff of moril- 16
 lon, lion of pignabell, and gryfon of haute braunche / the whiche sayd vnto kyng charlemagn, 'Syre, we wyll be suretes for constans & rohars, for they be of our linage'<sup>2</sup> / 'Lordes,' sayd charlemagn, 'I take them you 20 to kepe; And I charge you to brynge theym agayn to the <sup>3</sup>court whan tyme shall be.' 'Syre,' sayd the suretees, 'we shall doo as ye commaunde vs.' and whan the kyng had receyved the suretees of constans 24 & of rohars / aymonet & yonnet came forth / and sayd in this manere / 'Syre, here ben our gages, how that we will defende that our fader slew never foulques of moryllon by treyson.' 'Children,' sayd the kyng 28 charlemain, 'ye speke well / but I must have surete of you, as I have of<sup>4</sup> ye other party / yf I wyll doo reyson' / Thenne lept forth rowland, oliver, the duke naymes of bavyre, ogier of denmarke, richarde of nor- 32 mandy, & escouff the sone of oedon, whiche sayd to y<sup>o</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Constans, F. orig. Z. vi.

<sup>2</sup> Si ne leur devons faillir, F. orig. Z. vi.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K.K. i.

<sup>4</sup> ef, orig.

kyng / 'Syre, we ben suretees for the sones of reynaude / and we shall present theym to you at the daye of bataille' / 'Sire,'<sup>1</sup> sayd the kyng charlemagn, 'it 4 playseth me well; but the children of reynaude ben not yet knyghtes as ye knowe, but by the feyth that I owe to god, they shall be to morowe,<sup>2</sup> and therne we shall sende our lettres to reynawd, that he come for to
 8 see the bataylle of his children / for this daye fourthy dayes I devyse it.' Whan came at thevyn, the kyng charlemain made be called his stywarde, & sayd to hym / 'Goo, and brynge me to morowe the sones of 12 reynaude / for I wylle that they ben tomorow named knyghtes / and see that they ben well honourde / for I wylle doo this for the love of their fader; and pourvey soo that thei have eche of theim a good courser,<sup>3</sup>
 16 and gode harneis <sup>4</sup>mete for their bodyes'<sup>4</sup> / Whan the stywarde herde the commaundement of the kyng charlemagn / he dyde well the tenour therof / and whan the mornynge came / the stywarde brought aymonet & yonnet
 20 well apoynted / and in there company all suche other as the kyng <sup>4</sup>for their love <sup>4</sup>wolde make knyghtes<sup>5</sup> that daye / And whan they were afore the kyng, aymonet & yonnet requyred thordre of knyghthode / to whome 24 the kyng gaff it wyth good hert, and in like wyse to the <sup>6</sup>other for love of theim; and thenne was a grete feest made that daye / And whan the feest was / finysshed / charlemagn toke a messenger / whiche he sente to reynawde of mountalban, and sent him worde that he sholde come to the court wyth gode company / for his children were called of treyson / by the sones of foulques of morillon, sayeng, that he had slayen their

The Emperor promises to make Aymonet and Johnnet knights next day;

he orders his steward to bring them to him on the morrow, and see that they have good horses and armour.

After Reynawde's sons are knighted a great feast takes place.

A messenger is sent to Mountalban with commands for Reynawde to come to Paris to see his sons fight.

<sup>1</sup> Seigneurs, F. orig. Z. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> de ma main, F. orig. Z. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> ou parlefroy, F. orig. Z. vi. back.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> Lequelz il auoit fait veiller celle nuyt en leglise de nostre dame, F. orig. Z. vi. back.

<sup>6</sup> Fol. K.K. i. back.

fader by treyson / and how his children had caste their gages, sayeng that they had lied falsly.<sup>1</sup>

Thenne whan the duke reynawd<sup>2</sup> herde these tidinges that charlemayne sente hym, he merveyllled of it 4 sore. Thenne sent he for all his bredern by his letters that they sholde com to him in armes, for it was nede / And whan the bredern of reynaude vnderstode these tydynges / wythout ony tarieng they came to <sup>3</sup>their 8 broder at<sup>3</sup> mountalban / And whan reynaude sawe theim, he was glad / and kyssed theym, thone after the other / and after, he tolde theym all that the kyng charlemagn had gyve him to knowe; and whan the 12 bredern of reynaude vnderstode it / they merveyllled of it. 'Broder,' said richarde, 'doubte not / for the mater shall come better than ye wene of / by the grace of god / I counseyllle that we goo to the court of the kyng 16 charlemagn. For whan we shall be there, we shall soone vnderstode the kynges mynde, and what his wylle is towarde you; and I promyse you yf he hath doon ony wrong to our newewes, <sup>3</sup>your children<sup>3</sup> / god 20 never have mercy on my soule / but I shall slee hym / what hadde therof.' 'Broder,' sayd reynawde, 'I wylle well that we goo to parys; and whan we shall be there / we shall well vnderstode how the kyng charlemagn 24 bereth hymself towarde my chylidren.' 'Brother,' sayd alarde / 'ye speke well & wysly / and me semeth after myn advyse that we ought to goo thider wythout ony long taryenge.' And thenne whan they were therto 28 accorded, <sup>4</sup>they departed from mountalban wyth right a noble company / and so moche they rode by their iourneis that they cam to the cite of parys. And whan they were comen there, all the xii. peres of fraunce knewe 32

Reynawde sends for his brethren when he hears these tidings of his sons, and tells them to come with him to Paris.

Alarde advices that they should set forth immediately.

They arrive in Paris,

<sup>1</sup> Comment gens traictres extraitz de traictres par droicte lignee, F. orig. Z. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> de montauban, F. orig. Z. vii.      3-3 omitted, F. orig.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. K.K. ii.

- anone of their comynge, and went agenst theim / and brought wyth them aymonet & yonnet, and receyved reynawd & his bredern wyth grete ioye & honour /
- 4 And thenne whan reynawd saw his two fayr sones, he sayd to them in this wyse / 'My children, now shall it be seen yf ye be my sones or noo; for and ye be my children / ye shall avenge me of that grete shame
- 8 that these traytours put vpon me wythout a cause.' 'Fader,' sayd the children, 'doubte not therof / for & they were ten agenst vs / yet shall we overcom them
- 1 by the grace of god<sup>1</sup> / For every man knoweth well
- 12 that ye be as true a knyghte as ony is in the worlde' / And whan the kyng charlemagn knewe the comyng of reynawd, that was come so well acompanyed, he was glad of it / and sent worde to reynawd that he shold
- 16 come to hym, the whyche thyng reynawd dide / And whan the kyng saw hym, he made him good chere, and with good hert / and also to his bredern / And whan reynawd had be with the kyng a longe while, he toke
- 20 leve of hym, & went to his lodges agen / And whan he was there, he called his bredern & his chyldren, & sayd to them / 'My sones, come hider / telle me how the kyng charlemain bereth hymself towarde you, and
- 24 what he sayeth of this quarell that ye have vnder-take / I must knowe the trouthe of it' / 'Fader,' said the children, 'wite it that the king charlemagn loveth vs moche / and he entreteyneth vs above all other
- 28 honourabli / for the love of you that he loveth right moche, as he sayeth.' And thenne thei tolde him how he had made them knyghtes<sup>2</sup> / and how he susteyned their quarell agenst the traytours and all other.
- 32 <sup>3</sup> When reynawde and his bredern herde the children speke thus / thei were glad of it / for and are joyfully welcomed by the xii. peers.

The Emperor sends for Reynawde, and receives him graciously.

Reynawde asks his sons how they have been treated by the Emperor.

They tell him how good Charlemagne has been to them.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> moult honorablement, F. orig. Z. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K.K. ii. back.

Reynawde next morning thanks Charlemagne for his kindness
towards his children.

The sons of Aymon then dwell happily
in Paris.

On the day of the battle the sons of Foulques appear before Charle-
magne.

they doubted lest charlemagn wolde have faren yll wyth theym / And whan reynaude of mountalban wyst that the<sup>1</sup> kyng had borne himself soo well towarde his sones, he sayd that he sholde serve hym evermore <sup>4</sup> as his soverayn lorde / And on the morowe<sup>2</sup> reynawde went to see the kyng at his risynge from his bed, & thanked hym moche of the grete worshyp that he had doon to his children. Thenne sayd Charlemagn to <sup>8</sup> hym, 'Reynawde, ever sin that I sawe that ye dyde my commaundement with good wylle, and that ye were obeyng to me / I dyde cast all my angr from me, & all the evyll wylle that I had agenste you / <sup>12</sup> and I wylle that ye wyte that I am well yours, and shall be aslonge as I live in this worlde, for I take <sup>3</sup>you for one of my best frendes'<sup>3</sup> / And whan Reynawde herde the debonairte <sup>4</sup>& the kynde wordes of the kyng, <sup>4</sup> <sup>16</sup> he cast hymself to the fete of hym / and in likewyse dyde all his bredern, and thanked hym moche / and wyte that reynaude & his bredern abode in paris wyth grete ioye <sup>5</sup>& playsure<sup>5</sup> vnto the daye of the bataylle <sup>20</sup> that shold be of his children / And this hangyng, reynawde had doon make good harneys for his children, and had pourveyed two goode horses for theym /

Whan the daye of the bataylle was come, the <sup>24</sup> children of foulques of moryllon cam & presented them afore the kyng redy for to fyghte. And whan the kyng sawe theym / he sayd to theym /
'Children, ye have had evyll counseyle <sup>6</sup>to challenge the <sup>28</sup> sones of reynawd of mountalban as ye have doon.<sup>6</sup> For I am sure it shall repente you / but thys is not the fyrste fawte that your linage hathe doon / nor it shalle not be the laste / I fere me of it.' And whan therle <sup>32</sup>

<sup>1</sup> grant, F. orig.      <sup>2</sup> au matin, F. orig. Z. vii. back.

<sup>3-3</sup> pour mon amy, F. orig. Z. vii. back.

<sup>4-4</sup> de Charlemaigne, F. orig. Z. vii. back.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>6-6</sup> de faire ung si fort appel, F. orig. Z. viii.

ganellon and all they of the linage of foulques of morillon herde the <sup>1</sup>kyng speke soo, they were so gretely abashed / that they wyste not what they sholde doo / but kepte all theyr peas, and answerde noo worde. And thenne sayd constans to the kyng, 'Syre, we praye you for god that ye wylle telle vs the place where we shall fighte agenste our enmyes'<sup>2</sup> / Thenne stode vp the duke naymes of bavyre / and sayd / 'Syre, constans speketh well ; ye must devyse <sup>3</sup>the place, and where they shall fyghte two agenst two / or one agenst a nother alone.'<sup>3</sup> 'Naymes,' sayd the kyng / 'I wylle that ye Iudge this matere' / 'sire,<sup>4</sup> syth that it playse you soo / I shall bespeke it wyth a goode wylle. <sup>5</sup>Syre,' sayd the duke naymes<sup>5</sup> / 'me semeth / because that constans hathe callid the sones of reynaude <sup>6</sup>to batayll bothe for one matere<sup>6</sup> / that they oughte to fyghte two agenst two / and all foure togyder.' 'Syre,' sayd reynawde / 'the duke naymes sayth ryght well'<sup>7</sup> / 'By my feythe, reynaude,' sayd the kyng charlemagne / 'and I graunte it soo / but I wylle that the bataylle be made in the Isle of our lady wythin savoyne, to morowe in the mornynge' / And whan kyng charlemagne had sayd thus / the barons toke leve of hym / and eche of theym wente to their lodgys, and reynawd also, the whiche toke his two sones wyth hym. and the two sones of foulques of moryllon wente also wyth theyr frendes.<sup>8</sup> Whan reynaude & his bredern had souped / and had made goode chere / he made brynge harneys ynoughe, and made alarde & rycharde / and his two chyl dren,

Constant asks Charlemagne where they shall fight.

The Emperor fixes the place in the Isle of our Lady.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. iii.

<sup>2</sup> et comment nous devons faire cest assauoir se nous combatrons deux contre deux ou ung contre ung, F. orig. Z. viii.

<sup>3-3</sup> que lon doit faire, F. orig. Z. viii.

<sup>4</sup> dist le duc naymes, F. orig. <sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>6-6</sup> traictres sans riens nommer et rohars lautre, F. orig. Z. viii.

<sup>7</sup> et juge leaulment, F. orig. Z. viii.

<sup>8</sup> et parens, F. orig.

The four brethren
and Reynawde's children arm
themselves.

1aymonet & yonnet,<sup>1</sup> to be armed. And thenne he made to be shewed to aymonet & to yonnet how they sholde defende theymselfe of theyr ennyes, and in what maner they sholde assaylle theym / And whan 4 this was doon / reynaude dyde sende his chyldren to saynte vyctor, and the traytours went to saynt germayn, 2for to watche 3that nyghte.<sup>2</sup> And whan the daye came, a bysshop, that was of the linage of constans & of 8 rohars, sange masse afore his cosins; and the bysshop turpyn sayd masse a fore the sones of reynawd<sup>4</sup> / whiche was wyth theym at saynt vyctor / and also the twelve peres of fraunce / And whan the yong knightes 12 had herde the masse, they came all in their harneys to the palays byfore the kynge charlemagn / And whan the kynge sawe theym / he called his newewe row-lande, & oliver, the duke naymes of bavera, & richarde 16 of normandy, and sayd to theym, 'Lordes, ye ben all my men. I commaunde you vpon the trowth that ye owe to me, that ye goo kepe the feelde by suche maner that my honoure be saved bi it, and that ye 20, kepe to every man his ryght / For by the feith that I owe to god / yf there be ony man soo hardy that wylle doo ony owtrage / I shall angre hym ryght sore / Wherfore I wylle that ye passe the water of sayne 24 in to the ysle wyth the fyghters, and that ye bere wyth you the halowes for to make theym swere thervpon, afore they shall entre in to the feelde / that they goo to it all in goode quarelle truly.' 'Syre,' sayd the 28 barons / 'we shall doo your commaundemente, and also we shall kepe therein well your honour / for we ben bounde therto.' 'Lordes,' sayd the kyng charlemagn, 'ye speke well,<sup>5</sup> but ye muste take gode hede 32 well to all / For there shall be grete folke gadred of

Bishop Turpin
says masse before them next morning.

The Emperor
commands his peers to keep good order during this battle.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.      <sup>2-2</sup> des prez, F. orig. Z. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K.K. iii. back.      <sup>4</sup> de montauban, F. orig.

<sup>5</sup> et loyaulment, F. orig. Z. viii. back.

the one parte / and of the other / wherfore I fere me that some medlynge shall hap amonge theym / For rohars is full of grete treyson, and all his frendes, I 4 know it well. And of the other parte / Reynawd & his brethern are right puyssaunt & wyse / and have grete power wyth theym, and they wylle not see theymselfe wronged. and namely, Richarde the broder 8 of reynawd / For & he be ones angry / he spareth 1 nother kynge nor erle. And therfore I fere hym moost of all the other, for he wolde ones have slayn me / I am yet wel remembred therof / Of reynawde I 12 doubtte noo thyng / for he is in every thyng reson-able.'<sup>2</sup> 'Syre,' sayd the duke naymes, 'be not dysmayed of noo thyng, for we shall kepe well your ryght & your honour wythoute to doo<sup>3</sup> ony wronge to 16 ony body' / This hangyng, the children of foulques of moryllon went to the sayd isle / where as the kynge charlemagne had tolde theym that they sholde fyghte /
 And whan they were passed over the ryver in to the 20 ysle wyth theyr horses, they bounde theym / and thenne they set theymselfe down vpon the fayr grasse / waytyng after theyr adverse party. Now here what the traytours had ordeyned / Ye oughte to wyte that 24 while the kynge charlemagne had spoken wyth his barons <sup>4</sup>as ye have herde,<sup>4</sup> Berenger, ardocke, & gryffen of haute braunche dyde put theymself in a busshe / nyghe by the sayd isle of our lady / and had proposed 28 that yf the sones of reynawde had the beter of the feelde agenst the two other sones of moryllon / that thenne they sholde yssue oute vpon theym wyth a ryght grete nombre of folke, for to slee theym sham-32 fully.

for fear there
 may be too much fighting among the various companies of
 knights.

Duke Naymes
 counsels the Emperor to fear
 nothing, for they will keep good order.

The treacherous barons meanwhile put themselves in ambush to slay Reynawde's sons
 if they should be victorious in the battle.

Whan thenne reynawde sawe that it was tyme that his sones sholde goo to the isle for to

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. iv.      <sup>2</sup> et bien amesure, F. orig. Z. viii. back.

<sup>3</sup> doo, orig.      <sup>4-4</sup> omitted, F. orig.

accomplishe theyr bataylle / he called aymonet, and sayd to hym / 'Come hyder, fayr sone. ye be the eldest / and therefore ye oughte to be honoured a fore the yonger brother. holde, I gyve you flamberde, my goode swerde / 4 by the whiche ye shall take vengauunce of thys tray-tours / For ye ben in the right / and they in the wronge.' 'Fader,' sayd aymonet, 'ye may be in a surete that ye shall see thys daye suche a thyng that 8 shall be to your hertes ioye, for <sup>1</sup>we shall brynge the traytours to theyr shamfull dethe / <sup>2</sup>and it please god <sup>2</sup> /
 And whan reynaud herde his sone soo valiauntly speke, he was glad / and kissed hym / and thenne he gaff hym 12 his benedycyon / and in lyke wyse to yonnet. And whan he had don this, he broughte his brethern & his children to y<sup>e</sup> isle of our lady. And whan they were over, he & his bredern came agen towarde the kyng / 16
 But as they wolde have goon / there came a messenger that ascryed to reynaud as lowde as he mighte / 'Reynawde, haue mercy on thy children / For yf thou see not well to theym they be lost / Wyte that gryffen of 20 haute braunche is embusshed wyth a grete nombre of folke by the isle for to slee thy chyltren' / And whan reinawde vnderstode thise wordes, he blustred rede in his face all for angre / and said / 'Ha, swete fraunce / 24 that it is grete dommage that ye maye never be wythout traytours' / And whan he had sayd this / he called his brother richarde / and said to hym, 'Fair broder, goo wythout taryeng / and arme yourself / and doo 28 arme all our folke, and thenne brynge theym to the isle, and yf the false traytour griffen of hautbraunche come for to greve my children, slee hym incontynent. and whan ye be there, doo that ye may be seen of 32 bothe partyes / And for god kepe well, yf the sones of foulques of moryllon have the better, that ye helpe not

Reynawde gives his famous sword
 to his eldest son;

he blesses both
 his children,
 and brings them
 into the isle of our Lady.

A messenger tells Reynawde of the plot being laid against his sons.

He orders his brother Richard
 to take his folk armed into the isle, to protect his
 children.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. iv. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

in noo wyse my children, but lete theim deye yf it come soo. For it were grete dyshonour for us yf ye dyde otherwise' / 'Broder,' sayd rycharde / 'lete me 4 alone therof / our worship shall be saved by the grace of god. For I wolde not helpe if it came soo, for all the goode of the worlde / For all our live dayes we sholde be rebuked for it, and all our linage also' / And 8 whan rychard had sayd soo / he departed fro his brothern / and went & armed hym & all his folke / and <sup>1</sup>thenne thei lighted on horsbacke, and went anone there as reynaude had sayd. This hangynge, went 12 reynawde<sup>2</sup> to the kynge in hys paleys / and whan the kynge sawe him / he sayd to him, 'Reynawd, ye be right welcom.' 'Syre,' sayd reynaude / 'god encrease your honour' / And whan charlemagn saw not rycharde 16 wyth his brethern, he toke some susspectyon of him, & sayd to reynaude, 'Where is your broder richarde, that he is not here wyth thother?' / 'Sire,' sayd reynaude,
 'he is goon there as I have sent hym, but take noo 20 susspectyon at all for hym' / 'nomore I doo not,' sayd Charlemagne, 'as longe as ye be alive; but we must goo vpon the towre of sayne for to see the bataylle of your children' / 'lete vs goo there, sire,' sayd reynaude, 24 'whan it playse you' / Theinne went they vpon the towre, and wyth theym the bysshop turpyn, salamon of breteyne, ogier the dane, guydellon of bavere, & many other barons.

28 Thus as the kynge charlemagu was goon vpon the towre for to see the bataylle / he loked, & sawe come<sup>3</sup> the broder of reynaud / and a grete company of men armed / and whan charlemain sawe hym he knewe 32 hym well / for he bare his owne cote of armes. and richarde had doon soo, for bi cause he sholde be knowen / And whan charlemagne sawe this / he was Reynawde goes to the Emperor's

 palace,

and from thence to the Tower of Seine with Charlemagne and many of his barons.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. v.      <sup>2</sup> a paris, F. orig. M. i. back.

<sup>3</sup> richart, F. orig. M. ii.

The Emperor asks Reynawde why Richard is gone to the battle-field with so large a company of armed men.

Reynawde informs Charlemagne of the traitor's plot against his sons.

Charlemagne swears to revenge this treacherous deed;

he orders a thousand knights to be armed to accompany him into the isle to see the battle.

all abashed of it / and thenne he called reynawde, & sayd to hym, 'What wylle ye doo, reynaude? wille ye dishonour me? have ye forgotten all redi your trouthe?' 'Syre,' sayd reynaude, 'nay, save your reverens / but I 4 wylle serve you & worshyp you as my soverayn lord' / 'whi,' said the kyng charlemagn, 'is rycharde goon in to the isle of our lady wyth soo grete felishyp for to breke the feeelde? of the whiche thyng / I shall 8 be dyshonoured' / 'Syre,' sayd reynawd, 'have noo doubtte therof / for I take god to surete & waraunt that knoweth alle <sup>1</sup>thynges / that rycharde shall doo no thyng that shall torne to your dishonour ne to noo 12 dommage to you / and I shall telle you why my broder rycharde hathe put himself in armes. ye must wyte that the traitour gryffen of haute braunche is embusshed vnder saynt marcell in a garden, with a grete nombre of 16 folke armed / that wyll breke your felde for to slee my children / And therefore hathe my broder rycharde armed him for to socour theym yf nede be / and yf ye see that rycharde doo ony thyng agenst your wylle & com- 20 maundement / here I am that vpon me take the vengeance' / 'Is it trouthe,' sayd charlemagn, 'that gryffen hathe doon soo as ye saye' / 'ye,' sayd reynawd, 'verely / for I wolde not telle you otherwise' / Ryghte angry 24 was charlemagne whan he herde that reynawde had tolde hym / Thenne he sware god, & all his sayntes / that yf he myght take gryffen of haut braunche / that he sholde make him to be hanged, and all his folke wyth 28 him. He called thenne salamon & the erle of poytees, & guydellon of bayyere, & said to theym, 'Lordes, make me anone a thousande knyghtes to be armed / For I wylle goo in to the isle for to see the pryde of 32 thise traytours. And I swere you by saynte Iames, yf I maye, they shall doo me noo more dyshonoure; and yf I can fynde theym / they shall abyte it full derely' /

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. v. back.

‘Syr,’ sayd reynaude, ‘ye speke like a kyng.’ The barons thenne dyde that the kyng charlemagn had sente in to the isle, saw rycharde wyth his folke in 4 armes<sup>1</sup> / And whan rowlande sawe<sup>2</sup> that they were armed / he was not well contente wyth it, and sayd to the other barons that were come wyth hym for to kepe the feelde, ‘What wylle rycharde doo / blame have the 8 kyng yf he take not vengauce vpon reynaude of that they have doon agenst his commaundement.’ ‘by my feyth,’ sayd oliver & the duke naymes, ‘ye saye well’ / Thenne sayd ogyer / ‘lordes, I promyse<sup>3</sup> <sup>4</sup>that Reynawd 12 knoweth noo thyng of that that rycharde dooth’ / Thus as the peres of fraunce were spekyng of that richarde was come to the feelde <sup>5</sup>in armes,<sup>5</sup> Gryffen yssued out of his busschement wyth his folke, by cause 16 he was a ferde that richarde wold greve the children of foulques of moryllon. And whan rowlande saw him / he cried to hym with a hye voys, ‘By god, traytour, this shall not avaylle you, for afore that ony stroke be 20 gyven of theym, they shall make theyr othe / and ye shall abyge full derely that ye have doon.’ Right sory was rowland whan he sawe the fowle treyson that gryffen wolde have broughte abowte / This hangyng, 24 cam there charlemagn wyth a grete company of folke well armed, and whan he sawe rowland, he sayd to hym, ‘Nevewe, why doo ye suffre the outrage that the sones of foulques of morillon wolde doo to the children 28 of reynawd of mountalban / I blamed reynawd / by cause his broder had armed him, but I knowe now well

Richard enters the field, also Griffon issues out of his ambush.

Roland is very wrath at the treachery of Griffon.

<sup>1</sup> or avez vous bien dist. Passes vous mesmes en lisle et qui fera oultre vostre commandement quil soit pugny a la rigueur tellement que ung chescun y preigne exemple. Lors les gens du roy sen alerent sus lisle ainsi que le roy lauoit commande la ou Ilz trouverent richart qui sestoit mis en tel lieu que chescun le pouvoit bien voir, F. orig. M. ii.

<sup>2</sup> richart qui estoit en armes, F. orig. M. ii.

<sup>3</sup> sur ma foy, F. orig. M. ii. back. <sup>4</sup> Fol. K.K. vi.

<sup>5-5</sup> omitted, F. orig.

that they had reyson.' 'Sir,' sayd roulande, 'none can beware of traytours' / 'nevew,' sayd charlemagn, 'ye saye trowth / but by the feyth that I owe to god, I shall make theym all to be hanged in dyspyte of all theyr 4 linage, oonly for the treyson that they have doon this daye' / 'by god, sire,' sayd rowlande, 'ye shall doo well.' And thenne cam there reynawd vpon a palfrei wythout swerde; and whan rouland sawe hym / he sayd 8 to hym, 'Sir reynaude, is it your wille that richarde your broder is come hither in armes' / 'sire roulande,' sayd reynaude / 'ye verely / For noo thyng that I have doon shall not be hyd from you. Ye have now seen 12 the treyson that the traytours wolde have wroughte agenst my children / And therefore whan I knewe theyr falshode / I commaunded my brother Rycharde that he sholde put hymselfe shortly in armes wyth my men, 16 for to socour theim if the traytours<sup>1</sup> came theym vpon. And yf ye thynke that Rycharde or I have doo amys in ony thyng, soo lete the kynge make iustyce of it' / 'By my soule,' sayd rowlande, 'nother you nor your 20 broder be not to be blamed / but ye have doon as good knyghtes sholde doo / And I promyse you that your ennyes shall be this day broughte to shame & confusion' /

24

Whan Rycharde of mounthalban sawe charlemagne / he knewe well that he was come for to kepe the feelde, and that the traytours sholde not conne doo ony thinge to his nevews / Soo sayd he to his folke, 28 'lete vs take of our harneys, For sith that the kynge is here hymselfe, we nede not to wayte here noo more' / Thenne wente rycharde & his folke, and dysarmed theym / and whan rycharde had doon soo / he 32 lighted agen vpon his horse / and came agen over the ryver of sayne, swymmyng vnto the forsayd isle.<sup>2</sup>

Reynawde
advances riding
on a palfrey;

he tells Roland
why Richard carries arms for the protection of
his children.

As soon as Richard sees the Emperor advance with so many folk, he and his men disarm
themselves.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> la quelle chose vist charlemaigne, F. orig. M. iii.

and whan he was on londe, he spored his horse / and made hym to lepe thre or four lepes afore the com pany / and thenne he cam streyghte afore the kyng, 4 and made to hym reverens honourably / Whan the kyng sawe richarde / he sayd to hym / 'and ye, richarde, wylle ye dishonoure me / that are come in armes for to breke my feelde?' 'Syre,' sayd rycharde, 8 'save your grace, for I never thoughte it / but wyte it well for certeyn, that yf griffen of haute braunche had come for to greve myn nevewes, I wolde have made his forhede for to swete. Syre, ye be our soverayn 12 lorde, so oughte ye to mayntene & kepe vs / and soo shall I telle you a thyng afore al your barons, that yf ye byleve the traytours of Maunt / ye shall ones repente it / I am well apayed that ye / [&] your twelve 16 peres have seen the treyson of griffen of hautbraunche, how he wold have slayn myn nevews' / 'Ha, bi god,'<sup>1</sup> sayd charlemagne, 'ye saye truth, he is <sup>2</sup>well worthy to be blamed. and I telle you they that shall be over-20 come shall be hanged / nor shall not be saved for none of theyr linage' / 'Sire,' sayd rycharde, 'it playseth me well, but I telle you that yf I sholde deye / I sholde never suffre my nevews to be wronged' / 'By 24 my hede,' sayd the kyng / 'ye shal see that I shall do reyson to every party / For I shall bryng theym togyder / lete god helpe the ryght!' Thenne whan charlemagne had sayd soo / he wente to the two 28 chylidren of foulques of moryllon / and sayd to theym /
 'Now, lordes, hyghe you of that ye have to doo / goo and swere vpon the halowes, that iustly ye entre in this quarell' / 'Syre,' sayd they, 'we shall doo it 32 wyth ryght good wylle / for the children of reynawde ben deed, but yf that they confesse / that their fader slew our fader by treyson.' Thenne spake the bysshop turpyn, and sayd / 'lordes, come hither / and swere

Charlemagne
 rebukes Richard
 for bearing arms.

Richard excuses
 his conduct,

and vows he will always defend his nephews against all traitors.

The Emperor
 commands the sons of Foulques
 to swear that they enter into this quarrel in good faith.

<sup>1</sup> richart, F. orig. M. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. K.K. vii.

They take their oath before
Bishop Turpin.

vpou the halowes / and see to that ye forswere not yourself / For he that forswereth hymselfe shall be overthrowen<sup>1</sup> / <sup>2</sup>noo doubtte therof '2 / whan the bysshop turpyn had sayd this, the two sones of foulques of 4 moryllon kneled doun afore thalowes / and sware that reynawde of mountalban had slayn theyr fader by treyson / and after they had made theyr oth, they kyssed the halowes / and offred two besans of golde / 8 and thenne wente & lighted vp on their horses. And thus as they lighted / they were to nye eche other, soo that thone hurted the other soo harde that thei felle doun almoost bothe to the erthe. And whan reynawde 12 sawe this, he sayd to thother barons, 'here is an evyll token; I byleve that they ben forsworne.' Thys hangyng, came the chyldren of reynaude, that kneled afore the halowes, & swore that the two sones of 16 foulques had lied falsely all that they had sayed / And thenne they putte theyr handes vpon <sup>3</sup>the halowes / and offred a ryche gyfte. and the bysshop turpyn gaaff theym the benedictyon / and in like wyse the 20 kyng charlemain / and all the other barons / and thenne of reynawde / and of his brethern / And after they wente & mounted vpon their horses lightly.

Reynawde's sons
also take their oath

and receive a blessing from Bishop Turpin
and the Emperor.

Whan the foure champyons were vpon theyr 24 horses, they made none other taryeng / but gaaff the spores to their horses, and ranne the one agenste thother, & smote eche other in their sheeldes so sore that the speres flew in peces wythout that ony 28 of theym felle to the grounde. And whan they had broken theyr speres, they set hande to theyr swerdes / Thenne aymonet, that helde flamberde in his hande, sayd to yonnet his brother / 'I praye you, brother / 32 thynke to doo well / For yf ye helpe me, they shall be vtterly shamed & dyscomfyted, as traytours as they

The four champions begin the battle.

Aymonet begs his brother Johnnet
to fight valiantly.

<sup>1</sup> et mort, F. orig. M. iii. back.      <sup>2-3</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. K.K. vii. back.

ben' / 'Broder,' sayd yonnet, 'doubte not / for I shall never faylle you to the dethe; and also we oughte to recomforte vs / For we ben in the right / 4 and they ben in the wronge' / Whan the two brethern had spoke ynoughe, they went bothe atones vpon theyr enmyes / wyth theyr swerdes in their handes. And thenne aymonet overtoke constans wyth flamberde 8 his swerde / and gaaff hym suche a stroke that the swerde slided vpon the vyser / and kut it and his nose a sondre. And whan aymonet sawe the nose of his enmye falle to the erthe, he mocked hym, and sayd, 12 'By god, constans / it is worse wyth you than it was afore, for ye shall never be wythout a mocke for that, that this stroke hath doon to you / Flamberde that slewe your fadre / and soo shall it doo you, & it 16 playse god.' And whan rohars sawe that his brother was so sore wounded, he ranne vpon yonnet / and gaaff hym soo myghty a stroke vpon his<sup>1</sup> helme / soo that yf it had not be of goode stele, he had slayne hym 20 wythoute faylle / This hangyng, aymonet ranne agayne vpon constans / and gaaff hym suche a stroke vpon his helme / that he made hym to bowe his backe vpon the saddle / and for the grete myghte of the stroke 24 the horse muste nedes falle down vpon his knees / and smote his mussell in to the erth / And whan the horse felte that stroke, he rose lightly vp agen all afrayed / and began to renne thurgh the medowes 28 magre of his mayster, as madde, nor constans had not the myghte to rule hym / by cause he was amased & astonyed of that stroke / that he had receyved / And thenne aymonet & yonnet wente both vpon rohars, 32 and beganne to fare fowle wyth hym. And whan rohars sawe hymself soo sharpely handled / he began to crye wyth a hie voys, 'Broder! where be you? shall ye lete me thus to be slayn falsly?' Constans, that Aymonet over-takes Constant,

and gives him a
grievous wound,

and vows that his father's sword
shall slay him;

he brings the horse of Constant
to the ground;

the animal is so frightened that he flies through the field with his master.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. viii

ranne thourghe the medowe, was comen agen to hymself, and apeased his horse a lityll, herde his broder crye / Soo came he agayn to hym / and smote aymonet vpon his helme a grete stroke ; but the helme was 4 goode, and dommaged hym not / And whan constans sawe that he had not slayne aymonet wyth his stroke / he wende to have goon oute of his wytte ; and of the other parte, he saw the place that was all covered 8 wyth the blode of his broder / soo wyst not constans what to doo / For aymonet gaaffe hym soo moche to doo.

Johnnet meanwhile takes Rohart by the helmet, and would have strangled him if Constant had not returned and rescued him.

Thys hangyng, yonnet toke rohars by the helme, and 12 wolde have strangled hym bi fyne force / But whan constans saw that / he spored his horse wyth the spores, and shoved hym bytwene rohars & yonnet, soo that it was force to yonnet to lete goo his prise, wolde 16 he or noo / And whan aymonet sawe that constans had delivered rohars from the handes of yonnet / he wente, and ranne vpon constans, <sup>1</sup>and smote him wyth flamberde vpon his sheelde soo harde that he made of it 20 two peces / Shortly to speke / the children of reynawde hasted somoche the ii. sones of foulques of morillon that thei began to lese place, and were soo wery / that they asked none other / but to rest theimself / But 24 ay mouet & yonnet had none other wylle but for to fight styll / and I telle you for certein, that they were all iiij. soo sore wounded that they loste moche blode, for thei had fought longe<sup>2</sup> / and whan constans had soiourned 28 a lityll / he can vpon aymonet, & gaffe him suche a stroke,<sup>3</sup> soo that he made him a grete wounde / but no deed wounde. And whan aymonet saw hym so wounded he gaff constans soo grete a stroke vpon the ere, that he 32 bare it awaye wyth all the iawe bone / whan charle-

All the four champions are badly wounded ;

<sup>1</sup> Fol. K.K. viii. back.

<sup>2</sup> sans eulx repouser ne les ungs ne les aultres. F. orig. M. iv. back.

<sup>3</sup> sus lespaulle . . F. orig. M. iv. back.

main saw that grete stroke, he myght not forbere / but he sayd / ' By god, now is he worse arayed than<sup>ne</sup> but the sons of he was byfore / for the two sones of foulques of morillon Reynawde fare the best.
 4 ben shamed & confuse.' ' Syre,' said reynaud, ' thei have well deserved it / for thei have forsworne theym-self falsly.' This hangyng, yonnet went vpon Rohars / and gaff him so grete a stroke vpon his helme,<sup>1</sup> that he 8 brake it, and made his swerde to entre in his hede a fynger depe / Wyte it that the bataille lasted longe thone agenst the other. and it happed that by force of fightyng / thone agenste the other / they were fight-12 yng two & two togyder, well a bowe shot from eche other / and soo made they two bataylles. For aymonet fought agenst constans, and yonnet faughte agenst robars, whiche was sore greved, for yonnet had brought 16 him to therthe / and whan yonnet sawe that he had brought doun rohars / he said that it were shame to fight with hym on horsbacke agenst hym on fote, soo lighted he doun for to fyght wyth rohars / But whan 20 he had habandouned his horse / Incontyent, the sayd horse ranne to the horse of rohars, <sup>2</sup>and wold have strangled hym / and whan charlemagn saw that, he began to lawghe wyth it, & sayd / ' By my feyth, we have 24 iii. bataylles ; but I see well that yonnet hath broughte rohars soo lowe that he maye noo more.'<sup>3</sup> Whan rohars sawe that he myght nomore endure the grete strokes of yonnet / he began to crye, & sayd, ' Ha, fayr broder 28 constans / where are ye that ye com not & helpe me that are soo good a knyght, and that toke first the quarell in hande / wherof it goth full evyl wyth vs.
 For yf ye socour me not now, I shall deye incontyent' / 32 and whan constans herde his broder crye thus / he left aymonet / and went toward yonnet / for to helpe his

<sup>1</sup> helme. orig.<sup>2</sup> Fol. L.L. i.<sup>3</sup> mais va en recullant, car il ne peult plus souffrir les grans coups que yonnet luy donne, F. orig. M. v.

but Constant is so bully wounded
he can hardly fight any more.

broder / but wyte it well that he went not very sounde from aymonet / for he had made him moo than xx. woundes / and whan constans was com to his broder, incontyent, he ranne vpon yonnet with his horse. 4 And whan aymonet sawe that / he began to crye after constans, & sayd / 'By my soule, he baptysed you full yll that named you constans. For I sawe never more cowarde than ye be that soo renneth awaye for fere of 8 me' / and whan he had sayd soo / he ranne after for to secour his broder yonnet. And whan he was come there / he went a fresshe vpon constans / and constans vpon him / the whiche gaff him a grete stroke vpon his 12 helme, but the stroke slided vpon the horse, & slew hym wyth all / And whan aymonet sawe hym a grounde / he righted hym quyc[k]ly, & smote constans vpon his helme, & it was soo harde that flamberde cowde not 16 entre in it, and y<sup>e</sup> stroke slided vpon the viser / and brest it, and a grete parte of his visage, soo that the teeth were seen playnly, and wyth that felle the stroke vpon the horse necke / soo that he kut it in two / <sup>1</sup>and 20 soo felle thorse deed to the erth<sup>1</sup> /

Aymonet's horse is slain by Constant,

who also loses his
horse.

Sore abasshed was constans <sup>2</sup>whan he sawe his horse slayn.<sup>2</sup> and theene aymonet sayd to him / 'By god, false <sup>3</sup>traytour, now shalt you deye / ye dide yll 24 whan ye called ever my fader of treyson, whiche is as true a knyghte as is ony in all the world / but now is the daye come that ye shall aby it full dere.' And whan reynaude herde his sone speke thus / he was right 28 glad of it, and thanked god therof hertly / and whan aymonet sawe constans vpon his fete agen, he went him vpon / and hasted him right sore with grete strokes, so that constans had no power to strike one stroke more / 32 but he wente abacke here & there for to eschewe the

The two knights
then recommence
their fight on
foot.

1-1 et constans cheust a terre moult felonusement mais incontinent se releva au mieulx quil peust, F. orig. M. v.

<sup>2</sup>-2 omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. L.L. i. back.

strokes of aymonet / And whan constans sawe that, he wyste noo more what to doo, he cast his sheelde to therthe, and toke aymonet by the wast for to wrastle 4 wyth hym. And whan aymonet sawe this he was not aferle of it, for he was strong & lighte / soo toke he constans by the helme, and drewe it towarde hym wyth suche myght / that he pulled it from the hede of him.
 8 And whan constans sawe hym so sore handled / he cried vpon his broder rohars, & sayd, 'ha, broder, socour me, for I have noo power for to defende myself' / Whan rohars herde his broder calle thus / he was full sory 12 that he myght not helpe hym, for he had loste soo moche blode that he myght not well stande on his fete, but alwayes he forced hymself somoche / that he came vnto his broder constans / and wende for to have smyten 16 aymonet from behynde, but he dyde not, by cause aymonet sawe hym come, and went & smote hym suche a stroke<sup>1</sup> that he felde hym to the erthe / And thenne went agen vpon constans / and gaaff hym suche a stroke / 20 that <sup>2</sup>he smote almoste his lefte arme of.<sup>2</sup> Thenne began constans to cry, & sayd / 'ha, fayr broder, socour me, or elles I am deed' / 'Broder,' sayd rohars, 'I can gyve you nother socours nor helpe, for I am myself nere 24 goon' / And whan charlemagn sawe this, he sayd, 'by god, now are deed the sones of foulques of moryllon by theyr <sup>3</sup>false wyt.' 'Syre,' sayd ogyer, 'ye oughte not to recke / for they mayntened a false quarell.' 'ye 28 saye trouth,' sayd charlemagn. 'Now their falshode apereth well.' Whan reynaude saw that his chyldren were to their above, he was right gladde of it / but soo was not ganellon / for he was soo angry for it, that he 32 became as blacke as a moure. Thenne called the said gauellon, berenger, hardocke, henry of lion, & pygnabell

Constant calls to his brother to help him.

Rohart advances,
but is again
struck down by Aymonet.

Reynawide
rejoices over the victory of his children.

<sup>1</sup> parmy les espaulles . . F. orig. M. v. back.

<sup>2-3</sup> quil luy trancha tout le visaige, F. orig. M. v. back.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. L.L. ii.

of moryllon, & sayd to theym, 'Lordes, now be we all dishonoured / for the sones of foulques of moryllon are dyscomfyted. I wo'de fayn socour them yf I durste / but I fere to sore the kyng that is there wyth grete 4 puyssance' / 'Syre,' sayd hardres or hardocke / 'woo is me for it / but we can not doo none other thyng as for this tyme, therefore we must refreyne our wrath, and shewe a good face / to thende that noo medling 8 falle not vpon vs / and lete vs abyde tyll tyme come / that we may avenge vs herof.'

The kindred of Foulques vow to revenge themselves upon Reynawde's sons.

This hangyng, aymonet sawe that he had smyten constans a deed wounde / soo was he right glad 13 of it. 'By god, broder, ye have doon yll that ye have slain this false traitour / for I wold have slain hym myn owne handes; but sith ye have brought it soo ferre, make an ende of hym atones, & I shall goo 16 slee rohars' / 'Broder,' sayd aymonet, 'ye speke well, now goo slee thone & I the other, for thus oughte men to do wyth traytours' / Thezne razne the two bredern vpon theyr ennyes that leye on grounde / that is to 20 wyte, vpon constans, to whom he sayd all on hie, by cause all they that loked vpon sholde here it / 'Telle me, constans, false traytour / why dyde ye calle my fader of treyson, wythstandyng that men know well that he 24 is one of the trueste knyghtes of the worlde / And that he slewe your fader in his body defendyng / where as your fader had purchaced for to have slayn him by treyson. <sup>1</sup>Now telle me your falshode, and confesse 28 your treyson afore the kyng / <sup>2</sup>or elles I shall now cut your throte' <sup>2</sup> / 'Aymonet,' sayd constans, 'for god have mercy on me / For I yelde me to you' / and thenne he toke hym his swerde / And whan aymonet had 32 the swerde of the sayd constans / he toke hym vp and broughte hym afore the kyng charlemagne, to whom Aymonet and Jehnnet run upon their enemies to slay them.

Aymonet commands Constant to confess his falschod, or he will kill him instantly. Constant yields himself to Aymonet, who presents him to Charlemagne.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L.L. ii. back.

<sup>2-2</sup> ou autrement vous estes mort, F. orig. M. vi.

he sayd, 'Syre, holde this traytour, & doo wyth hym as reyson requyreth' / and whan charlemagn sawe this,
 he was glad of it, & sayd to aymonet, 'Frende, ye 4 have doon wel your devour, I can no more aske of you / and wyte it that whan thother is vaynquyshed / I shall gare theym bothe to be hanged.' 'Syre,' sayd aymonet / 'doo your wylle wyth them' / And whan 8 he had sayd soo, he went agen to his broder yonnet for to helpe hym, holdyng his swerde in his hande <sup>1</sup>all bloody wyth the blode of constans, <sup>1</sup>& said to rohars /
 'By god, false traytour, ye shal deye here anone' / and 12 wolde have smyten hym / but yonnet that sawe that / sayd to his broder / 'Fayr broder, slee hym not / nor touche him / but goo your way & rest yourself, for I wyll conquere hym by my self, as ye have doon 16 yours' / 'Broder,' sayd aymonet, 'ye saye yll / for it was ordeyned that we sholde eche helpe other.' and whan yonnet saw that his brother wolde nedes helpe agenste his wylle, he sayd vnto hym, 'Fayr broder, I 20 make myn a vowe to god / yf ye touche rohars I shal never love you' / 'broder,' sayd aymonet, 'ye saye not well, but I shall forbere me sith it playse you soo; but I promyse you, yf I see you in dangeour, I shall 24 helpe you yf ye sholde slee me' / 'Broder,' sayd yonnet, 'I wylle well.' And thenne aymonet wythdrewe him a lityll a backe, and thenne ranne yonnet vpon rohars / that rose vp agen for to defende hym-28 selfe / thenne gaaffe yonnet to hym soo grete a stroke vpon the sholder / that the arme wyth the sholder bone felle clene of to the grounde, <sup>2</sup>and his swerde wythall.
 whan yonnet had gyven that stroke / he put his swerde 32 agen to the sheth, & said to rohars, 'Thou false <sup>3</sup>tray-tour, thou must now confesse wyth thy owne mouth that reynawd my fader is noo tratour <sup>4</sup>/ but he is one Aymonet then goes to the succour of Johnnet,

but Johnnet will not allow him to touch Rohart.

Johnnet wounds
 Rohart again,

and then orders
 him to retract the words which he spoke against
 Reynawde.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> stráytour, orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L.L. iii.

<sup>4</sup> tratouir, orig.

of the truest knyghtes of the worlde, and yf you wylte not doo soo / thou shalte deye incontynent' / and whan he had sayd soo, he toke rohars by the helme & pulled him to hymwarde so harde that he drew it fro his 4 hede, and began to smyte hym with the pomell of his swerde vpon the bare hed<sup>1</sup> / And whan rohars sawe that he was soo shrewdely handled / he began to crye, & sayd / 'good lorde, have mercy on my soule, for I 8 know well that it is doon wyth my body.' And whan constans herde his broder saye soo / he began to wepe, for he cowde none other doo / and whan yonnet / saw that rohars wolde not forsake that he had said / nor 12 wolde not crye him mercy, he smote hym wyth his owne swerde soo harle that he toke awaye thone legge from the body of hym, and thenne he put his fote vpon hym and sayd, 'Now anone, false traytour, confesse 16 your falshode / or elles ye be now deed,' to the whyche thyng rohars auswerde not; and whan yonnet sawe that / he smote hym the hede of / Whan aymonet sawe that his broder yonnet had sleyn rohars / he was glad 20 of it / and went to hym and sayd, 'Broder, ye have doon valiauntly / lorde gramercy, that ye have slayn soo this traytour' / the two bredern toke eche other by the hande & went to charlemagne, to whom aymonet 24 sayd in this wyse, 'Syre, like it you that we have doon / for we be redy for to doo moche more for you yf ye commaunde us.' 'Fayr sones,' sayd charlemagne / 'ye nede not to doo more, For ye have doon 28 ynough / for constans is overcome / and rohars deed / Now goo resta yourselfe / and see that ye have goode<sup>2</sup> leches for your woundes / And I promyse you that I shall doo<sup>3</sup> wyth the traytours as it perteyneth.' And 32 thenne charlemagn commaunded that constans shold behanged / and the body of his broder by him / and

Rohart will not answer him, so he is slain finally by Johnnet.

The two brothers ask Charlemagne if they have fulfilled his commandment.

The Emperor receives them graciously, and orders Constant to be hung with the body of his brother.

<sup>1</sup> de moult grans coups, F. orig. M. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> godde, orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. L.L. iii. back.

whan the kyng had gyven this commaundement, constans was anone taken, & the body of his broder, and were drawn at horses taylles byfore all their linage /
 4 and thenne were hanged as they had well deserved. whan they were hanged, charlemagne sayd, 'Lordes, wyte that I wold not for a grete thyng that it went otherwyse.' wyte it that whan ganellon sawe hange the 8 ii. sones of folques, that were his newews / he was sore an angred for it, that he almost had lost his wit / Thenne called he hardres, berenger, & malger, that wyste more falshode than lucyfer, henry of lion, pynabell, &
 12 geffray, men that never dyde good, & sayd to them, 'Lordes, ye see how charlemagn hath doon to vs grete dyshonour, for he hath doon hange our kynsmen shamfully / but we shall see yet the day that this shame
 16 shall be avenged.' he sayd trouthe, the traytour, For he betrayed afterwarde the xii peres of fraunce / and made them all deye at the bataylle of rouncevals.

After these thynges above sayd, reynaude of mount-20 alban sawe that his children had vaynquessed the children of foulques / he was right glad of it, & thanked moche our lord god therof / thenne he & his brethern went to theim and asked how they dyde /
 24 'fader,' sayd the children, 'we do right wel, lorde gramercy' / Thenne alarde & guycharde behelde their woundes, wherof they were glad / This hangyng, cam there charlemagn; & the children cam him agenst, and
 28 kneled afore hym. thenne charlemagn asked theim, 'children, how is it wyth you? be ye sore wounded' / 'Syr,' sayd the children, 'it is well with vs, thanked be our lorde & you / we shall soone be hole' / Thenne 32 the kyng sent for all his leches, & sayd to theim that they sholde <sup>1</sup>loke the woundes of aymonet & of yonnet, the whiche thinge they dyde without ony tarieng / and after they sayd to the kyng that they made noo doubt Reynaude is very thankful for the victory of his children.

The Emperor sends for his own physicians to cure Aymonet and Johnnet of their wounds.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L.L. iv.

Reynawde stays
in Paris until his children are well.

They all take leave of Charlemagne, and
depart for Montalban.

Reynawde shares
his possessions
between his two
sons,

of them, & that they sholde be soone hole. And after that the iustice was doon of the sones of foulques of moryllon, Reynawde abode in paris till his children were hole / and whan thei were hole, they wente to y<sup>e</sup> 4 palays to see the kyng charlemagn, the whiche made theym good chere, and gaff them many fayr yeftes, as ben castelles & fortresses of grete name. Therne reynaude & his bredern asked leve of the kyng / and 8 he gaff it theym agenst his wyll, and prayed them that they wold com see hym agen / 'sire,' sayd reinawde / 'we shall doo gladly your commaundement' / Whan reinaud had taken leve of the king, & also his 12 bredern & children, they toke on their waye towarde mountalban / and they dyde so moche by their iourneis that they cam to bourdeus / And whan reynaud had rest him a lityll, he called his children afore his bredern, 16 & said to them / 'my children / here what I wyll saye to you / I ordeyn at this tyme that yonnet shall have arden<sup>1</sup> for his part, & aymonet mountalban / for it is not long agoo sin I herde saye that god sayd / that 20 the tree that bereth fruyt shall never deye. wyte it that I have offended god gretly / and me semeth that the tyme is now com that I sholde amende myself, for I fere sore my pour soule / wherfore I shall doo my 24 devour for to yelde it agen to that blessed lorde that made it after hys ymage.' and whan his bredern herde speke thys, they knewe well what he wolde doo / and therefore they began to make grete sorow / And whan 28 reynaud sawe that, he sayd to theym, ' forsothe, sires, ye are not wyse to make suche sorowe, for ye know not yet what I wyll doo / see ye not that I am yet wyth you, wherof are ye abasshed / be not ye ryche ynough / 32 there is nother of you / but may kepe a thousand <sup>2</sup>horses in his stable / Of the other parte, thoughe I am now hole of my body / thanked be our lorde / yet

<sup>1</sup> dordonæ, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L.L. iv. back.

- wylle I gyve in my life to my children their parte / to the ende that they fall not in discorde after my dethe; and therefore I wylle that eche of you know 4 fromhens forthon what he shall have.' And whan reynawde had thus ordeyned for his children / yonnet departed from his fader <sup>1</sup> wyth his blessing<sup>1</sup> / and wente to ardeyn,<sup>2</sup> where they of the londe receyved him to be 8 their lorde, & made to him fewt & homage / And after that yonnet was gon, reinawd & his bredern wyth aymonet went to mountalban / and whan they of mountalban sawe their lorde / they were right glad, & 12 receyved him honourably. And whan the feste was passed, Reynawd commaunded all his subgettes that thei sholde make their homage vnto his sone aymonet / and whan al this was doon, and that nyghte was come / 16 every man went to bed / And thenne reynawde entred his chambre & walked in it tyll it was mydnyght passed. thenne reynaude vnclothed hymself all naked / and toke a cote of sory russet vpon his flesshe wythout 20 ony shert, and therupon a grete mantell of the same.
And thus arayed, barefote, and wythout ony wepyn, but oonly a staaf in his hande for to defende him from the dogges, yssued out of his chambre / and went oute of 24 y<sup>c</sup> paleis / and came to the gate of the towne / and made it to be opened / and whan the porter sawe his lorde soo yll, & in soo pourly araye and barefote, he sayd to him / 'Syre, alas, whether goo ye thus wyth-28 oute felishyp, and soo yll apoynted? I wylle goo awake your brethern, & my lorde your sone / for ye be in grete dangeour of theves, by cause ye have nother armour nor wepyn for to defende yourself.' 32 'frende,' sayd reynaude, 'lete alone / goo not there / For my truste is in god, that he shall kepe me from all dangeour. But thou shalte telle my <sup>3</sup> bredern whan so that there shall be no

discord between them after his death.

Johнет departs
for Arden,
where he is well
received.

Reynawde commands all his subjects to serve Aymonet faith-
fully;

he then sets forth
that night poorly
clad like a hermit.

The porter strives to prevent his going,

but Reynawde
will not let him,

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig. M. viii.

<sup>2</sup> dordoune, F. orig. M. viii.    <sup>3</sup> Fol. L.L. v.

thou seest theym tomorow, that I grete them well / & to my sone also / and that they thynke alwayes to do well / and that they love eche other as they oughte for to doo ; and soo telle theym that thei shalle never see 4 me more as I trowe, For I goo to save my soule, yf god gyve me the grace to doo soo ; and soo shall I deye whan it playse god / For thrughe my cause are deed many a man, wherof I fele my pour soule greved sore, 8 and therefore wyll I bere peyn on my body / for it doyng penaunce all the remnaunt of my life / and yf I may save my soule, I aske none other thyng' / And whan reynaude had sayd this, he loked on his fynger, 12 & toke a rynge wyth a precyous stone, whiche was well worth v.<sup>1</sup> marke, and gaff it to the porter, & sayd to him, ' My frende, ye be well rewarded of your servyse that ye have doon to me.' ' Syre,' sayd the 16 porter, ' gramercy of this yefte / but alas, sir, ye put now all your countree in grete sorowe for your departynge!' <sup>2</sup> and theene he began to wepe right sore. This hangyng, went reynaude on his waye, thus arayed as ye 20 have herde ; and as he wente / the porter loked evermore after hym by the lighte aslonge as he myght see hym ; and whan he myght nomore see hym / he felle down in a swoune to the erthe, and was thus a longe 24 while / And whan he was come agen to hymselfe, he made grete mone / and sin sayd / ' Ha, god, whether gooth now my lorde soo pourly arayed' / and after he had made grete sorow a longe while / he shet the gate 28 agen, and went in to his house / And whan he was there, he loked vpon the rynge that reynaude had gyven hym, and knewe well that it was a ryche yefte / wherof he was glad. ¶ We shall leve here to speke a lityll 32 of the valiaunt reynaud of mountalban, that gooth for and charges him to tell his people on the morrow that he has gone from them for ever, to do penance for the safety of his soul ;

he gives the porter a ring,

and departs on his way.

The porter grieves sorely for his master.

<sup>1</sup> cent. F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> or nous est grant mal advenu car nous sommes du haut ou bas, F. orig. M. viii. back.

to save his soule, and to doo penaunce for his sinnes thorughe the wodes lokynge dounwarde / and we shall speke of <sup>1</sup>his bredern / and of his sone aymonet /

CHAPTER XXVII.

4 ¶ How after that reynaud was goon from mountalban <sup>2</sup> never for to retorne, <sup>3</sup> his bredern & his sone aymonet made grete sorow / <sup>4</sup>whan they knew of it / that he 8 had not take leve of theym.<sup>4</sup>

Now sheweth thystory / that whan the morowe came, & that aymonet & his vncles were vp, thei went to y<sup>e</sup> chirche / wenyng to haue reynaud 12 there as they were wounte. And whan they sawe him not come to matynes, they mervyllled sore, and there was com his chapeleyn for to saye matynes there wyth hym / the whiche, whan he founde not his mayster in 16 the chirche / he was al abashed, & spered after him to his bredern. 'Syre,' said alard / 'I wene he be seke, for god lete vs goo see how he dooth,' and theȝne they went to seke him in his chambre, where they founde hym 20 not / wherof they wende all to have ben dysperate / 'Lordes,' sayd alarde, 'now be we lost / for here ben his gownes, his shertes, his shone, his swerde, & all his armours; now is he goon fro vs / I see it well, in pour 24 araye: god be wyth hym!' And as they were thus makyngge their mone / cam in the porter that made grete sorowe for the love of his mayster reynawd / And whan he was come in to the chambre, he began to crie 28 as he had be from hymselfe, & sayd, 'Fayr lordes,

*On the morrow,
 when Aymonet
 and his uncles go
 to church,*

*they discover
 the absence of
 Reynawde.*

*Alarde deplores
 his brother's
 departure.*

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L.L. v. back.
<sup>2</sup> en guise de pellerin . . . F. orig. M. viii. back.
<sup>3</sup> apres ce quil eust departiz ses bien a ses enfans . . . F. orig. M. viii. back.
<sup>4-4</sup> quant ils sceurent quil estoit party, F. orig. M. viii. back.

The porter
delivers his message to them.

what shall we do sith that we have lost our lorde? For he is goon his wayes wulwarde & barefote, wyth a sory staff in his hande / and he sendeth you gretynge by me, and prayeth you for god, that yf ever ye loved him / 4 that ye wyll worshyp echo other, & that everi man have his part as he hath devysed it / And he dooth you to wyte that ye shall never see hym, for he is goon to save his soule / and soo hathe he gyven me the 8 ryng of his fynger, that ye maye see here' /

The four brethren
and Aymonet sorrow grievously
over the departure
of Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> Whan alarde, gucharde, & richarde, and aymonet herde thyse tydynge / they toke soo grete sorowe at hert that they felle down in a swoune to 12 the erthe. And whan they were come agen to theymselfe / they beganne to make a right grete sorowe, and so merveillouse, that he that had seen it / his hert had be full harde / but he sholde have wepte for pyte. 16 'Alas,' sayd alarde, 'my fayr brother reynawde / ye have lefte vs in moche grete sorowe. Certes it had be moche better for vs that ye had sleyne vs all / than for to have lefte vs in this wise / For fromhens forthe we 20 be noo thyng.' and whan he had sayd soo / he felle agen in a swoune. And whan he was com agen to himself, he pulled his heres of his berde, & scratched his visage<sup>2</sup> / 'Alas, my broder!' sayd richarde, 'how 24 shall we now live wythout you / Alas! now have we lost him bi whom we have had so grete honour in this worlde. alas, my broder! ther is not your leke vnder the cope of heven, that ever bare swerde, sheelde, or 28 spere / sith that we have lost you, we maye saye, farewell the ioie of this world' / And whan he had said soo, his hert swelled so that he lost his speche, so that he cowde not speke a good while after. Of 32 aymonet & of gucharde / what shall we saye / I promyse you, none can telle ne rehearse half of the sorow that they made / so that it was grete pyte to

They all swoon for grief at the loss of their brother.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. L.L. vi.      <sup>2</sup> moult ydeusement, F. orig. N. i.

beholde. Grete sorow was made of all four for the love of reynawd, that was goon as ye have herde / praynge our lorde to be wyth him, & to recomforte his bredern.
4 But presently leveth the [h]istory to speke of alarde, guycharde, rycharde, & aymonet that were at mount-alban / makyng their mone / and retorneth to speke of reynaude, that was goon at his adventure / sekyng his 8 brede for to save his soule.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

¶ <sup>1</sup>How reynawde went to coleyn vpon the ryne, where he founde that men edefyed the chirche of saynte peter. And <sup>2</sup>there 12 toke hym a wylle for to serve there the masons for the love of oure lorde / and dyde so / but at the last thother laborers had so grete envy by cause he dide better 16 his devour than thei, & that he was better loved than they of the maisters, for the good servyse that he dyde / that they slew him, & put hym in a sacke, & casted 20 him in the water of ryne. But bi the wylle of god / his body apered above the water, makyng grete myracles<sup>3</sup> / soo that he was named a saynte that day that 24 he was buried.

In this party sheweth thistory, that whan reynawd Reynawde departs from
Montalban,
was departed from mountalban / he toke his way

<sup>1</sup> Comment apres ce que regnault fust party de montauban pour son ame saulver, il ala a colongne . . F. orig. N. i. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. I.L. vi. back.

<sup>3</sup> guerissant de toutes maladies . . F. orig. N. i. back.

and wanders
through the woods,
eating nothing
but wild fruit.

He arrives at a religious house,
where he is given food by the
monks;

he journeys to Cologne, where the church of St.
Peter is being built;

thorough the wodes, & went a long while that he ete but apples & medlers wylde all that daye. and whan the nyghte was com, he layd him down vnder a tree / and as he wold slepe, he made the signe of the crosse 4 vpon him / and recomended to our lorde, & slept tyll it was daye. and whan the daye appered, reynaude rose vp & went on his waye thrughe the wode / and went evermore thrugh the travers of the wodes wel the 8 space of viii dayes / wythoute any other mete / but wylde frute. and soo longe he went by his iourneis that he cam oute of the wodes / and incontynent he fonde a hous of religyon, where he abode that 12 nyght / the monkes wold have gyven him mete / but he toke no thyng but brede & water. and whan the daye cam, he went on his waye / and dyde somoche day bi daye that he cam to coleyn vpon the ryn / 16 And whan Reynawde was come to the cyte / he fonde the chirche of saynte peter a makyng / where were many masons<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>& many laborers, that served them.<sup>2</sup>
And whan he sawe this / he went in to it, and kneled 20 byfore the hie auter / and made his prayers<sup>3</sup> by grete devocyon / And as he was thus knelinge full besely aboute his orisons / It came sodenly in to his mynde that <sup>4</sup>he wold abyde there and serve the masons 24 for thonour of god & of saynt peter / And whan he had made his praier, he rose, & began to loke the place well, & vpon the werkmen that wrought there / and sayd to hymself, that it was better to serve the masons<sup>5</sup> / 28 than to walke styll in the forest amonge the wylde bestes. And whan reynawde had bethought hym well, he went to the mayster mason, & sayd to hym / 'Maister, I am a stranger, & have noo goodes 32 of the worlde / wherof I may live / yf it playse you

<sup>1</sup> de plusieurs sortes, F. orig. N. ii.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted. F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> a nostre seigneur, F. orig. N. ii.      <sup>4</sup> Fol. L.L. vii.

<sup>5</sup> au mostier de nostre seigneur, F. orig. N. ii.

I shall serve the masons of suche thynges as them nedeth for their werke as a pour laborer nedeth' /
 And whan the mayster mason herde reynawd speke 4 soo, and saw he was a tall man & wel made / he answerde to him swetly in this wyse / 'my frende, ye seme not to be yssued of a pour hous / for ye are more like a kyng than a mason <sup>1</sup>or laborer,<sup>1</sup> wherfore I 8 dare not put you in werke by noo wyse, notwythstandyng that ye be thus pourly arayed' / 'Mayster,' sayd reynaude, 'care not therefore, for & it playse you /
 I shalle serve you truly after my power' / 'My 12 frende,' sayd the mayster of the werke, 'sith it playse you to doo soo / it plaiseth me ri[g]ht well / but I wyll not reteyn you for that pryse that I do knaves, for I shall paye you in conscyence after the werke that 16 ye shall doo' / 'mayster,' sayd reynaude, 'I am wel content.' Thenne the mayster mason said to hym,
 'my frende, goo helpe these four that ye see there, that may not bere the stone / for thei be but 20 truauntes' / 'mayster,' sayd reynaude, 'be not angrī wyth the pour folke, for I wyll goo fetche it to you anone' / 'frende,' said the maister, 'peyn not yourselfe therto, for it is not in your puissaunce wythoute ye 24 had more helpe than thilke knaves, For the stone is of grete weyght' / 'mayster, <sup>2</sup>lete me alone,' sayd re-naude, 'I shall brynge it to you.'<sup>2</sup> and whan reynaude had said soo / he cast his mantell fro him & cam to 28 the iiii men that helde <sup>3</sup>the stone, & sayd to theym /
 'Lordes, & playse you / goo fet another stone, &
 I shall bere the same.' 'frende,' sayd the four men,
 'ye saye well yf ye can / and we wylle lete you doo 32 wyth a goode wylle' / Thenne reynawd toke vp the stone, & charged it vpon his necke / and bare it vpon

he asks for employment
 from the master
 mason,

who willingly
 accepts his aid.

Reynawde is told to fetch a great stone which four other men cannot carry;

he takes up the
 stone with ease,

1-1 omitted, F. orig. N. ii.

2-2 vous aurez la pierre incontinent sans ayde daultroz que de moy si dieu plait et tous les sains, F. orig. N. ii. back.

3 Fol. L.L. vii. back.

and brings it to
the master mason,

the walle where it sholde be set / and whan thother laborers saw that, they were abashed, & mervyllid gretly of it / and began to saye thone to thother, 'here is wonder ! fro whens may this devylle becom / we shall 4 never winne but lityll aslonge as he is wyth vs here.'
And whan the mayster masons sawe reynaude bere soo grete a stone & soo hevy / he was glad of it ; and whan reynaude had brought the stone there as it sholde be 8 set, the mayster sayd to hym, 'frende, put not down the stone yet from you' / 'Syr,' sayd reynawde, 'I shall well holde it in my armes as longe as ye wyll.' thenne the mayster made the place redy there as the 12 stone shold be set. and whan he was redy / he sayd to reynaude, 'lete goo the stone, my frende, whan ye wyll / and blessed be god & thour that ever ye were borne.' and whan reynaude had set down the stone, 16 the mayster commaunded hym that he shold fette him morter / 'wyth a good wille,' sayd reynaude. Thenne came reynaude down, & laded of the mortar more than
x. other men sholde have doon / and bare it to the 20 mayster mason, & sayd to hym / 'Mayster, care not for noo thing / for I shall serve you well of all thyng that ye nede, by the grace of god. and see that ye werke as fast as ye can / for I shall bryng you 24 more stones & mortar myself alone than ye shall comne ocupye, but ye haste you well' / and whan the mayster mason herde reynaude speke thus / he was mervyllid, & sayd / 'By my soule, frende, yf ye doo 28 half that ye say, ye shall doo ynoughe.' thenne went reynaude agen, & brought vp so many stones that he made wyth it a grete hepe vpon the walles, <sup>1</sup>ynoughe for to ocupye at <sup>2</sup>ones all the masons that were there<sup>1</sup> / 32 and thenne reynawd sayd to them / 'Fayr maysters, thyinke to werke well / for whan these stones ben layd who is astonished

at his wonderful
strength.

Reynawde fetches
stones and mortar,
doing more work
than x. men could have done.

<sup>1-1</sup> devant les maistres . . . F. orig. N. iii.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. L.L. viii.

& this morter occupyed, I shall brynge you more.
 And whan the masons herde hym speke soo / thei began to saye amonge theym that the chirche of 4 saynte peter had founde a goode laborer / and that he The master mason promises to reward him,
 oughte to be well rewarded. 'By my feyth, mayster,' sayd reynaude, 'I care not for noo money' / and whan came at evyn that the laborers sholde leve but Reynawde says he does not care for money,
 8 werke & receyve their money, the mayster mason set hym down for to paye the laborers, whiche toke v.<sup>1</sup> peny a daye. thenne the mayster called reynaude, & sayd to hym / 'Com hider, my fayr frende, take here 12 what it please you / for ye have served better than ony of thother' / thenne [Reynawde] put hymselfe forthe / and toke a peny, sore agenst his wylle / And whan the and will only take one penny when the day's work
is over.
 16 god, my fayr frende, ye shall have xx more / for elles my conscyence sholde becharged wyth your labour ; & yf ye wylle werke, ye shal every daye have somoche / for there was never soo good a laborer as ye 20 be one.' 'Mayster,' sayd reynawde, 'yf ye wylle that I shall werke ony more / gyve me but one peny / whiche shal be for to bye brede for to susteyne wythall my body / for this that I doo / I doo it for the love 24 of god, & for none other.' frende,' sayd the mayster,
 'I wylle not trouble you nomore ; doo as ye wylle' / Thenne toke reynawde leve of the mayster mason, and went to the towne for to get hymself a lodgyng, & 28 boughte a peny worthe of brede. and soo had he nomore to his souper but brede & a lityll water. And whan he had eten / he went & leyd him upon a lityll strawe He only eats bread for his supper,
and goes to sleep
on some straw ;
 2<sup>for to take his rest that nyght.<sup>2</sup> and whan the day was 32 com, reynaude rose vp & wente to his werke, & founde no body there / and thenne he wente to the chirche, & sayd his prayers afore an ymage of our lady. <sup>3</sup>This</sup>

<sup>1</sup> viii. F. orig.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.<sup>3</sup> Fol. L.L. viii. back.

next day he works again for the masons,

and lives a long while at Cologne
in this manner.

The other labourers are envious of him

because they are so inferior to
him;

hangyng, the masons cam for to goo to their werke;
and whan they were vpon the walle / they asked yf the stronge man were not come. 'Mayster,' answerde reynaude, 'I am here; wylle ye ony thyng?' 4
'frende,' sayd thezne the mayster mason / 'brynge vs stones & mortar.' 'sire,' sayd reynawde / 'I shall wyth a good wille, & that anone' / Thezne fet he stones & mortar in grete plente / <sup>1</sup>and brought it vp 8 vnto theim<sup>1</sup> / and I promyse you that reynawd laded more atones than xv. other dyde / And thus served reinawde the masons in the chirche of saynt peter at coleyn many dayes; and every daye at evyn he toke 12 his peny of the mayster, & nomore, for to bye hym brede with, as ye have herde / for he ete never but bred, & dranke water / Thus lived Reynawde there a longe while, servyng there the masons, as it is sayd, for 16 the love of god & of saynte peter / and dyde so truly his devour, that thother labourers had grete envy at hym, for they were all set at nought for the love of hym of the masons / for the grete servyse that he 20 dyde to theym / Sore an angred were thother laborers whan they sawe that they were all thus forsaken & all set aside, & sayd to eche other in this wyse / 'By god, we ben dyffamed bi thys grete knave, that doth 24 somoche labour / and therefore we be put a side of the maysters. the grete devyll broughte hym well here, for we shall never gete noo thyng aslonge as he is here, for he serveth all the masons alone of al that 28 thei nede for to have, and thus we ben left alone.'
thezne sayd one of theim / 'My felawes, yf ye wylle byleve me / we shall slee him.' 'How saye ye that,' sayd a nother / 'ye wote well it is impossible 32 to vs to doo soo, for he is horryble stronge / and if we set vpon hym, he shall kille vs all.' 'frende,' said he, 'I shall tell you how we shall doo soo / See you

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

yonder vawte by the grete hous?' 'ye,' said thother / they take counsel
 'wyte it that that grete knave goth & slepeth <sup>1</sup>there together to slay every nyghte whan we are goon home / And therefore, him when he is 4 yf ye wylle byleve me / we shall goo this nyght there asleep. where he is a slepe / and we shall take eche of vs a pykeaxe, or elles an hamer / and therwith we shall dasshe the brayn out of his hede / and whan we have 8 thus slayn hym / we shall put hym in a grete sacke, & shall cast him wythin the ryver / <sup>2</sup>that is there nyghe<sup>2</sup> / and thus shall be nomore herde of hym' / and whan thother laborers herde this traitour speke, thei 12 accorded all to his counseyle / and they dyde as they were purposed soner than they wende thei sholde have do / For at noone, whan the masons left werke & went to their dyner, the poure reynawd went & rested 16 hymself vnder the vawt, where he was wonte to rest hymself every nyghte. And whan the traytours saw that, they cam to him that first had spoken the treyson, & toke him a grete hamer of a mason in 20 his hande; <sup>2</sup>and they spyed that reynaud was fallen a slepe. this traitour wyth the hamer went to reynawde softly,<sup>2</sup> & smote hym wyth the hamer well depe in to the brayn / And whan Reynawd felte the stroke that 24 the traytour had gyven hym / he set his armes in maner of a crosse vpon his brest, & said in this maner / 'O, good lord Ihesu criste, have mercy on my soule / and wylle pardonze them that have broughte 28 me to my dethe' / and whan he had sayd these wordes / the soule departed oute of the body. And whan the traytours had thus slayn reynawd, they put him in to a grete sacke, that they had ordeyned 32 therefore / and thenne they laded the carte wherin they brought the stones wyth the body of hym, and soo caryed hym to the ryver of rynec, wherin they cast hym. And whan they had doon soo / they laded the
 and cast it into the river Rhine.

At noon the masons go to dinner, and Reynawde rests himself under an archway,
 and falls asleep.

One of the labourers
 approaches,
 and slays him
 with a hammer.

The other traitors
 then put his body
 in a sack,

and cast it into
 the river Rhine.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. i.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

carte wyth stones, & brought theym to the chirche werke as thei were wonte to doo / and as thei were by the way / thei met the mayster mason / that said <sup>1</sup> to theym / ' By my feyth, galantes, I conne you now <sup>4</sup> thanke, for ye mende yourselfe, For ye have doon grete dyligence sith dyner / that ye have laden soo many stones / and that ye ben soo ferre wyth theym to the werke warde ' / ' Mayster,' sayd the traytours / <sup>8</sup> ' mocke not wyth vs soo; but goo to your purse & gyve vs som drynkyng money ' /

The labourers ask the master mason mockingly where the great lord has gone.

Sore merveyllled was the mayster, of that he sawe his laborers more dyligent than they were acustomed / <sup>12</sup> thenne the labourers began to say to the mayster of the werke / bi maner of a mocke / ' where is that grete lorden, that he helpeth not now / I holde hym goon without leve, by cause he myght not labour noo lenger / <sup>16</sup> For we herde saye / that he sholde never ceasse tyll he had founde hys wyfe agen.' And whan the maister mason herde that / he was sory, & sayd to theym agen, ' By my feyth, I byleve that ye have chassed hym <sup>20</sup> awaye; but I promyse you yf I can wyte that ye have doon soo / It were better for you that ye were at Iherusalem ' / ' Mayster,' sayd the laborers, ' ye maye well saye to vs what ye wille / but we dyde never saye <sup>24</sup> oughte to hym that sholde dysplayse hym ' / and whan the noble reynaude was thus caste in to the river of ryne by the laborers of the chirche of saynt peter, ye must wite that he wente not to the botome of the <sup>28</sup> water / but wente harde above the water alonge the streme. And at that [hour] our lorde shewed for him a fayr myracle. For all the fysshe of the ryver gadred theym abowte the corps / and by the grete strenghte of <sup>32</sup> the fysshes it was taried, <sup>2</sup> and went noo ferder with the <sup>2</sup> streme / by the wille of our lorde / And the grete fysshes put theymselpe vnder hym, and bare hym vpon

The master says they must have driven him away.

All the fish in the river support the body of Reynawde above the water.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. i. back.      <sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

the water, soo that he apered to every mannis syghte /
 And there the fysshes bare him soo vp vnto nyghte.
 And whan the nighte was come / apered abowte the 4 corps a grete quantyte of torches by <sup>1</sup>the vertue of our lorde / and angelles that song there so melodyously, that they that herde it wolde never have goon fro it.
 And to saye trouthe / there was soo grete lighte abowte 8 the corps / that all they that saw it, wende that all the water of the ryne had be a fyre / and whan the folke of the cyte saw soo grete a myracle they ranne all thyther / bothe men & wymen & children / And also the arch-12 byshop of saynte peter wente thyther wyth all his colege in a fayr processyon / syngyng by grete devocyon / and taryed vpon the ryne / for they durste not goo noo ferther / and they sawe the fysshes that bare vp the corps above 16 the water. And whan they that were there sawe that / they were abasshed / <sup>2</sup>and merveyllled gretly what it myghte be, <sup>2</sup>and begaune to saye the one to the other /
 'God! what may he be, for whom our lorde sheweth so 20 fayr a myracle' / 'Lordes,' sayd the archebysshop / 'I shall telle you as myn avyse gyveth me / Wyte it that it is the body of some saynte that our lorde wylle have worshypped, that is come here from somewhere / whiche 24 god wylle not that he be loste / nor drowned in the water / See ye not how the fysshes holde hym above the water / by the vertue of our lorde' / Thenne the bysshop commaunded that men sholde goo see what it 28 was, and anone folke went there wyth botes, and they founde that it was the grete man that was one of the labourers wyth the masons in the chirche of saynte peter / And whan the mayster of the werke saw this, he 32 was gretly abasshed / and went to theim that had slayn him, and sayd to theym, 'Ye hoursous, false traytours!
 ye have slayn the good man / saye ye the trouthe / for yf ye denye it, I shall prove it vpon you' / And whan the

A great quantity of torches appear
 round the body,
 and angels are heard singing
 sweetly.

The people of Cologne marvel
 at this strange
 miracle.

The Archbishop
 of the town orders
 men to see what this strange sight
 can be; they discover the corpse of
 Reynawde.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. ii.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

The labourers own that they slew him.

laborers herde the mayster mason speke thus / they began al to crye, and said, ' By god, mayster / we have doon it withoute doubte / for envye that we had atte hym. And therefore <sup>1</sup>lete vs be drowned, hanged, or drawn, or 4 what iustyse ye wylle / For we have well deserved to be punysshed' / And whan the archebyssshop herde the traytours soo speke, he began to wepe tendrely, and all colege also. And the archbyssshop was counseyllled that 8 he sholde lete goo the murderers at theyr adventure for to doo penaunce of their sinnes, the whiche thyng the archebyssshop dyde wyth a goode wylle. Thenne was the body of reynawde broughte to londe, and was put 12 vpon a carte for to bere hym to the chirche / whereas he was had worshipfully with fair processyon. And whan the corps was in the chirche, the archebyssshop made hym redy for to syng the masse by grete devo- 16 cyon. And whan the servyce was doon, the archbyssshop wolde have goon a processyon wyth the corps aboute the chyrche, and commaunded four lordes that were there that they sholde bere the corps / And thenne 20 the barons wolde have don his commaundement / but whan they cam therto / they coude not move the corps / by noo strengthe that they coude put therto. Sore merveilled were the barons whan they saw that, and sayd 24 to<sup>2</sup> eche other / ' Now may we well knowe that we be not worthy to touche thys holy corps. For we be wycked synners / wherfore lete vs go to shryve, and put ourself in good astate' / And while they spake thus 28 togyder / <sup>3</sup>the corps rose vp of hymselfe / and was borne / noo man knoweth how, oute of the chirche in to the carte whiche anone moved / and wente his waye streyghte oute of the cyte, wherof they were all gretly 32 merveyllled.<sup>3</sup> and whan the carte was oute of coleyn, he condemns them to do penaunce for their sine.

The Archbishop

The body of Reynawde is carried into the church, and masse
is sung over it.

The corpe then
rises by itself,
and is carried miraculously out
of the city,

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. ii. back.

<sup>2</sup> till, orig.

<sup>3-3</sup> le charret se partist tout seul par laid de nostre seigneur nondaultre et se mist a cheminer moult fort au devant de tout went a pas all the hie waye. And whan the peple sawe that / they began all to wepe by cause the corps wolde not abyde / Thenne sayd the archebysshop to theym / 4 'Syres, now may ye well see that this is a holy corps, by the grete myracles that god sheweth by hym <sup>1</sup>now / and all this daye a fore vs all / wherfore lete vs goo after hym for to worshyp hym / For it were not well 8 doon for to lete hym goo thus alone' / 'My lorde,' sayd the peple / 'ye saye well' / and thenne all the clerge & all the comen peple, lityll & grete, that myghte goo, folowed the corps.<sup>2</sup> And ye oughte to wyte, that in all 12 the cyte of colen abode nother man nor woman / but went wyth the corps, and all the clergy folowed after, singyng in grete devocyon. Soo moche wente the carte that he came to a lityll towne that is called croyne, and 16 there he abode styll. And ye must wyte that our lord dyde shew there many fayr myracles for the love of the holy body / For all sike peple, of what siknes it was, that cam there for to worshyp the holy body / were 20 hole incontynent / This happed of the noble knyghte Reynawde of mountalban / as ye have herde. And ye ought to wyte that the renomme of the holy body was soo spred all aboute, that folke cam to croyne, where it 24 abode,<sup>3</sup> from ferre ways for to seke hym / and he made there so fayr myracles / that of all the royaume,<sup>4</sup> & of all almayn, folke drew theder. And somoche were worthe the offrynges / that were doon there wythin a short 28 while / that of a litil chapell there as the body rested / whiche was of our lady, is now a royall chirche & a grete.

the Archbishop
 and all the people
 following.

It stops at a little town called Croyne.

Great miracles are performed
 here; people are healed of all sickness through the holy corpse.

le peuple. Quant le clergie vist ce ils commencerent a plourer tendrement apres le charret qui sen aloit ainsi que ouy avez.

Vous denez scavoir que quant le charret se mist a cheminer quil passa devant la tombe la ou lon le voloit enterrer, mais il passa tout oultre que lon ne le peult arrester et sortie hors de la cite de coullongne, F. orig. N. v.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. iii.                      <sup>2</sup> saint.

<sup>3</sup> pour la volente de dieu, F. orig. N. v. back.

<sup>4</sup> de France, F. orig. N. v. back.

The Archbishop
uncovers the face
of Reynawde,
that any who come there may know him.

And whan the holy body was abyden in this lityll chapell, as it is sayd, where god made contynuelly myracles / tharchebyssshop of coleyn & all the clerge cam<sup>1</sup> to the corps, and vncovered his visage, that every 4 body sholde see hym / that cam there, yf haply that ony man or woman myghte knowe hym for to have his name / for none cowde name him, but the holy corps /
But there cam noo man that cowde knowe hym. And 8 whan the archbyssshop sawe that no body cowde saye what he was / he was sory for it / for if he had knowen his name, he wolde have put hym <sup>2</sup>in a shryne of golde, by cause of the grete myracles that he made dayly ; for 12 he made y<sup>e</sup> deaf to here / the blinde to see / the lame to go, & right mani that were dombe he made to speke / and often tymes apered tapres of wexe brennyng about the corps.<sup>3</sup> ¶ Now shal ye here how the noble 16 reynaud was knowen / Ye oughte to wite that the bredern of reynaud / that is to wyte, alarde, guychard, & rycharde, were on a day vpon a mountain soo sory that they cowde not comforte theymsel / bycause they 20 cowde not here noo tydynges of theyr broder reynaud /
The<sup>ne</sup> cam a pylgrym forthby that salved the barons.
'Pylgrym,' sayd alard / 'fro whens come ye / yf ye wote ony newes, telle it vs, I praye you' / 'Lordes,' 24 sayd the pylgrym, 'wyth a gode wylle I shall telle you that I knowe. Wyte it that I com out of almayn, from a towne that is called croyne, by colein vpon the ryne, where I have seen many grete myracles doon of 28 god, for the love of a man that cam to the cyte but late ago, the whiche was so grete / that every body sayth there that he was a gyaunt / and wyte ye, that whan he

A pilgrim appears before Rey-nawde's brethren while they are on a mountain grieving over the loss
of their brother.

He relates to them the miracles
he has seen at Cologne.

<sup>1</sup> a croyne. Quant l'arcevesque vist que le corps estoit delibere de demourer illecques il vit au corps . . . F. orig. N.
v. back. <sup>2</sup> Fol. M.M. iii. back.

<sup>3</sup> En celluy temps que l'arcevesque et tout son clergie gardoient a croyne le corps saint, ainsi que vous ay compte, F. orig. N. vi.

cam there / that he sawe men make the chirche of saynt peter / soo dyde he presente there his servyse to the mayster mason, the whiche reteyned hym gladly /

4 Shortly to saye, this grete man dyde wonder of berynge of stones & of mortar. For he bare more atones than XV.<sup>1</sup> other of the laborers that were there wyth him ; and he was all day wythout mete, saff at evyn / he toke

How a great man who worked there
at the Church of St. Peter,

8 a peny that he gate, for nomore he wold have for his labour a daye, and therwyth he boughte hym brede, and dranke none other to it but water / <sup>2</sup>and thenne went to his rest vpon a lityll strawe vndre a grete vawte<sup>2</sup> /

12 And ye must wyte that this grete man was well loved of the maysters masous of the sayd chirche, whiche wold often have gyven hym mete & wyne / and more mony. But he wolde never take noo thyng<sup>3</sup> but a 16 peny oonly by the daye for to bye hymself brede, as I tolde you afore / He served so well all the masons there, that they were more contente of hym alone / than of the other laborers. And whan the laborers sawe that served the masons so well,

20 they were soo lityll set by / for love of this grete man / they were sore an angred / and toke grete envy at him / and conspyred togyder for to slee hym shamfully / Soo dyde they aspye hym where he slepte vnder <sup>4</sup>the sayd that the other labourers were envious of him

and slew him,

24 vawte<sup>4</sup> / while the mayster masons were goon to dyner /
And thenne one of theym came to hym with a grete hamer in his hande / and brayned him. thenne they put hym in a sacke, & caryed hym in a cart to the 28 ryver of the ryne / where they cast hym / And wyte that whan they had doon soo / our lorde shewed there a grete myracle / For all the fysshes of the ryne assembled theym aboute the corps / and made it abyde in casting his body

into the Rhine.

32 one place above the water. And whan the nyghte was com, angelles were herde there / that songe melody-

<sup>1</sup> dix, F. orig.

<sup>2-2</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>3</sup> Fol. M.M. iv.

<sup>4-4</sup> ung grant voutre sus ung peu de paille entredeux, F. orig. N. vi. back.

ously the servyse of the deed soo hie, that all they of the cite myghte here theym / and it semed that all the water about hym had be in a fyre of the grete light that was seen there / Thenne cam the archebyssshop of 4 colen wyth all his colege, & made the corps to be taken / and broughte in a carte vnto the chyrche. And whan he was there / tharchbyssshop sange masse / for this was in the mornynge. And whan the servyse 8 was doon, the archebyssshop sayd to four lordes that were there / that they sholde take vp the corps for to have hym to his grave wyth fayre processyon / But these foure barons cowde never move hym / from the 12 place where he was. <sup>1</sup>But the corps, incontynent to every bodys sight, that was there was broughte in to the carte agayne / wyth the twynkeling <sup>2</sup>of an eye, and sodeynly the carte departed<sup>1</sup> / and wente awaye a 16 lone oute of the towne / as goode a pas as ten horses had drawen at it, whiche was sore agenste the wylle of the people, that wept full tenderly bycause it wolde not abyde with theym / But all they of the cyte / 20 bothe lityll & grete, wente a processyon after it / vnto a lityll towne / where the corps of the grete man abode styll, whiche is called croyn, in a lityll chapell of our lady / where he dooth now many a fayre myracle ; for 24 I ensure you that all the sike that seke hym there be made hole / and retourne to theyr home in goode helthe. And soo have I lefte there the archebyssshop of coleyne / and all the clergy that hathe doo make of the offerynges 28 that ben gyve there to thys holy corps, a fayr place / and a royall chirche / there as the sayd chapell of our lady was afore' /

How the body was miraculously carried out of Cologne, and taken to Croyne, where great miracles are performed by it.

Whan alarde, guycharde / and rycharde herde the 32 pylgryme speke soo / they beganne all thre to

<sup>1-1</sup> Et en ce faisant le charret sen partist dillecques tout a par foy . . . F. orig. N. vi. back.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. M.M. iv. back.

wepe full sore for pyte that they had of theyr brother Reynawde / for well they knewe it was he of whom the pylgryme spake / 'Alas, my brethern,' sayd 4 rycharde, 'now be we well dystroyed / and vndoon for ever; For I knowe well that it is our dere broder that we have soughte soo longe' / Wyte it that the thre brethern made there soo grete sorowe, that it canne 8 not be rehersed / And whan they had made this grete sorowe / they toke leve of the pylgryme / <sup>1</sup>and thanked hym,<sup>1</sup> and wente to make theym redy / and thenne toke theyr waye towarde croyne, by Coleyne on the 12 ryne / And they dyde soo moche by theyr iourneys / that they came to Croyne / And lighted byfore the chirche, they and theyr folke / where they founde soo grete a flowynge and gaderynge of the people, and soo 16 grete prese <sup>2</sup>of folke, that wyth grete peyne they myght entre wythin the chirche. And whan the knyghtes were wythin, they wente nyghe the holy corps, that was vpon a fayr bere all vncovered, and sawe soo grete light 20 abowte the corps as there had ben a hundred torches / Therne went they as nyghe him as thei cowde for to loke hym in the face / and anone they knewe that he was their broder / and wyth that thei loked vpon hym, 24 they felle doun all in a swoune to therthe. And whan tharchbisshop sawe that, he was sore abashed, & sayd to some of his colege / 'Sires, I byleve that we shall soone knowe that we have desired soo longe / For I 28 wene that thyse lordes knowe well this holy corps' / This hangyng, were the thre bredern comen agen to theymselfe / and began to crye and fare as they had ben mad / theinne sayd alarde, all wepyng in thys 32 maner, 'Alas, what shall we now caytyff knyghtes doo, pour of honour & of all wele, sith that we have lost our broder, by whom we were so sore doubted & dred / Alas, dere broder ! who was soo hardy to laye honde on

The three brethren weep
 over the pilgrim
 story, knowing that it refers to Reynawde.

They depart for Croyne,

and arrive at the chapel where
 the body of Reynawde rests.

They lament sorely over the cruel death of their brother.

<sup>1-1</sup> omitted, F. orig.

<sup>2</sup> Fol. M.M. v.

you? I byleve that he knew not your debonaire & kyndnesse / for he wolde not have slayne you so cruelly' / And thezne he torned him towarde his two bredern & sayd / 'My fayr bredern, we ought well to 4 be sory / sith we have lost our broder reynaude / that was all our hope, our trust, & comfort.' 'Alas,' sayd rycharde, 'broder reynaude, why had ye ever that courage for to habandoune vs as ye dyde / seeng that 8 ye loved vs somoche. Alas, ye stale awaye yourself by nyghte / for to come amonge thandes of the murderers that have slayne you soo cruelly / Alas, they wyste not the grete dommage that is of your dethe!' 12 Whan the thre bretherne had wepte ynoughe, in grete sobbynges and lamentacyons for the love of theyr dere broder <sup>1</sup>Reynawde / they went and [kissed] the corps on the mouthe, the one after the other; and wyth this 16 thei felle doun agen in a swoune / And whan thei were come agen to theymsel / rycharde began to crye, & saye / 'Alas, fair bredern, now ben we lost for ever / For we shall no more be set by, nother doubted nor 20 drede more than children / wherfore I saye that we shold slee ourself / to the ende that we maye be wyth you, for we oughte not to live after your deth' / Wyte it that who had be there, he sholde have had an harde 24 hert, but he sholde have wepte for to see the thre bredern make theyr mone.<sup>2</sup>

Richard says there is nothing for them now but death.

Whan the archebyssshop and the burgeys that were there, sawe the grete sorow that the thre 28 knyghtes made, the good archebisshop<sup>3</sup> came to theym, and sayd / 'Lordes, be ye not dysplaysed of that I shall saye to you! Syres, to my semyng, ye doo not well for to make soo grete sorowe, nor to discomforte 32 yourself so moche as ye doo / but rather ye shold make

The Archbishop rebukes them for their lamentations.

<sup>1</sup> Fol. M.M. v. back.

<sup>2</sup> et non sans cause, F. orig. N. vii. back.

<sup>3</sup> arehebysshep, orig.

grete ioye / and be glad for your broder, that is a saynt and says they in hevyn, the whiche hathe suffred martyrdom in the should rejoice servyse of our lorde / wherof ye maye see that he that Reynawde 4 rewardeth hym well for it. For ye see now byfore has suffered your eyen the grete myracles that he dooth. wherfore martyrdom in a I praye you that ye wyll recomforte your selfe. And righteous cause ; 8 holy body named, and what his name was whan he he asks them lived in this worlde / to the ende that his name be from whence wryten abowte his tombe.' And whan his bredern they come.
 herde the archebyssshop speke thus, they began a lityll 12 to leve theyr sorowe / and thenne alarde, that was theldest after reynawd, sayd to hym, 'Lorde, sith it playse you to knowe what we be, & how this corps is 16 wyte that this corps was called, <sup>1</sup>whan he was amonge Alarde tells him us alive<sup>1</sup> / Reynawde of mountalban, the ryght <sup>2</sup>worthy of Aymon of knyghte ; and [we three th<sup>3</sup>]at ben here are his brethern. Arden.
 And well I wote that ye have herde speke of the four 20 sones of aymon / the whiche charlemagn the grete, kyng of fraunce, werred soo longe.' Thenne whan the archebyssshop / and the people herde that they were the four sones of aymon / of the whiche all the world 24 spake / and that the holy corps was the goode reynawde The people then of mountalban / the noble & valiaunt knyghte / they sorrow grievously began al to wepe for pyte and for ioye / by cause they when they hear sawe all byfore theym the moost noble & worthyest that of the valliant Reynawde.
 28 knyghte of the worlde / that in his life was more to drede than ony man alive, that was deed in the servyse of our lorde / doinge penaunce. After that thise thre brethern had thus left a lityll theyr sorowe / they 32 made their broder to be layd in his tombe, that was The corpse is then ryght ryche, that the archebyssshop had doon make / entombed,

1-1 omitted, F. orig.      2 Fol. M.M. vi.

3 [ ] from Ed. 1554, corrected. A piece cut out of Caxton's edition.

where the holy corps resteth yet at this daye / as evydently is knowen / and he is called saynt Reynawde the marter / The memory of hym was that tyme put in wrytynge auctentykly ; and every yere is there 4 kepte for hym grete solempnyte & feest. And after the sepulturyng of the holy corps, the brethern wente agen in to theyr countree.

and every year a feast is celebrated in Reynawde's
 honour.

May all who read
 this present book,
 continue their
 life in good works.

My fayr lordes thenne, that this present boke shall 8 rede or here, we shall praye god & the glorious saynte Reynaude the marter / that he gyve vs grace to persevere / and contynue our liff in good werkes, by the whiche we may have at our endyng the liff that 12 ever shall laste.<sup>1</sup>

A M E N

<sup>1</sup> en gloire celestielle de paradis.

GLOSSARIAL INDEX.

(N.B.—A few proper names are registered in this Index, because they present features of Glossarial interest.)

- Abacke, 142/6, stepped back.
 Abasshe, 160/16, humble.
 Abashed, 44/33, ashamed.
 Abbyt, 282/19, habit, dress, uniform.
 Abie the bargayn, 195/35, put up with it.
 Abode, 19/26, were made, became.
 Abote, 504/33, about.
 Abowte, 4*2/17, about, around.
 Abrode, 352/7, abroad.
 Absolucyon, 335/20, absolution.
 Absteyn, Absteyne, 474/14, 480/4, abstain, refrain.
 A busshe, 553/26, ambush.
 Abyde, 23/4, 63/6, stay; 203/24, remain.
 Abyden, 490/32, abide.
 Abyden, 507/33, 586/1, abiding.
 Abyde to, 42/4, remain with.
 Abye, 38/6, abide.
 Accomplysshed, 149/17, finished building (said of a castle).
 Accorde, 47/17, peace.
 Acoynted, 135/16, acquainted.
 Acquyte, 301/8, acquit.
 Acustomed, 582/12, accustomed.
 Admyralle, 498/1, commander-in-chief of an army. Later on in the story, the same Admyralle reappears at Palerino, where, being defeated, he and his army take to their galleys; so that, when at sea, he might well have been called an admiral in the modern sense.
 Adommaged, 427/30, damaged.
 A doo, 52/3, ado
 A doo, 194/29, 254/17, 499/15, to do.
 A doun, 291/29, brought down.
- A doynge, 163/7, in progress ("as the feste was a doynge").
 Adventure, 498/31, chance (or, gy. mis-adventure).
 Advyronned, 467/20, environed.
 Advysed hym, 501/25, gave himself advice, communed with himself.
 A ferde, 355/24, 453/22, fearful, in fear.
 A ferre way, 177/4, a great way ahead.
 Afflyctyons, 337/1, afflictions.
 A fole never byleveth tyll he fe'le sore, 485/26, apparently a proverbial expression.
 A foote, 35/10, 186/5, on foot.
 Afore, 19/8, 47/25, 90/26, 453/6, before.
 A fore hande, 512/7, beforehand (in a truly realistic sense, indicating that any one who joined in the assault on the ho'y city for its relief should, although he died, without doubt be saved).
 A fote, 232/29, 490/20, afoot, on foot.
 Afray-d, Affrayed, 142/5, 357/10, 486/2, afraid.
 A fresshe, 268/16, 564/11, afresh, anew, again.
 A fyre, 511/30, 583/9, on fire.
 Agast, 334/33, aghast, frightened.
 Agen, 189/10, again.
 Against, 230/10, against.
 A goo, 347/22, ago.
 A goo, 263/28, gone.
 A grounde, 45/1, 232/10, 564/14, unhorsed, on the ground.
 A horsebake, 26/28, on horseback.
 Al alonge, 18/32, exactly, truly.

- Al fayra, 177/25, all fair.
 Aliance, 202/34, lineage.
 All by nyghte, 164/9, at night.
 All halowes, 99/17, all saints; all hallowes, 168/18, all the saints.
 All in general, 74/25, all of you.
 All mervyllled, 303/34, much marvelled.
 All other our, 341/22, all our other.
 All quycke, 17/28, alive; 544/17, quickly.
 All redi, 556/3; All redy, 341/28, already.
 All the faytte, 193/7, all the facts.
 All they, 420/13, all those.
 All to brused, 303/24, bruised.
 All tymes, 542/18, any time.
 Alle angry, 26/25, ever angry.
 Alle for angre, 174/16, with rage.
 Alle to hewen, 35/13, hacked about.
 Almayn, 42/7, German.
 Almesse, 121/16, alms.
 A londe, 145/30, 525/7, 529/4, on land.
 Alonge, 465/19, adown.
 Alonly, 464/21, always only.
 Alowe, 229/21, low.
 Alredy, 531/6, already.
 Also sone, 79/14, as soon.
 Always of, 29/9, out of.
 Always spekyng, 405/3, talking all the way.
 A makyng, 576/18, being built.
 Amased, 561/29, mazed, dazed, bewildered, frightened.
 Amende hym, 46/24, make amends to him.
 A mendes, 347/7, amends.
 Amiable, 20/20, dutifully.
 Amys, 320/6, amiss.
 An angred, 38/3, 162/13, angry.
 And, 162/1, = and when; 269/18, if.
 And but yf ye doo, 253/32, but if ye do not.
 And we maye, 231/26, if we are able.
 An heygth, 200/10, on high.
 An hole, 129/19, a whole.
 An live, 488/31, alive, ou life.
 Anone, 398/17, anon.
 A nother, 529/15, 551/11, another.
 Apayed, 559/15, assured.
- Apayed, 267/30, 464/29, impaired, injured.
 Apayed, 117/2, apparelled, clothed.
 Apeased, 562/2, appeased, quieted.
 Apeched, 373/20, impeached.
 Aperceyve, 442/9, perceive.
 Apere, 514/3, appear.
 Apered, 583/3, appeared.
 Apetyte, 463/10, appetite.
 Apoynted, 547/20, appointed, equipped, provided.
 Apoyntmente, 357/4, peace ("make your apoyntments wyth the kyng").
 Appareylled, 74/25, furnished, fitted up.
 Appell, 74/16, Charlemagne's golden apple.
 Apperceyued, 79/16, 375/5, perceived, saw.
 Apple, 374/32. It seems to mean a round ball of stone set as an architectural adornment on the top of a tower.
 Apoyntemente, 384/33, peace, atonement.
 Appull, 442/11, Apull, 222/3, apple.
 Appyered, 69/16, 241/15, appeared.
 Arayed, 88/21, bespattered with blood.
 Arayed, 494/17, arrayed, dressed.
 Archebysshop of that feeldes, 343/29, a satirical expression, seeming to mean that he of whom they spoke was then in hell.
 Arde/yn, 178/30, = Ardeyn = Ardenness.
 Ardeyne (also called in the French original Dordon), 16/22, Ardenness.
 Are, 351/12, 435/13, ere, before.
 Are, 563/29, art.
 Areched, 461/5, reach, catch, tackle.
 Armed of all peces, 232/13, completely armed.
 Arnee, 377/24, army.
 Armures, 419/29, armour.
 Armures of stele, 110/6, steel armour.
 Arneys, 358/13, harness.
 Arrested, 171/11, rested, sat down.
 Arreste myselfe, 200/35, rest myself.
 Arsons, 309/23, seat.
 As angry, 497/17, all angry.
 A sawte, 188/28, assault.

Ascryed, 554/18, cried out.
 A seen, 453/28, have seen.
 A seven nyght, 204/8, a week.
 A side, 580/25, on one side.
 As longe that I am man on lyue, 78/7, so long as I live.
 Aslong that lyf is in our bodyes,
 233/12, so long as life remains.
 As moche, 299/18, as loud.
 A sondre, 345/9, in sunder.
 Aspreli, 391/18, Asprely, 502/26, sharply.
 Aspyed, 431/23, espied.
 Assaye, 184/17, 536/12, essay. prove.
 Assayed of, 301/30, tried.
 Assaylle, 552/4, assail.
 Assamble 43/7, encounter, fighting.
 Fr. 'Assemblée . . . the fight, coup-ing, or incouter of two armies.'
 —Cotgrave.
 Assone, 88/30, 203/34, as soon.
 Assured from their enmys, 149/18, need no more fear their enemies.
 Assuryng, 380/2, assurance.
 Astate, 115/19, 295/2, estate.
 A stonyed, 165/17, astonished. And well he might be, "qu'il luy fist chanceler les dens en la gorge," which Caxton omitted to translate.
 At, 69/14, 349/5, 496/8, to.
 At, 69/15, on (30/22, "hanged at a gybet").
 At a nede, 75/10, necessity.
 At an ende, 408/1, to an end.
 At an ende of, 22/1, make an end
 of.
 At another, 79/21, to another.
 At eyther, 453/7, on either.
 At his shelde, 229/24, by his shield.
 A thyng, 507/18, one thing.
 Atons, 82/33, at once.
 Atorned, 169/31, turned, changed the complexion of.
 Atte, 190/3, according to.
 Atte an ende, 430/9, to an end.
 Atte oo side, 146/7, on one side.
 Atte the grounde, 141/15, on the ground.
 Atte the herte, 217/16, at heart.
 At the first, 513/7, in the beginning.
 At this owre, 226/29, at this time, just now.
 A traverse, 179/22, behind.

Attone, 227/1, 407/4, at one, reconciled.
 Auctentykly, 592/4, authentically.
 Aventure, 86/33, adventure.
 Aughte answered, 18/12, said anything.
 Aulter, 156/22, altar.
 Auncyeat knyghtes, 193/3, ancient,
 old knights, apparently, also,
 minstrels.
 Auter, 576/21, altar.
 Avantage, 233/5, advantage.
 Avanuced hymself, 546/11, came forward, advanced himself.
 Avaylle, 177/31, avail.
 Aventure, 370/14, adventure.
 Avow, 384/23, vow, pledge.
 Avowe, 539/6, own, avouch.
 Avyronned, 305/20, environed, surrounded.
 Awated, 390/20, awaited.
 A worthe, 247/2, at its worth (when death comes, we are quite prepared for it).
 A wrye, 370/31, awry, askew.
 Axe, 450/24, ask.
 Ayde, 327/20, aid.
 Ayen, 58/9, again.
 Ayenste, 25/31, against.
 Aylleth, 226/32, aileth.
 Ayre, 26/3, Ayere, 96/31, Ayer, 295/31, air.
 Bachelers, 193/25, bachelors.
 Backe of hym, 63/13, his back.
 Bagages, 395/30, baggage.
 Balke, 517/19, a piece of timber.
 Baner, 17/15, 490/14, banner, standard.
 Baptysme, 410/15, baptism.
 Barbacanes, 149/15, barbicans, outworks? Fr. 'Barbacane : f. A casemate; or a hole (in a parrap-pet, or towne wall) to shoot out at; some hold it also to be a Sentries, Scout-house or hole; and therupon our Chaucer vsyth the word Barbican for a watch-tower, which in the Saxon tongue was called, a Bourough-kenning.'— Cotgrave.
 Barded, 537/21, barbed, appareled, trapt. Fr. 'Bardé . . . Barbed

- or trapped, as a great [war]horse.
—Cotgrave.
- Bare, 157/10, 453/12, 527/31, bore.
Bare, 70/9, carried.
Barefote, 571/21, barefooted.
Bare of their armes, 226/22, without their arms.
Bare vppe, 45/18, lifted up.
Barle, 337/10, barley.
Baronye, 219/21, barons.
Base, 93/33, small.
Bataylle, 31/13, Battayll, 270/15, Batayll, 526/2, battle.
Bataylle mortall, 393/4, deadly battle.
Bataylles, 40/8, battalions.
Bavere, 513/18, beaver, face-guard of a helmet.
Bayns, 129/4, baths.
Bayted noo where, 36/11, halted nowhere.
Be, 209/13, are.
Be, 44/28, been (sing.).
Be agen, 517/5, been again.
Beaulte, 54/23, beauty.
Be cause, 202/29, by cause.
Becon, 578/4, be come.
Bedeley, 37/8, Bethlehem.
Beest, 265/15, beast.
Befyghte, 106/19, fight with.
Begate, 273/7, begot.
Begger, 315/21, 490/10, beggar.
Begonne, 176/11, begun.
Begraven, 532/31, buried, in the grave.
Begyled, 177/32, beguiled.
Behalve, 25/14, 76/19, 156/1, 470/10, behalf.
Be happed, 33/3, has happened.
Beheld, 381/24, Behelde, 237/29, looked.
Behelde vpon, 460/26, looked upon.
Beholde, 391/26, beheld.
Be holde, 74/3, behold.
Be in age, 495/20, be of age.
Be in a surete, 554/7, be assured.
Beme, 517/30, beam or balk of timber.
Ben, 3/16, be (pl.).
Ben, 336/13, are.
Benche, 75/30, 377/6, seat.
Bende, 538/4, band, train, company.
Benefeyttes, 290/11, benefits.
- Ben none other thyng of it, 157/8, nothing would have come of it.
Berdes, beards: fyrst berdes, 188/3, pryme berde, 191/17 (said of young knights only just bearded).
Bere, 213/14, carry.
Bere, 245/21, bear (a wild beast).
Bereth, 570/21, beareth.
Bere oute, 227/4, carry.
Bere oute, 208/1, uphold.
Bere peyn, 572/19, inflict penance.
Bering, 327/6, wearing.
Besans, 560/8, bezants; gold coins named from Byzantium.
Besechynge, 416/9, beseeching.
Besege, 70/19, 395/14, besiege.
Besely, 576/22, busily.
Besemyng, 199/26, seemingly.
Besethyng, 4/23, beseeching.
Besines, 307/4, business.
Bespeke, 551/13, bespeak.
Beste, 234/2, best.
Bestes, 164/26, beasts, or oxen and sheep.
Besy, 408/22, busy.
Be take, 143/10, been taken.
Bete, 320/6, beat.
Betten, 391/24, beaten.
Beter, 553/28, better.
Betokenyng, 152/32, meaning, signification.
Betraied, 224/23, 360/32, betrayed.
Betrapped, 384/11, entrapped.
Better, 65/25, richer.
Betyde, 388/21, become.
Betyng, 73/34, beating.
Beynge, 499/19, lit. being = whom we are.
Bi, 303/30, of.
Bi suche maner, 61/24, in such manner.
Bi the myddes, 304/5, in the midst.
Blastred, 409/20, ? blew forth, broke out.
Blindefelde, 331/8, blindfolded.
Blisse, 451/26, bliss.
Bloode ranne me doune, 88/19, blood ran down me.
Blowen, 69/34, blown.
Bluste, 411/14, blushed.
Blustred rede, 554/23, became red, blushed.
Blynde, 226/11, blind.
Blysse, 466/21, bliss.

- Boban, 193/26, sudden enrichment, uplifting. Fr. 'Bobans: m. Riot, luxurie, wasting, vuthrifuisse, excessiue spending, superfluous or inmoderat expence.' —Cotgrave.
 Bode, 529/16, remained.
 Body of hym, 42/9, his body.
 Body to body, 298/5, hand to hand.
 Boltes of wilde fyre, 529/12, engines of warfare, anticipatory of modern torpedoes.
 Bonde, 238/25, bound.
 Borde, 378/27, board, table.
 Bore, 113/34, boar.
 Borow, 215/18, borough, town.
 Boste, 242/6, boast.
 Bote, 400/19, 583/28, boat.
 Botell, 277/16; Botelle, 450/19; bottle, a bundle, truss. 'Ye be not worthe a botelle of heye' (a proverb).
 Botes, 315/3, boots.
 Botome, 496/11, bottom.
 Boty, 198/24, 374/24, booty.
 Bourdeyne, 114/24, Bourdon, 351/11, burden.
 Bourgeys, 27/24, Burgeys, 150/9, 590/27, burgesses. Fr. bourgeois.
 Bowelles, 243/27, bowels.
 Brake, 113/30, broke our line of battle, charged.
 Brake, 214/12, 256/6, broke.
 Branke of stele, 28/24, 511/16; Braunk, 81/7, battle-axe. Fr. Bran, branc, brand, épée, hache d'armes. A.-Sax. brand.—Hippeau.
 Braste, 173/13, 496/35, broke.
 Brayn, 581/7, brains.
 Brayned hym, 587/26, knocked his brains out.
 Breake, 478/15, broke.
 Brede, 442/1, bread.
 Bredern, 533/30, brethren.
 Breke felowshyp, 55/26, depart from one another.
 Brenne, 417/13, burn.
 Brennyng, 586/15, Brenynge, 136/21, burning.
 Brente, 19/28, 386/19, 492/5, burnt, burned.
 Breste, 451/13, breast.
 Breste of hym, 273/14, his breast.
 Bresten, 79/9, hurst, broken.
 Brethe, 392/22, b eath.
 Bretherne germayne, 17/10, kinsmen.
 Broched, 265/31, 452/16, pricked.
 Brochyng, 63/3, pricking.
 Broder, 36/4, 43/20, brother.
 Brosten, 391/23, burst, broken.
 Brothern, 410/7, brethren.
 Brought . . . to deth, 515/5, killed.
 Broun, 463/4, brown.
 Bruyt, 91/16; Bruy'te, 21/11, 449/13, noise, commotion, disputation.
 Brigantes, 316/8; Brygauntes, 125/33, brigands.
 Bryngth, 498/32, brings, bringeth, brought.
 Bushement, 136/19, ambush.
 Busifall, 31/30, Alexander's horse Bucephalus.
 Bussynes, 137/27, pipes or straight trumpets. Fr. busine, buzine.
 But and, 511/15, but if.
 But & yf, 142/13, but if.
 But deed, 511/13, only dead (i.e. if he only touches you with his ferk, you are dead forthwith).
 Buty, 143/27, booty.
 But yf, 496/14, unless.
 Buyled, 65/9, built.
 By, 232/17, be.
 By, 32/5, with ("thwerled his swerde by grete fyersnesse").
 By, 227/25, within.
 Bye, 167/26, buy.
 Byde, 530/11, abide.
 Byere, 29/27, coffin.
 Bygge, 232/6, 405/33, 491/6, big, large.
 By grete love, 230/25, of great love.
 Byheded, 75/1, beheaded.
 Byholden, 74/6, beheld.
 By hym, 298/3, of him.
 By hys pryde, 159/34, of, or from, his pride.
 Byleve, 418/14, 480/1, 559/14, believe.
 Byneth, 521/28, beneath.
 By no wyse, 235/20, on no wise.
 Bysshop, 172/31, 325/14, bishop.
 By suche, 453/1, in such.
 By suche a streyngthe, 43/12, with so much force.

- By suche a wyse, 42/15, in such wise.
- By suche wyse, 239/32, on such wise.
- By thanked, 72/9, be thanked.
- By there journeys, 156/19, 548/30, on their travels, on their way.
- Bytwene, 523/15, between.
- Caas, 297/9, case.
- Caled, 538/2, called.
- Calle, 566/23, accuse.
- Called of, 547/30, accused of.
- Callenge, 550/28, challenge.
- Can, 442/27, came.
- Cam to hym agenst, 151/23, came to meet him.
- Came at theyvn, 547/9, the evening came.
- Came for, 70/19 (for redundant).
- Came to his above of it, 206/6, had the best of it.
- Capitayn, 292/14; Capytayne, 508/10, captain, commander.
- Carles, 478/30, churls.
- Carnall frende, 205/3, brother-in-law.
- Caste, 372/3, heaved.
- Casted, 55/4, 173/14, cast; 375/3, did cast; 485/14, heaved.
- Caste their gages, 548/1, thrown down their gages.
- Cause lawfull, 545/5, lawful cause.
- Cause why, 148/22, without any cause.
- Causer, 487/5, the cause.
- Ceasse, 459/12, cease.
- Cered, 173/28, waxt.
- Certente, 33/19, 363/25, certainty, truth.
- Challenge of you, 261/18, require of you.
- Chambrelayne, 211/29; Chamberleyn, 333/9, chamberlain.
- Chapeleyn, 573/14, chaplain.
- Charbokell, 74/14, carbuncle.
- Charboncle, 179/5, Charlemagne's carbuncle.
- Charged me of, 19/1, instructed me to do.
- Charme, 370/20, enchantment.
- Charnell, 422/14, burial-place.
- Chauffed, 314/21, chafed, rubbed, chewed.
- Chauffed, 46/3, chafed, heated, fretted, vext.
- Chauffed, 339/17, 343/15, hot, heated, vexed, weary.
- Chayre, 152/4, chair of state, or pulpit.
- Checke, 350/23, check (in the game of chess).
- Chekes of him, 426/33, his cheeks.
- Chere, 26/7, cheer, fare.
- Chere, 83/16, cheer (v.).
- Chered theym, 452/19, made them good cheer.
- Chierne, 398/32, charm, enchantment.
- Chesses, 58/29, the game of chess; ches borde, 58/29, chess board.
- Cheysaunce, 104/27, mischance, bad outcome.
- Cheyn, 335/26, 369/25, chain.
- Chuse, 112/32, 519/20, choose.
- Chynne, 287/11, clin.
- Chyrche, 374/21, church.
- Clayme, 339/4, claim.
- Clene of, 516/25, clean off.
- Clime, 521/24, climb.
- Clothe, 510/10, clothes.
- Clothes, 175/19, rolls of cloth or silk.
- Clouted, 61/31, cleft.
- Clouted, 491/7, patched and nailed.
- Cloved, 231/33, c'leaved.
- Clowdes, 302/18, c'louds.
- Clowte, 282/33, cloth.
- Clymed, 244/29, climbed.
- Cofres, 372/15, coffers.
- Co'le, 60/19, 209/17, coal. 'Becam blacke as a cole' = turned black in the face with anger.
- Colege, 583/12, college, all the members of the monastic establishment of the Cathedral of Cologne.
- Coler, 369/27, collar.
- Colle, 50/32, 64/5, embrace round the neck. Fr. 'Collée: f. A necke-imbracement, an imbracing about the necke; a greeting, or welcome, expressed by such an imbracement.'—Cotgrave.
- Combraunce, 19/15, 62/34, 217/3, hindrance, evil, mishap.
- Come, 173/7, comes.
- Comen, 41/21, 486/12, 507/31, come.

- Comende you, 492/28, commend to you.
- Commaundemente, 376/1, command.
- Commysed, 58/15, committed.
- Complayne me, 17/11, complain.
- Complyn tyme, 46/1, Evensong, one of the old ecclesiastical divisions of the day equal to 9 o'clock p.m.
- Comyn, 195/6, 501/21, come (pl.).
- Comyn, 486/6, common.
- Conclusion effectuell, 151/16, effectual conclusion.
- Concordauns, 220/31, concord, treaty.
- Conduyt, 18/22, safe-conduct, guard.
- Conduytte, 508/7, Conduytted, 41/21, conducted.
- Condycion, 367/20, condition.
- Confuse, 563/4, in confusion.
- Conne, 30/34, 70/32, give.
- Conne, 282/23, know, learn.
- Conne doo soo moche, 61/9, be able to do so much.
- Conqusted, 16/32, 132/30, conquered.
- Constantynoble, 498/9; Constantyn noble, 531/15, Constantinople.
- Contente, 545/31, contented.
- Contrefaytted, 172/24, counterfeited.
- Contynewe, 416/26, continue.
- Cope, 574/28, covering.
- Coppe, 38/11, cup.
- Corageus, 192/16, courageous.
- Cordueners, 173/21, cordwainer's, shoemaker's.
- Corven, 271/5, carved out.
- Corsettes, 79/10, steel corsets, breast and back armour.
- Coste, 130/4, 143/25, country.
- Cosyn, 498/25, cousin.
- Cote, 555/32, coat.
- Cote of mayle, 117/8, coat of mail.
- Coude . . . thanke, 26/24, gave. 'To conne thanke,' to give thanks.
- Coude, 80/12, could.
- Couffres, 371/4, coffers, strong chests.
- Counseyle, 43/20, advise (v.).
- Countrefayt, 315/1; Countrefayte, 115/13, counterfeited, changed, disguised.
- Courage, 432/25, heart, disposition.
- Fr. 'Courage . . . the mind, will, humor, fancie, affection, disposition.'—Cotgrave.
- Cours, 378/26, course.
- Course of the horses, 168/14, horse-racing.
- Courset, 303/26, corset, doublet.
- Courtesli, 320/19, courteously.
- Courteys, 539/33, courteous.
- Covenable, 169/21, 543/14, convenient.
- Covent, 281/27, convent; but in this case applying only to monks.
- Cowardes of veri kinde, 295/11, ingrained cowards.
- Cowde, 191/12, could.
- Cowpled, 392/18, coupled, as wrestlers, with their arms round each other.
- Coyffe, 44/28, scull-cap: 'Coif, a close hood for the head.'—Fairholt. Fr. 'Coiffe; f. A coife, cowle, or cap, for the head.'—Cotgrave.
- Craftes, maner of, 150/10, handicrafts.
- Crafty men, 149/5, men of craft, handicraftsmen.
- Crake, 320/22, croak.
- Creatures humain, 23/31, human beings.
- Cristeyn, 511/9, Crysten, 511/22; Crystens, 515/20, Christians.
- Cronyikes, 3/7, chronicles.
- Croper, 267/4, crupper.
- Cruelnes, 29/5, cruelty.
- Crusified, 336/18, crucified.
- Crystendome, 329/31, Christendom.
- Crystmasse, 83/12, Christmas.
- Culpe, 286/32, fault. Fr. 'Coulpe: f. A fault, offence, trespassse, misdeed, or ill deed.'—Cotgrave.
- Curaces, 509/19, cuirasses.
- Cursidnes, 339/12, cursedness.
- Curstly dealed wythall, 257/31, hardly dealt with.
- Curtessye, 469/10, courtesy.
- Curtois, 38/33, courteous.
- Curtoysly, 75/28; Curtoysly, 146/2, Curtesly, 211/17, courteously.
- Custom, 480/13, custom.
- Cuttet, 56/4, cut.
- Cyte, 301/18, city.

- Damoyzell, 144/2, damsel.
 Damoysselles, 27/18, damsels.
 Damp, 199/29, 201/19, 272/18, L.
Dominus, Sir or Lord.
 Dampned, 266/13, 503/35, damned.
 Dangeour, 352/7, 457/12; Daun-geour, 218/12, 479/13, danger.
 Dawes, 194/31, birds.
 Dayned, 17/17, 53/33, 177/23, deigned.
 Day respyte, 429/17, respited day,
 or day of respite.
 Dealed, 143/27, divided, shared.
 Dealed to, 509/25, divided among.
 Debonairte, 550/16, good will.
 Deceasse, 244/17, die.
 Deceased, 227/5, deceased, dead.
 Deed, 111/29, 425/29, dead.
 Deed wounde, 562/31, death wound.
 Deef, 586/13, deaf.
 Defawte, 139/35, default.
 Defende, 546/27, prove.
 Defende theymselfe of, 552/3, defend them elves against.
 Defoyled, 266/6, stript of renown, overcome. ? Fr. 'Defueiller. To vneleue, to plucke the leaues from, to depriue of leaues.'—Cot-grave.
 Defferred, 301/22, deferred.
 Deied, 61/19, died.
 Delaynge, 450/28, delay, delaying.
 Delibered, 157/27, deliberated, come to a decision.
 Delyver yourselfe of, 208/27, get rid of.
 Demened, 487/24, demeaned.
 Demye lance, 487/18, a small lance.
 Departe, 242/10, separate.
 Departed, 540/13, gone awy.
 Departed, 308/22, 535/29, parted, separated.
 Departed well erly, 52/16, departed very early.
 Departyng, 492/23, departure.
 Deppeste, 115/11, closest, thickest.
 Derely, 454/32, 488/6, dearly.
 Dere syre, 470/14, dear sir.
 Derth, 187/31; Derthe, 422/6, dearth.
 Deservynge, 336/24, deserts.
 Desire I not, 34/20, I do not desire.
 Desyrynge, 497/21, desirous.
 Devocyon, 156/14, devotional impulse, desire. "Cam to hym a devocyon for to goo in pylgrym-age."
 Deuoyr, 72/20; Devoyre, 19/23;
 Devour, 567/4, devoir, duty.
 Deuysed, 41/32, arranged.
 Devyse, 547/9, appoint.
 Devysynge, 227/14, talking, chatting. Fr. 'Deviser. To commune, talke, discourse, confere, denise, chat, conuerse with.'— Cotgrave.
 Deyed, 406/25, died.
 Deyen, 438/1, die (pl.).
 Deyeng, 79/12, dying.
 Deyeth, 232/26, dieth.
 Digne, 3/16, great.
 Dishherited, 347/20, disinherited.
 D'spyte, 97/24, despite.
 Disworshippe, 324/14, dishonour.
 Do, 22/10, cause to be; "he shoul do hange hym," should cause him to be hanged, have him hanged.
 Do brenne, 17/29, cause to be burnt.
 Donm, 82/10, dumb.
 Dommage, 28/28, damage, hurt, injury.
 Dommaged, 111/12, done gre't mischief to.
 Dongeon, 23/22, donjon.
 Donn, 132/24, got down.
 Doo all myn oste, 375/30, make my warriors.
 Doo dygge, 438/21, caused to be digged.
 Doo knowe, 72/22, cause to be known.
 Do marchandyse, 177/32, trade.
 Doon, 317/16, 548/20, done.
 Doon, 420/18, do (pl.).
 Doon, 110/13, 189/1, given.
 Doo of, 464/16, do off.
 Doo of me, 26/33, do with me.
 Doon of hym, 56/7, done with him = "all up with him."
 Doo put, 90/24, cause to put.
 Doo repayre, 531/25, caused to be repaired.
 Doo sawte, 189/26, make assault.
 Droterd, 208/9, dotard.
 Doo theym nothyng, 248/6, do them
 no evil.
 Dooth me to wyte, 211/18, makes me to know.

- Doo to be caste doun, 185/8, cause to be cast down.
 Doo you to wyte, 89/27, cause you to know.
 Do pyghte, 73/30, cause to be pitched.
 Dores, 204/13, doors.
 Doubed, 31/25, dubbed.
 Doubte . . . of a strawe, 229/8, care a straw. (Doubte = fear.)
 Doubte of deathe, 18/10, in peril, fear of losing one's life.
 Doubted, 155/12, feared.
 Doubted in his takynge, 479/11, difficult to take him.
 Douce fraunce, 191/18, 367/23, true, right France, nothing but France, lit. sweet France.
 Dougeon, 96/4, donjon.
 Douse, great, high, chief, 16/18.
 Douspyers, 203/19, the "twelve peers" of France.
 Douve, 53/3, dove.
 Dowbe, 495/20, dub.
 Dowbed, 163/5, dubbed.
 Drawe, 139/12, gone.
 Drawen, 66/4, withdrawn, gone away.
 Draweth now sore to age, 542/4, is getting old.
 Drawnen, 96/26, drawn.
 Dreme, 221/23, dream.
 Dressed, 420/19, placed, prepared, got ready.
 Drew after, 351/3, carried behind.
 Drewe alle, 27/11, all drew.
 Dronke, 93/8, drunk. The yeomen of the stable had, supped, and "thei were dronke."
 Dronken, 478/22, drunk.
 Drynkyng money, 582/10, money to buy drink with.
 Duange, 248/21, troubled, vexed. A.S. dwinan, to dwine, pine or waste away; 'dwingle, to shrivel and dwindle (Eastern), dwingle, Brome's Songs, ed. 1661, p. 183. Hal. Gloss.
 Duche, 477/10, duke.
 Dure, 207/12, endure.
 Dute, 324/17, duty.
 Duytes, 150/6, duties, dues.
 Dyches, 65/15, 420/18, ditches.
 Dyd doo make, 182/26, made.
 Dyde, 57/27, 88/26, 327/9, did, performed.
 Dyde caste a grete syghe, 372/3 heaved a great sigh.
 Dydest, 226/7, didst.
 Dyde mysse, 90/15, missed.
 Dyde on, 31/23, put on.
 Dyde soo moche, 156/19; Dyde somoche, 342/7, 576/15, went so far, went so fast.
 Dyde so moche by their iourneis, 570/14, rode so fast on their way.
 Dyde tary, 500/15, tarried, stayed.
 Dyffamed, 326/22, 580/24, defamed.
 Dyffyaunce, 112/7, defiance.
 Dygne, 337/2, worthy.
 Dynere, 478/1, dinner.
 Dyverse, 467/25, divers.
 Dysaray, 354/3, disarrayed, unready.
 Dysarmed, 198/22, unarmed.
 Dysarmed hym, 91/11, took his arms away.
 Dysase, 277/31, disease.
 Dysavowed, 134/20, disowned.
 Dysceyve, 462/18, deceive.
 Dyscoupled, 241/16, uncoupled.
 Dysease, 244/31, danger.
 Dysguysed, 314/26, 462/18, disguised.
 Dyshe, 463/5, dish, wooden bowl.
 Dysherited, 134/19, disinherited.
 Dyspende, 538/13, spend.
 Dysperate, 245/24, 409/26, desperate.
 Dyspeyre, 370/10, despair.
 Dysplayed, 464/19, 510/8, displeased.
 Dysplaysure, 30/19, displeasure.
 Dyspurueyd, 418/8, unprovided.
 Dyspyte, 161/22, 362/6, 478/5, despite.
 Dyssymuled, 534/5, dissimulated.
 Dyssressed, 116/6, distrained.
 Dystroied, 71/14; Dystroyed, 483/5, destroyed.
 Eche, 453/1, 547/15, each.
 Edefyed, 575/10, erecting, building.
 Edyfyed, 67/4, erected, edified.
 Eeles, 264/13, eels.
 Eest, 336/7, east.
 Eere, 136/12, ear.
 Efforte, 527/21, exhibition.
 Efte agayne, 252/9, often again.

- Egle, 355/3, eagle.
 Elder, 537/1, older.
 Elles, 489/10, else.
 Elles where, 178/2, elsewhere.
 Embusshed, 554/21, ambushed.
 Emonge, 218/31, among.
 Enbrased, 414/15, 492/25, embraced.
 Encrease, 214/28, increase.
 Endevorde, 4/12, endeavoured.
 Endoctryned, 536/7, instructed.
 Endure, 511/19, stand.
 Endyng, 527/20, end.
 Enewred, 187/15, inured.
 Engynes, 457/32, war material, machines for casting stones.
 Enhabyte, 150/4, inhabit.
 Eulevyn, 125/9, eleven.
 Enmye mortalle, 64/26, mortal
 enemy.
 Enoynted, 169/29; Ennoynted, 35/
 27, anointed.
 Employed, 476/34, employed.
 Enpraynt, 453/2. Fr. 'Em-preinte: f. A stampe, a print . . a violent assault, a furious and forcible onset.'—Cotgrave.
 Enprynting, 4/14, print. ng.
 Ensample, 477/1; Ensauuple, 295/17, example.
 Ensure, 329/23, assure.
 Enteerly, 450/17, entirely.
 Entencyon, 359/17, intention.
 Entent, 409/34, intention.
 Enterprised, 21/34, undertaken.
 Enterprys, 54/13, enterprise.
 Entraylles, 251/30, entrais.
 Entre, 173/3, entrance.
 Entreleyneth, 549/27, entertaineth.
 Envyronned, 191/30, 227/18, surrounded, environed.
 Erbe, 371/7, herb.
 Ere, 562/32, ear.
 Erneste, 328/8, earnest.
 Eschewe, 564/33, evade.
 Escuse, 112/21, excus.
 Ester, 83/12, 535/13, Easter.
 Ete, 516/8, eat.
 Eten wyth, 52/34, eaten by.
 Ether, 451/34, either.
 Etyng, 440/35, eating.
 Euyll rest, 70/30, 'God gyue them
 euyll rest,' = no peace.
 Euylle was to hym, 27/2, it was unlucky for him.
- Euyne, 73/35, even, close.
 Euyne, 53/20, evening.
 Ever, 17/20, always.
 Everyche, 186/16; Eueriche, 53/10, every.
 Euyll contente, 253/8, not well contented.
 Euyll daye gyve you, god, 107/3,
 God give you an evil eading.
 Euylls, 408/25, evils.
 Evyn, 500/12, even.
 Evyn, 243/7, evening.
 Evyn anone, 306/16, even now
 Expowne, 152/17, expound.
 Eyen, 99/8, 306/10, eyes.
 Eyghte, 210/6, Eyght, 74/21, eight.
 Ey leth, 226/26, 310/25, aileth.
 Eyres, 324/7, heirs.
- Facyon, 227/16, 351/11, 544/24,
 fashion, shape, manner.
 Falsed your feyth, 264/20, made false your faith.
 False wyt, 565/25, falseness, falsity,
 treachery.
 Falshode, 558/15, falseness, treach-ery.
 Falsli, 341/5, falsely.
 Famysshe, 74/27, starve out.
 Famysshed, 421/13, made him to be famished.
 Famyshyng, 21/25, famine.
 Fare, 478/34, fared.
 Fared soo fowle, 515/20, did so evilly.
 Fare fowll wyth vs, 42/2, do evil unto us.
 Fauce posternes, 190/31, false gates, or passages.
 Faucons, 59/21, Fawcones, 192/25, falcon.
 Fauell, 33/21, dun. 'Fauveau: m.
 A dunne horse. Fauveau, yellowish, darke yellow, dunne, somewhat fallow. Fauve, fallow, deepe-yellow, Lyon-tawnie, lightdunne.'—Cotgrave.
 Faughte, 99/22, fought.
 Fawcebraye, 77/27; Fawesbraye, 149/15, a secret passage, or covered way.
 Fawte, 215/33, 550/31, fault: 110/35, falseness; 111/7, default.
 Fayle, 37/13, fail.

- Faylled, 75/10, failed.
 Fayne, 86/33, fine, good; 301/16, fain, willing.
 Fayr clothes, 534/1, goodly hangings; cloths and carpets hung from the windows, &c.
 Faytes, 4/7; Fayttes, 32/22, feats.
 Faytes of armes, 138/18, 453/3, feats of arms.
 Feere, 80/13, 398/21, fear.
 Feered, 455/18, feared.
 Feest, 499/12, feast, rejoicing; 175/27, sport.
 Feintnes, 425/30, faintness.
 Felawe myn I 301/26, my man I Felawshyp, 16/23; Felaushyp, 46/26, company, party.
 Felde, 267/22, 288/30, 565/18, felled, knocked down.
 Feliship, 289/17, 512/25; Felishyp, 545/18, fellowship, following, company.
 Fell, 165/6; Felle, 30/17, wicked, cruel, fierce.
 Felony, 496/20, villainy.
 Ferder, 57/2, further.
 Ferdfull, 249/8, fearful.
 Fere, 481/12, fear.
 Fered, 149/13, feared.
 Ferfull, 361/30, fearful.
 Ferre, 60/27, far.
 Ferre ways, 585/24, far countries.
 Fery, 337/27, fayery, the fairy race, magic folk.
 Feste, 83/13, 163/7, feast.
 Fet, 477/22; Fette, 216/25, 466/2, fetch.
 Fete, 466/5, feet.
 Fete of hym, 550/17, his feet.
 Fetters, 370/28, fetters.
 Fetred, 369/24, fettered.
 Fewte, 571/8, fealty.
 Feynte, 184/15, 249/2, faint (from loss of blood).
 Feysauntes, 124/6, pheasants.
 Feyth, 99/12, 538/11, faith.
 Fiersly, 262/33, fiercely.
 Fiersnes, 413/6, fierceness, ferocity.
 Fiftly, 108/1, fifty.
 Fishes, the miracle of the, in sustaining the body of Reynawde above the water, 582-583.
 Fishser, 264/13 fisherman.
 Flancardes, 79/10, flank or side armour. Fr. 'Flancars : m. Side Lauges; armour for the flanks, or sides of a barbed horse.'—Cotgrave.
 Fleeng, 140/27, fleeing.
 Fleye theym quycke, 157/31, flay them alive.
 Fleyen, 25/11 (slayne in ed. 1554), flayed, slain.
 Fleyn quycke. 320/20, flayed alive.
 Fleynge, 232/26, flying.
 Floughe, 39/10, 262/5, flew, travelled.
 Flowen, 521/7, flown.
 Flowynge, 589/15, influx.
 Flyghte, 243/24, flight.
 Fole, 460/10, fool.
 Fole detestable, 331/31, detestable fool.
 Folie, 80/7, mischief, evil.
 Folisshe, 171/5, foolish.
 Folke, 29/6, 224/25, attendants, followers, retinue.
 Foly, 21/34, silly enterprise.
 Follysly, 243/12, foolishly.
 Fonde, 67/20, 194/23, 363/1, found.
 Fontaine, 400/26, fountain, stream.
 For, 36/19, 301/20, from.
 For cause, 53/4, 540/10, because.
 For doubte to be blamed, 81/4, for fear he should be blamed.
 For nyce, 171/18, as asses. Fr. 'nice . . dull, simple.'—Cotgrave.
 For our sayynge, 505/31, to save us, for our salvation.
 For prysoners, 90/6, as prisoners.
 For recomended, 170/20, 495/16, as commended or committed to your charge, under your care. 'Recommander . . to give one charge, to commit vnto the care, of.'—Cotgrave, 1611.
 For to = to; 18/4, "oughte for to doo"; 18/25, "come not for to serve"; 20/7, "for to tell."
 For to deye for it, 296/27, if I have to die for it.
 For to knowe, 193/6, to find out.
 F.r to light on horsbak, 74/20, to mount horse.
 For whi, 202/28, because.
 Forbanysshed, 79/32, disinherited, banished, disposessed.
 Forbede, 244/14, 359/12, forbid.

- Forcened, 201/33. Fr. 'Forcené . . .
 Mad, wood, frantick; raging, furious, out of his wits.—Cot-
 grave.
 Forclosed, 289/11, foreclosed, shut off.
 Forder, 446/1, further.
 Foreby, 116/5, near.
 Forewarde, 40/12, the advance guard.
 Forfaytte, 32/29, default, forfeit.
 Forfote, 173/12, forefoot.
 Forgaaff, 336/19, forgave.
 Forgate, 259/3, forgot.
 Forgate not, 51/19, did not forget.
 Forhede, 48/14, 478/11, 559/11, forehead.
 Formost, 106/27, 137/13, 449/8, foremost.
 Forsayd, 558/34, aforesaid.
 Forsoke, 461/9, forsook.
 Forthby, 586/22, thereby, that way.
 Foster, 194/17, forester.
 Fote, 176/3, foot.
 Fote, 279/33, feet (" xv fote of lengthe" = fifteen feet in height).
Foot is still used, as 'six foot high.'
 Fouer, 109/9, four.
 Founded, 32/6, formed, made.
 Foundemente, 56/16, fundament.
 Founde the wayes, 536/2, made the arrangements.
 Fourth, 39/23; Fourthe, 27/8, 60/7, forth.
 Fourthe, 26/8, forth.
 Fourthi, 55/20; Fourthy, 547/8, forty.
 Fowle fall, 304/11, evil befall.
 Fowndered, 123/3, bedrenched.
 Fowndre, 140/3, give way, founder.
 Foyned, 43/25, thrust.
 Foyson, 187/4, 434/25; Foi-son, 20/2, plenty, many, a great number.
 Fraunchyse, 283/12, service.
 Fraye, 62/11, fray.
 Fraye hym selfe, 33/18, not put himself in fear.
 Free knyght, 199/29, free-speaking.
 Frende, 498/27, friend.
 Frende carnall, 225/8, near kinsman.
 Frenshemen, 238/10, Frenchmen.
 Frenshyp, 83/11, friendship.
 Fro, 302/32, 486/13, from.
 Frohens, 140/1, from hence.
 Fromhens forthon, 350/24, from henceforth.
 From my behalve, 159/18, on my behalf.
 Frompeled his forhede, 48/14, made the wrinkles appear in his forehead.
 Frutes, 336/28, fruits.
 Fulfylled wyth, 388/2, full of.
 Full made, 149/20, finished building.
 Full often, 35/17, many times.
 Furret, 199/14, furred, fringed.
 Fyauced, 154/16, affianced.
 Fyfte, 452/22, fifth.
 Fyghte, 291/19, fight.
 Fyghte sore atte his herte, 125/9, to be troubled in his mind, by recollection of his shocking treatment of his sons.
 Fynde, 526/23, find
 Fyne, 253/19, great.
 Fyne force, 518/23, 562/13, great force.
 Fynysse, 514/10, end, finish.
 Fynysshed, 248/13, come to an end.
 Fyre angry, 476/20, as angry, as fierce and furious, as fire.
 Fyred, 510/22, fired, set alight.
 Fyred it, 399/7, set fire to it.
 Fyrste, 445/17, first.
 Fysshie, 393/2, 582/31, fish.
 Fysshes, 226/8, fish's.
 Fyste, 43/18, hand, fist.
 Gaaf, 32/35; Gaaff, 62/13; Gaff, 143/29, gave.
 Gabbe, 338/29, speak mockingly.
 Gadre, 441/6, gather.
 Gadred, 168/12, 552/33, gathered.
 Gage, 218/28, defiance; 386/34, pledge.
 Galous, 334/21; Galohous, 331/22, gallews.
 Gare, 567/6, cause.
 Garnysshed, 87/25, supplied.
 Garnyssheng, 251/3, gathering.
 Gate, 374/24, got; 486/23, get.
 Gate the pryce, 308/7, won the prize.
 Gayn, 355/1, 529/34, booty, prize taken from the enemy.
 Gayne, 194/23, gain.
 Gaynsayth, 425/11, gainsayeth.

- Gentill, 19/19, noble.
 Gentyll, 495/10, gentle.
 Gentylwyemen, 491/30, gentle-women.
 Gete, 452/13, get.
 Girde, 31/25, girded, girt.
 Gladder, 211/11, more glad, more pleased.
 Glayue, 82/25, glaive, blade. Fr. 'Glaiue: m. A Gleau, or Sword; also a Launce, or horseman's staffe.'—Cotgrave.
 Glotons, 63/19, 81/1, gluttons, blackguards. Fr. 'Glouton: m. A glutton . . . also a knaue, rascall, filthie fellow.'—Cotgrave.
 Glystered, 93/14, glistened.
 Gnewe, 473/31, gnawed.
 Go, 586/14, walk.
 God byfore, 488/3, God leading.
 Goddys, 231/14, God's.
 Gode, 485/16, 499/8, 525/7, goods, cargo.
 God mercy, 450/31, God's mercy, or the mercy of God.
 God yelde you, 146/33, God keep you.
 Golde massy, 61/23, massive gold.
 Goo, 452/8, go.
 Goo agenst theim, 494/8, go against, to meet them (i.e. in a friendly manner, not as in war).
 Goo at, 519/1, go to.
 Goo fro myself, 532/6, go beside myself (i.e. lose my wits).
 Goo in pylgrymage, 156/14, go on a pilgrimage.
 Goo vppon, 25/23, attack.
 Good, 30/27, goods, good things.
 Good arraye, 29/17, a sarcastic way of speaking of a man whose head has been cut off.
 Good of kynde, 490/18, good by nature, naturally of a good disposition.
 Goode gownes, 49/25, best clothes.
 Goon, 445/22, gone.
 Goon to sportynge, 193/10, gone sporting.
 Gooth, 270/6, 315/27, goeth.
 Goten agayne, 498/4, again taken.
 Gramercy, 82/30, 301/33, 'grand merci.' great thanks.
 Greef, 236/21, pain.
- Greefull, 251/29, grievous.
 Gresses, 440/35, grasses.
 Grete, 572/1, greet.
 Grete hall, 149/8, principal room.
 Grete luste, 157/8, great haste.
 Grete name, 541/7, high esteem.
 Grete occasion, 226/31, great cause.
 Grete peyne contynuall, 28/32, long-continued trouble.
 Grete rage of hungre, 429/7, great pangs of hunger.
 Grete wordes, 412/27, big words.
 Gretnes, 232/9, greatness.
 Gretter gentilman, 208/30, better man.
 Greetinge, 489/25, greeting.
 Greureth, 76/22, grieveth, angereth.
 Greveth, 452/2, grieveth.
 Grovelinge, 370/31, grovelling.
 Gryeffe, 34/12, grief.
 Gryffon, 52/31, griffin, dragon.
 Grylled, 176/32, expanded.
 Guarished, 278/14, healed, cured. Fr. gueri.
 Guyded, 281/18, guided.
 Guysarne, 516/13, a long weapon with a scythe and a spear at its head. See it figured in Fairholt's Costume in England, ed. Dillon, i. 216.
 Guyven, 263/21, given.
 Gyaunt, 586/31, giant.
 Gybet, 30/22, Gybette, 96/21, gibbet, gallows.
 Gyfte, 246/18, gift.
 Gylte, 537/22, gilt, gold.
 Gylyt, 286/6, guilty.
 Gynnes, 337/17, clutches; 428/28, snares.
 Gyrtes, 321/10, girths.
 Gyrthe, 197/15, part of the harness of a horse.
 Gyve him to knowe, 548/12, given him to understand.
 Gyueth, 69/30, forewarneth.
 Gyveth, 137/9, foretelleth.
- Habandonne, 336/27, abandon.
 Habandoned, 239/27, abandoned.
 Habylymentes, 53/11, habiliments.
 Habyte, 279/28, habit, dress.
 Had be, 456/5, had been.
 Had doo make, 70/5, had made.

- Had enuye vpon hym, 150/23, were envious of him.
- Had out, 525/9, taken out.
- Had theym, 536/10, took them.
- Hadde, 92/14, took.
- Hadde doo brynge, 56/28, had brought.
- Ha'e vp saylle, 530/19, haul up the sails.
- Halfe discomfyted, 228/30, half vanquished (because they had no arms with them).
- Halowes, 552/26, sacred relics.
- Halted sore, 177/9, was sore lame.
- Haltynge, 175/6, lamely.
- Halve, 464/14, half.
- Hamer, 581/6, hammer.
- Hanfull, 107/4, handfull.
- Hanged, 74/18, furnished ('whan the tentes wer all spred & hanged').
- Hangynge, 50/14, pending; — 'This hangynge,' 71/13 (very frequently), Fr. ce-pendant, meanwhile, meantime. (After relating the doings of one set of his characters, the narrator leaves them alone, and goes on with the doings of another set.) Fr. 'Pendant cela (adverbially), in the meane while, in the meane tyme, in the meane season.' — Cotgrave.
- Happed, 86/33, 504/29; Haped, 19/24, happened, came to pass, turned out.
- Happed of newe, 202/12, newly happened.
- Hardenes, 106/7, harshness.
- Hardly, 194/25, hardily, stoutly, quickly.
- Harneyses, 44/4, armour, accoutrements, both of horses and knights.
- Hast, 477/33, haste.
- Haste the mete, 255/15, hasten, 'hurry up' the dinner.
- Hasted somoche, 562/22, harried, worried, so much.
- Hastly, 451/31, hastily, in haste.
- Hathe be, 468/28, hath been.
- Hatred, 539/31, hated.
- Haubergeon, 42/24; Haubergen, 79/10, a coat of mail, a breast-plate, the diminutive of 'hauberk.'
- Haue accorde, 51/10, have accorded, i. e. to have made peace between.
- Haue do made, 70/29, have caused to be made.
- Haunted, 543/31, acquainted.
- Hauntyng, 536/16, following.
- Hauoyre, 64/29, 71/23, goods, valuables.
- Have, 17/27, capture.
- Have be, 456/4, have been.
- Have me, 166/6, take me.
- Hede, 418/31, heed.
- Hede, 37/26, 403/16, head.
- Hede captayne, 508/18, commander-in-chief.
- Heded, 266/22, beheaded.
- Heder, 75/19, hither.
- Hederwarde, 481/30, hitherward.
- Hedles, 331/6, heedless.
- Heeled, 398/16, covered (with bedding, &c.).
- Heeres rise vp, 228/27, hair stands up.
- Hehelde, 229/17, beheld.
- Helde hym so short, 532/8, was so hasty with him.
- Helde syde, 238/4, took side.
- Hele, 278/5, heal.
- Helpeth hymself wyth, 528/5, applies himself to.
- Hens fourthe, 49/17, henceforth.
- Hensfourthion, 59/6, henceforth on.
- Her, 21/29, its; spoken of the castle of Aygremonth.
- Heraulde, herawde, 203/16, 31, herald.
- Herbowrynge, 28/9, dwelling-place (metaphor).
- Here, 50/6, hear.
- Heremytage, 400/24, hermitage.
- Heremyte, 315/24, 467/22, hermit.
- Heres, 177/16, hair (referring to colour).
- Heres pulled, 62/10, hairs torn out of the head.
- Herke, 246/23, hearken.
- Herken, 90/21, hearken.
- Hermyns, 129/9, ermine.
- Herneis, 79/5, war apparel.
- Herte, 48/9, heart.
- Herte so fell, 205/31, such wicked hearts.
- Herte tendred, 430/22, heart became tender.

Hertes, 124/5, harts.
 Hertes rose in their belies, 465/24, hearts rose in their bellies (apparently proverbial).
 Hertly, 451/35, heartily.
 Hertly sorowe, 429/25, sorrow at heart.
 Herytaunce, 404/4, inheritance, heritage.
 Hete, 417/30, 452/13, heat.
 Hether, 31/2, hither.
 Heved, 194/30, held.
 Heved vppe, 28/24, lifted up.
 Hevered, 122/4, heaved.
 Hevy, 532/3, heavy.
 Hevy, 114/15, censorious, bullying.
 Fr. 'Lourd . . vnhandsome, vn-ciuile, vnannerlie.'—Cotgrave.
 Hevy to me, 492/23, heavy on me.
 Hevyn, 112/29, 507/11, heaven.
 Hevynes, 99/9, 143/9, heaviness.
 Heye, 116/27; Hey, 431/1, hay.
 Hidous, 121/10, hideous.
 Hie, 3/14, 53/31, 431/33, 476/25, 476/31, high, loud.
 Hie roche, 73/8, high rock.
 Highe voys, 165/25, loud voice.
 Him vpon, 564/30, upon him.
 His body defendynge, 566/26, defending his body.
 His hert rored in his beli for ioye, 261/7, he was so overjoyed, that his heart beat furiously.
 His strokes cam right, 79/2, each stroke of his sword killed a knight.
 Hit, 29/29, it.
 Hode, 282/19, 466/12, hood.
 Holde here, 154/11, look here!
 Holde, 62/26, regain, recover.
 Holden, 70/33, bound.
 Hole, 46/14, 312/22, whole.
 Holpe, 110/34, 384/1; Ho'pen, 159/5, 271/24, helped.
 Honged, 215/32, hung, hanged.
 Hongre, 115/14, hunger.
 Hoote, 136/7, hot.
 Horns, 137/27, clarions.
 Horryble, 276/3, horribly.
 Horsis taylles, 73/19, horses' tails.
 Hosin, 372/17, stockings or socks.
 Hoursone, 61/25, whoreson.
 House of religyon, 280/22, 576/12, religious house.

How, 363/10, however.
 How be it, 224/16, though.
 How somer, 174/27, howsoever.
 Hunnylite, 411/32, humility.
 Hungre, 433/16, hunger.
 Hurted, 78/20, 452/23, hurt, did hurt.
 Hurted, 560/11, hustled.
 Husbonde, 415/14, 491/15, husband.
 Hydde, 422/7, 518/26, hid.
 Hyghe, 486/10, high.
 Hyghe you, 559/29, hie, hasten, be quick.
 Hylle, 400/23, hill.
 Hym, 482/10, 503/3, himself.
 Hym demaunded, 40/26, demanded of him.
 Hym I besече, 19/13, I beseech him.
 Hym shold yll betyd, 61/29, it should ill betide him.
 Hyngre, 413/35, hung.
 Hyt, 48/3, it.

I am borne, 316/32, I was born.
 I am mayster for to begge brede, 499/10. This is one of Mawgis's playful remarks that he was one of the best of beggars, and that if fair means did not procure the bread, then his staff did.
 I am not therto consentynge, 52/15, I do not consent thereto.
 I me complayne, 183/15, I complain me.
 'I nether prayse you nor doubte you not,' 27/3. This seems to be a proverbial expression.
 I shall maye, 181/24, I may, shall be able to.
 I wolde be reformed wyth rayson to, 159/26, I would reasonably conform to.
 Iape, 148/27, jape, play with, inock at.
 Iawe, 562/33, jaw.
 Ieopardie, 329/7, put in jeopardy.
 Ill be it, 17/19, albeit.
 Imprenable, 21/24, 160/9, impregnable.
 In, 210/20, into.
 In a good hour, 132/27, an auspicious time.
 In a scorne, 264/11, in scorn.

In certayne, 22/12, certainly.
 In the crosse, 62/25, on the cross.
 In to the breste, 55/32, in the breast.
 Incontinent, 67/6; Incontynente, 24/26, forthwith, immediately, at once.
 Indygne, 152/27, unworthy.
 Inhumaynly, 54/15, inhumanly.
 Ioye atte my herte, 33/9, apparently a proverbial expression for 'be easy in my mind.'
 Is abyden, 490/32, does abide.
 It is no more spoken of him, 227/5, no more is said of him.
 It semeth me, 21/32, it seems to me.
 It shall repente you, 550/30, you will repent it.
 Iustynge, 141/9, jousting.
 Iustyse, 584/5, justice.

Kaytiff, 272/9, caitiff.
 Kechyn, 255/15, kitchen.
 Kepe, 453/26, guard.
 Kepe parlyamente, 202/6, hold counsel.
 Kepe the wayes, 116/4, play the highwaymen.
 Kepe well, 62/5, take care.
 Kepe you by, 512/23, keep close to.
 Kaped, 157/9, kept.
 Kepeth, 302/24, hindereth.
 Kerles, 480/13 carls, churls, knaves.
 Keruers, 544/14, carvers (at the dinner table).
 Knacked, 406/29, gnashed.
 Knawe, 264/20, knave.
 Knewe, 549/13, heard of.
 Knowe the kyng, 87/25, let the king know.
 Knowlege, 465/1, knowledge.
 Knyff, 256/9, 544/24, knife.
 Knyghthode, 294/10, knighthood.
 Knytted, 48/14, knit.
 Kyndenes, 411/31, kindness.
 Kyng overthrowen, 203/27, a term of reproach.
 Kynges name of Fraunce, 252/12, in the name of the king of France.
 Kynred, 400/3, kindred.
 Kyt, 267/23; Kytted, 350/2, cut.

Laddes, 364/1, lads, pages.
 Lade, 109/5, laden, bestridden.

Lady, 478/8, a chess term, meaning what is now called the queen. It is to be understood that, from the use to which the player put this lady, the 'pieces' employed in the game must have been of gigantic dimensions.
 Laked, 80/10, lacked.
 Langage, 172/25, language, speech.
 Lapped, 251/31, wrapt up, covered, i.e. put back his entrails into his stomach, and bound them in.
 Largenes, 143/30, liberality.
 Late a goo, 449/20, lately, a short time back.
 Lawde, 208/6, laud, honour.
 Lawghe, 372/22, laugh.
 Lawghe wyth it, 563/23, laugh at it.
 Layd a doun, 291/28, laid low.
 Layde, 227/31, laid hidden.
 Layed, 421/15, laid, placed.
 Leches, 568/31, physicians.
 Ledded, 240/8, led, did lead.
 Leden, 81/2, deal with.
 Ledernes, 125/20, idleness, lethargy.
 Leest, 289/13, least.
 Legeauns, 348/3, allegiance.
 Leiser, 80/7, leisure.
 Leke, 574/27, like.
 Lended, 304/9, lent.
 Lene, 116/24, lean.
 Lene, 481/17; Lened, 418/21, lend.
 Lenge, 529/30, long.
 Lenger, 336/1, longer.
 Lengthe, 55/12, 335/16, lengthen.
 Lenyng, 320/30, leaning.
 Lepe, 258/31, leapt; 522/4, leap.
 Lepte, 337/3, leaped.
 Lese, 99/6, 522/23, lose.
 Lese place, 562/23, lose ground.
 Lese the pryce for age, 170/4, be reckoned younger than he is.
 Lesyng, 343/13, lying story.
 Lete, 172/32, left.
 Lete falle thyse:fe, 302/25, let thyself fall.
 Lete flee, 192/25, let fly.
 Lete goo doun, 91/10, let down.
 Lete renne theyr horses, 42/5, let their horses run.
 Lete you wyte, 73/6, give you to understand.
 Leten, 437/25, let.
 Letre, 214/16, letter.

- Letted, 269/14, 333/2, hindered, prevented, stopped.
 Lettyng, 467/33, hindrance.
 Leuer, 33/13, value, estimate.
 Leuer, 37/17, sooner.
 Leve, 481/15, leave.
 Leve, 298/17, take, accept.
 Leveht, 254/21, leaveth.
 Lever, 148/12, sooner.
 Leves, 116/23, leaves.
 Leye, 45/14, 395/20, lay.
 Leyed, 579/30, laid.
 Leyser, 229/5, 383/17, leisure.
 Liberte, 488/28, liberty.
 Liff, 142/16, life.
 Liff dayes, 473/27, days of life.
 Lifte, 182/23, lifted.
 Lifte, 233/17, left (side).
 Ligeaunce, 155/11, allegiance.
 Lighte, 291/12, lighted.
 Lightely, 488/12, quickly.
 Lignage, 166/10; lygnage, 166/30, lineage.
 Like it you that, 568/25, do you like that which.
 Like wyse, 485/13, likewise.
 Limmes, 72/28, limbs.
 Linage, 499/14, lineage.
 Lippes, 371/8, lips.
 Liste, 59/7, care to.
 Liste, 464/33, outgrowth, excrescence, tag of flesh. Fr. 'Liste . . a small square out-utting brow, or member of a pillar. Le mol de Foreille. The lug, or list of th' eare.'—Cotgrave.
 Litol, 177/27, little.
 Lityll, 400/23, little.
 Lityll myle, 500/3, short mile (proverbial expression).
 Lityll pase, 227/13, slow pace.
 Live dayes, 555/6, remaining days.
 Livelode, 489/8, livelihood, possessions.
 Lodges, 49/31, 174/34, lodgings, or tents; 501/28, a reed hut.
 Loke, 576/26, examine.
 Loke, 569/33, look after and heal.
 Loked, 315/11, looked.
 Loked a traverse, 179/22, looked behind.
 Loked ful angrely, 48/15, looked swollen up with anger.
 Lond, 525/1; Londe, 489/6, land.
- Longed vnto, 193/5, belonged unto.
 Longeth, 480/12, belongeth.
 Lorden, 511/14, lurdan, lout, low fellow.
 Lordeshyp, 90/4, lordship.
 Loued, 70/10, loved.
 Loughe, 230/25, laughed.
 Lounges, 241/15, lungs.
 Lowde, 503/13, loud.
 Lust, 481/4; Luste, 370/20, desire.
 Lyberte, 413/12, liberty.
 Lyers, 113/9, liars.
 Lyfte, 123/32, left.
 Lygthly, 89/33; Lyghtely, 307/16, lightly.
 Lykened, 215/34, likened.
 Lynee, 24/23, lineage.
 Lynen, 220/9, linen.
 Lyon, 113/34, lion.
 Lystes, 167/33, race-courses.
 Lytyll, 133/6, little.
 Lyuered, 54/23, delivered over to.
 Lyvered, 214/15, delivered.
- Machomet, 511/2, Mahomet, now usually transliterated Muhammad.
 Machyned, 216/8, machinated.
 Mad, 55/27, made.
 Made a longe necke, 177/1, arched, or spread out his neck.
 Made accorded, 153/21, agreed upon.
 Made be called, 547/10, caused to be called.
 Made com, 203/16, caused to come.
 Made noo lenger dwellyng, 76/24, stayed no longer.
 Made noo grete ioye, 532/1, did not rejoice.
 Made of it two peces, 562/20, cut it asunder.
 Made swere my good fader, 289/8, made my good father swear.
 Made them way, 453/35, made way for them.
 Made to be redy, 62/23, made ready.
 Made to open, 512/11, cause to be opened.
 Magre, 86/14, Fr. malgre, in spite of; 86/16, damage.
 Magyke, 349/7, magic, necromancy, enchantment.
 Mahom, 515/8, Muhammad.
 Mai, 393/5, may.

- Maister, 265/27, master.
 Make as mani men for to make the warre, 22/3, number as many men to carry on the war.
 Make his berde to be cutte harde by the chynne, 186/2, shave him (apparently proverbial).
 Make the forwarde, 235/16, be in front.
 Make to hym, 26/8, to tell him.
 Male, 466/13, knapsack, bag. Fr. 'Male: f. A Male, or great Budget.'—Cotgrave.
 Malencolye, 38/10, melancholy.
 Maner, 486/13, 499/3, manner, matter, doings.
 Man of werr, 74/20, man of war, warrior.
 Maner of craftes, 150/10, handicrafts.
 Manly, 102/16, manfully.
 Manson, 178/27, common-man's son, a derisive title (filz de proudomme).
 Many of sheldes, 42/23, large number of shields.
 Marbell, 282/7, marble.
 Marchautes, 458/24, merchants.
 Marches, 138/33, countries.
 Marre not, 140/32, do not endanger.
 Marder, 93/27, slaughter.
 Martyrdoine, 164/14, trouble, torment.
 Maryshall, 462/31, marshal, senechal; in modern parlance, master of the ceremonies.
 Masse, 325/18, ? mass, religious profession; not mace, or bishop's pastoral staff, now called a crozier.
 Massi, 374/26, massive.
 Masterles, 298/31, without masters.
 Masters gate, 76/33, the chief gate.
 Mate, 478/9, a chess term: it seems here to mean 'check,' and not 'mate,' as the game is now played.
 Mated, 478/22, checkmated.
 Mater, 253/9, matter.
 Mathe, 90/19, maketh, for 'made.'
 Matynes, 573/13, matins, early morning (3 A.M.) prayers, according to the old ecclesiastical regimen.
 Mauntelles, 212/2, mantles.
 Mawgre, 229/1, in spite of. Fr. malgre.
 Maye, 26/27, 232/21, be able.
 Maye noo more, 563/25, may do no more, unable to do more.
 Mayles, 142/1; Maylles, 267/24, links. Fr. 'Maille: f. Mayle, or a linke of mayle, whereof coats of mayle be made.'—Cotgrave.
 Mayne, 357/35, 445/28, many, number, lot, mass. Cf. 'the main of them are fools.' Mayntene, 545/15, maintain.
 Mayntened, 358/22, maintained.
 Mayster theef, 461/1, chief of the thieves.
 Maysters masons, 149/4, master masons.
 Maystres strete, 94/5, principal street.
 Meane, 134/33, 219/25, means.
 Meddle, 22/14; Medle, 292/24, battle, fight.
 Medlee, 37/10, meddle.
 Medled, 43/5, mingled.
 Medlers wylde, 576/2, wild medlars.
 Medlynge, 289/1, fighting.
 Medowe, 392/4, meadow.
 Me dysplayseth, 373/18, it displeases me.
 Meete, 123/29, meat.
 Meiny, 462/26, many, train.
 Meke, 409/34, make meek.
 Meked hymselfe, 468/27, borne himself meekly.
 Mele, 124/2, meal.
 Melodiously, 227/11, melodiously.
 Men bryng, 74/22, men shall bring.
 Men make often a rodde for theyn selfe, 97/11, a proverbial expression, apparently put into Charlemagne's mouth to belittle him, because he would set down all his misfortunes to the fact that he had knighted the Four Sons.
 Men of crafte, 27/25, handicraftsmen.
 Mercy of you, 20/21, mercy on you.
 Merueyliouse, 307/8, marvellous.
 Merueylle, 32/35, marvel.
 Merueylled, 36/33, marvelled.
 Merueylled hym selfe, 53/22, marvelled within himself.
 Mervelouse, 246/10, marvellous.
 Merely, 227/3, merrily.
 Mery, 102/8, merry.

- Messenger, 74/31; Mesager, 287/32, messenger.
 Mete, 547/16, meet, sufficient.
 Mewed, 152/6, fastened with a peculiar string (said of a hawk).
 Mewle, 189/3, mule.
 Meyne, 316/6, men, followers.
 Meyne of knyghtes, 34/1, body or troop of knights.
 Mischeeff, 404/28, mischief.
 Misdoone, 20/34, done amiss.
 Misprysed, 359/14, done wrongly, erred, offended.
 Moche, 299/18, loud.
 Moche glad, 542/6, very glad.
 Moche honourably, 535/19, very honourably.
 Moche humbly, 212/17, very humbly.
 Moche sori, 515/6, very sorry.
 Moche worthyly, 45/23, very worthily.
 Moche wroth, 36/3, very angry.
 Mocke for that, 561/13, something to mock at.
 Mocyon, 290/15, motion, action of the mind.
 Moeved, 136/27, stirred, moved.
 Molified, 414/28, mollified.
 Mone, 111/28, 312/27; Moone, 29/33, moan.
 Moneth, 359/24, month.
 Montagne, 90/26; Montayn, 145/13, mountain.
 Moo, 328/7, more.
 Mooste, 209/5, most, greater.
 More dred, 190/24, more dreaded.
 Morowe nexte, 146/5, next morning.
 Mortalle, 213/23, deadly.
 Mote, 364/20, might.
 Mountenance, 29/21, amount, value.
 Moure, 565/32, Moor (i.e. became as black as a Moor).
 Moved, 164/28, bestirred.
 Mow, 89/26, 162/10, be able.
 Mowes, 173/29, pasterns.
 Muche longe, 21/17, for a long time.
 Murdrers, 435/18, murderers.
 Murtrished, 264/22, murdered, murdered.
 Musardes, 171/18, Fr. 'Musard : m. A musier, dreamer, or dreaming fellow . . . a pauser, lingerer, deferrer, delayer . . . a man of no dispatch.'—Cotgrave.
 Musike, 225/24, music.
 Musselinge in the grounde, 426/1, grubbing with their faces in the ground.
 Mussell, 561/25, muzzle, a horse's face.
 Mustres, 187/33, musters.
 Musyng, 425/25, complaint.
 Myddes, 160/26, 304/5, 528/15, midst, middle.
 Myght, 165/13, power, strength.
 Mykyll, 99/4, much.
 Myle, 35/4, miles.
 Mylle, 493/14, mill.
 Mystone, 496/17, millstone.
 Mylte, 52/33, the spleen.
 Myn, 190/6, mine.
 Myn, 52/32, my (pl.).
 Mynyshe, 436/24, diminish.
 Myracle, 582/31, miracle.
 Myre, 420/18, miry, dirty place.
 Myschaunt, 72/24; Myschaunte, 125/27, wicked.
 Mysdoon, 481/28, misdone, done amiss.
 Mysdyde, 344/23, did amiss.
 Myshap, 231/12, mishap.
 Myspriesed, 59/26, 347/2, mistook, mistaken, erred.
 Myssayed, 174/17, missed.
 Myssed, 486/16, missed.
 Mysshaped tyll vs, 375/11, ill-betided us.
 Mystre, vb. 129/14, 141/5, behove, supply need, help; Mystre, n. 504/4, need. Fr. 'Mestier . . . need, lacke, necessitie, want, occasion for the vse, of a thing.'—Cotgrave.
 Mystruste, 219/33, distrust.
 Nacyon, 121/15, nation.
 Nagge, 133/6, small horse.
 Namly, 72/30, specially.
 Nature maye not lie, 424/13, nature is true to herself, i.e. the paternal instinct cannot be overcome.
 Naturell, 36/30; Natureill, 83/17, natural.
 Nayles, 473/33, nails.
 Ne, 25/22, nor.
 Ne, 168/18, never.

- Nere goon, 565/23, nearly dead.
 Nerer, 273/8, nearer.
 Netheles, 206/21, nevertheless.
 Never dayes of our lyues, 50/23, never again.
 Never dethe was so sore solde ne so dere boughte, 38/25 (apparently a proverbial expression), Never was such terrible vengeance taken, or misery caused, as was for the death of Lohier.
 Never in my dayes, 228/26, never before.
 Never wylle rype, 473/22, never will become ripe.
 Nevew, 188/6, nephew.
 Newe, 63/26, newly.
 Newe tyme, 89/25, next spring.
 Nighed, 315/15, come nigh to.
 Nigromancy, 24/6, necromancy, enchantment.
 Noblesse, 44/12, nobility, noblemen.
 No moo but two, 239/13, no more than two.
 None, 400/21, noon.
 None, 454/3, the old ecclesiastical division of the day, viz. 3 P.M.
 None otherwyse, 457/14, not otherwise.
 Nocse, 371/8, nose.
 Norissshed, 172/18, brought up, bred.
 Norysshed, 114/26, 327/28, nourished.
 Nostrelles, 176/32, nostrils.
 Nother, 25/22, 60/25, 70/32, 217/12, neither.
 Not well atte ease of his persone, 216/19, uneasy in his mind.
 Noynted, 278/13, anointed.
 Noyntement, 169/29, ointment.
 Noyous, 227/18, difficult.
 Nye, 560/10, nigh.
 Nyegte, 69/15, night.
 Nyghe was the sonne vnder, 45/35, the sun was well nigh set.
 Nygramancer, 277/20, necromancer.
 Nys noo, 452/12, is no.
- Obeyeng, 550/13, obedient.
 Obeyssaunce, 33/31, obeisance.
 Obeyssaunte, 166/10, obedient.
 Oblacyons, 315/35, oblations.
- Occupyed, 579/1, used up.
 Occysion, 45/16, 82/1, slaughter.
 Fr. 'Occision: f. An occision, killing, slaying, murthering, slaughtering.'—Cotgrave. L. occidere, to kill; occisio, killing.
 Of, 20/21, 73/33, on.
 Of, 26/33, with.
 Of, 49/25, off.
 Of, 74/20, for.
 Of, 210/6, by.
 Of, 369/29, in.
 Of a freshe, 110/23, again.
 Of a heygthe, 73/26, from on high.
 Of a longe whyle, 153/32, for a long time.
 Of all foure sides, 151/9, said of Reynawde, who was 'a noble gentyman of all foure sides.'
 Of ferre, 106/17, from afar.
 Of fro y<sup>e</sup> sholders of hym, 81/7 from off his shoulders.
 Of heyghe, 62/4, on high.
 Of his behalve, 158/27, on his behalf.
 Of hym, 472/1, by him.
 Of length, 194/4, long.
 Of lighte, 106/6, lightly.
 Of newe, 288/24, afresh, again.
 Of ryght of were, 457/15, by right of war.
 Of that, 87/6, for that.
 Of whens, 158/15, 441/13, from whence.
 Offre, 298/17, offer.
 Offrynges, 585/27, offerings.
 'Often happeth evill for a good torne,' 265/14. This is quoted as a proverb, and seems to mean that in doing a good turn for any one, evil often happens to the doer.
 Olyue tree, 47/23, an emblem of peace.
 Ones, 64/16, once, at one time.
 On lyue, 29/11, alive.
 Onoly, 116/22, only.
 Ony, 116/5, 226/21, any.
 On you, 306/14, on your account.
 Oo, 113/13, 146/7, one.
 Oolde, 452/12, old.
 Oonly, 486/5, only.
 Oost, 69/14, host.
 Ootes, 116/21, oats.

- Operacyon of the deuyll, 80/2, the devil's work.
 Oppynyon, 192/19 opinion.
 Or, 129/22, 269/5, before, ere.
 Ordenaunce, 195/15, ordinance, order.
 Ordened, 511/34, ordered, ordained.
 Ordeyned, 188/25, made ready.
 Ordeyned, 69/18, put under the leadership of.
 Or ever, 160/3, 301/15, before.
 Or ever a, 90/14, before a.
 Or euer it be a moneth, 74/27, before a month's time.
 Or evyn, 360/10, before evening.
 Or oughte longe, 449/23, before long.
 Oroyson, 226/19, orison.
 Oryflam, 451/33, banner; Oryflame, 41/17, the banner of Charlemagne.
 Othe, 112/6, oath.
 Other, 213/9, either.
 Other two, 220/13, two other.
 Otis, 442/17, oats.
 Ouerthrowe, 106/6, overthrown.
 Oughte, 125/13, owe.
 Oughte for to doo, 18/4, ought to do.
 Our, 545/10, ours.
 Oure, 55/31, hour.
 Ourselfe, 78/15, ourselves.
 Overhwarte, 238/28, cross-ways, athwart.
 Over late, 546/2, too late.
 Overmayster, 392/29, overcome.
 Overronne, 177/20, overrun, beaten.
 Over subtyll, 171/2, very cunning.
 Overthynke, 418/23, think over.
 Overtoke, 460/19, overtook.
 Owen, 17/20, owe, pl.
 Owen, 474/7, own.
 Oweth, 173/33, owneth.
 Owre, 27/16, 70/6, hour, time.
 Owterage, 507/17, outrage.
 Oxeforde, 3/19, Oxford.
- Paas, 114/1, 174/23, 229/19, pace, step.
 Pacyence, 233/28, patience.
 Padde, 314/21, toad.
 Pagnymes, 164/27, pagans.
 Palays, 19/32; Paleys, 530/6, palace, castle.
 Palfrays, 509/16; Palfrei, 558/7, horses.
- Palfrenyer, 257/17; Palfreyner, 257/15, the keeper of the palfrey.
 Fr. 'Palefrenier : m. A Groome of a stable; a Horse-keeper.'—Cotgrave.
 Palmer, 315/23, pilgrim.
 Palster, 399/31, 466/12, a pilgrim's staff, shod with iron.
 Pappes, 143/12, breasts.
 Paremente, chambre of, 151/27, chamber hung with tapestry. Fr. 'Parement . . Arras, Tapistrie, or any costlie Hangings.'—Cotgrave.
 Parentage, 123/10, parental care.
 Pareyll, 121/21, peril.
 Parforce, 133/24, by force.
 Parforce, 138/4, to make greater exertions than usual.
 Parfornysse, 304/33, perform, finish.
 Parliamente, 136/6, speech.
 Parte of paradys, 297/27, hope of Paradise.
 Party, 115/27, 143/27, part.
 Parylle, 243/5, peril.
 Pace, 315/6, pace.
 Patrymony, 327/8, patrimony.
 Pauylyon, 73/30, tent.
 Payed, 483/23, paid.
 Payer, 491/6, pair.
 Paymente, 28/34, reward.
 Paynym, 17/2, pagan, infidel, misbeliever.
 Peas, 26/26, 47/24, peace.
 Pease, 207/19, appease.
 Peasible, 489/1, peaceably.
 Peces, 96/26, pieces.
 Pceres, 441/1, pears.
 Pelow, 370/32, pillow.
 Penouncell, 153/24, pennon.
 Pensifull, 419/27; Pencyfull, 120/21, pensive, thoughtful.
 Penthecoste, 16/3, Pentecost.
 Pepled, 150/11, peopled.
 "Perce!" 515/16, "Persia!" (a war-cry).
 Perced, 339/21, pierced.
 Perceyve, 224/27, perceive.
 Perdycyon, 224/13, perdition, destruction.
 Perell, 291/19, peril.
 Perell mortall, 429/29, mortal peril.
 Peres, 481/29, peers, lords.

- Persante, 502/20, Persian.
 Perse, 515/8, pierce.
 Persone, 498/27, person, body. The common phrase is, 'Frende, how is it wyth your persone?' = 'Friend, how are you?' (spoken to a man who is ill in bed).
 Perteyneth, 458/11, pertaineth.
 Per to per, 392/5, peer to peer = hand to hand, equal to equal.
 Pertryches, 124/6, partridges.
 Peryle, 226/19, peril.
 Peyn, 259/20, pain.
 Peyne, 116/24, 314/2, pain, peril.
 Peyne, 248/24, trouble, effort.
 Pighte, 191/11, pitched.
 Pintre, 390/17, pine-tree, fir-tree.
 Plaise, 509/31, please.
 Plaisur, 50/22, pleasure.
 Plane, 193/18; Playne, 195/31, plain (country).
 Playne, 490/20, complain.
 Playsant, 74/1, pleasant.
 Playse, 29/25, 303/20, please.
 Playsed them not well, 226/22, did not well please them.
 Playseth, 159/28, pleaseth.
 Playsure, 298/7, pleasure.
 Plente, 445/29, plenty.
 Plentuouse, 129/27, plentiful.
 Pomell, 169/25, pommel.
 Portcolisse, 149/15; Porte colisse, 518/1, portcullis.
 Postle, 272/6, apostle.
 Pouerli, 319/22, poorly.
 Pouff (pouffe in ed. 1554), 25/18, puff.
 Pour vnhappy, 270/19, poor unhappy [one].
 Poure, 139/31, poor.
 Poure estate, 49/30, evil condition, naked.
 Poure herte myn, 131/3, my poor heart.
 Pourest, 422/29, poorest.
 Pourvey, 547/14, provide.
 Powre, 117/19, 220/27; Power, 242/19, poor.
 Poynte me wyth, 239/18, point at me with.
 Poyntment, 403/2, peace.
 Poytrell, 197/15, breastplate of the armour or harness of a horse.
 Praiers, 393/11, prayers.
 Prate, 320/22, talk.
 Prately, 282/7, prettily, neatly, deftly, that is, savagely.
 Praty, 150/1, piety.
 Praye, 200/2, prey.
 Praye god, 74/25, pray to God.
 Praysyng, 208/6, praise.
 Prechinge, 480/23; Prechyng, 235/1, preaching, speaking.
 Predecesours, 513/14, predecessors.
 Preeff, 161/2, proof.
 Preesse, 44/18, pressure.
 Pren, 23/32, prey.
 Presently, 287/4, at once, forthwith.
 Preu, 43/30, ? Fr. preux.
 Preue, 72/19, prove.
 Prince covetous, 539/34, covetous prince.
 Promytte, 32/27, 56/26, promise.
 Proteccon, 388/18, protection.
 Prouesses, 72/23, prowess (pl.).
 Prouffer, 507/16, proffer.
 Prouffyte, 127/11; Prouffytte, 26/20, profit.
 Prove vpon, 545/34, affirm, make known.
 Proye, 164/12, prey, booty.
 Pru, 79/30, 197/6, preux.
 Pryce, 144/5, 175/23, prize.
 Pryme, 369/34, prime; the old ecclesiastical division of the day, meaning 6 A.M.
 Pryour, 382/6, prior.
 Pryse, 32/13, praise.
 Pryse, 577/14, price.
 Pucell, 144/10, damsel.
 Pulde, 485/33, pulled.
 Punysse, 485/20, punish.
 Punysse, 30/24, punishment.
 Purchase this matere, 151/13, compass, carry out, follow up this matter.
 Purchaced, 232/15, purchased; 566/27, bargained.
 Purveyd, 378/13, 537/22, provided.
 Purvyauce, 537/27, providence.
 Put, 508/10, make.
 Putted, 176/22, put, got ready.
 Pyctured, 512/33, pictured, painted.
 Pyetous, 45/15, 59/6, piteous, sorrowful.
 Pyetously, 473/25, piteously.

- Pykeaxe, 581/6, pickaxe.
 Pylgrymage, 156/15, pilgrimage.
 Pyller, 369/26, pillar.
 Pyller of marbell, 282/7, marble pillar.
 Pyn tre, 239/20, pine tree.
 Pytched, 399/8, fixed.
 Pyt, 236/34; Pytte, 327/18, pit.
 Pyte in hym, 498/22, ? cause for pity in you for his sore sickness, or like Fr. 'Pitié, Pitié, ruth, compassion . . . charitie, kindness or tenderness of disposition' (Cotgrave) in the pilgrim himself.
 Quarelle, 272/20, quarrel.
 Quicke, 19/18, 62/6, 320/20, alive.
 Quycke, 400/26, lively, running.
 Quycke & deed, 518/11, 'dead and alive' is the modern equivalent.
 Quyras, 241/32, 299/4, cuirass.
 Quyte, 210/16, insure.
 Quyte, 29/19, quit, free.
 Quyte, 268/16, quits, equal.
 Quyte, 412/23, quietly.
 Quyted, 143/25, quieted.
 Ranne hym agenst, 531/7, ran up to him.
 Rasour of whete, 187/28. Fr. 'Rasier de bled. A measure containing about foure Bushels.'—Cotgrave.
 Rather, 63/31, sooner.
 Raught, 453/35, 505/12, struck.
 Raunsom, 397/22; Raunsome, 144/21, ransom.
 Rayled, 353/23, rallied, gathered together.
 Raymentes, 492/4, raiment.
 Rayne, 516/1, reins.
 Rayson, 20/15, 225/7, 231/34, reason.
 Reconyssaunce, 218/11, recognizance.
 Recounted, 52/20, 72/7, 302/9, encountered.
 Recountre, 307/19, encounter.
 Recovered, 309/20, returned.
 Recreaunte, 109/17, worn out.
 Recule, 81/27, recoil.
 Red, 211/11; Reilde, 214/15, read.
 Redi, 477/15; Redy, 468/23, ready.
 Redoubted, 329/29, redoubtable.
 Redyly, 61/17, readily, easily.
 Reede, 501/27, reeds to build a hut with.
 Reest, 45/19, 229/21, the 'rest' for a spear.
 Reformed, 159/27, conformed.
 Refrayne, 407/2, refrain, restrain.
 Refreyned, 457/20, refrained.
 Refuce, 159/34, refuse.
 Refute, 406/24, refuge.
 Regulet, 325/19, ? unfrocked, turned out of the service of the Church. Lat. 'Regulatus Regulis seu lineis distinctus; rayé, réglé. Ad regulam institutus, ordinatus; réglé.'—D'Arnis. 'Rayé . . . . Rased, scraped, crossed, or cleane put out; also rayed, rewed, streaked, or skored all ouer.'—Cotgrave.
 Reherce, 214/23, rehearse, tell.
 Reherced, 142/31, rehearsed.
 Reherse, 427/25, retell, recount.
 Reioysse, 452/29, rejoice, reanimate.
 Rekenynge, 264/31, reckoning.
 Rele, 198/21, 268/13, reel, stagger.
 Reled, 314/25, reeled, rolled.
 Releasee, 324/5, release.
 Reliques & hallowes, 112/28, sacred relics.
 Remedyed it, 213/27, willed otherwise.
 Remedyeth, 407/29, remedies.
 Remenaunt, 150/27, rest, remainder.
 Remyse, 367/20, remit.
 Remysed, 270/26, committed, retained, kept. Fr. Remette is 'also, to remit, forgiue, pardon, acquit, release, vnto.'—Cotgrave.
 Renne, 141/25, 478/17, run.
 Renne theym vpon, 77/21, run upon them.
 Renomme, 39/9; Renommee, 132/15, 292/19, renown.
 Rented, 533/5, rent.
 Replenysed wyth, 494/32, possessed of.
 Replenysshed, 533/7, possessed.
 Repreued, 65/30, 328/12, reproved, repented.
 Requyre, 450/25, seek for.
 Requyred, 547/23, requested.
 Reregarde, 292/4, rear guard.
 Resonnably, 297/6, reasonably.

- Respyte, 336/1, respite.
 Reteche to you, 234/4, reach you.
 Returned, 70/12, returned.
 Retourne, 301/15, return.
 Retrete, 421/6, retreat.
 Reynes, 117/6, reins.
 Reyse, 156/6, raise.
 Reysedest, 336/15, raised.
 Reyson, 38/13, reason; 546/31, reasonably.
 Right a noble company, 548/29, a goodly host.
 Right now, 304/10, just now.
 Righted, 370/32, put right, put straight; 316/29, lifted.
 Righted vp, 477/4, put all ready, right and proper.
 Rightwys, 432/24, righteous.
 Robbed, 371/7, 399/29, rubbed.
 Roke, 478/12, a chess tern, now called indifferently 'rook' and 'castle.'
 Rokked a slepe, 376/21, rocked to sleep.
 Rood, 113/13, rode.
 Rore, 456/10, roar. (Apparently proverbial: 'Ye shall see all Fraunce in a rore & trowble.') Rored, 261/7, made a noise ('his hert rored in his beli for ioye').
 Roten, 544/32, rotten.
 Rotes, 116/23, 505/9, roots.
 Rotyn, 439/27, rotten.
 Rought, 63/10; Roughte, 141/33, wrought.
 Roume, make hym, 79/19, give him, or leave him, room; give him a wide berth; keep out of his way. (The Four Sons don't want to fight their father.)
 Rousty, 117/4, rusty.
 Rouwte, 374/5, quantity.
 Rowme, 245/9, make room.
 Royme, 35/21, 68/7, realm.
 Rybawde, 173/4, rascal, rogue.
 Rybbea, 516/23, ribs.
 Ryden, 233/30, ridden.
 Ryghtnow, 332/17, just now.
 Ryght sore traueylled, 77/20, very weary.
 Ryghtwys, 207/17, right wise.
 Ryght-wyse, 20/13, lawful.
 Ryghtwysness, 114/33, righteousness.
- Rype, 473/22, become ripe, ripen.
 Ryvage, 221/21, bank, shore, water-side.
 Sadel, 257/33, saddle.
 Sadeles, 268/28, without a saddle.
 Sadylles, 117/5, saddles.
 Saenge, 297/34, saying.
 Sage, 18/1, 298/3, wise.
 Said, 526/24, spoke, gave.
 Salettes, 42/24, light helmets for soldiers, first used in the 14th century. See cuts of them, from Hewitt's Ancient Armour, in Fairholt's Costume in England, ed. Dillon, ii. 356.
 Salued, 24/16, 47/27, saluted.
 Sapyn tre, 242/33, 323/20; Serpyn trees, 213/20. Fr. 'Sapin: m. A Firre tree.'—Cotgrave.
 Sarasyns, Sarasins, 16/8, 9; Sarra-sins, 127/4; Sarrasyns, 163/11, Saracens.
 Satysfye, 348/7, satisfy.
 Sauf, 29/20; Sauff, 103/2, 192/30, safe.
 Saufconduyt, 51/15; Sauf conduytte, 385/25, safe conduct.
 Sauff garde, 388/18, safeguard.
 Sauldyer, 70/31, soldier.
 Save, 545/17, saving.
 Sawdours, 129/17, soldiers.
 Sawe thus, 42/13, thus saw.
 Sawmons, 264/13, salmon.
 Saw the day, 389/25, woke up.
 Sawtyng, 149/13, assault.
 Sawtynge, 253/20, 457/31, assaulting.
 Sayd, 162/15, spoken.
 Sayed, 560/17, said.
 Saye on hardely, 146/15, speak out boldly.
 Sayen, 196/8, have said.
 Scante, 438/35, scarcely.
 Scantly, 460/9, scarcely.
 Scape, 62/5, 330/16, escape.
 Scaped, 53/1, escaped.
 Scarmysse, 87/15, skirmish.
 Scarmysshynge, 108/11, skirmishing.
 Scarstee, 422/2, scarcity.
 Scarthched, 491/33, scratched.
 Scuthe, 308/1, harm, injury. A.S. scæðan, to harm, injure.

- Seased, 365/26, in possession of ;
 320/4, seized.
 Secretare, 210/8, secretary.
 See, 327/3, 423/3, sea.
 See his dethe, 228/9, see him put to death.
 Seen, 316/16, 382/11, seeing.
 Sege royall, 396/4, royal siege.
 Seke, 498/29, sick, ill.
 Seke so moche, 157/24, go quickly and seek.
 Sekynge, 445/4, seeking.
 Semblaunt, 230/24, semblance.
 Semeth you, 480/5, seemeth to
 you.
 Sendall, 154/25, 'A thynne stuffe lyke sarcenette, and of a rawe kynde of sylke or sarcenett, but courser and narrower then the Sarcenett nowe ys, as my selfe canne remember.'—Francis Thynne, Animaduersiones, 1599, ed. Furnivall, 1875, p. 41.
 Sende, 214/27, sent.
 Sendynge, 17/18, summons.
 Separe, 441/3, separate.
 Sepulture, 200/26, 317/1, sepulchre.
 Sepulturyng, 592/6, burying, burial.
 Sergautes, 478/10, sergeants.
 Sermon, 252/4, speech.
 Seruyse, 325/5, service.
 Sesne, 16/10. ? (Fr. 'Sener, 1. faire signe ; 2. guérir.'—Hippeau. Fr.
 'Sesne : Synode, assemblée ecc'e-siastique. Voyez Senne.'—Roque-fort. Fr. 'Sesne. The mother of wine, the white or mouldie spots which float on the top of old wine.'—Cotgrave.)
 Set, 377/6, sit.
 Setted, 245/23, 404/28, set, did set.
 Setteth lytle by me, 20/4, doesn't think much of me.
 Set to your necke an halter, 233/28,
 put a rope round your neck.
 Seurtes, 387/4, sureties.
 Shaked, 497/3, shook.
 Shall goe besyege, 17/26, will go and besiege.
 Shall wyl, 64/21, shall desire to.
 Shalt you, 564/24, shalt thou.
 Shamed, 377/14, made ashamed.
 Sharpe, 141/23, fierce.
 She, 136/27, it (applied to a city).
 Sheethes, 86/32, sheaths.
 Shelde paynted, 32/3, painted shield.
 Shelynges, 187/29, shillings.
 Shent, 423/33, punished, disgraced.
 Shertes, 49/32, shirts.
 Shet, 22/33 ; Shette, 72/31, shut.
 Shevered, 259/2, shivered.
 Shit, 335/25 ; Shitte, 312/18, shut, closed.
 Shoke, 161/12, trembled ; 272/3, 528/9, shook.
 Shoke of, 217/5, shook with.
 Sholdre, 241/34, 356/27, shoulder.
 Shone, 466/4, shoes.
 Shoren as monkes, 279/31, shorn as
 monks.
 Shortly, 558/16, quickly.
 Shot of adventure, 221/31, chance shot.
 Shote, 521/28, shoot.
 Shotte of a bowe, 180/33, bowshot.
 Shoued, 54/2, ? shoved (in the sense which is now considered vulgar).
 Shreudely handlyd, 257/32, roughly handled.
 Shrewdly, 421/7, harshly.
 Shrewedly, 476/33, evilly, badly.
 Shrofe, 458/7, shrove, shrived.
 Shrynke his eeres, 257/25, shrink, draw in, his ears.
 Shryve, 335/10, shrive.
 Shyfte, 274/8, 403/18, deal.
 Shyfte hardely, 301/13, deal harshly.
 Shyp, 524/26, ship.
 Signyfycasion, 152/18, signification.
 Sike, 458/6, sick.
 Sikenes, 458/7, sickness.
 Silkes, 524/21, pieces of silk.
 Simple, 153/13, common, not of high lineage.
 Sin, 64/5, 225/17, since.
 Sithe, 68/1, since.
 Skynne of parchemete, 280/3, parchment skin.
 Slaked, 493/25, slackened, abated.
 Slaulter, 453/31, slaughter.
 Slaundred, 263/10, disgraced.
 Slayen, 505/18 ; Slayne, 504/26,
 slain.
 Sle, 18/29, 93/26 ; Sle, 230/21, slay.
 Sle him quycke, 22/10, slay him
 alive.
 Slepe, 459/4, sleep.

- Sloppe, 466/12, a gown fit for a hermit.
 Slougthe, 117/28, sloth.
 Slyme, 336/26, slime.
 Smal, 188/12, short.
 Smalle lynnē clothes, 220/9, under-linen.
 Small people, 187/31, poor, common people.
 Smocke, 492/6, smock.
 Smot, 61/26, smote.
 Smote, 243/23, took.
 Smote hym the hede of, 568/19, smote off his head.
 Smyt, 273/3, smote.
 Smyte, 231/28, smite.
 Smyten, 370/5, smitten.
 Sobhynges, 590/14, sobbings.
 Socoured, 159/5; Socourde, 278/33, succoured, relieved.
 Socoures, 40/30, succour, relief.
 Sodaynly, 56/8, suddenly.
 Soden, 437/27, seethed, boiled.
 Sodenly, 304/2, suddenly.
 Softe, 88/21, mild, quiet; 177/25, gently, slowly.
 So hardy, 74/20, be so disobedient.
 Solempnyte, 592/5, solemnity.
 Somer nexte comynge, 29/22, next coming summer.
 Somer, 280/20, sumpter horse, a baggage horse laden with provisions, i.e. he had not one with him.
 Sommeres, 100/26, 145/2, sumpters, forage carriers.
 Somoche, 299/12, so much.
 Somwhat, 511/27, something.
 Somwhat more to do thenne I wende, 74/11, something more to do than I thought for.
 Soner, 223/30, 320/20, sooner.
 Song, 583/5, sung or sang.
 Sonken, 177/2, sunk.
 Sonne, 341/28, sun.
 Sonne goon vnder, 63/32, the sun was set.
 Soo moche, 26/14, so great.
 Soper, 92/15, supper.
 Sopped, 92/17, supped.
 Soppes, 463/9, sopped bread.
 Sore an angred, 28/22, he was very angry.
 Sore apyayed, 117/2, clad in sorry clothes.
 Sore badde, 247/10, very wicked.
 Sore charged for you, 209/9, h rd pressed on your account.
 Sore depe, 116/2, a great way; 227/22, very deep.
 Sore grete, 216/11, very large.
 Sore lade, 232/4, sore laden.
 Sore lene, 117/22, very thin.
 Sore vengable, 52/26, very revengeful.
 So requyre I to you the deth humbly, 34/19, Charlemagne thus prays to God for death.
 Sori, 81/13, 181/7, sorry.
 Sory, 571/19, sad.
 Souked, 143/13, sucked.
 Souldyoures, 256/27, soldiers.
 Sounde, 564/1, whole.
 Sounded of the noyse, 55/30, the noise of the battle resounded all around.
 Souped, 551/28, supped.
 Souper tyme, 87/3, 364/10, suppertime.
 Sov erayne, 216/26, sovereign.
 Sowne, 176/21, sound.
 Sowned, 217/1, sounded.
 So worthy, 225/26, such worthy.
 Sowre loue, 83/11, anything but a father's love.
 Sped, 49/21, prospered.
 Spede, 451/3, speed.
 Spekyng, 492/11, speaking.
 Spere went in peces, 141/11, spear broke in pieces.
 Spered, 573/16, enquired.
 Sperhawke, 152/6, sparrowhawk.
 Sperkled, 352/6, dispersed.
 Spoken to, 269/24, spoken for, i.e. in behalf of.
 Spored after, 451/19, spurred after.
 Spored hys horse terryble, 42/30, spurred his horse terribly.
 Spores, 31/23, spurs.
 Sporte, 525/12, go, ride.
 Sported, 524/17, disported, gone about with.
 Sported, 192/31, had sport with falcons.
 Spryngynge, 369/14, uprising.
 Spylle my selfe, 247/11, do myself more harm.
 Spyrites, 332/10, spirit.
 Stackke, 52/32, stuck.

- Stakerde, 302/11, staggered.
 Stale, 590/9, stole.
 Stamped, 169/24, bruised.
 Stampying, 93/22, stamping, making a great row.
 Stele, 561/19, steel.
 Stels, 360/25, 417/17, steal; 381/9, stole.
 Sterke deed, 45/4, stark dead.
 Sterte, 328/13, started.
 Sterying, 94/4, staring.
 Stocke, 542/22, lineage.
 Stode, 485/10, stood.
 Stomackes, 288/20, stomachs. But in this case the word seems to be used in a sarcastic sense: 'knewe their stomackes,' really meaning knew their minds.
 Stoure, 42/21, stir, noise.
 Stranged, 251/7, 324/8, strangled.
 Streme, 582/34, stream.
 Strongest, 208/23, strongest.
 Strengthened, 109/6, put forth his strength.
 Streyght, 156/21, 361/3; Streyghte, 62/20, straight.
 Striff, 111/27, 264/1, strife.
 Stronge, 370/22, sound, deep (sleep).
 Stryffe, 175/28, strife.
 Stryked, 415/17, struck.
 Stuff, 149/7, building material.
 Stycked, 48/8, s'uck, said of Longinus who pierced the side of Christ.
 Styll, 408/27, make still, quiet.
 Styrop, 197/31; Styrope, 296/31, stirrup.
 Stywarde, 31/13, 59/20, steward.
 Sualowe, 258/31, swallow (bird).
 Subjectyon, 408/5, subjection.
 Subgettes, 25/15, 228/8, 571/13, subjects.
 Subtillest, 277/20, most subtle.
 Suche, 208/14, such people.
 Suche a thyng, 233/3, a wonderful thing.
 Suche a wyse, 28/5, in such manner.
 Suerte, 219/20, surety.
 Suffraunse, 116/12, distress.
 Suffyre, 433/21, suffer, bear, put up with.
 Sure, 311/21, safe.
 Surely, 330/15, securely.
 Suretees, 387/9, sureties.
- Suspectyon, 148/25; Susspectyon, 531/20, suspicion.
 Sustenaunse, 437/29, sustenance.
 Suster, 144/1, sister.
 Susteyned, 549/30, sustained, maintained.
 Susteyned vp, 505/1, propped up.
 Swan that syngeth that yere that he shal deye, 225/27, the swan's dying note.
 Swanne, 511/4, swan.
 Swete, 527/4, sweat.
 Swete, 158/16, sweet: 'We ben of the swete Fraunce.' Sweted, 31/32, sweated.
 Swetly, 540/6, sweetly.
 Swoninge, 466/18, swooning.
 Swounne, 491/17; Swoune, 80/11, 224/15, swoon.
 Swynes, 505/6, swine.
 Sybbe, 18/13, kindred, relationship.
 Syghe, 372/3, sigh.
 Syke, 294/16, sick.
 Syn, 19/5, since.
 Syngyng, 225/25, singing.
 Syre Peter, 209/30. This seems to be a synonym for a "secretary," like "Sir John" for a "priest."
 Syth, 32/15, sit.
 Syth, 66/8, 192/3, since.
- Tables, 368/33, the game of backgammon.
 Taccomplysshe, 494/25, to accomplish.
 Take, 247/19, 374/2, 479/17, taken.
 Take, 136/29, put.
 Take, 546/20, give.
 Take an ende, 87/31, be ended, come to an end.
 Take kepe, 101/13, take care.
 Take the head from the body of him, 19/22, a roundabout way of saying they would cut his head off.
 Take the liff fro me, 306/21, kill me.
 Take to theym, 228/4, given to them.
 Take wages, 216/14, take service.
 Taken lond, 525/2, come to the shore.
 Taken to you my men in your keypyng, 164/1, given my men into your keeping.
 Taketh us to mercy, 88/28, granteth us mercy.

- Tapres of wexe, 586/15, wax tapera.
Tapyssery, 154/24, tapestry.
Tare alle his heres, 34/16, tore his hair.
Taried, 582/33, stayed.
Tarieng, 69/13, waiting.
Tarre, 78/3, tarry.
Taryed, 18/31, delayed.
Taverners, 150/14, tavern-keepers.
Telled, 174/4, told.
Tempered, 169/25, mixed.
Tende, 539/28, tend, look after.
Tendred, 430/22, became tender.
Tenour, 547/13, meaning.
Teres, 99/7, tears.
Thabbot, 282/13, the abbot.
Thacquytanse, 112/6, the acquittance.
Thactes, 4/7, the acts.
Thadmiralle, 502/28, the admiral (i.e. commander-in-chief).
Thalowes, 560/5, the hallows, i.e. sacred relics.
Than, 453/3, then.
Thandes, 524/10, 590/10, the hands.
Thanked be god, 530/30, to God he thanks.
Thanswere, 257/21, the answer.
Tharchbyssshop, 588/7, the archbishop.
Tharsons, 345/2, the seat.
That, 88/26, 136/9, what; 523/3, 545/28, that which; 452/14, 515/25, who.
That that, 218/30, that which.
The, 72/21; ? ye = yea.
The, 26/1 (thee in ed. 1554), 36/29, thee.
The whiche, 546/18, who.
Theder, 470/29, thither.
Theeftes, 361/19, thefts.
Theff, 184/20; Theffe, 448/25, thief.
Themperour, 70/27, the emperor.
Thende, 74/25, 232/30, the end.
Thentente, 207/2, the intent.
Thentre, 95/7, 518/28, the entry.
Ther, 85/5, their.
Ther vpon, 398/21, thereupon.
There agenste, 470/28, thereagainst.
Therefro, 333/2, therefrom.
There-out, 371/5, therefrom.
Therle, 72/8, the earl.
Theropon, 213/4, thereupon.
Therth, 80/29, 336/26, the earth.
Theves, 125/33, thieves.
Thevyn, 547/9, the evening.
They, 90/19, those.
They two togyder, 301/13, the two together.
Theym, 58/5, them, those.
Theymselfe, 39/3, themselves.
Thiderward, 287/28, thitherward.
Thie, 303/3, thigh.
Thile, 540/8, the isle.
Thilke, 577/24, those.
This during, 23/33, 53/35, apparently a variation of "This hanging." See Hanging.
Thise, 78/5, these.
Thistory, 111/20, the history.
Tho, 292/21, those, them.
Tho ther, 44/8, thother = the others = les autres.
Thoccasion, 111/22, 286/1, the occasion.
Thoder, 233/6, the other.
Thoffyce, 326/10, the office.
Tholde, 152/33, the old.
Thone, 233/11, the one.
Thonour, 204/18, the honour.
Thoos, 186/11, those.
Thoost, 70/14; Thooste, 191/15, the host, the army.
Thordre, 541/21, the order.
Thoroughe, 173/17, 467/32, through.
Thorse, 564/21, the horse.
Thorughe and thorughe, 56/11, through and through.
Thother, 42/26, the other.
Thoughte, 206/10, anxiety, trouble.
Thour, 513/30, the hour.
Threde, 173/28, thread.
Threte, 390/27, threaten.
Thretynge, 19/30, 207/31, 279/15, threatening.
Throte, 566/30, throat.
Thrughe, 461/8, through.
Thurste, 171/14, thirst.
Thwerled, 32/4, twirled, handled.
Thye, 236/6, thigh.
Thyke, 103/33, thick.
Thyren, 514/3, the iron.
Thystoryes, 3/15, the histories.
To, 159/15, from; 160/24, so; 83/25, 496/21, too; 50/4, with.
To a knyghte, 163/6, a knight.
To brost-, 478/13, to burst.
To bro ten, 79/11, burst, broken.
To cut, 392/25, hewed.

- To day in the mornynge, 249/11, this morning.
To fore, 186/24, 310/17, before.
To hymwarde, 568/4, towards him.
To sore, 566/4, to make angry.
To stamped, 392/26, trampled.
To the regarde, 27/31, in regard.
To the werke warde, 582/8, towards the work.
To their above, 565/30, had gained the victory.
To warde, 461/20, towards.
To wyte, 163/11, to know.
Togyder, 47/3, together.
Take, 145/10, captured.
Take grete debate, 341/16, made much talk.
Take hym, 566/32, took to him, i.e. gave him.
Take hym selfe for to wepe strongly, 54/4, began to weep.
Take on, 143/14, went on; 494/1, put on.
Take the see, 530/20, put out to sea.
Take theym the hande, 217/20, took them by the hand.
Take togyder, 429/26, pulled together.
Take up his hede, 249/33, lifted his head up.
Take vp his siege, 493/10, raised the siege.
Tomble, 478/11, tumble.
Tonge, 283/16, tongue.
Too, 274/33, toe.
Toren, 62/11, torn.
Torne, 168/19, 265/15, turn.
Torned, 170/6, changed.
Tourmented, 502/23, tormented.
Tourned, 486/20, turned.
Tournemeur, 34/18, torment, trouble, tribulation.
Towre, 479/4, tower.
Transfigured, 170/2, disfigured, disguised.
Trase, 310/21, trace, track, trail.
Trase, 238/30, trace.
Trason, 51/14, treason.
Tratour, 25/10, traitor.
Travers, 576/8, diameter, cross-roads. Fr. Travers. . crosse, crosse-wise. Traverse: f. A crosse-way, or by-lane, which leads out of the highway.—Cotgrave.
Traveylle, 116/18, 518/10, trouble labour.
Traveylled of our pylgrimage, 503/23, journeying as pilgrims.
Traylle, 449/35, trail (v.).
Trayson, 90/20, 189/32, treason.
Traytorsly, 61/12, traitorously.
Traytour approved, 287/31, approved traitor.
Traytours sarrasyns, 164/17, Saracen traitors.
Traytte, 87/20, treaty.
Trayueylle, 70/30, cause much trouble or travail.
Treen, 463/5, wooden: "treen dyshe" = dish or bowl made out of a tree.
Trembleth, 527/28, trembles: "All the blode in my body trembleth."
Trewaunt, 490/5, truant.
Trewes, 142/9, truce.
Treyson, 230/8, 373/21, treason.
Treysour, 371/5; Treysur, 372/18, treasure.
Trieus, 106/18, truce.
Tronpettes, 69/34, trumpets.
Trotte, 280/1, trot.
Trouth, 97/31, truth.
Trowed, 43/27, thought.
Troweth, 21/34, thinketh.
Truauntes, 478/22, truants.
"True blood may not lye", 248/25, a proverb. [ready].
Trusse, 395/30, 447/11, to make
Trussed, 98/16, made ready; 517/19, placed.
Truste, 166/33, trusting.
Tryewes, 51/32, trews, promises of safety.
Tryews, 166/6, truce.
Turques, 348/14, Turks.
Tuycion, 358/22, tuition.
Tweyne, 442/23, twain, two.
Two and two, 235/14, fight in pairs of two.
Two & two at ones, 505/6, four at a time.
Two tymes, 67/14, twice.
Twynkeling, 586/15, twinkling.
Twys, 46/32, twice.
Tydynges: 193/13, tidings.
Tymbre, 517/17, timber.
Tyme forthon, 429/16, time to come.
Tyme shall be, 546/22, at the proper time.

- Tyme ynoughe, 173/4, in time.
 Unarmed them, 87/2, took their arms off.
 Unto, 212/29, until.
 Valop, 229/21, wallop, gallop.
 Valure, 374/29, value.
 Valyaunte, 31/18, valiant.
 Valyauntnes, 16/11, valour.
 Varienge, 203/29, varying.
 Va-sall, Vassayll, 172/20, 30, varlet.
 Vasseylies, 69/22, vassals.
 Vaunced, 273/2, 350/5, advanced.
 Vawte, 581/1, vault.
 Vayne, 437/26, vein.
 Vaynquyshed, 428/22; Vaynqueshed, 569/20, vanquished.
 Vaysall, 25/15, vassal.
 Vengable, 412/6, revengeful.
 Vengably, 453/15, vengefully.
 Vengeance, 59/30, vengeance.
 Venge, 244/16, avenge.
 Venyson, 463/14, venison.
 Veray certeyn, 60/13, the truth.
 Vereli, 224/22, verily, truly.
 Vertuous, 451/29, strong, powerful, valiant.
 Very frenshe, 191/18, nothing but French.
 Vitupere, 182/2, reproach.
 Vmbrayed, 241/30, taken in umbrage.
 Vnbocled, 42/25; Vnbokled, 343/23, unbuckled.
 Vnbrayd vs, 377/13, taken umbrage at us.
 Vnder couerte, 77/29, under cover.
 Vnderstonde, 431/26, learn.
 Vndertake, 549/24, undertaken.
 Vndoon, 459/24, undone.
 Vnhappe, 38/24, mischance.
 Vnhappy, 194/7, unlucky.
 Vnhosed, 371/8, took off his hose or breeches. Fr. 'Deschausser . . to vn hose, or draw off hosen.'—Cotgrave.
 Vnlade, 525/3, unload.
 Vnmayled, 79/10. Fr. 'Desmailler. To vnlinke, vndoe, cut in peeces, or hacke to peeces, a coat of maile. Desmaillé . . Vnmailed; vnlinked; vndone, cut in peeces, hacked vnto peeces, as a coat of maile.'—Cotgrave.
 Vnstopped hys eyen, 306/10, took the bandage off his eyes.
 Vntrewth, 387/11, untruth.
 Vntrue, 63/6, untruthful.
 Voyde from our sighte lightly, 76/21, quickly begone from our sight.
 Voyde oute of my presence, 60/21, begone l Voys, 44/17, voice.
 Vtturli, 514/7, utterly.
 Vyage, 155/18, voyage.
 Vygoriously, 263/14, vigorously.
 Vylayne, 516/8, villain.
 Vysage, 61/26, face.
 Vysages, 230/3, faces.
 Vyser, 561/9, visor.
 Vytaylers, 188/13, suppliers of victuals.
 Vytaylles, 74/23, victuals.
 Vytupered, 337/15, vituperated, reviled.
 Waast, 350/7; Wast, 565/3; Waste, 319/33, waist.
 Wages, 216/14, service.
 Waloped, 305/17, galloped.
 Wan, 303/13; Wanne, 318/32, won.
 Warde, 463/28, guard, station.
 Warraunted (wraunted in ed. 1554), 27/9, guaranteed.
 Was betyng a grete riuier, 73/34, a great river was beating.
 Was force to yonnet, 562/16, Johnnet was forced.
 Was to his above, 529/17, had overcome.
 Wasse, 61/2, wash.
 Washed their woundes to them all, 278/12, tended all their woundes.
 Wasted, 19/28, destroyed.
 Wasteth, 525/24, destroyeth.
 Waye, 227/28, road.
 Waye crossed in four, 278/28, four cross roads.
 Wayte, 558/30, wait, stay.
 Wayte after pyte of hym, 423/5, wait for pity from him.
 Waytynge after, 553/22, waiting for.
 Wede, 459/16, garment, robe, cloak.
 Weke, 55/18, weak.
 Wele, 290/25, 416/12, weal, good.
 Well, 47/1, wil.
 Well, 245/33, 501/32, quite.

- Well, 528/14, better.
 Well contente, 557/5, satisfied.
 Well defensible, 149/15, well to be defended.
 Well depe, 238/25, deeply.
 Well ferre, 176/26, far away.
 Well folyshly, 483/20, very foolishly.
 Well garnysshed, 106/5, well armed, prepared for any emergency.
 Well gladde, 490/7, very glad.
 Well greved, 506/2, well caused to grieve.
 Welle honestly arayed, 494/17, dressed very handsomely.
 Well lik, 177/15; Well like, 464/5, much like.
 Well like a beste, 234/1, most like a beast.
 Well nyce, 159/16, overmuch nice.
 Well rayson, 225/7, with reason; 231/34, good reason.
 Well shape, 232/9, well shaped.
 Well sure, 221/23, well assured.
 Well trouth, 159/1, good truth.
 Well wonte, 178/21, well used.
 Wel ye wote, 20/13, you know well.
 Welowe, 517/20, willow.
 Wene, 26/33, think.
 Wente hym agenste, 500/24, went up to him.
 Wente nyghe out of his wytte, 62/4, was beside himself.
 Went to their mete, 287/13, sat down to dinner.
 Wentled, 475/11, ?tossed about all night in his bed, not being able to sleep.
 Wepyn, 571/21, weapon.
 Were, 31/17, ?wene, 'think.'
 Were, 492/7, wear.
 Were not, 273/14, were not here.
 Were take, 73/15, was taken.
 Wered, 117/8, 399/33, wore.
 Werke, 582/8, work.
 Werof, 106/3, whereof.
 Werre, 72/15, make war.
 Wery, 161/33, weary.
 Weryes, 271/18, wearies.
 Werynes, 77/23, weariness.
 Wether, 91/30, whither.
 Wexe, 61/13, 476/20, wax, become.
 Waxed, 226/20, waxed.
 Wexen, 170/4, wax.
 We be not that, 529/26, it is not us that.
 Wedryng, 524/29, the weather.
 Weete, 226/20, wet.
 Whan, 153/10, even if.
 What we ben, 78/3, what we are.
 What wynde brought you liden, 162/21 (apparently a proverbial expression).
 Whatche, 69/30, watch, guard.
 Where thurghie, 445/10, through which.
 Wheroute, 428/28, wherefrom.
 Whete, 187/28, wheat.
 Whether they are drawn, 66/4, whither they are gone.
 Whiche, 43/14, 512/1, who; 547/27, whom.
 Whiles, 33/7, whilst.
 Why for, 545/5, ?pour quoi, because.
 Whylte, 28/10, wilt thou.
 Whytsontyde, 184/2, Whitsuntide.
 Wilde fyre, 529/13, wild fire (a war term).
 Wisly, 333/4, wisely.
 Wit, 20/14, know.
 Wold he had, 301/17, would that he had.
 Wolde, 47/2, would; 479/28, should.
 Wonde, 143/10, wened, thought.
 Wonne, 238/1, won, procured.
 Woode, 28/22; Wood, 267/32, mad.
 Worde bytynge, 409/25, biting word.
 Worde fowll, 538/19, foul word.
 Worship, 329/26; Worshyp, 77/16, 495/12, honour.
 Worship your better, 538/20, honour your superiors.
 Worshypd, 315/34, worshipped.
 Worshypfully, 34/28, properly, honourably.
 Worsse shalle retourne vnto hym, 39/17, he shall be worsted.
 Worste dooth, 78/19, doth most harm.
 Worthe, 442/3; 'take a worthe,' ?take for what they're worth.
 Wote, 327/33, know.
 Wounde mortall, 356/9, mortal wound.
 Wounte, 215/19, 463/29, wont.
 Woushesauff, 508/32, vouchsafed.
 Woxen, 496/24, waxed.
 Wrangle, 34/15, wrung.
 Wrapped, 357/20, covered.
 Wrastle, 565/3, wrestle.

- Wrastled, 320/1, wrestled.
 Wrathe, 78/26, quickness.
 Wrounge waye, 546/1, wrong course.
 Wroughten, 37/26, wrung.
 Wroth for it, 150/23, wroth on account of it.
 Wrothe to theym, 50/4, wroth with them.
 Wulff, 423/3, wolf.
 Wulwarde, 574/2. 'Woolward, in wool only, without linen, a dress often enjoined as a penance by the church of Rome.'—Schmidt, on 'I have no shirt; I go woolward for penance' (Love's Labour's Lost, V. ii. 717).
 Wycket, 471/2; Wyket, 467/14, wicket.
 Wylde, 401/7, wild.
 Wylde bores, 216/11, wild boars.
 Wyll fyghte, 174/2, in the habit of fighting (intending to imply that Bayard was a vicious horse).
 Wyll do knowe, 74/22, will cause to make known.
 Wylle, 458/21, desire.
 Wymen, 131/9, 164/13, women.
 Wyndowes, 519/24, windows.
 Wynne, 169/12, win, gain, carry off.
 Wyselli, 38/34, wisely.
 Wyaest wyse, 454/17, wisest manner.
 Wysly, 539/19, wisely.
 Wysse, 38/8, washed.
 Wysse after, 242/8, wish for.
 Wysshed, 54/5, 496/13, wished.
 Wytchecrafte, 357/13, witchcraft.
 Wyte, 27/22, know.
 Wyte it for trouthe, 44/9, know it for the truth.
 Wyte vs of cowardnes, 78/4, deem us to be cowards.
 Wyth, 586/15, in.
 Wyth all, 241/34; Wyth alle, 37/10, withal.
 Wythdrawe, 352/12, withdrawn.
 Wythin, 357/16, within. 'Ye shall not goo oute of (= from) wythin,' = 'Ye shall not go outside,' i.e. 'Thou shalt not attempt to escape.'
 Wythout to make ony noyse nor crye, 78/24, without making any noise.
 Wythout, 560/28. It means that
- though they fought so hard that their spears broke in pieces, still none of them fell off their horses.
 Wythoute to be dyshonoured, 470/25, without dishonour.
 Wythoute to doo, 553/15, without doing.
 Wythstandyng, 566/24, also bet.
 Wytsondaye, 544/19, Whitsunday.
 Wyttes, 408/9, wits.
 Ye, 64/7, 511/26, yea, yes.
 Ye, 17/2, 546/30, y<sup>e</sup> = the.
 Yede, 444/22, went.
 Yeelde, 66/2, ? ailed; A.S. eilede.
 Yefte, 129/14, 153/3, 495/15, gift.
 Yelde, 74/32, 142/15, yield, yield up.
 Yelde, 495/25, shield, help. It occurs in the phrase, 'And God yelde you!' Yelded, 304/9, returned.
 Yelded graces, 500/7, heaved prayers of thanks.
 Yemen, 93/7, grooms.
 Yere, 271/24, year, time.
 Yet wel remembered, 553/11, still recollect.
 Yf it be longe of you, 50/23, if it be your fault.
 Yil, 173/9, evil.
 Yil a hungred, 367/29, sore hungry.
 Yil chere, 226/28, evil cheer.
 Yil contente, 496/17, not well satisfied.
 Yllumyned, 336/26, illumined.
 Ynke, 210/10, ink.
 Ynough, 111/21; Ynowe, 303/9, enough.
 Yoman, 123/27, 150/10, 478/29, yeoman.
 Yon, 82/11, John.
 Yong, 420/26, young.
 Yonglynge, 162/18, youngling, young man.
 You, 142/8, thou.
 Yougthe, 244/5, youth.
 Your hertes ioye, 554/9, joy of your heart.
 Yrefully, 230/21, full of ire.
 Yren, 369/27, iron.
 Yrende, 466/13, shod with iron.
 Yrens, 369/24, fetters.
 Yron, 136/7, iron.
 Yssue, 250/3, 446/11, issue, way out.
 Yuori, 61/22; Yvery, 478/8, ivory.

NAME INDEX.

[Note.—In the following pages the letter C. stands for CHARLEMAGNE, the King of France. The letter R. stands for REYNAWDE, Duke of Mountalban.]

Affryque (Africa), 436/8.

Alaffre upon the see, a province of Spain, 327/3. [? Algarve in Portugal.]

Alais, Alays, the watchman at Mountaynforde, 75/15.

ALARDE, THE SECOND SON OF AYMON, at the court at Paris, 16/24;—is knighted by C., 31/21;—he comes to C.'s court at Paris, 59/16;—he slays Thierry, 80/28;—he is right sorry to see their folk go back, 81/28;—he slays the Earl of Estampes, 84/24;—his horse wakes him, and thus reveals the treachery of Hernyer, 93/7, and he tells R., 'We ben betrayed!' 93/23;—he declares he will not separate from his brethren, 98/13;—he tells R. to cheer up, 99/12;—his horse is slain under him, 108/13;—he mounts Bayard behind R., 109/3;—he mounts Esmenfray's black horse, 110/16, and slays Sir Anfray, 110/20;—he is forced back by Aymon's folk, 110/32;—he counsels that they all should go and see their mother, and try to obtain service with some great lord, 118/11;—he counsels R. not to set his hand on Aymon, 126/22;—seeing Borgons slay one of R.'s men, he becomes wroth, and speedily tells a 'paynym' 'sterke deed,' 138/12;—thinking that R. has been slain, he makes grievous moan, 139/13;—he rejoices much when he meets with R., 143/8;—he advises R. to seek permission to build the cast'e afterwards called Mountalban, 147/17;—he well advises R. concerning his marriage, 153/6;—he recommends R. to the care of Mawgis, 170/19;—he tells his followers to come out of their ambush, 179/28;—he tells his brethren to have no fear as long as R. can ride Bayard, 185/22;—ho thanks King John for the gift of the scarlet mantles, 218/4;—he reminds R. how often C. had taken oath to bring them to a shameful death, and counsels that they should not carry out King John's instructions, 219/23;—he joyfully sings a new song when going to Vaucoulores, 225/21;—he questions R. wherefore he weeps, 226/25, and bids him bear out a good face, 227/4, advising him to join in the harmony, 227/7;—he discovers that they have been betrayed, 228/18;—thinking that R. has betrayed them, he induces Guycharde and Richard with himself to attack R., 230/4, but they speedily repent, 230/28;—he reproaches R. for having betrayed them, 230/32;—he advises that they should shrive themselves, 232/28;—he tells Guycharde that he had been well deceived for doubting R., 235/20;—he bewails when R. is overthrown, 236/8;—he wins a horse, and also a wound, 238/1;—he promises to help in the rescue of Guycharde, 239/25;—he deems it unwise to search for Richard,

CHARL. ROM. XI.

2 8

- 243/3;—he carries Richard to the top of the rock, 245/25;—he is angered because so many knights come against them, 246/4;—he advises R. to go to Mountalban to procure help, 246/23;—not wishing that the Frenchmen should be dismayed and run away at the coming of Mawgis, he advises that they descend to the bottom of the rock, and re-engage in the battle, 259/32, which is forthwith done, 260/7;—he tells R. not to be overhasty, for that Ogier had well helped them that day, 269/16;—he thanks Ogier, and advises R. to return and see how it is with Richard, 269/23;—his wounds are cured by Mawgis, 278/12;—he curses King John, and also Roland, if the latter omits to hang the former, 287/27;—he tells R. he will not go to help King John, 290/19, but relents and says he will never fail R., 291/31;—he meets with R., and asks him why he makes such sorrow, 310/24, is told of the capture of Richard, 310/27, and his sorrow therefor, 310/32;—he reproaches it to R. for coming to succour King John, 311/9, and counsels Guychard to cut off King John's head, 311/14;—he stays R. from going to C., 311/28;—he acquaints Mawgis of the capture of Richard, and how R. would go to C. to rescue him, 312/6;—he kisses Aymonet, and acquaints the Lady Clare of the capture of Richard, 313/15;—he advises his brethren to put themselves in ambush, 323/1;—he counsels R. that C. should be asked once for all if he will grant peace;—if not, then detain him prisoner, 403/8;—he summons his folk to defend the castle, 420/12;—he counsels that Bayard should be killed for food, 429/20;—he beseeches R. to kill Bayard for the love of God, 436/33;—while waiting to hang Richard of Normandy, he sees the three dead bodies flung out of window, and acquaints R. thereof, 479/1;—he takes leave of R., begging him to come again shortly (the other brothers were too much cut up by sorrow to take leave of him), 492/22;—he comes before C., and tells him how R. has gone to the Holy Land, 494/19;—he tells R. that his wife and children are whole and sound, 531/23, but seeing that R. holds him so short, he recounts how the Lady Clare had pined away and died, 532/9;—he counsels that they depart speedily for Paris, 548/25;—he discovers the departure of R., and makes great moan, 573/21;—he and his brethren are informed by a pilgrim of the great miracles being worked at Croyne, where the body of R. is honourably tended by the Archbishop of Cologne, 586/24—588;—he and his brethren, feeling sure that the corpse is that of R., make great sorrow and set out for Croyne, 589/11;—he explains to the Archbishop of Cologne that the corpse is that of Reynawde of Mountalban 'the right worthy knight,' 591/13.
- Alebrondy, king, advises Barbas to let R. alone, 516/9.
- Alexander the Great, his horse Bucephalus compared with Bayard, 31/30;—never was heard such history since his time as this, 68/2.
- Almagne, Hughe of, taken prisoner by R., 346/10.
- Almayne, Ponthus of, joins C. at Paris, 187/6.
- Almaynes (Germans) at the Court at Paris, 16/19;—33/15;—43/4.
- Alphinas, the Earl of, placed in front of the second gate at Mountayneford, 77/3.
- Amaney, 81/6, one of R.'s knights slain by Aymon, 81/6.
- Anfray, Sir, one of Aymon's knights, slain by Alarde, 110/20.
- Anguebon, the Earl of, slain by R., 237/13.
- Ansom, the Duchy of, offered as a bribe to Salamon of Breton, 325/29.
- Ansom, the Earl of, counsels King John to yield the Four Sons to C., 205/19, and is slain by R., 231/32.

- Anthony, the old Earl, traduces R., and advises King John to yield the Four Sons to C., 206/32.
- Antony, the Earl, wounded by Richard, 309/17.
- Appolin, the god of Barbas, 516/7. [It is not quite clear what god is here meant: can it mean Appollion? Further on, Barbas swears "By Apollo!"]
- Ardeyne, 16/22, see also Aymon, and Dordon;—the great forest of, 65/5, where the Four Sons take refuge, 103/20;—the fight in, between Aymon and his Sons, 107—111.
- Ardeyne, Margerye, Duchess of (wife of Aymon, and mother of the Four Sons), right gladly welcomes her husband and children, 36/13, advises R. to honour his king, and upbraids Aymon for departing from C., 36/31, counselling him to serve the king, 37/12;—she is grieved with R. for slaying Berthelot, and advises them to flee away, giving them her treasure, 62/15;—she weeps when she sees her husband, and tells him she knows not where the Four Sons have gone, 66/1;—she upbraids Aymon for fighting against their children, 114/18;—she is frightened when she sees her sons, and weeps for pity of them, 121, but recognizes and embraces them, 122;—she makes them and their three knights good cheer, 123;—she prays Aymon to let the Sons stay that night, 124/20;—she causes baths and clean raiment to be made ready for her sons, and clothes them in rich apparel, 129/1, advises them to go to Spain, 129/26, swoons when they set out, 130/29, and mourns grievously for them, but is comforted by Aymon, 131/3.
- Ardeyne, the city of, the Four Sons come to, 120/1;—they set out therefrom with six hundred men, 131/1;—the Four Sons arrive at, after the abandonment of Mountalban, 442/25;—C.'s host arrives at, 447/23;—the battle near, 452—455;—R. and his folk retreat within the gates of, 455/2;—C. lays siege to, 455/20;—Mawgis comes to, 462/12, and departs from, 467/20;—C.'s messengers arrive at, 470/31, and depart from, 472/33;—great joy at, when R. returns from the Holy Land, 530/28;—it is given by R. to his son Yonnet, 570/19.
- Ardocke, one of the treacherous barons ambushed in the Isle of Our Lady, 553/25.
- Arles, conquered by Borgons, 132/22.
- Armony, 187/9.
- Aspes, otherwise called Myleync, 70/2.
- Aubeforde, Guyon of, one of C.'s peers, 69/22.
- Aulbery, 80/18.
- Avynyon (Avignon), Godfray the Ear. of, joins C. at Paris, 187/3.
- Aygreounte, description of the castle of, 21/20;—the battle at, between Duke Benes and Lohier, 27—29.
- AYGREMOUNTE, DUKE BENES<sup>1</sup> OF. had not done the bidding of C., 17/9;—he, his son Mawgis, and his wife are unkindly spoken of by C., 17/19;—he is informed by a spy of the coming of Lohier, 19/32, of which he tells his folk, 20/3;—he rejects the good counsel of Sir Simon, 20/22, and also that of his Duchess, 21/5;—he will not make peace with C., 21/16;—the porter tells him of the arrival of Lohier, 23/8;—his speech to his barons, 23/23;—enraged at Lohier's threatening message, he answers that not only will he disobey the behest of C., but that he will destroy the land of France, 25/20, and tells Lohier that

<sup>1</sup> 'Benés' is the spelling all through this book, and is double s a mistake for 'Bevis.'

to his own evil cheer he came to do his message, 26/7;—he than's Sir Water for his wise counsel, but bids him hold his peace, 26/24;—he waxes very wroth and calls on his barons to slay Lohier, 27/5;—he tells Lohier this day shall be his last, 28/16, cleaves him to the teeth, 28/26, and cuts his head off, 29/5;—he causes all Lohier's followers to be slain, except ten, whom he sends back to C., in charge of the corpse of Lohier, and with his message to C., 29/13;—his message is told to C., 33/30;—he hears of C.'s projected attack, 39/10;—he sets out for Troyes, 39/22;—he goes against the host of C., 41/27;—he slays Enguerran, 42/30, and Sir Walter Pyerelee, 44/13;—he jousts with Duke Richard of Normandy, and his horse is slain under him, 44/20, but quickly rising to his feet, he slays a knight, Sir Symon, 45/4;—he is horribly wounded, 46/11;—he adopts Nantuell's advice, 47/1;—he comes before C., begging pardon [and there were four thousand in his train 'alle bare fote & in theyr shertes'—what a sight it must have been!], 50/16;—swearing fidelity, and promising to do his service, he takes leave of C., 51/1;—he departs from Aygreounte to go to the court of C. at Paris, 51/19;—he is apprehensive of treachery through the vengeance of C., 52/26, and relates his dream, 52/30;—he commands his men to arm themselves, 53/8, and laments that C. is an untrue prince, 53/23;—he laments the absence of his son Mawgis, his brethren, and the Four Sons, 54/6;—his folk are beaten back by Earl Guenes, 55/5, but he defends himself as well as he could, 55/11, and slays Sir Helye, 55/27, but is unhorsed by Gryffoon of Hauteffelle, 55/31;—he is treacherously slain by the Earl Guenes, 56/12;<sup>1</sup>—his body is treated with indignity by Duke Gryffon, 56/17, and is put in a lieer and taken to Aygreounte, 57/1, where it is reverently buried, 57/29.

Aygreount, Mynens of, father of Ogier the Dane, 272/28.

Aygreounte, the Duchess of, gives her husband good counsel, 20/29;—hears the news of her lord's death, and her grief therefor, 52/16.

Aymanoy, cousin of Gerarde of Roussillon, killed at the battle of Troyes, 46/6.

Aymery, the Earl, interferes in the quarrel between Ogier and Roland, 273/11.

AYMON, THE DUKE OF ARDEYNE, at the court at Paris, 16/22;—is cousin-germain to Benes of Aygreount, 18/14;—he offers his service to C., 30/23, who commands him to send his sons to be knighted, 31/3;—being afraid of C.'s anger for the slaughter of Lohier by the Duke Benes, he and his sons depart from Paris, 36/1;—he comes to C.'s court at Paris, 59/15;—he complains to C. of the treason done to Duke Benes, but agrees to forgive it, 59/25;—he swears to C. that he will war against his sons, and leaving Paris, goes to Dordon, 65/24;—he relates to his lady the doings at Paris, and the reason why he has come seeking his sons, 66/6;—he is placed in front of the third gate at Mountayneford, 77/4;—he comes against R.'s army, and does much damage to it, 79/13;—he is stung by R.'s words, and suffers his sons to pass by him unharmed, 80/8;—he slays Amaney, one of R.'s knights, 81/6;—he is rebuked by R. for his harsh conduct, 83/7, and he retaliates that he is too old to do treason towards C., 83/25;—he again commences an attack on R.'s folk, 85/24, and his horse is slain under him by R., 85/27;—he is succoured by Ogier the Dane, 86/1;—when he is again horsed, he pursues his children as a 'man wrothe and oute of his wyte,' 86/6, but his folk are put to flight by R., 86/14;—on returning to his own country, he falls in with his sons, 105/9, and seeks counsel of his lords, 105/11, which being withheld, he says he will do his own wil, and sends two knights to defy Reynawde and his brethren, 105/32;—he spurs after his sons, 106/27, makes an outrageous speech to R., 106/34, and bringing his spear in rest, puts himself among his children 'lyke as they hadde ben strangers,' 107/10;—he loses half his men in the battle, 108/4;—he chases R. to the mountains, 108/6;—he is unhorsed by R., 108/26;—many of his knights are slain, and he grieves for Esmeufray, 110/28;—he makes moan and grieves for the state to which R. is reduced, 111/21, and taking the body of Esmeufray, he sets out for Paris, 111/32;—he comes before C., to whom he relates the recent events, 112/2, which C. doubting, 112/21, he offers to swear it on 'reliques and hallowes,' 112/28;—he perceives C.'s anger, and departs for his own country, 113/12, where he relates all his adventures to h's wife, 113/18, to whom he acknowledges his fault, 115/1;—he is hawking upon the river when his sons arrive at Ardeyne, 120/19;—he curses them, and tells them to go beg at another place, 124—125;—his heart waxes soft, 127/14, and he goes without, because he will not be forsworn against C., and tells his lady to give their sons whatever they desire, 127/32, and excuses his conduct to R., 128/13;—he parts amicably from his sons, promising for evermore to be their good father, 130/17;—he recomforts his duchess, 131/9;—he takes the part of C. against his sons, 424/4, but becomes wroth with C. when he threatens them, 424/9;—he beseeches C. to right the Sons, 424/17;—R. comes to his pavilion, begging for succour, 431/24;—he tells R. that he cannot help him on account of his oath to C., but bids him enter the pavilion and help himself, 432;—he bids his steward fill the three engines with food and cast it into Mountalban, 433/31;—C. threatens him with the loss of his head for relieving his sons, 435/9;—he tells C. that he will not fail his children so long as he can help them, 435/14;—he is dismissed by C. from his host, 435/33, and threatening C. if harm happens to his sons, he departs from C.'s host to his own country, 436/3;—he dies, leaving great riches to his sons, 535/27.

<sup>1</sup> The Earl Guenes, who is mounted on a good horse, sees Duke Benes on foot, and acting uncavalierly (i. e. without waiting till he should be horsed again), takes him at advantage, and thus treacherously slays him.

AYMONET, the elder son of Reynawde, is spurred by R. in his anger at King John's treachery, 285/5;—he rebukes his uncle Richard, and counsels him to submit to the will of R., 427/23;—he arrives at the palace of C. at Paris, 540/18;—he introduces Yonnet and himself to C., asking him to bestow on them the order of knighthood, 541/18;—he is knighted by C., 547/24;—he and his brother swear on the 'halowes' that the sons of Foulkes had lied falsely, 560/16, and the fight begins, 560/26;—he cuts off the nose of Constans, 561/9;—he is wounded by Constans, 562/30;—he cuts an ear and all the jawbone off Constans, 562/32;—his horse is slain by Constans and he slays that of Constans, 564/13;—he overthrows Rohars, 565/17;—he almost smites Constans' left arm off, 565/20;—he takes Constans prisoner, and brings him to C., 566/32;—he is applauded by C. as having 'doon wel' your devour,' 567/4;—he wants to assist Yonnet in despatching Rohars, but is not permitted by Yonnet, 567/11;—he compliments Yonnet on his valour, 568/21;—Mountalban is given by R. to, 570/19, and the folk thereof render homage to him, 571/14.

Balancon (Balencion), one of the rivers bounding Vaucoulores, 227/24;—Roland pitches his tent at, 191/20;—the battle at, 194—199;—other battles near, 298—307;—the meeting of Mawgis and the brethren at, 372/24;—Richard of Normandy keeps the passage over the river of, 395/32.

Banyere, Guydellon of, 40/10.

Barbas, the Admiral of Perce (? Persia), has treacherously taken the city of Jerusalem, 500/12;—he issues from Jerusalem into the besieging host, 501/31;—he engages in combat with Geffray of Nazareth, by whom he is overthrown, but is relieved by his folk, 502/24;—he withdraws his forces into Jerusalem, 504/14;—when he sees the great joy and feasting made in the Christian camp, he believes that 'they ben as the swanne is whan he shall deye,' 511/2;—he again comes forth from Jerusalem, and attacks the Christians, 512/11;—he reproaches his followers for running away, and hearing of the death of Margaris, he furiously attacks Walleron of Faiete, and kills him, 514/25;—he vows to slay the 'grete vylayne' R., but becomes abashed on hearing R. cry out 'Mountalban!' 516, and he takes his way to the city as a man discomfited, 517/6;—seeing that the Christians have retaken Jerusalem, he is very wroth and curses 'his goddis Mahomet and Appolin,' 519/12;—he goes to king Thomas, and tells him that he (Barbas) must be allowed to depart in peace, or that he (Thomas) must be instantly cast out of the window, 519/20;—seeing R. coming to assault the tower, he seizes king Thomas and threatens to cast him out of window, unless R. grants his terms, 522/9;—R. accedes to his terms, and he descends the tower, and with two of his followers goes out through the gate of the city, 523/3;—at Palermo he is afraid of the strange knights he saw not yesterday, 527/25;—he discovers who they are, and quickly takes to flight, 528/3.

Barnyers at the court at Paris, 16/20;—Bernygars, 33/14;—Banyers, 33/16;—Bernyers, 40/2.

Bason, the 'grete therf,' who aided C. against the treachery of the Twelve Peers, 327/17.

Buyers, at the siege of Mountayneforde, 77/14.

Bavyre, Guydellon, the Earl of, 292/16;—he withdraws Ogier from fighting Roland, 308/21;—he overthrows Richard from behind, 309/22;—he is ordered by C. to take and hang Richard, but refuses, 324/20.

BAYALD, Reynawde's wonderful horse, given to him by his cousin Mawgis, 31/28;—when he 'wyste hymselfe lade wyth two knyghtes, he strenghted hymselfe' accordingly, 109/5;—he could feed better with roots than other horses with hay and oats, 116/27;—he runs after Borgons' horse, and taking him by the mane, brings him back to Borgons, 141/26;—he uplifts his fore-foot and kills the 'Rybawde' who would have arrested the progress of R., 173/12;—his feet are bound up by Mawgis, so that he goes halting, 173—175;—he is mocked and jeered at by the assembled competitors, but being unbound by Mawgis, he speedily wins the race, thus securing C.'s crown for R., 175/7;—he resents being handled by Mawgis, but, being 'curstly dealed wythall,' he submits to the inevitable, 257/24;—he smells his lord, and runs to him carrying Mawgis on his back, 262/9;—he kneels before R., when <sup>1</sup> There is something incongruous here, considering that Mahomet preached the existence of one only God. Indeed, the whole of the Jerusalem story seems quite out of place in the romance—the crusades against the Saracens not taking place till long after C.'s time.

- Mawgis alights, and he is mounted by R., 262/11 :—he engages on his own account in a fight with Ogier's horse Brayford, 267/9, and also with Roland's horse Melantes, 303/1 ; he understands human speech, and awakens his master, 337/28 ;—he is embraced by the brethren, because he awoke them in time to deliver Richard, 340/28 ;—he smells Mawgis coming, and goes to him, 372/28 ;—he is bled, to provide food for the folk at Mountaban, 437/24 ;—he is delivered to Duke Naymes to be taken to C., 490/12 ;—he is cast into the river Meuse, with a millstone at his neck,<sup>1</sup> sinks to the bottom, breaks the stone with his feet, rises and swims over the river, and running as swiftly as the tempest, enters the Forest of Ardeyne, wherein, according to popular tradition, he still abides, 496, 497.
- Bayonne, Duke Guynarde of, upholds the conduct of R., 207/22 ;—he defies Sir Humarde, 208/7.
- Beaulande, Sir Arnaulde, slain by the Saracens, 16/16.
- Berarde the Bourgoynier, slays Simon of Bremois, 84/11.
- Berenger, 51/26.
- Berenger, one of the sureties for Constans and Rohars, 546/16 ;—he ambushes in the Isle of Our Lady with treacherous designs, 553/25.
- Berenger, Sir Yvorye, slain by the Saracens, 16/16.
- Bernard, a Doctor (apparently a Ph.D., not an ordinary M.D.), expounds the dream of Godefraye of Molyns touching the marriage of the Lady Clare, 15<sup>1</sup>/14.
- Bernard (qq. the same person as the foregoing), the hermitage of, 440/22 ;—he welcomes and succours R. and his folk, 441.
- Berne, Guynarde, the lord of, 202/29.
- Bermyer, Sir Lambreyght, 17/14.
- Berthlot, the nephew of C., engages R. to play at chess, 61/16, a quarrel arises, 24, and R. slays him with the chess-board, 31.
- Bethe (Bertha), the mother of C., 327/1.
- Bloye, C.'s army arrives at, 188/12.
- Bloye, Toyusselyne [? Josceline] of, slain by Earl Guenes, 55/4.
- Bollon, Boullon, Bryllon, Walleran, Duke of, 40/10 ;—he slays a nephew of Duke Gerard, 43/24 ;—48/27 ;—at C.'s court at Paris, 59/12.
- Bollon, Sir Walleraunte of, slain by the Saracens, 16/16.
- Bondy, Boudy-re, the name of R.'s hunting horn, 216/25, 342/1.
- Bordeaux (Bordeaux), a city in France, where the Four Sons first meet with King John, 132/22 ;—the battle at, between King John and Borgons, 136—139.
- Borgoyns, Borgons, Bourgons, the Saracen, has conquered nearly all King John's territory, 132/28 ;—he marches from Toulouse to Bordeaux, and there put himself in ambush, 136 ;—he emerges from ambush, 137/26, and slays one of R.'s men, 138/7 ;—he and his folk flee from the battle, pursued by R., 139/4 ;—he is overtaken by R., 140/24 ;—he breaks his spear on R., 141/10, by whom he is overthrown and wounded, 141/13 ;—he fights on foot with R., and is severely wounded, 141/23 ;—he begs for a truce, and surrenders himself to R., who promises him his life shall be spared, 142/7 ;—he appeals to be delivered from prison, offering a rich ransom, 144/19 ;—he is ransomed, and with his folk goes to his own country, 144/34.

<sup>1</sup> Charlemagne perpetrates a little joke at Bayard's expense, which is perhaps worth noting. When Bayard 'was thus tumbled in the river,' he remarks that his desire has been accomplished, 'for ye be now deed, but yf ye drynke oure all the water.'

- Pourdelle, Geffroy of, slain by the Saracens, 25/4.
 Bourdellois, Sampson of, a knight who came to help R., 77/33.
 Bourgoyne, Bourgyne, Guyon, Guyon, in command of a thousand knights, assists in Herryer's treachery on the Four Sons, 91/14;—he enters the castle of Mountaynford, slaying all he can find, 93/1.
 Bourgoyne, Sampson of, 35/5.
 Bourgoyne, the Duke of, placed in front of the second gate at Mountaynford, 77/2.
 Bourgoyns, at the siege of Mountaynford, 77/14.
 Bourgoyns, in C.'s army, 40/3.
 Bournoy, 169/11.
 Brayford, Broysforle, Ogier's celebrated horse, 45/26;—he engages in a fight with Bayard, 267/9.
 Bremoy, Simon of, slain by Berarde the Burgundian, 84/11.
 Bretayne, Salamon of, joins C. at Paris, 39/31, 186/25;—he weeps on seeing the combat between R. and Roland, 300/28;—he is commanded by C. to hang Richard, but refuses, 325/26.
 Bretayne, Salomon of, slain by the Saracens, 16/15.
 Bretons, at the siege of Mountaynford, 77/13.
 Brouseau, the isle of, 31/33.
 Broyskarre, Mawgis's celebrated horse, 'the best that men wyste after Bayarde,' 276/15.
 Busifall (Bucephalus), the Great Alexander's horse, 31/30.
 Bylause, a province of France, 132/6.
- Cedres, King, slain at Pampelune, by C., his armour given to R., 31/15.
 Champayne, the country of, 39/23.
 Champenoy, 33/15.
- CHARLEMAGNE, Emperor of France, 4/9;—holds court at Paris, 16/5;—his address to his barons, 16/31;—becomes angry with them, 18/17;—grieved to part from his son Lohier, 19/16;—his doubts as to the safety of Lohier, 30/13;—he knights the four sons of Aymon, 31/25;—again in fear for Lohier, 33/1;—receives the news of the fight at Aygre-mounte, and the death of Lohier, 33/30;—his grief thereat, 34/15;—buries Lohier, 35/27;—receives news of the departure of Aymon and his four sons, and his anger thereat, 38/2;—determines to wreak his vengeance on Duke Benes, 38/14;—instructs his followers to prepare next summer, 39/4;—sets out for Aygre-mount, 40/8;—he goes to Troyes to succour Aubrey, 41/16;—fights with Gerarde of Roussyllon, 45/19;—Roussyllon, Aygre-mount, and Nantuell offer their allegiance to, 47/28;—he pardons the three Dukes, 49/7, who appear naked before him to express their thanks, 50/25;—holds a great court at Paris, 51/15;—endeavours to persuade his nephew Earl Guenes from acting traitorously towards Benes of Aygre-mount, 51/32;—again holds court at Paris, 59/7, and Aymon complains to him of the treachery done towards Duke Benes, 59/26, when they come to a mutual understanding that the death of Lohier is to be set off against that of Benes, 60/3;—but Reynawde expresses his hatred for him, 60/15, and he becomes as black as a coal for wrath, 60/19;—his nephew Berthelot slain by R., 61/31;—he commands Aymon to make war against his sons, 65/24;—he gains tidings of the Four Sons, 68/19;—he sets out after them, 69/13, and reaches Mountaynforde, 70/4;—his grief for the loss of Guyon, 71/17;—he swears to be revenged on R., 73/15, and commands his men to surround the castle of Mountaynforde, 73/28;

—the splendour of his tent, 74/14;—his message to R., 75/32, and R.'s answer, 76/8;—he commands that the castle be assailed, 76/31;—his grief for the death of Thierry, 80/30;—calls for help, 81/1;—commands his men to depart from the battle, 84/7;—he goes against R., and forbids him to go further, 86/23;—he besieges the castle fourteen months, 87/14;—sends for more men to help him, 89/10, and seeks counsel of his barons, 89/17;—he adopts Hernyer's advice, 90/10;—laments his evil fate, 97/8;—he was glad when R. evacuated Mountayuforde, 100/32, and follows after the four brethren, 101/7;—is in danger of his life from R., 101/28, but is saved by Damppe Hugh, 101/32;—he stops the pursuit, 102/20;—he orders his men to disperse, 104/11, and himself retires to Paris, 104/16, where he gives way to grief, for that he cannot avenge himself on R., 104/20;—he will not believe that Aymon had fought against his own sons ('for never raven ete his yonge byrdes'), 112/22, and becomes angry with him, 113/1;—he goes on a pilgrimage to Galicia, 156/19, and on the way back sees the castle of Mountalban, 156/27, and when he understands to whom it belongs, he becomes right angry, 157/17;—he commands King John to deliver to him the four brethren, 157/25;—he holds a council at Paris, 161/16, and receives his nephew Roland, 162/26;—he puts Escorfwade in prison, 166/35, and inquires after Roland, 167/5, for whose benefit, he ordains a horse-race, 167/31, at which he is sore afraid that R. will appear, 171/1;—he comes to the field appointed for the race, and commands 'that noo noyse nor noo stryffe were there made,' 175/27;—he offers to purchase Bayard off R. (who is disguised), 177/29, when the latter tells him he has been beguiled, 177/32;—he follows after R., offering him a truce, and begging for his crown, 169/29;—but R. only jeers at him, 179/4;—he seeks counsel of his barons as to how he may recover his crown, 181/23;—he causes preparations to be made for a seven years' siege of Mountalban, 182/31;—bids his followers be ready for the war by next Easter, 185/30;—he musters his army, 188/1, and gives the command to Roland, 188/7;—his message to R., 189/21;—he resolves to starve out R. and his brethren, 191/4;—and for that purpose closely invests the castle, 191/13;—when he sees the golden dragon on the high tower at Mountalban, he weens that Roland had taken the castle by force, 198/31;—he hears the news of Roland's defeat, 201/25, 'and thenne he sware saynte Denys by grete angre,' 201/33;—he causes a parliament to be held, 202/6;—he sends a herald to King John, bidding him send back the four sons of Aymon, on pain of wasting his land, 203/17;—his joy at the reply of King John, 211/12;—he sends letters to King John, and instructions how to carry out their traitorous proceedings, 211/30;—he details the particulars of the plot to Foulques of Moryllon and Ogier the Dane, 212/26;—his wrath when he hears that the Four Sons have escaped, 271/16, and hatred for Mawgis, 271/26;—he stops the quarrel between Roland and Ogier, 273/24;—is befooled by Mawgis, 315/16;<sup>1</sup>—his joy when he sees that Richard has been made prisoner, 319/8, whom he threatens to torture and hang, 319/18, and smites him with a staff, 319/29;—he wrestles with Richard, 320/1;—he orders his peers, one

<sup>1</sup> This is a clever and amusing scene: the way in which Mawgis comes the old soldier over Charlemagne, culminating in the former (after much fulsome adulation) asking the latter to kiss his palmer's staff in return for the 'pardous' that he bestows on Charlemagne.

after another, to hang Richard, 324/1;—becomes very angry when all, even Roland, refuse to 'bringe his wyll aboute for to hang Rycharde,' 326/31;—he relates to his barons the story of his life, 327/1, and calls on another baron to 'goo hang that hourson Richard,' 327/32, but is refused and rebuked, 328/9;—he is deserted by the Twelve Peers of France, 328/15;—once more he tries to induce a baron to hang Richard, 328/26, and again is severely rebuked, 329/1;—he is further reproved by Duke Naymes, 330/6, and by Ogier the Daire, 330/25;—he pardons the Twelve Peers, 333/4;—he prevails on Rypus of Riplemonde to execute Richard, 333/9;—he goes after Ogier for fear he should slay Ripus, 342/31;—he fights with Richard, 344/29, and with R., 346/22;—he refuses R.'s terms of peace, 348/16, and demands that Mawgis be given into his hands, 348/29;—he refuses to listen to R., 349/31, and renews his attack, 349/33;—he falls into the power of R., who lays him on Bayard, 350/6, but is obliged to let him down, 351/22;—his pavilion is cast down by Richard, 354/28;—his attempted assassination by Mawgis, 355/20;—complains of the infidelity of his barons, 358/21, and offers to resign his crown, 359/1;—he consents to take back his crown if Mawgis (against whom again he expresses his deep hatred) is delivered to him, 360/17;—his joy when he sees Mawgis a prisoner, 361/13;—he is anxious to hang Mawgis before supper, 366/2, but consents to remand him till to-morrow on the surety of the peers of France, 367/18;—he derides Mawgis for wishing to eat (since 'soo lityll a terme he hathe to live'), 368/1, but at the same time is himself unable to eat, 'leest that Mawgys shold'e werke witchecrafte vpon hym,' 368/14;—he commands his steward to keep lights burning all night, 368/23, and the Twelve Peers and a hundred armed men to keep watch over Mawgis, 368/28;—he jests with Mawgis for wishing to sleep, 369/9, and fetters him with 'a grette payre of yrens,' 369/24;—he is angered at Mawgis's speech, and would have slain him, 370/2;—he is thrown into a deep sleep by the enchantment of Mawgis, 370/23;—he awakes, and discovers the flight of Mawgis, 371/16, and arouses the Twelve Peers, 371/20;—he discovers that Mawgis had bewitched them, 372/6;—he perceives that the Four Sors mock him, 375/7, complains to his barons, 375/18, and sends to R. demanding restitution of his crown and treasure, 375/22;—he is informed by a spy of the coming of R., 381/11, and sends Oliver to fetch R., 381/25;—he becomes angry with Naymes and Ogier, 382/8, and he vows that R. shall die a shameful death, 382/24;—R. is brought before him, 385/7;—he refuses to listen to Ogier, 386/8, and threatens R. that he shall be 'cutte in smalle peces,' 386/18, but relents, accepting sureties from him, 387/16;—he commends Roland to God, 390/6, prays to God to part the two knights, 393/5, and a miracle is manifested in answer to his prayer, 393/12;—he sees Roland following after R., 394/4, spurs after them, 394/12, and comes to Mountalban, again threatening R., 395/7;—he returns to Mountbendell, 395/19, commanding his army forthwith to lay siege to Mountalban, 395/24;—he pitches his tent before the great gate, 396/7;—he receives Roland's message, 397/12, which makes him shake for anger, 397/29, vowing that he will not make peace unless he may do his will of Mawgis, 398/1;—he is again enchanted by Mawgis, 398/32, and carried to Mountalban, 399/3;—when he discovers that he is in the 'subjectyon of R.,' he is sore and angered, 408/6, and swears that he will make no peace, 408/11;—he is granted liberty by R., 411/25;—he holds his tongue because

'he fered the fierenes of the yonge Rycharde,' 413/5;—he mounts Bayard and leaves the castle, 413/14;—he is received by his men with gladness, 413/19, and tells them he has made no peace, 413/23, and explains how he was delivered, 413/28;—he returns Bayard to R., 414/3; he pardons Roland and the other lords, 416/16, and orders the assault on the castle to be renewed, 416/21;—he announces his intention of starving out the four brethren, 417/28, and becomes in great anger with Naymes for endeavouring to dissuade him therefrom, 419/10, again avowing that he will never make peace with them, 419/16;—he discovers that he will be unable to take Mountalban by force, 420/34, and orders a retreat, 421/3, declaring that he will furnish the brethren, 421/12;—he rejoices over the scarcity of victuals in the castle, 423/8, thanks God Mountalban has been brought so low, 423/18, and devises fresh indignities for 'yonge Rycharde,' 423/25;—he will not listen to the appeal of Aymon, 424/20, nor that of his barons, 424/25, but commands them to make engines 'for to bryng down this grete towre,' 424/31;—he discovers that Aymon had supplied his sons with food, 435/5, is very angry therewith, 435/22, and dismisses Aymon from his host, 435/33;—he rides to Mountalban, and not seeing any one, believes its defenders are all dead, 444/7, but entering the castle, he finds they are all gone, 444/32;—he discovers the underground passage through which they escaped, 445/8, and curses those who had made it, 445/19;—in great anger he sends everywhere for tidings of R., 446/19, and eventually learns that he is in the city of Arden, 446/34, whereat he is so 'moche angry' that he swears he will 'never lie in noo bed' till he had besieged the city, 447/7, and forthwith proceeds to do so, 447/22;—he is sore abashed when he sees R. in such good condition, 449/15, and still hopes to do 'justice upon him,' 449/22;—he uses bad language towards R., 451/2, and calls on his knights to slay him, 451/8;—he is right angry when he sees the damage done to his army by the Four Sons, 453/11, and taking his sword in his hand, he performs 'merveylles of armes,' 453/18;—he is 'so angry that noo man canne be more' when he sees the brethren have saved themselves and taken prisoner Richard of Normandy, 455/13, and swears that he will not leave the siege till he has taken the city, and hanged the Four Sons, 455/24;—he is angry at having no tidings of Richard of Normandy, 468/14, and sends to R. to yield up Duke Richard and Mawgis, 470/8;—his anger when he hears of the unpleasant position of Duke Richard, 474/9;—he gives his barons leave to withdraw, 475/8, but cannot sleep at night, 475/11;—he tells his barons that R. dare not hang Duke Richard, 477/8;—he again refuses to make peace, 483/11, and repeats that R. will not injure Duke Richard, 483/15;—he is deserted by the peers of France, 485/30, on which he sends after them, offering to make peace with R., 487/21;—he acquaints the peers with his conditions for the peace, 489/5, and sends Duke Naymes to inform R. thereof, 489/16;—his gracious reception of the three brethren and Duke Richard, 494/25, and his promise to look after the children of R., 495/20;—he raises the siege and departs from Arden, 495/28, and casts the good horse Bayard into the Meuse, 496/9, but the horse escapes, whereat he 'toke grete sorowe,' 497/9, and, angry as he was, he gives his followers leave to go to their own countries, 497/17;—he honourably receives the two sons of R., 541/31, makes them his carvers, 544/14, and gives Johnnet a fair knife, 544/25;—he rebukes Constant for bringing a false charge against

R., 545/23;—he accepts the gages of Johnnet and Aymonet and of Constant and Rohart, 546/8;—he knights R.'s two sons, 547/24, and sends to R. to come to the court, 549/29;—he makes R. good cheer, 549/17, and makes friends with him, 550/9;—he reproves the sons of Foulkes of Moryllon, 550/25;—he fixes the place of the battle, 551/21;—he commands that good order be kept at the battle, 552/17;—he becomes suspicious of Richard, 555/16;—he ascends the tower to see the battle, 555/28, and again is suspicious of Richard, 555/34;—his anger when he hears of the treachery of Gryffen of Hautbranche, 556/24;—he comes to the battle-field, 557/24;—he rebukes Richard, 559/5, and commands the children of Foulkes to swear that they enter the quarrel justly, 559/29;—he is glad when Aymonet has overcome Constant, 567/3, and commends the two brothers, 'for ye have doon ynough,' 568/27;—he orders that Constant be hung, and the body of his brother by him, 568/33, and express s his satisfaction thereat, 569/5;—he appoints his own physicians to tend the wounds of Aymonet and Johnnet, 569/32, and they, with R. and his three brethren, take leave of him, 570/8.

CLARE, the Lady, sister of King John of Gascoyn, 144/1;—rejoices when she hears of the prowess of R., 144/11;—she is making 'a penoncell of a spere' for R. (but she durst not tell it), when King John informs her of the projected marriage of herself to R., 153/24, whereat she is right glad, 154/5, and the marriage presently takes place, 154/19;—she promises to take great care of the castle during R.'s absence, 168/35, and gladly welcomes him back, 180/17;—she welcomes King John, who repulses her, 215/20;—she affectionately receives R., 220/15, implors him not to go to Vaucououres, 221/10, and relates her fearful dream, 221/24;—she is very glad when R. and the brethren return, 285/14, but is cruelly repelled by R. in his anger against King John, 285/21;—she cries him mercy, and reminds him that she had tried to persuade him not to go, for that she misdoubted of the king her brother, 285/31;—through the mediation of his brethren, R. makes peace with her, 287/2;—she is glad to meet again with R., 313/3;—she makes great sorrow for that Richard has been taken prisoner, 313/25, and joy when she sees he is rescued, 362/17, and grieves at the absence of Mawgis, 363/9;—she beseeches the barons to protect R., 380/12;—she takes leave of Roland and the other barons, beseeching them to purchase peace with C., 415/7;—she counsels that the horses be slain for food, and swoons 'for grete feblenes for lacke of mete,' 426/13;—she and her sons beg R. to have Bayard killed for food, 430/5;—since he can give no more blood, she prays R. to slay Bayard, 437/34;—she is sorry her brother has not rotted in his prison, 439/24;—she recomforts Richard of Normandy, 457/28;—seeing her husband arrayed in beggars' clothing, she swoons, 491/15, and mourning grievously for him, she casts her 'noble raymentes' in the fire, and taking a 'poure smoke,' vows to wear no other clothes till his return, 492/1;—she weeps and sorrows so much that 'she deyed at last,' 532/16.

Clermont, the earldom of, offered as a bribe to Esconf, 327/31.

Cologne, the Archbishop and Colledge of, make a procession to the miracle exhibited on the Rhine, 583/12;—he avows the body to be that of some saint, 583/22, and they discover that the body is that of R., 583/29;—he orders the murderers to do penance, 584/10;—he points out that the corpse is a holy one, by reason of the great miracles shewn forth, 585/4;—he and all the people of Cologne follow the corpse, 585/9;—he

- uncovers the visage of the corpse, so that, if possible, it may be recognized, 586/4;—he tells R.'s brethren not to be displeased with him, but they do make too much sorrow, 590/30;—they should rather rejoice because now he is a saint in heaven, 591/1, and inquires of them how the corpse should be called, 591/14;—he and all the people, when Alarde has answered his question, begin to 'wepe for pyte and for joye by cause they sawe all byfore theym the moost noble and worthiest knyghte of the worlde,' 591/21.
- Cologne, the city of, besieged by the Saracens, 163/9;—the battle at, between Roland and the Saracens, 164, 165;—R. arrives and works as a labourer on the church of St. Peter at, 576/16.
- Constans (Constant), a son of Foulkes of Morillon, possesses a false heart, 541/1;—he conspires with his brother to do harm to the sons of R., 543/7;—being accidentally shoved by Aymonet, he makes use of hard words, and calls him the son of a traitor, 544/30;—he is rebuked by C., and bidden to hold his peace, 545/22;—he asks C. to tell the place where the fight shall take place, 551/6;—he and his brother swear on the 'halowes' that R. had slain their father by treason, 560/5;—his nose is cut off by Aymonet, 561/9;—he wounds Aymonet, 562/30;—an ear and his jawbone are cut off by Aymonet, 562/36;—he kills Aymonet's horse, and Aymonet kills his, 564/13;—he surrenders himself to Aymonet, and is taken to C., 566/30;—he weeps when he hears Rohars pleading for mercy, 568/10;—he is drawn at four horses' tails, and then hanged, 569/3.
- Constantinople, R. arrives at, 498.
- Cortyne, Ogier's address to his sword so called, 268/1.
- Croyne, the town where the corpse of R. stopped, 585/15;—R.'s brethren come to, where they recognize his body, 589/17, and make great sobbings and lamentations, 590/14.
- Damp Rambault, tells Ro'and and Oliver what has happened at Balencon while they been bent on sport, 199/29.
- Dampe Hughe, slain by R., 101/32.
- Dordon, apparently synonymous with Ardeyre, 20/27, 30/23, 31/22, 36/13, 38/2, 59/15, 62/20, 64/3, 131/23.
- Dordonne, the name of one of the rivers bounding Vauco'oures, 227/23.
- Douse Peres (the Twelve Peers) of France, assemble at the court at Paris, 16/18;—they have come with C. into Gascony, 203/19;—C. relates to them his former exploits, and warns them that they may meet the same fate as their predecessors, 327/11;—when they see C.'s assault on Escouf, they all leave him, 328/14;—(having had news that Mawgis is acquainted with the state of affairs), they come to C., and tell him they are willing that Richard shall be hanged, 332/27, and he pardons them, 333/3;—they listen to C.'s complaints and offer of resigning his crown, 358/20;—their amazement when they discover how finely they have been cozened by Mawgis, 371, 372;—their swords, etc., are returned to C.'s messengers, 379/7;—Richard of Normandy's message is delivered to them, 482/19;—they each in turn implore C. to make peace, if only to release Richard of Normandy, 482/32;—in great wrath and with angry bitter words to C., they all depart from him, 484/15;—the messenger tells them of C.'s resolve at last to make peace, and they all return again, 488/9;—they are disgusted with C.'s treatment of Bayard, 496;—they receive the Four Sons with great joy and honour, 549/1.
- Durandall, the name of Ro'and's sword, 282/16.

- Dygeon (Dijon), Robert of, son of the Duke of Burgoyne, slain by R., 237/23.
- Erglyshemenne (Englishmen) at the court at Paris, 16/19;—33/16;—at the siege of Mountaynforde, 77/14.
- Enguerran, lord of Peronne, slain by Duke Benes, 42/31.
- Escorlawde, the Saracen, taken prisoner by Roland, and cast into prison by C., 166.
- Escouf (Estorlawde, 318/14), Hector, the son of Oed n., 40/11, 45/11;—he is ordered by C. to hang Richard, and refuses, 327/26, whereat enraged, C. throws a staff at him, 328/12;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/33.
- Esmenfray, one of Aymon's knights, advises him to keep faith with C. and assail his sons, 105/25;—he follows after R., 109/30, by whom he is forthwith slain, 110/6, and his horse given to Alarde, 110/10.
- Fstampes, the Earl of, 78/17, is slain by Alarde, 84/24.
- Estborwgh in Almayne, 268/5.
- Fawcon, Sir, slain by the Earl Guenes, 54/1.
- Fawcon, the name of one of the gates of Mountalban, 258/7.
- Fayete, Walleran of, kills many of the Persians, 502;—he is attacked and killed by Barbas, 511/11.
- Feyry, the valley of, 65/6.
- Flamberge (Flamberd, 300/17), the name of R.'s wonderful sword, 95/22;—R. gives it to his elder son, 554/4.
- Flamynghes (Flemings), 33/15, 40/2;—at the siege of Mountaynforde, 77/13.
- Fletcher, the name of one of the gates of Mourtalban, 215/17.
- Foree, name of one of the gates of Jerusalem, 512/11.
- Foulquet, Sir, slain by Ogier, 45/27.
- Fryse, Goodebew of, 41/11.
- Fryse, Leon of, 45/10.
- Fryse, Sir Magon of, 245/33.
- Galicin, see St. James in Gales.
- Garner, one of C.'s peers, 69/23.
- Garnyer, son of Gerarde, Duke of Roussyllon, 26/30.
- Gascoyn, Kyng Yon of (King John of Gascony), the Four Sons first hear of him, 132/10;—he rejoices at their coming, 134/25, and retains them in his service, 135/3;—he comes to succour R., fights valiantly, and gives great praise to R., 138/17;—he orders the chase after Borgons to be stayed, 139/15, and goes seeking for R., who was supposed to be amongst the slain, 139/23;—he tries to comfort R.'s brethren, and they all go in search of R., 140/6;—he and his party meet with R. after the latter has captured Borgons, 142/26;—he promises Borgons that no harm shall happen to him, 142/34;—he makes a great feast in honour of the Sons, 143/19, and causes the 'buty' to be dealed, 143/27;—he takes counsel of R. as to the release of Borgons, 144/26;—he grants permission to R. to build a castle, 146, and next day goes to examine the site, 147;—he is reminded by a knight that he runs some risk if he allows R. to build the castle, 147/19, and begins to hesitate, 147/31, but will not break his promise, 147/35, and confirms his gift to R., 148/29;—he goes to view the cast'e built by R., 149/20, and names it Mountalban, 150/2;—he gives the lordship of Valery to R., 150/20;—his

- barons, envious of R., tell him to beware of R., 150/22, but he tells them that R. will never think of treason, 150/30:—an old knight<sup>1</sup> counsels him to give his sister to R. to wife, 151/7, to which he agrees, and returns to Bordeaux, 151/12, where he receives R. with great joy, and taking him to the 'chambre of parements,' they play at chess, 151/24;—he hears Godfray's dream and Dr. Bernard's interpretation thereof, 152, and causes the marriage of R. and the Lady Clare to be accomplished, 153, 154;—he hears C.'s message delivered by Ogier, and his answer thereto, 158, 159;—he receives C.'s herald, and tells him to wait seven days, 204/4;—he relates C.'s message to his barons, and asks for counsel, 204/16;—he bewails himself because his barons have advised him to surrender R. to C., 209/4, and indites the letter of betrayal to his secretary, 209/30;—he receives C.'s letter giving the details how to carry out the treachery, 214/9;—he goes to Mountalban, but, full of his evil intent, forbears to salute his sister, 215/16;—the trumpets sounded in his honour arouse his guilty conscience, 217/3;—he feigns illness as an excuse for his cold reception of the Sons, 217/21, and puts the scarlet mantles on them, 218/3;—he tells them that he has made peace for them with C., and explains how they are to go tomorrow to Vaucoulores to render homage to C., 218/23;—he tells R. they must go to Vaucoulores mounted on mules only, and unarmed except their swords, 222/32;—he swoons four times when he sees the Sons depart, 224/15;—his folk comfort him, 224/25, but he is apprehensive of the vengeance of Mawgis, 225/6;—his name and dignity are rooted out for ever, 225/16;—he is informed by a spy of the disastrous ending of his treacherous designs, 278/19, and, bewailing his evil fate, resolves on becoming a monk in the Abbey of St. Lazare in the Wood of the Serpent, 279;—he arrives at St. Lazare, where the abbot 'made theym monkes in the devylles name,' 281/22;—he is taken prisoner by Roland, by whom he is scoffed at, placed backwards on a horse, and taken to Mountfawcon, 282/22;—he bewails his unhappy fate, and prevails on one of the knights to go to R. for succour, 283/4;—he is observed by R., 305/19;—he is abandoned by the fourscore knights his guards, 306/3;—he is unbound by R., and rebuked for his treachery, 306/10, and he begs R. to slay him, 306/19;—he is reproached by his little nephews, 313/7;—he gets left behind, in the prison at Mountalban, but is brought therefrom by R., 439/13;—he falls sick, dies, and is honourably buried, 456/6.
- Gascoyns, in C.'s army, 40/2;—they bless R. for going to the succour of King John, 290/29;—are considered to be cowards, 295/10;—they draw aside to see the combat between R. and Roland, 300/24.
- Gastynoyis, a province of France, 132/7.
- Gaydon, an assumed name of Mawgis, 316/32.
- Gefray, one of C.'s peers, 61/23.
- Gerard, Sir, one of Ogier's knights, is sent to Mountalban for succour, 253/31.
- Godfray, Sir, nephew to King John of Gascony, counsels his uncle not to act in such a manner as to bring d'shonour on himself, 204/31.
- Godfraye, Duke, serves C. at dinner, 61/6.
- Godras, Godarde, Sir Peter, the secretary of King John, 209/30, pens King John's treacherous letter to C., 210/10;—he weeps when he reads

<sup>1</sup> This old knight was the author of the memorable saying, that 'R. is well a noble gentylman of all foure sides.'

- of C.'s treachery, 214/16, and explains C.'s letter to King John, 214/26 :
 --he weeps for pity when he sees the Sons go forth to their death, 255/5 ; --and tells the sad tale to Mawgis, 255/23 ; --he stays Mawgis from slaying himself, 256/10.
- Guenes, Guenelon, Ganellon, the Earl, nephew of C., suggests that he should waylay and slay Duke Benes, 51/28 ; --with four thousand men, he carries in the Vale of Soyssons for Duke Benes, 52/19 ; --he slays Reyner, 51/29, and Sir Fawcon, 54/1, and Toyusselyne of B'oye, 55/4 ;
 --he becomes surety for Constans and Rohars, 546/16 ; --he calls his kinsmen together, and points out to them the dishonour done to them by C., 569/13 ; --his treason at Rounceva's foreshadowed, 569/17.
- Guithelym, Guetelym, the Sesne, overcome by Charlemagne, 16/9. and reduced to the Christian faith, 17/3.
- Guy, the Earl, joins C. at Paris, 39/32.
- GUYCHARDE, THE THIRD SON OF AYMON, at the court at Paris, 16/24 ; -- is knighted by C., 31/21 ; --he comes to C.'s court at Paris, 59/17 ; --he inquires of Earl Guyon, who are these folk ? 70/26 ; --receiving a rough answer, he fights with Guyon and slays him, 71/1 ; --he regains Mountainforde, and is commended by R., 71/28 ; --he relates his adventure to R., 72/1 ; --he counsels R. to go to Vaucoulores fully armed and mounted, 222/16 ; --he advises R. that they should cross the river, 232/16 ; --his faith in R. is restored, 235/25 ; --he is taken prisoner, and maltreated, 238/23 ; --his captors set him free, 240/10, and he is unbound by his brothers and set upon a horse, 240/23 ; --he does not mind for himself, but wants no damage to happen to R., 246/12 ; --he is sore wounded, and advises R. that they should surrender themselves, for which he is sharply rebuked by R., 249/1 ; --he regains his courage when he hears the words of Richard, 250/7, and implores Ogier to save R., 250/15 ; --he descends the rock with his brethren, to re-engage the French, 260/8 ; --his wounds are cured by Mawgis, 278/12 ; --he recommends the Lady Clare, 286/11 ; --he tells R. he will not go to rescue King John, 290/22 ; --he restrains R. from going to C. alone, 311/29 ; --he opines that C. will never grant peace, 403/13 ; --he counsels that they should yield themselves to C., 429/4.
- Guymarde, the Earl, tells R. he was a fool to believe King John, and asks him whether he will yield or defend himself, 247/17 ; --he commands Ogier to join in the attack on the Sons, 252/12 ; --he is slain by Mawgis, 263/18.
- Guynemault, Anthony, taken prisoner by R., 85/14.
- Guyner, C.'s esquire, is slain by R., 83/31.
- Guyon, one of R.'s knights, overthrown by King Yon of St. Omars, 82/13.
- Gyronde (Gironde), the river, 145/12.
- Gyrourde, the name of one of the rivers bordering Vaucoulores, 227/22.
- Hardres, 51/26.
- Haton, a knight, slain by the Saracens, 16/16.
- Hautebraunche, Gryfon of, one of the sureties for Constans and Rohars, 546/17 ; --he ambushes near the Isle of Our Lady with treacherous designs, 553/25 ; --he issues from his ambush, 557/14.
- Hautefelle, Gryffoon, Duke of, unhorses Duke Benes, 55/33, and is himself unhorsed, 56/3 ; --he treats the body of Duke Benes with indignity, jeering at it the while, 56/14.
- Hawteclere, the name of Oliver's sword, 371/3.

- Hector, son of Oedon, 297/33 ;—he weeps on seeing the combat between R. and Roland, 300/28.
- Hector, the ancient Earl, advises King John to deliver the Four Sons to C., 208/13.
- Helye, Sir, slain by Duke Benes, 55/27.
- Henry, the Earl, 80/19.
- Hosy, the mount, where Sir Gerarde keeps watch against the coming of Mawgis (but this is a little counterplot of Ogier the Dane's contrivance), 254/4.
- Hunall the Breton, smites Richard, and is unhorsed by him, 309/19.
- Humarde, Sir, tells Duke Guymarde that he has lost his wit, 207/32.
- Huon, Earl of Mauns, slain by the Saracens, 16/15.
- Huon, see Mauns.
- Illande, 187/8.
- Iousser, the assumed name of Mawgis, 172/9.
- Ioyuse, the name of C.'s sword, 349/34.
- Isle of Our Lady wythin Savoyne, the spot selected by C. for the fight between Yonnet and Aymonet and Constans and Rohars, 551/21 ;—Constans and Rohars arrive at, 553/20 ;—Aymonet and Yonnet arrive at, 554/15 ;—C. and his company arrive at, 557/24 ;—the fight at, 560—568.<sup>1</sup>
- Iudas, King John compares himself to the traitor, 216/1.
- Jerusalem, King Thomas of, taken prisoner by the Admiral of Perce, 501/7 ;—when he sees the joy amongst his folk, he thinks they have forgotten him, 511/20 ;—the alternatives put to him by Barbas, 519/20 ;—he addresses Geoffrey of Nazareth, acquainting him with Barbas's terms, 520/4 ;—he is vexed when he hears that h's barons have made R. lord over them, and accuses Earl Rumes of betraying him, 520/16 ;—he is placed in a perilous position by Barbas, 522/5, and Barbas takes his leave of him, 523/8 ;—the joyful meeting between him and R., 523/12 ;—he thanks R. for succouring Jerusalem, and honourably entreats him for some days, bestowing rich gifts on him, 523, 524.
- Jerusalem, Mawgis and R. arrive nigh the city of, 500/2, which they learn has been treacherously taken by the Admiral of Perce, and is now besieged by the Christians, 500/28 ;—the battle outside the city of, 502—506 ;—the second battle, 512—517 ;—it is retaken by the Christians, 518.
- Julius Cæsar's tower at Troyes, 41/3.
- Langon, one of C.'s peers, 69/23.
- Langres, Odet (Oedon) of, 48/27.
- Langres the province of, held by Escouf, the son of Oedon, 327/29.
- Lews (Lewis), a nephew of C., would have slain R.'s brother Richard, 288/27.
- Lezonne, taken by C.'s army, 192/7.
- Lion (? Lyons), Henry of, 565/33.
- Lion (? Lyons), the city of, offered as a bribe to Ogier, 325/4.
- Lohier, the eldest son of C., is commanded to go to Duke Benes with a

<sup>1</sup> The telling of this fight is done with great gusto by the chronicler ; but his gloating over the gruesome details is not calculated to raise the reader's estimation of the characters of the knights as being much higher than that of the ordinary sanguinary savage.

- threatening message, 18/21 ;—he departs, 19/15, bragging by the way, 19/20 ;—he notes the impregnability of the castle of Aygremounte, 21/26 ;—his conversation with Sir Savare, 22/16 ;—he arrives at Aygremounte, 22/33, and he and his folk enter the castle, 23/21 ;—he delivers his inflammatory speech to Duke Benes, 24/17, which is followed by another full of imprecations, 25/26, and then one of contempt, 'I nether prayse you nor doubte you not,' 27/3 ;—he slays one of the knights of Aygremount, 28/4, and, perceiving in what deadly peril he is, prays God for succour, 28/7 ;—he attacks Duke Benes, by whom he is slain, 28/17 ;—his body is sent back to C., 29/27 ;—the burial of, 35/27 ;—the great sorrow for the death of, 37/24.
- Lombardes at the court at Paris, 16/20 ;—43/4.
- Lombardy, C.'s return from, after fighting with the Saracens, 16/6.
- Loyre (Loire), the river, crossed by the Four Sons, 132/8 ;—169/18.
- Lyetary, conquered by Borgons, 132/31.
- Malbon, a nephew of, slain by R., 515/32.
- Marcyll, a Saracen, beheaded by R., 205/5.
- Margarys, King, is slain by R., 513/1.
- Mascon, the city of, offered as a bribe to the Earl Gnydellon, 324/25.
- Mauns, Huon, Earl of, joins C. at Paris, 39/34 ;—45/7, 48/26.
- Maunselx at the siege of Mountaynforde, 77/14.
- Maunte, the territorial name of the enemies of R., 539/16.
- MAWGIS, son of the Duke Benes of Aygremounte, and cousin to the Four Sons, threatened with death by C., 17/28 ;—is a great master of the science of Nigromancy, 24/6 ;—his gift of Bayard to R., 31/34 ;—hears of his father's death, 57/19, and says that C. 'shall abyge for it full derely,' 57/33 ;—he recomforts his mother, promising to avenge his father's death, 58/4 ;—he fights well in the fray that ensues from the slaughter of Berthelot, 62/13, and escapes with the Four Sons, 62/16 ;—his meeting with the Four Sons, 129/28 ;—he comes from Paris, having stolen three horses laden with gold, belonging to C., 130/7 ;—he advises R. to serve King John of Gascony, 132/14 ;—he backs up Alarde's advice about the building of Mountalban, 145/24 ;—he disguises Bayard and R., 169/24 ;—he deceives Duke Naymes, telling him that he is of Percn, and that R. is his son, 172 ;—he makes a bed for Bayard, and binds his feet so as to make him go halting, 173/27 ;—he rebukes R. for slaying the cordwainer, 174/27 ;—he mounts Morell, and goes with R. to the place appointed for the race, 174/31 ;—he unbinds the feet of Bayard, 176/24 ;—he leaves Paris, and meets R. on the way, 177/17 ;—he advises R. to attack C.'s army, 193/20 ;—he comes out of his ambush, and slays a number of Frenchmen at Balencon, 198/6 ;—he captures the golden eagle, 198/18, and sets it up on the great tower of the castle, so that both hosts may see it, 198/28 ;—his wrath when he knows the treachery of King John, 255/25 ;—he takes a knife to kill himself with, 256/8 ;—he causes all the soldiers in the castle to arm themselves, and acquaints them with King John's treachery, 256/27 ;—he orders the 'palfreyner' to saddle Bayard, and he refuses, whereupon Mawgis smites him with his fist and casts him to the ground, 257/15 ;—he saddles Bayard, after 'dealing curstly' with him, 257/33 ;—he departs from the castle by the gate Fawcon, 258/7 ;—he comes to Montbrun, and bitterly upbraids Ogier, 261/17 ;—he wounds Ogier, 262/5 ;—he dismounts from Bayard, 262/12, and mounted on another steed he slays the Earl Guymarde, 263/16 ;—he encourages his followers, and bids them not let Ogier escape, 263/23;—he is specially cursed by C., 271/23;—his address to R., in which he promises to make Richard whole and sound, if R. will help him to be avenged of C., 276/22;—being the 'subtillest nygramancer that ever was,' he incontinently cures the wounds of Richard, 277/17;—by the same means, he cures the wounds of the other three, 278;—he is eager for the fray, and tells R. he makes too long a sermon, 293/22;—he causes R. to remount, 304/18;—he inquires of the Sons the cause of their sorrow, 312/4, and dissuading R. from going to C., offers to proceed himself, 312/12;—he comes to Mountalban and disguises himself, 314/12;—he leaves Mountalban and reaches the tent of C. before the arrival of Roland, and he salutes C., praying God to keep him from treason, 315/5;—in his disguise he banters C., and tells him how he had been set on by the Four Sons, and maltreated by Mawgis [himself!], 315, 316;—he gives C. half the pardons that he had 'wonne in his vyage makynge,' 318/1;—he notes the coming of Richard, 319, and returns to Mountalban, 321/13;—he tells the Sons that C. has promised to hang Richard at Mountfawcon, and that they must go there to deliver him, 322/3;—he resumes his armour, and they all set out for Mountfawcon, 322/24, which they reach, and put themselves in ambush, 323/6, and they all go to sleep, 323/17;—he blesses God because Bayard had awakened them in time to rescue Richard, 340/24;—he slays the lord of Pyerreffrite, 345/32;—he enters the pavilion of C., whom he tries to slay, 355/13;—in returning he is attacked at Balencon, where he slays Mylen of Puyll, 356/7, but is himself wounded and overthrown by Oliver, 356/13, and surrenders himself to Oliver, 356/31;—he is brought back to C.'s pavilion, and swears to Oliver that he will not attempt to escape, 357/8;—he tells Oliver that he has betrayed him, 360/31, and is led before C., 361/10;—he is threatened by C., 361/14, and he advises C. to let him go, and to make peace with R., 361/22;—he is sought for by the brethren at Mountalban, 362/26;—he promises the Twelve Peers not to go forth without their leave, 367/9;—he asks for some meat, 367/29, for which he had a good appetite, 368/16;—a goodly watch is ordered to be kept over him, 368/28;—he asks C. where he is to sleep, 369/9;—he is fettered to a pillar, and an iron collar placed on his neck, 369/23, but tells C. that he shall still see Mountalban before prime to-morrow, 369/32;—he makes his charm and causes C. and the Twelve Peers to fall asleep, 370/20, another charm, and the fetters fall off him, 370/27;—he then collects all their swords, and the treasure of C., 370/33, whom he awakens, and departs for Mountalban, 371/8;—he meets with R. at Balencon, 372/25;—he shows the spoil to R., and explains why he had taken Ogier's sword with the others, 373/13, and he relates his adventures in the pavilion of C., 374/1;—he advises that the answer to C.'s message be deferred till the morrow, 377/26;—he prepares a special banquet for the messengers, and they are honourably treated, 378;—he is informed of the designs of C., and tells R. thereof, 396/9;—he goes to the pavilion of C., and charming all the host asleep, he takes C. in his arms, he lays him on Bayard, and returns with him to Mountalban, 398/24;—he then puts C. in bed and informs R. of what he has done, and showing C. to him, bids him 'kepe hym soo well that he scape not you,' 399;—he then, after kissing Bayard, dons a hermit's garb, giving his other raiment to the porter, and quits Mountalban, 399/28;—he crosses the Dordonne, and finding a hermitage in a wild forest, he makes his avow to God to dwell there, living on wild herbs, and then prays that there

- may be peace between C. and R., 400, 401;—he is sought after and lamented by R., who apprehends that he has departed because he will no longer abide the wrath of C., 405, 406;—he dreams about the Four Sons, sets out to see them, and on the way finds two merchants who have been robbed, 459;—he tells them that he will fight with the thieves, 'to wyte yf theyr hedes ben softe or harde,' 460/1;—he overtakes the thieves and slays five of them, 460/19, whereat the merchants exclaim, 'Here is a good pylgryme! I wene it is my lorde St. Martyne!' 461/16;—he inquires after C., 461/28;—understanding of the siege of Ardeyne, he goes straight there, 462/8;—he passes through C.'s host, but not without suspicion, 462/17;—he reaches the palace at dinner-time, 462/23, and being deemed a poor hermit, food is offered to him, 463/1, but he says he only wants brown bread and water, which is brought to him, 463/4;—he is suspected and discovered by R., 464/3, whom he acquaints with the particulars of his present life, 464, 465;—great joy is made over him by all the folk of R., 465/20;—he will not accept any of the luxuries provided for him, 466/9, and says that he is going to serve the temple of Jerusalem, 466/22, and takes leave of every one at Ardeyne, 467/13;—he again passes through the host of C., but at great risk, 467/20;—he is recognized by R. in the holy woman's house at Constantinople, 498/25;—he is so rejoiced by R.'s good tidings that he becomes whole again, and they feast together, both leaving Constantinople on the morrow, 499;—he makes a 'lityll lodges' for himself and R., 501/29;—he advises R. to rest this night, and fight the Saracens to-morrow, and tells him that he will never more make charms, 503/21;—seeing the slaughter made by R. with the fork, he brings his 'palster' into use, 505/10;—he refuses the rich gifts that the Earl Rames would bestow upon him, 510/7;—he admonishes the barons of Syria, 512/19;—he performs marvels of arms, to the admiration of R., 513/21;—he offers again to bear arms, for he cannot suffer R. to be in danger, 526/21, and becomes King Simon's standard-bearer, 527/2;—he recomfor s R. for the loss of his wife, 534/24;—taking leave of R., he returns to his hermitage, where he lives a holy life for seven years, and then 'deceased fro this worlde aboute Ester,' 525.
- May, the month of, when all 'creatures humain' ought well to rejoice, 23/31.
- Melanke, Bawdoyn, lord of, slain by the Saracens, 25/5.
- Melantes, the name of Roland's horse, 302/10;—his master would 'kit of his hede,' 302/23, and Bayard nearly breaks his thigh, 303/3.
- Melym, Myllon (Melun), Alrde and the others stay at, while R. and Mawgis go to the horse-race, 169/14, and they all meet again at, 179/27.
- Mobandes, the Earl of, relates the good deeds of R., and tells King John that he will be a traitor if he delivers the Four Sons to C., 206/11.
- Molyns, Godefraye of, counsels King John to give his sister to R. for wife, 151/8, and he relates his dream, 152/1.
- Mondydyer, Dron of, one of C.'s barons, 104/31.
- Montrolonde, Richard of, is ordered by C. to hang Richard, but refuses unless C. will accompany him, 328/24.
- Morell, the name of Mawgis's horse, 170/10.
- Moreoedon, the real possessor of Langres, 327/33.
- Morillon, Escouf of, one of the sureties for Constans and Rohars, 546/16.
- MORYLLON, Foulkes, Fougues, Aoryfoulquet, Duke of, acquaints C. of the coming of Duke Benes, 51/25;—he rebukes Duke Benes for slaying

- Lohier, 53/18;—he advises that Mountaynford be forthwith assailed, 73/22;—he is placed in front of the 'masters gate' of Mountaynford, 76/33;—83/19;—he exhorts C. to make greater exertions against the Sons, 81/18;—he rai's at R., and threatens him with death, 88/8, for which he is rebuked by R., 88/33;—he thinks R. is in his power, but R.'s disguise and the speech of Mawg's completely baffle him, 171, 172;—he is made acquainted with C.'s treacherous designs against R., and proceeds to Vaucoulores to carry them out, 212, 213;—he taunts R., telling him his best friend King John has betrayed him, and threatens to slay him, 233/25;—he refuses to entertain the proposals of R., 235/1;—he overthrows R., 236/4, but directly afterwards he is 'clove to the harde teeth,' and slain outright by R., 236/30.
- ount marter (Montmartre), the horse-race proclaimed at, 167/32.
- Mountalban, the first inception of the building of the castle of, 145/8;—details of the building, 149;—it is first called Mountalban by King John, 150/2, and is by him made free from dues for ten years, 150/6;—it speedily becomes well peopled, 150/12;—it is beheld and admired by C., 156/27;—the Sons depart from, in order to take part in the forthcoming horse-race at Paris, 168/27, and they all safely arrive home again, 180/16;—preparations are made by C. for a seven years' siege of, 182/26;—a spy arrives at, with news of C.'s projected attack, 184/23;—C.'s army encamps before, 188/19;—King John arrives at, bent on treachery, 215/16;—it is left by the Four Sons, who go on their perilous journey to Vaucoulores, 225/20;—Mawgis departs from, to the rescue of R., 258/7;—the Sons and Mawgis return to, 285/3, and a right great feast takes place there, 287/12;—the Sons again depart from, 291/33;—R., Alarde, and Guycharde again arrive at, 312/28, but depart again from, to go to Mountfawcon, 322/23;—the Four Sons again arrive at, 362/13;—they again depart from, to try and find Mawgis, 363/32;—and again return to, with Mawgis, 374/14;—C.'s messengers arrive at, 376/3, where they receive courteous welcome, 376/28;—the castle is left by R. in the charge of Mawgis, 388/16;—R. returns to, with Roland, who is there entertained right honourably 394/28;—C. comes to the gate of, and threatens R., 395/8;—it is again laid siege to by C., 395/23;—C. pitches his tent before the 'myster gate' of, 396/3;—the assault of, commences, 419/32—439;—the great dearth at, 422;—it is abandoned 'so that noo creature a live abide wythin,' 439;—C. discovers that it is deserted, whereat he is as angry as any man might be, 444;—it is occupied by C. and his barons, 446/24;—the Four Sons and Mawgis return to, 533/25, and are welcomed by the inhabitants with great joy, 534/1;—it is given by R. to his son Aymon t, 570/19.
- Mountrgweyll, some place near Ardeyne, 447/16.
- Mountaynford, R. builds the castle of, on the river Mause, 65/9;—C.'s host arrives at, 70/4;—the first battle at, commences, 71/1;—description of the castle of, 73/32;—it is assailed by C., and before each of its three gates are placed sundry warriors, 76/31;—the various nationalities arrayed against it, 77/13;—its 'fawcebraye,' 77/27, from which R. and his folk issue without noise and fall upon the host of C., 78/24;—the second battle at, rages fiercely, 79/7, and a long description of it follows, 79—86;—R.'s forces return to, 87/1;—it is besieged for fourteen months, 87/14;—it is treacherously entered by Heryer of Seveyne, 91/10, and he lets in Guyon of Bourgoyne, 93/1;—the treachery is made known through the 'somwhat proude' horse of Alarde, making a noise and waking his maser, 93/7;—the castle is set on fire, 94/16;—

- the third battle at, commences, 95, 96 ;—the castle is deserted by the Four Sons and their folk, 98/31, much to the grief of R., 99/7.
- Mountbandell, Mountbendel, C.'s tent at, 270/12 ;—Pygwade the spy arrives at, 280/18 ;—C. removes his pavilion from, when laying close siege to Mountalban, 395/19.
- Mountbron, the rock at, 198/1 ;—Richard flees to, 238/22 ;—the fight at, 249—269.
- Mountfacon, the 'pyn tree' of, 239/20 ;—Mawgis and the three brethren ambush themselves at, 323/6 ;—Richard is brought to the gallows at, to be hanged, 334/20 ;—the great fight between R. and Roland at, 390—393.
- Mountferrant, the Earldom of, offered as a bribe to Escouf, 327/31
- Mountyon, one of C.'s towns, 69/14.
- Mountpeller, Guyon, Guy, Earl of, in the 'forewarde' of C.'s army, 69/19 ;—he gives a brutal answer to Guycharde's question, 70/26, and is forthwith slain by Guycharde, 71/1 ;—C.'s grief for his death, 71/15.
- Mountpeller (Montpelier), 65/13 ;—conquered by Borgons, 132/31.
- Muse (Meuse), the river, 65/7.
- Myleyne, otherwise called Aspes, 70/2.
- Myllon, Duke, father of Roland of Bretayn, 162/24.
- Nantuell, Duke Dron of, had not done the bidding of C., 17/9 ;—comes to help Duke Benes, 39/13 ;—he goes against the host of C., 41/28 ;—he counsels his brethren to sue to C. for mercy, 46/18 ;—he refuses to go with C. into Gascony, 183/20.
- NAYMES, Duke of Bavyere, gives good advice to C. concerning Benes of Aygremounte, 17/32 ;—he tells C. to put no credence in dreams, 33/10, and not to fray himself till he knows the certainty, 33/18 ;—he comforts C., and advises him to go against Duke Benes, 34/22 ;—38/22 ;—he counsels C. to accept the allegiance of Duke Benes and his brethren, 49/2 ;—69/24 ;—he goes with Ogier after Guycharde, 'but their labour was nought worthe,' 71/27 ;—he advises C. to send a message to R., commanding him to surrender Guycharde, 74/30, and he and Ogier forthwith depart for Mountaynforde, 75/12 ;—he delivers the message, 75/31 ;—having heard R.'s answer and defiance, they quickly return, 76/23 ;—he counsels C. to raise the siege of Mountaynforde, and resume it 'whan the newe tyme [next spring] shall be come,' 89/21 ;—he advises C. to cease from the pursuit of the Sons, 103/30 ;—he accompanies C. to Galicia, 156/13 ;—he counsels C. to remain quiet for five years, 162/6 ;—he highly extols the merits of Roland to C., and says he only wants a good horse, 167/6, to obtain which, he advises C. to proclaim a horse-race for a valuable prize, the winner of which is to be bought for Roland, 167/20 ;—he says that C. makes him look like a fool, 171/16 ;—he is deceived by the disguise of Bayard and R., 171, 172 ;—he advises C. to restrain his anger, and prepare to go against R. 'atte Candemas nexte comynge,' 182/11 ;—he advises C. either to grant the request of R., or to starve out the castle, 190/18 ;—he advises C. to send messengers to King John ordering him to deliver up the Four Sons, 202/25 ;—he interferes in the quarrel between Ogier and Roland, sharply rebuking the latter for his great pride, 273/12 ;—he rebukes C. for striking his barons, 328/20 ;—he counsels C. to restore Richard to his brethren, to make peace with them, and induce them to become his subjects, 329/14 ;—this counsel not being acceptable to C., he proposes that Richard should be put in a deep prison and starved

- to death, 'and ye shall not be blamed yf ye doo soo'! 330/6;<sup>1</sup>—he begs C. not to lay down his crown, promises him that Mountalban shall soon be taken, and that the Four Sons shall not be spared, 359/11;—he advises that Mawgis should be spared till to-morrow, and the Twelve Peers become surety for him and Mawgis, 366, 367;—he rebukes C. for his unseemly language, 382/27;—he advises the barons to accept Oliver's counsel, and that if any outrage is offered to R., they will help him, 384/33;—he goes to C., telling him how well Roland is treated by R., and offering terms of submission on the part of the Four Sons, 397/12;—he tells R. that C. will not listen unless Mawgis is delivered to him to do his will of him, 398/7;—he marvels at the capture of C., considering what strait watch he always kept, 404/24;—he counsels the Four Sons to cease bewailing Mawgis, and think of the peace to be made with C., 407/18;—he entreats C. to accept the terms proposed by R., 410/24;—he and the other barons wonder greatly at the kindness of R. in letting C. go scot free, 411/30;—he counsels the barons that they should go after C. and plead the cause of R. before him, 414/21;—he kneels before C., crying his mercy, and advising him to make peace, 416/8;—he again appeals to C. to make peace, 418;—he counsels C. to allow Aymon to return home, 435/25;—he again urges C. to make peace, 449/29;—he tells C. that he believes R. has caused the death of Richard of Normandy, 469/19;—he delivers C.'s conditions of peace to R., 471/15;—he tells C. that R. sends word that he will hang Richard of Normandy to-morrow, and moreover that he would also hang C., were he in his power, unless he made peace, 473/5;—he expostulates with C. for his angry threats, and counsels that all the kinsmen of R. go their ways, leaving C. to shift by himself, 474/24;—he tells C. that it is useless seeking counsel, since that he will 'do no thing but after his own head,' 475/16;—he rides to Ardeyne with C.'s conditions for the peace, 489/17;—he makes R.'s children to become acquainted with their kinsmen, 542/30;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/32;—he decides how the forthcoming fight is to be 'two agenst two and all foure togyder,' 551/17;—he tells C. not to be dismayed, for they will well keep his right and honour, 553/13.
- Nazareth, Geffray of, kills many of the Saracens, 502, and fights with the Admiral of Perce, whom he overthrows, 503/1;—King Thomas is glad at the sight of Geoffrey of Nazareth, and addresses his speech to him, 520/4.
- Nemours, Yzacar of, 40/10.
- Neron (Nero) of Rome, never made so great a treason as King John of Gascony, 279/11.
- Neuers, Neners, the Earl of, placed in front of the 'masters gate,' at Mountaynford, 77/1;—he is taken prisoner by R., 85/15.
- Nore (Noire), one of the rivers surrounding Vaucoulores, 227/24.
- Normandy, Rycharde of, joins C. at Paris, 39/29;—placed in the 'fore-ward' of C.'s army, 40/9;—he is one of the guardians of the 'Oryflame,' 41/17;—he slays one of Roussillon's knights, 43/11;—he jousts with Duke Benes, and kills his horse, 44/20;—69/24;—he rejoins C. at Paris, 186/22;—he keeps the passage over the river Balencon, 395/32;—he is made prisoner by Richard, and carried into Ardeyne, 455/4;—he is threatened with death by R. unless peace is made, 457/10, to which he replies that he is a prisoner of war, and does not fear death, 457/14;—he is recomforted by the Lady Clare, 457/28;—ten of R.'s men are sent to fetch him to the gibbet, of whom he slays three, and the rest flee away, 477/21, and he causes the three dead carles to be thrown out of the window, 478/30;—he expostulates with R. for sending 'kerles' to take him, and assures R. that, if their cases had been reversed, he would not have done such a shame to R., 479/32;—he taunts R. that he dare not hang him as long as C. is alive, 480/25;—he is brought to the gallows, 481/1, and sends a messenger to C., entreating him to pardon R., 481/23;—the messenger tells him of the failure of his mission, and how the Twelve Peers have deserted C., 486/21;—he is released by R., who prays pardon for the great shame done unto him, 487/1;—he is entreated by R. to take care of his wife and children, 491/10;—he takes leave of R., 492/26;—he recomforts the Lady Clare, 493/23;—he recounts to C. how honourably he had been treated by R., and begs him to worship R.'s wife, children, and brethren, 495/5;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/32.

<sup>1</sup> This advice, though seriously given, seems meant for a joke, for C. in reply tells Naymes, 'ye doo jape wyth me,' and that the necromancer Mawgis would not allow Richard to remain long in prison.

Normandy, Thiery of, taken prisoner by R., 85/15.

Normans at the court at Paris, 16/20;—33/14, 40/2.

Nycoll, Emery the Earl of, slain by R., 195/33.

OATHS, GREETINGS, AND BATTLE-CRIES:—

Alas, dere lady Mary! [i. e. the Virgin], 426/25.

And God confounde me! 171/20.

Ardeyn! Richard's battle-cry, 233/21.

Arme you, knyghtes! 136/25.

A thousande gramercys, 154/13.

Aygremente! 42/34.

Aygremente his banner! 45/6.

Balancon! Guycharde's battle-cry, 233/20.

Blessyd be the hour that ever ye were borne! 163/26.

By all halowen! 418/27.

By Apollo! 519/17.

By God omnypotente! 37/16.

By my soule! 379/16.

By myne othe! 188/22.

By St. Denis of France, 17/24.

By St. James, 556/33.

By St. Palle! 379/13.

By St. Peter of Rome! 311/31.

By St. Peter the postle! 272/6.

By St. Symon! 60/22.

By that God that suffred death and passyon! 23/25.

By the body of God! 579/15.

God-dys curse haue thou! 28/6, 42/33.

God gramercy! 181/4, 277/34.

God gyve you good adventure! 133/17.

Goo thy waye to helle! 513/13.

Hourson cowarde kaytiff! 272/9.

Jaffa! 502/6.

Mountalban Cleremount! Mawg's's battle-cry, 263/22.

Mountalban! R.'s battle-cry, 233/19.

- Mounteinforde! 71/7.
 Mountioye St. Denys! 71/6.
 O Machomet! 511/2.
 Pavereyment! one of Alarde's batt'e-cries, 315/29.
 Perce! (Persia!), 503/13.
 Rames! 514/5.
 Roussillon, Roussyllon! 42/11.
 St. Nycolas! Alarde's battle-cry, 233/20.
 The devylle sped; you! 326/28.
- OGER of DENMARK, does on the spurs of R. when made a knight, 31/22;—in the 'forewarde' of C.'s army, 40/11;—he is one of the guardians of the 'Oryflame,' 41/17;—he slays Ponson, 42/15, and Sir Foulquet, 45/27;—69/23;—he goes after Guycharde, but is too late, 71/26;—he returns to C., and tells him of the strength of the castle of Mountaynford, 73/5;—he is placed in front of the 'masters gate' at Mountaynford, 77/1;—he prevents Aymon from being made prisoner by his sons, 86/1, and banTERS him on their chivalry, 86/3;—he encourages R., and tells him he will deliver his message to C., 87/32;—he accompanies C. to Galicia, 156/13;—he delivers C.'s haughty message and defiance to King John, 158/20, and rebukes R. for his inflammatory speech, 160/15;—he returns to C., and relates the saying of King John and R., 161/9;—he responds to Duke Naymes' assertion that they had been made fools of by C., 171/19;—he is left in charge of the camp at Balencon, 193/1;—he prepares to meet the host of R., 195/12;—he overthrows Richard, 197/4, but is himself speedily overthrown by R., 197/16;—he promises to do a good turn for R., 197/28;—he slays many of the Gascons, 198/4;—he is made acquainted with the details of C.'s treason towards R., 212/33, and, with Foulkes of Moryllon, goes to Vaucoloures to carry it out, 213/19;—he first espies the Sons coming to Vaucoloures, and prays his folk to do them no harm, 228/5;—he bids the captors of Guycharde to let him go, 240/6;—he tells the Sons they did as fools to believe King John, 246/2;—he will not fight against the brethren, but withdraws himself and his folk a bow-shot away, 248/5, and makes great sorrow for R., 248/16;—he orders the assault to be stayed, 250/24, and tells his cousins to rest and have breathing-time, 251/1;—to R.'s ungracious speech he retorts that for what he is now doing C. will give him no thanks, 251/18;—he tells the Frenchmen that he will help his cousins, 252/9, and prays that they may be left in peace, 252/19;—he threatens to smite off the head of any one who ventures to take any of the brethren, 252/27;—he sends one of his knights to fetch Mawgis to help the brethren, 253/31;—thinking that the brethren are about to surrender themselves, he tells them they are fools for abandoning the rock, 260/23, but he is warned by R. to escape, 260/32;—his great delight when he sees the host coming to the succour of the Four Sons, 261/2;—he is rebuked by Mawgis, 261/17, and is also wounded by him, 262/3;—he is unhorsed by R., 262/33;—he and his followers fly from the battle across the river Dordonue, 264/8, where he is chaffed by R. for running away, and bitterly assailed for his treachery, 264/12;—the Frenchmen also reprove him and depart from him, 265/3;—he laments his ill-fortune, and cries to R. that he wrongfully blames him, 265/16;—he recrosses the river, and made himself ready to joust all wet as he was, 265/31;—he tells R. that he will fight, and he had rather be slain than return in this manner to C., 266/7;—he is defied by R., and the combat takes place, 266/32;—both knights are unhorsed, 267/4;—he goes to assist his horse Brayford, 267/15, and is wounded by R., 267/25;—he deals R. a stroke that makes him reel, 263/13, but seeing his brethren come, he flies from R. and again swims over the Dordonne, 268/22;—he promises to wait for R., 269/9;—he is thanked by Alarde, 269/23, and bestows a parting threat on R., 269/32;—he comes before C., to whom he relates the adventure at Vauloures, 270/26;—he is fiercely assailed by Roland, who calls him 'cowarde kaytiff,' 272/4;—he tells Roland that he lies falsely, and recounts his noble kinsmen, 272/18;—he tells Roland to beware of setting hand on him, 273/5;—he tells C. that there is no one who can accuse him of treason, and explains how he had not joined in the attack on the Four Sons at Montbron, but that in the future he will help them, 273, 274;—he promises to go with Roland after R., and derisively offers to lend him a rope if he has need of it, 281/13;—he prays God to grant Roland's request that he might find R., so that R. may take the pride out of Roland, 284/3;—he blesses God, and chuckles in his sleeve that now Roland has found R., 292/26, and turns himself round with a mocking speech to Roland, 293/1;—he is very pleased when R. unhorses Roland, 304/22;—he again mocks Roland about the superiority of R., 308/10;—he is ordered by C. to take and hang Richard, but refuses, defying C., 324/32;—he tells Naymes that he makes too long a sermon, and bids him argue no more with C., 330/24;—he and the other barons quit C.'s pavilion, 330/31;—he threatens any one who should be so hardy as to lead Richard to hanging, 331/3;—he goes to the pavilion where Richard is, whom he is minded to release, 331/7, and then rails angrily at him, 331/31;—he reminds R. of his promise, 332/9, and is delighted to know Mawgis had been there, 332/23;—he calls Rypus of Riplemonde a coward for avenging himself at this time, 333/12;—he thinks Rypus is returning from hanging Richard, and swoons for grief thereat, but recovering, goes after Richard, who is arrayed in Rypus's armour, 342;—he argues with him, and discovering his identity, inquires after Rypus, 343;—he bids good-bye to Richard, and returns to C., giving his reason for not striking off Rypus's head, 344/2;—he comes with the other barons to Mountalban, 376/3;—he relates C.'s message to R., 377/9;—he advises R. to come to C., 379/25;—he promises the Lady Clare that no harm shall happen to R., 380/16;—he begins to doubt the wisdom of having brought R., and counsels that they shall discover C.'s intentions, 380/24;—he chides C. for his evil reception, since they have accomplished their mission, and also brought R. with them, 382/9;—he threatens to forsake C. if any outrage or damage is done to them, 383/8;—he comes after Roland to prevent him harming R., 384/12;—he relates to C. how the barons had conveyed his message to R., and that R. had performed all that was required of him, and yet C. had caused R. to be taken, and advises him to send R. back to Mountalban, and there do his worst against him, 385, 386;—he congratulates R. on having taken such a prize as is Roland, 394/15;—he tells R. to take his way to Mountalban, and he will do all he can to prevent C. from following, 394/20;—he does so much by his fair language that he holds the king till he thinks R. and Roland are at Mountalban, 394/32;—he deems the capture of C. to be a miracle ordained by God to terminate the war, 404/27;—he begs R. to show him Richard of Normandy, 472/22;—hearing C.'s threat to hang R. and all those of his lineage, he asks Turpin what he thinks of 'our kyng that sayeth by his grete pryde that he shall hange us all,' 474/9;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/32.

Olyvere (of Vyenne, ? Vienna), 185/12;—he reminds Roland how they had taken Lezonne and Sernoble, 192/6;—he goes hawking with Roland, and is beside himself when he knows what has happened during their absence, 200/15;—he deals roughly with the Prior of St. Lazare, 282/6;—he praises R. as knowing more of war than any other knight, and relates his good qualities, 294/28;—he counsels Roland to fight with R., because he (Oliver) will be enemy to R. 'onely for his worthynes,' 298/10;—he causes Roland to remount, 304/21;—he takes Melantes' bridle, and stops Roland from going to finish the duel with R., 305/14;—he withdraws Roland from fighting Ogier, 308/20;—he wounds and overthrows Mawgis, 356/13, whom he takes prisoner, 356/31, and brings back to C.'s tent, 357/8;—he promises C. to surrender Mawgis to him before evening, 360/8;—he extracts a promise from C. to resume his crown, 360/17, and delivers Mawgis unto him, 361/10;—he laughs at C.'s evident dread of Mawgis, 368/18;—he goes to Balencon to take R. and Alarde, 381/34;—he overtakes R., who is afoot, 383/16;—he advises Roland to let R. be at peace, and taken courteously before C., 384/25;—he tells Roland he will not stay with C., after his (Roland's) departure, 475/35;—he tells C. that R. would have no more scruple about hanging C. than he has of hanging Richard of Normandy, 483/22;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/31.<sup>1</sup>

Originers, at the siege of Mountaynford, 77/14.

Orleauce (Orleans), a city in France, 132/7;—169/12.

Orrede, a cousin of Barbas, slain by R., 515/28.

Palerne (Palermo), R. arrives at, 525/1;—the battle at, 527.

Pampelune, the battle at, referred to, 31/15.

PARIS, C. holds a great court at, 16/5;—the jousting at St. Vyctor, near, 32/16;—assembling of C.'s forces at, 39/26;—C.'s court at, 51/19;—another great court held at, on the Feast of Pentecost, 59/8;—C. returns to, after the fighting at Mountaynford, 104/16;—C. departs from, to go on a pilgrimage to Galicia, 156/13;—C. returns to, and holds a great council at, 161;—R. and Mawgis arrive at, preparatory to the horse-race, 173/2;—the horse-race at, in a meadow by the Seine, 175—177;—Mawgis departs from, 177/17;—the gathering of C.'s subjects at, 183/4, 186/18;—great dearth at, 187/27;—C.'s army sets out from, 188/11;—R.'s two sons arrive at C.'s place at, 540/18;—R., his brethren and sons depart from, on their return home, 570/13.

Paris, the Archbishop of, see Turpyn.

Pepyn, the father of C., 327/1.

Peronne, Enguerran of, 42/31.

Perron, 268/6.

Pignabell, Lion of, one of the sureties for Constans and Rohars, 546/17.

Poeteuyns, at the court at Paris, 16/20;—40/2;—43/4.

Ponson, a knight, slain by Ogier, 42/15.

Ponthus of Almayne, joins C. at Paris, 187/6.

Poycy, Godfray, the lord of, 202/30.

Poytees (? Poitiers), the Earl of, 556/29.

Poyters (Poitiers), a province of France, 132/9, where the Four Sons first hear of King John of Gascony, 132/11.

<sup>1</sup> On p. 477, line 11, Caxton by a lapsus calami has transposed the names Roland and Oliver, as shown in the footnote on that page.

- Puyl, Mylen of, slain by Mawgis, 356/7.
- Pyerlece, Sir Walter, slain by Duke Benes, 44/14.
- Pyerrefrite, Magon, alias Sampson, the lord of, slain by Mawgis, 345/32.
- Pygwade, the spy, who had 'fifteen fote of lengthe, and wente as faste as any horse cowde trotte,' 279/32;—he goes to Mountbendel, and tells Roland of the flight of King John, 280/18.
- Pynabell, the spy, tells C. of the arrival of R. and Alarde at Balencon, 381/5.
- Rambault, the free knyght, 199/29.
- Rames, the Earl Jaffas of, kills many of the Turks, 502;—he bars the ingress of the Turks into Jerusalem, 504/20;—he speaks to the two pi'grims, wishing to know who they are, 506/27, and offers to pay homage to R., 507/13;—he rejoices at the coming of R., and begs him to be 'our capytayne and our hede,' 508/3;—he lodges R. in his own pavilion, and fully equips him with horses, raiment and arms, 509, and wants to do the same with Mawgis, 510/3;—he commends the great prowess of Mawgis, 513/29;—he tells King Thomas that he must address his speech to R., 520/10, and to have no doubt of R., 520/22;—he takes King Thomas's message to R., 521/10.
- REYNAWDE, THE ELDEST SON OF AYMON, 16/24;—his stature, 16/28;—is knighted by C., 31/24;—his wonderful horse Payard, 31/28;—he jousts before C., 32/19, by whom he is much commended, 32/22, and whom he promises to serve truly, 32/26;—he leaves the court of C., with his father and brethren, 36/9, but returns there again, 59/15;—his indignant speech to C. for the death of Duke Benes, 60/10, and C.'s insulting answer, 60/21;—he cannot eat because of the shameful insult, 61/7;—he plays at chess with Beithelot, 61/21, they quarrel, 61/24, and he slays Berthelot with the chess-board, 61/31;—he escapes from the palace, 62/15;—he makes sorrow for his brothers, 62/32;—he slays three of the pursuing knights, and gives their horses to his brethren, 63/10—26;—he reaches Dordon, 64/3, and tells his mother the reason why he has left the court, 64/7;—he departs from Dordon and enters the forest of Ardeyne, 65/5, where he builds the castle Mountaynford, 65/12;—he welcomes his brother Guycharde, 71/32, whom he high'y commends, 72/14, and then, addressing his folk, tells them that the time is come that 'everiche of us must preve hymselfe a good man,' 72/17;—he orders the gate of the castle to be shut and to draw up the bridge, 72/31;—he receives C.'s envoys, 75/28, becomes angry when he hears their message, 76/6, and with a scornful answer defies the king, 76/8;—he well defends the castle, 77/10, gives his followers good counsel, 77/17, and they issue forth from the castle upon the host of C., 78/23;—his wonderful feats of arms, 78/31;—he perceives his father in the battle, 79/16, and turns to another side, 79/21;—he reasons with Aymon, 79/26, and threatens him with injury if he does not repent, 80/6;—he sees C. and others coming, 80/20, and causes his men to be brought together, 80/21;—he rebukes Aymon for slaying one of his men, 81/9;—none can compare with him for 'so grete merveyll of arms,' 82/4;—he causes the horse of King John of St. Omers to be captured, 82/19, and gives it to his brother Richard, 82/31;—he again rebukes his father, 83/7;—he kills C.'s esquire, 83/31, and three hundred knights, 84/18;—he blesses his brother Alarde for slaying the Earl of Estamps, 84/29;—he puts the folk of the Emperor to flight, 85/12, and causes his own folk to withdraw, 85/19, but again encounters his father, whom he unlooses, 85/28, and eventually he puts Aymon's folk to flight, 86/14;—he encounters C., to whom he makes reverence, 86/26, forbids his followers to lay hands on him, 86/30, and they enter into the castle, 86/34, where he again thanks Alarde for slaying Estampes, 87/6;—though closely besieged, he is not debarred the pleasure of the chase, 87/17, and at divers times he speaks with the followers of C., offering to give up the castle if he may have his life and goods safe, 87/20;—he excuses his conduct to Foukes of Moryllon, 88/11, whom he rebukes for unseemly language, 88/33;—he welcomes the traitor Hernyer of Seveyne, 91/30, whom he treats as a friend, 92/13, and whose treachery is speedily discovered, 93/10;—he prepares to defend himself, 94/1, but the castle being fired, he and his folk issue out at the fausebray, 94/28;—they enter a pit for fear of the fire, and defend themselves strongly, 95/1, but hearing the cry of his men who are being slain, they come out of the pit and join in the battle, 95/17, and he gives marvellous strokes with his sword, 95/22;—he accuses himself of cowardness for hiding, 95/32, and seeing the fire a little quenched, he shuts the donjon-gate, and has up the drawbridge, 96/5;—he causes Hernyer to be drawn and quartered, his body burnt, and the ashes scattered to the winds, 96/22;—he finds out that their victuals had been consumed in the fire, 98/3, and prepares to depart from the castle, 98/16;—he beholds the burning castle, whereof he takes great pity, 98/34;—he and his followers fight their way in the night through the host of C., 100;—he sets his forces in array, 101/12, and would have slain C., but Damppe Hugh intervenes, and receives the death-stroke, 101/28;—he does so much harm to the followers of C., that the latter stops the chase, 102/10;—he passes over the river, 103/1, and finds the pursuit has stopped, 103/4;—he goes to the forest of Ardeyn, 103/20;—he receives Aymon's messengers, and pleads for a truce, 106/16;—he expostulates with his father, 106/29, and receiving hard words in reply, 107/1, prepares for the fray, 107/14;—he is beaten for lack of men, 107/34, and flees towards the mountains, 108/5;—he overthrows Aymon, 108/26;—he makes four jousts, having at the same time Alarde behind him on Bayard's back, and kills each time, 109/9;—he never wearies or becomes weaker for all his exertions, 109/18;—he slays Esmeufray, 110/7, and gives his horse to Alarde, 110/10;—he is saved by a little river, 110/33;—his grief for the loss of his folk, 111/16;—his sufferings in the forest of Ardeyn, 116, 117;—he asks counsel of his brothers, 117/28, consents to return to their mother, 118/29, and departs the same night, 119/5;—he raises a doubt as to the action of their father, 119/17;—they enter Ardeyn, and make their way to the palace, 120/14, and wait till the arrival of their mother, 120/29;—they are recognized by the Duchess, 122/10, to whom he relates his misfortunes, 123/5;—he and his brethren and knights dine with his mother, 123/30;—they are cursed by Aymon, 124/26, and R. blames his father for his cruel treatment, 124/29;—his conversation and reconciliation with Aymon, 125—128;—his delight at sight of his father's treasure, of which he takes at his will, 129/11;—he meets with Mawgis, 129/31, and they all depart from Ardeyn, 130/31;—he and his followers pass through France, wasting the country, 132/4, go to Bordeaux, 132/22, and arrive at King John's palace, 133/11;—he talks with the steward at the gate, 133/16, and salutes King John, 133/31, to whom he offers his service, 134/1, which is willingly accepted, 135/4;—he causes his men to prepare to meet Bourgons, 136/30, promising success to the king, 137/5, and goes forth foremost against the Saracens, 137/13, slaying the 'paynymes' as beasts, 137/24;—he pursues after Bourgons, 139/5, whom he overtakes, 140/93, and they fight, 141/7;—he dismounts because Bourgons had been unhorsed, 141/21, and finally takes him prisoner, 142/20;—he presents Bourgons to King John, 142/32;—he shares his portion of the booty amongst his followers, 143/29;—he counsels the king to ransom Bourgons, 144/29;—he requests permission to build a castle on a high mountain, 146, and next morning takes the king to see the place, 147/7;—his request is granted, 148/6, for which he thanks the king, and defends himself against a suspicion of treachery, 148/10;—he causes the castle to be built, 149, which is named Mountalban, 150/2;—he is described as 'well a noble gentylman of all four sides,' 151/8;—he goes to see King John at Bordeaux, 151/20, who plays with him at chess, 151/29, and offers him his sister Clare to wife, 152/34, to which he readily consents, 153/17;—he is affianced<sup>1</sup> to the Lady Clare, 154/16, and the marriage is forthwith solemnized, after which great feasting and jousting take place, 154, 155;—he recounts to Ogier the evils wrought against him by C., 159/23, to whom he sends his defiance, 160/11;—he sets out with his brethren for Paris, 169/6;—he is enchanted by Mawgis, so that he appears as if he had become only twenty years of age, 169/29, and in this disguise he befools Duke Naymes and Foulques of Moryllon, 171, 172;—he enters Paris and is recognized by a 'rybawde,' 173/4, upon whom Bayard lifts his forefoot, so 'that he braste the herte in hys bely,' 173/12;—he alights at a shoemaker's house, 173/21, by whom he is recognized and threatened, 174/10;—he slays the shoemaker, 174/24, and, mounting Bayard, departs from his lodging, 174/34;—he follows after C. and the barons to the appointed race-course, 175/14;—he is scorned and mocked at by the assembled knights, 175/32, and though his heart swelled high, 176/9, yet he cared not much of what was said to him, 176/19;—he encourages Bayard, 176/28, who overruns all the other horses, 177/20, and he takes C.'s crown, but the silver and the cloth he leaves alone, 177/21;—he tells C., 'Now have I well beguiled you, and I hold you for a child,' 177/31, and, giving the spurs to Bayard, 178/6, he passes over the Seine, 178/20;—he tells C. that he will sell the crown, and pay his knights with it, 179/4, and, meeting with Mawg's and his brothers, 179/24, 180/4, they all return to Mountalban, where, being right gladly received by the Lady Clare and the folk of the castle, he relates his adventures, 180/22;—he is informed by the spy of C.'s projected attack on the castle, 184/32, which he retails to his brethren, 185/16;—his reply to C.'s messengers, 189/31;—a spy informs him how Oliver and Roland have gone sporting, 193/11, whereupon he arms his men, 193/31, who issue from the castle, 194/12, and they all come to Balencon, 194/20;—he perceives that they are discovered, 195/20, and, spurring into the opposing host, he slays Earl Emery, 195/33;—he makes great 'occysion' of knights, 196/4, and calls after Roland and Oliver, 196/7;—he fights with Bishop Turpin, 196/14, whom he jeers at, 'it were better for you to be in some church to syng some masse,' 196/24;—he unhorses Ogier, 197/17, but restores him his horse again, 197/25;—his party discomfit the enemy, 198/13, and he deals out the booty, 198/25;

<sup>1</sup> The ceremony of affiancing, or betrothal, was generally in olden times, and still is in some countries, held to be of equal importance with, if not greater than, the ceremony of marriage.

—he returns from hunting, 216/9, and makes 'feest and joye' for the coming of the traitor King John, 216/25, whom he offers to tend right well, 217/26 ;—he consents to go to C., for which he is upbraided by Alarde, 219/21 ;—he takes leave of King John, and goes to 'the fayr lady his wyff,' 220/11, telling her that John has made his peace with C., 220/21 ;—he is implored by his lady not to go, 221/10, but he will not listen to her, 222/11 ;—he and his brethren (in accordance with King John's treachery), clad in scarlet mantles, with roses in their hands, and without any armour, take their way on mules to the plain of Vaucoulores, singing as they go, 225 ;—he prays to God for protection, 226 ;—he discovers the treachery, 229, and is upbraided by his brethren, 230 ;—he demands of the escort that they help him, 231/21, and slays the Earl of Anson, 231/32 ;—his mule falls under him, 232/4 ;—he rebukes Foulkes of Maryllon for the treachery, telling him 'to doo as a gentylman oughte to doo,' 234/10 ;—he proposes certain terms of peace, 234/12, which Foulkes scornfully rejects, 235/1 ;—he and his brethren prepare to fight, 235/14, and they go amonst their foes, 235/30 ;—he is overthrown by Foulkes, 236/6, but quickly rising, he clove Foulkes 'into the harde teeth, and felde hym deed to the erthe,' 236/30 ;—he kills many dukes, earls, and knights, 237/21 ;—he is mad with anger when he sees that Guycharde has been taken prisoner, 239/4, and sets out to rescue him, making a 'grete noyse wyth his swerde amonge his enemyes,' 239/25 ;—he finds his brother Richard, 243/30, whom he causes to be taken up the rock by Alarde, whilst he and Guycharde 'rowme the waye,' 245/5 ;—his great feats of arms, 245/18 ;—he jeopardises himself as a man desperate, 245/23 ;—he tells Guymard and Ogier that he will never yield, 247/27 ;—he tells his brethren he will never yield, nor will he forsake them, 249/7 ;—he casts great stones on his enemies, 249/28 ;—he threatens to slay Ogier, 251/12 ;—he binds up the wounds of his brethren, 251/27, and gathers a heap of stones, 251/35 ;—he bewails the absence of Mawgis and Bayard, 253/5, and weeps for his brethren, 253/15 ;—he rests himself, 253/21, and sees Mawgis, mounted on Bayard, coming with his folk, 258/28, of which he informs his brethren, 259/5 ;—he takes Richard in his arms, and shows him Mawgis, 259/26 ;—he and his two brethren descend the rock, 260/12, and he counsels Ogier to flee, 260/32 ;—Bayard smells his lord, and ran mightily and kneeled before him, 262/9 ;—he arms himself, and leaps upon Bayard, 262/22, and runs upon Ogier, striking him to the ground, 262/32 ;—he causes Ogier to remount, 263/4, and bids him keep away, 263/8 ;—his sarcastic address to Ogier, after the latter had crossed the river in the general retreat, 264/12 ;—Ogier recrosses the river, and the fight is renewed, 266/33, and R. wounds Ogier, 267/25 ;—he again taunts Ogier (who had once more crossed the river), 268/29, and wishes himself to cross the river to again renew the fight, 269/12 ;—he returns to the rock Mountbron, 276/1, and falls into a swoon when he sees the sad state of Richard, 276/7 ;—he consents to do the bidding of Mawgis, 277/4 ;—he spurns his children, and upbraids his wife, for the treachery of her brother, 285/17, but, on the entreaty of his brethren, he makes peace with her, 287/11 ;—the message of King John is delivered to him, 287/18 ;—he recounts the story of his life, 288—290, and resolves to rescue King John, 290/17, for which he is thanked by the Gascons, 290/30, and for which purpose he makes preparations, 291/8, and arrives at the camp of Roland, 292/12 ;—he orders the plan of battle, 293/17, and prays 'everi

man doo his parte wyth all his power,'<sup>1</sup> 293/30;—his brethren try to persuade him not to fight with Roland, 294/3, but he will not listen to them, 294/7, and goes before his host fully armed, 294/22;—he hastily approaches Roland, 295/28, alights on foot, 296/1, appealing for mercy, and offering terms of peace, 296/6;—he remounts Bayard, 296/30, and offers to engage in single combat with Roland, 297/17;—he puts himself 'amonge the thickest of the frenshemen,' 298/35, and crying 'Mountalban!' makes great slaughter of them, 299/9;—he fights with Roland, 300/22—304/16;—he receives the traitor King John, 305/19, whom he unbinds and reproaches for his treachery, 306/10;—he learns that Richard has been taken prisoner, 310/8, his grief thereat, 310/17, and he sets out to rescue him, but is restrained by his brothers, 310/27, and they return to Mountalban, 312/25;—he swears when Mawgis returns without Richard, 321/14, but is comforted by Mawgis, 322/14;—he sets out with Mawgis and his brethren for Mountfawcon, 322/24, they put themselves in ambush, 323/6, and, being very weary, fall asleep, 323/20, from which they are awakened by Bayard, 337/29;—he leaps to his feet, and sees Richard on the ladder, and quickly lighting on Bayard, he rushes to rescue him, 338/3;—he slays Ripus, and releases Richard, 339/26;—he encases Richard in the armour of Ripus, 340/8, and hangs the corpse of the latter on the gallows, 340/13;—he tells Mawgis who it was that waked him, 340/22; he comes to the succour of Richard, 345/27;—he fights with C. (though unknowingly), 346/24, and, when he understands who it is, he withdraws, 346/33, blaming himself, 346/35, asking pardon of the Emperor, 347/10, begging for peace, 348/1, offering Mountalban and Bayard therefor, 348/3, and also he and Mawgis will go and fight against the Turks, 348/13;—he argues with C., 348, 349, but the latter will not listen, and renews the attack, 349/28;—he catches the king in his arms (because he would not smite him), and lays him on the neck of Bayard, 350/5;—he is attacked by Roland, 351/7, and lets C. fall down, 351/22;—he orders the greater part of his folk to return to Mountalban, 353/25, and himself going straight to C.'s pavilion, he cuts the cords thereof, making it fall down, 354/27, and, with the help of Mawgis, possesses himself of the golden eagle, 355/3;—he withdraws his folk from the battle, 357/29, and returns to Mountalban, 362/13, and inquires after Mawgis, 362/22;—he and his brethren grieve for Mawgis, 363/2, of whom he goes in search, 363/33, and learns that Mawgis is a prisoner in C.'s hands, 364/16;—he meets with Mawgis, 372/32;—he causes C.'s golden eagle to be set on the high tower of Mountalban, 375/1;—he honourably receives the envoys of the king, 377/1, and consents to his conditions of peace, 379/1;—he restores the peers' swords, the crown and the golden eagle to Ogier, 379/6;—he consents to go to C., 380/1;—he abides with Bishop Turpin while Ogier goes to find out C.'s intentions, 381/3;—he fears that he is betrayed, 383/20, and accuses the Bishop of treachery, 383/23;—he requests Oliver to render him the courtesy he owes him, 383/32;—he is led to C., 385/5, and after some hot words from C., 386/17, a duel is arranged, 387/16, and he returns to Mountalban, 387/28, where he recounts the news, 387/32;—he makes a feast that evening, 388/5, hears mass in the morning, and takes leave of his wife and friends, 388/11;—he leaves Mawgis in charge of the castle,

<sup>1</sup> An early synonym of the saying, 'England expects this day each man to do his duty.'

388/33, and departs for the place 'there, as the bataylle shold be doon,' 389/6;—he meets with Roland, and they exchange mutual courteous speeches, 390/20;—the fight commences, 391/1, and is continued with varying fortune till Roland yields himself, 391—393;—he and Roland ride fast to Mountalban, 394/28;—he finds out the castle is besieged, 396/16, and adopts Roland's advice, 397/1;—he marvels at C.'s hard-heartedness, 398/11;—he shows C. (who had been brought thither by the magic of Mawgis) to his brethren, 402/10, and counsels that no harm shall be done him, 403/4;—he goes to Roland's chamber, and thither summons the other Frenchmen, 403/22, and explains to them the capture of the Emperor, 404/1;—he takes them to the place where C. lies fast asleep ('for Mawgys had chermmed him soo harde'), 405/4;—he tells Roland that he will not say a foul word to his lord, 405/19, and goes in search of Mawgis, 405/24, for whom he weeps when he knows the cause of his departure, 406/12;—he pleads for peace with the Emperor, 409/6, and beseeches the peers of France to support his appeal, 410/17;—he tells Roland that since C. will not grant peace, he will seek his own right, 411/18, and tells the king that he may go hence, 411/25;—he is displeased with his brother Richard, 412/22;—he orders Bayard to be brought for C., 412/29, whom he conveys to the gate of Mountalban, 413/16;—when he sees that Bayard has been returned, 414/4, he gives the barons of France leave to go, 414/11, who courteously take leave of the Lady Clare, 415/4;—he accompanies them to the gate, 415/21, and commending them to God, 415/23, they take leave of him, 415/28;—he perceives the beginning of the second assault on the castle, 420/6, and performs great feats of arms, 420/24;—his prayer to God when he discovers C.'s intention of starving him out, 421/19;—his grief when he sees the piteous condition to which his folk are reduced, 426/3;—he orders a horse to be slain for food, 426/35;—after all the horses had been eaten, except those belonging to the four brethren, he advises them to let one of theirs be slain, 427/13;—he bewails his evil state, 428/22;—when it is suggested that Bayard should be eaten, 429/20, he prays that 'a fore ye slee hym, that ye slee me; For I may not see hym dey,' 429/30, but his heart becomes tender and he consents, 430/22, though when the crisis comes, he again says he would rather slay himself before Bayard is slain, 430/28;—he promises to get food for them, 431/5, proposes going to see his father, 431/12, and comes to his father's tent, 431/22;—he speaks to Aymon, 431/28, and tells him that they all die for hunger, 431/35;—he has permission from Aymon to take what he can find, 432/35, and, lading Bayard with bread and flesh, 433/7, returns to Mountalban, 433/11, where they all made great joy and eat their fill, 433/23;—he finds the victuals that his father had caused to be cast into the castle, 434/25, which begin 'sore to mynysse,' 436/24, and he goes to Bayard to slay him, 437/5, but he has not the heart to do him harm, 437/9, on which his younger son rebukes him for delaying, 437/11, and after long thought, he 'made bairde be leten blode moche,' 437/25;—he and his company are brought very low, 438/7, when an old man comes to him, and offers to show him a way out of Mountalban, 438/10, whereat he was so glad that he forgot his hunger, 438/24, and causing the entrance to be dug out, he and all his folk quit the castle, 439/1;—he returns and brings out the traitor King John, who had been left in the prison, 439/21;—they find themselves at the Wood of the Serpent, 440/8;—he advises his men not to separate, 441/3, and coming to the monastery, where he finds Bernard, he begs food of him, 441/15 ;—he bids farewell to Bernard, 442/19, and, with his followers, comes to the city of Ardeyne, 442/25, and is well received by the citizens, 442/28 ;—when he perceives that C. would again besiege him, he swears he will not be besieged, but would rather fight with C., 447/23, for which saying his brother Richard praises him, 447/31 ;—he calls his folk together and they issue out of the city, 448/12, and he ordains his battles as a 'wyse fyghter,' 448/17 ;—he exhorts his brethren to show themselves good knights, 448/19 ;—he chooses a hundred knights to be with him in the first battle, 448/30 ;—mounted on Bayard, he goes upon the folk of C., 449/9, whom he approaches, and pleads for peace, 450/31, which not being granted, he says, 'Syr Kynge of Fraunce, I defye you !' 451/10, and after smiting a knight, he returns to his own folk, 451/13 ;—he slays many of the enemy and rejoices his folk, 452/16 ;—his folk give way before the Frenchmen, 453/32, and he orders the retreat into Ardeyne, 454/16, himself bringing up the rear, 454/22, slaying more than a hundred of the pursuers, 454/34, and when all were within Ardeyne, he made the gates be shut, 455/10 ;—he causes the prisoner, Richard of Normandy, to be brought before him, 457/3, threatens him with death, unless peace is made, 457/9, and has him put in irons, but otherwise behaves courteously, 457/21 ;—he and his brethren often issue out of the city, 457/34, and take many prisoners, 458/2 ;—he begins to suspect that the 'goode man' before him is Mawgis, 463/22, of which when he is assured, 'he had not be soo glad yf men had gyven hym the halve of all the worlde,' 464/12 ;—he asks Mawgis to relate his story, 465/6 ;—he shows Mawgis to his brethren, whose 'hertes rose in their belies for joye,' 465/21 ;—he orders a fresh outfit for Mawgis, 466/1, and conveys him to the city gate, 467/14 ;—he sees come the messengers from C., 471/1 ;—his angry reply to them, 471/23, bidding them tell their king that he will hang Richard of Normandy on the morrow, 472/11 ;—he refuses to let Ogier see the Duke, 472/25 ;—he tells his brethren that he intends to hang Richard of Normandy, 476/11, and causes the gibbet to be dressed in the sight of C. and his host, 476/28 ;—he sends ten of his men to fetch the Duke, 477/21, of whom the Duke slays three, and the rest take to flight, 478/10 ;—he and his brethren go towards the tower where Richard was, 479/25 ;—his colloquy with Richard, 479, 480 ;—he has him brought to the gallows, 481/1, and tells him that he must either cause peace to be made, or be hanged, 481/3 ;—he bids one of his folk go to the Duke, and do what he is told, 481/21 ;—the messenger relates to him how C. will have no peace, 486/16 ;—he tells Richard how the peers have deserted C., 486/21, and craves his pardon for the shame done to him, 487/1, releasing him from the gallows, 487/7, and tells him to lean on this wall and see what C. will do, 487/11 ;—he perceives the messenger sent after the peers, 487/31, and their return to C., 488/24 ;—he goes to meet the messenger of peace, 489/19, and offers to do all—and more if necessary—that C. requires of him, 490/2 ;—he gives Bayard in charge to Duke Naymes, 490/12, and hangs his banner on the tower in token that he accepts the conditions of the peace, 490/14 ;—he arrays h'inslf as a pilgrim, 491/5, and commends his wife and children to Duke Richard, 491/10 ;—he tries to soothe his lady, who had swooned, 491/20, 'and thenne he toke on his waye,' 491/27, and takes leave of his brethren and Duke Richard, 492/14 ;—he departs for the Holy Land, and arrives at Constantinople, 498/9, where he meets with his cousin Mawgis, 498/25, to whom he rehearses the treaty of peace, 499/4 ;—he and Mawgis come

'but a lityll myle fro' Jerusalem, 500/2, and they see a great host about the city, 500/11;—he inquires who they are before the city, 500/25, and learns how it had been betrayed, 501;—he sees the cruel battle between the Christians and Saracens, and wishes that he had his harness, 503/18, and laments that he has not Bayard and Flamberde, 504/5;—he is angry when the Turks trample down his lodging, 504/32, and taking a fork 'with bothe his handes,' 'he smote them doun two & two at ones, as swynes,' 505/1; he is interviewed by the Earl Rames, to whom he relates his story, 506, 507;—he accepts the leadership of the barons of Syria, and accepts their homage, 508/23;—he is honourably entertained by the Earl Rames, and lodged in his pavilion, 509/1;—he is offered many valuable things, 509/16, but accepts only 'a complete harneys for his body, a swerde, and an horse,' 509/22, dealing the remainder to the poor knights, 509/24;—he advises the barons of Syria to assault the city, 512/6, but while thus devising, the Persians issue out, 512/12;—he instantly arms himself, 512/14, and they ordain their battles as well as they could, 512/28;—he slays King Margary, 513/10, and seeing the 'merveylls of armes' performed by Mawgis, he asks Earl Rames if he 'sawe ever so good an hermyte,' 513/27;—he puts himself in the battle 'as a wolfe amonge a flocke of shepe,' 515/25;—he slays many of the Turks or Persians, 515, 516;—he picks up a great balk of timber, 517/17, which he puts under the portcullis of the gate of the city, so that it could not be shut, 518/7, and he enters Jerusalem, followed by the barons and Mawgis, 518/19;—he keeps the gate till a great part of the Christians are within the city, 518/32, and calls Mawgis to take care of this gate, while he goes to open another, 519/1;—he commands the tower where King Thomas is kept prisoner to be assaulted, 521/21, and is the first to climb up the ladders, 521/24;—seeing the perilous condition of King Thomas, he offers peace to Barbas, 522/28;—his meeting with King Thomas, 523/12, who entertains him honourably, 524/15;—he takes leave of King Thomas, and entering a ship, arrives at Palermo, 524/27, where he is welcomed by King Simon, 525/17;—he again makes great slaughter of the Persians, 527/12;—he is sorry when he finds that Barbas is safe aboard, 529/10, and he causes his ship to be burnt with 'boltes of wyldre fyre,' 529/4;—he is thanked by King Simon for his prowess, 529/20, and honourably entertained, and taking leave of Simon, he comes to Rome, confesses to the Pope, and finally reaches Ardeyne, 530;—his brethren swoon for joy when they see him, 531/3, and he relates his adventures, 531/15;—he is recomforted when he hears that his wife and children are well, 531/32, but observing the deception played on him by his brethren, he tells them he awaits to hear some heavy tidings, 532/3, and swoons for sorrow when the manner of the Lady Clare's death has been rehearsed to him, 532/20;—when he sees her tomb, he swoons thrice, 533/3;—when he sees his children, he tells them to be good, 'for fere ye shall myssae me soone,' 533/19;—he takes his way to Mountalban, 533/25, where he is received with great joy, 534/2;—he vows never to marry again, 534/24;—he parts his inheritance amongst his brethren, 535/31, and married them all nobly and richly, 536/2;—he dwells at Mountalban with his children, endoctrining them in good and virtuous manners, and in the use of arms, 536/7, tells them it is time they were made knights, 536/20, and promises to send them to Paris come seven nights, 536/34;—he causes proper outfits to be prepared for his sons, 537, appoints five hundred knights to bear them company, 538/1, and giving them good counsel and his blessing, he weepingly bids them farewell, 538, 539;—he is sent for by C. to come to Paris, 547/27, and calling his brethren to him, 548/5, they all arrive at Paris, 548/31, where they are joyfully received, 549/3;—he extols his sons, 549/5, and has an interview with C., 549/16;—his sons relate to him their adventures, 549/25;—he thanks C. for the worship done to his children, 550/6;—he and his brethren cast themselves at the king's feet, thanking him for the amity and concord that has been established between them, 550/16;—he instructs his sons how to conduct themselves in tomorrow's battle, 552/1;—he gives his good sword Flamberd to Aymonet, 554/4, and after blessing his sons, he brings them to the Isle of our Lady, 554/12;—he is made acquainted with the treachery of Gryffen of Hautebranche, 554/18, and orders his brother Richard to take measures to guard against its accomplishment, 554/27;—he returns to the palace of the king, 555/12, and tells him not to be suspicious of Richard, 555/20, and they and others go up the Tower of Seine, 555/23;—he acquaints the king with the reason why Richard has gone on with so great fellowship, 556/9, and this he repeats to Roland, 558/10;—he thanks God much when he perceives that his sons have vanquished the children of Foulkes, 569/19, abides in Paris till they are made whole of their wounds, 570/3, and taking leave of C., 570/8, they all depart for Mountalban, 570/13;—he rests at Bordeaux, and there calling his sons, gives Arden to Jonnet, and Mountalban to Aymonet, 570/17;—his brethren, for-seeing that he means to dedicate himself to the service of God, make great sorrow, 570/26, for which he rebukes them, 570/29;—he arrives at Mountalban, where he tells his subjects that they must pay their homage to Aymonet, 571/13;—then, laying aside his clothing, he dons the garb of a hermit, 571/18, and leaving the palace, comes to the town gate, 571/24, and bids the porter to tell his brethren on the morrow that he has gone to do penance to save his soul, 572/1;—he gives the porter a ring, and goes on his way, 572/12;—he wanders through the woods a long while, and finally reaches Cologne, where the church of St. Peter is being built, 576/18, and he obtains employment in carrying stones and mortar, 577, 578, and will only accept a penny a day to buy bread with, 579/20;—the other labourers become envious of him, 580/18, and they agree to slay him, 580/30;—he is slain next day as he slept with the stroke of a hammer, and feeling the stroke, his last prayer ere his soul departed from his body was that Jesus would pardon those who had brought him to his death, 581/21;—his body is put into a sack, and cast into the Rhine, 581/34, but did not go to the bottom of the water, 582/28;—all the fish of the river gather about the corpse, and keep it upon the water, 582/31, and torches appeared round it, so that the folk weened that the river was on fire, 583/4;—it is discovered to be the corpse of R., 583/29;—it is brought to land, and mass said over it in the church, 584/12;—the corpse rises up, and was borne out of the church to the cart in which it had been brought there, 584/28;—the cart containing the corpse proceeds in a miraculous manner, followed by all the people of Cologne, till it comes to the little town of Croyne, where it stops, 585/15, and here our Lord worked many miracles for love of the holy body, 585/18;—the visage of the corpse is uncovered so that it may be recognized, 586/4;—his brethren hear from a pilgrim of the remarkable events, 586/24, and they weep for pity of R., 589/1;—they arrive at Croyne, and recognize their brother, over whom they sore lament, 589/13;—the corpse is entombed, he is called St. Repnawde the flartpr, and the memory of him is put in writing, 590—592.

- Renyer, one of C.'s peers, 69/22 ;—he is placed in front of the 'masters gate' at Mountaynford, 76/31.
- Reyner, cousin of Duke Benes, slain by the Earl Guenes, 53/29.
- Riplemonde, Rypus of, nephew of Foulkes of Morillon, commanded by C. to hang Richard, 333/5 ;—he willingly consents because Richard slew his uncle at Balencon, 333/9 ;—he takes the oaths of the Twelve Peers that they will do him no hurt when he returns, 333/20 ;—he leads Richard forth to the gallows, 334/7 ;—arrived at Mountfawcon, he shows Richard the gallows, and tells him he will hang him with his own hand, 334/20 ;—he grants permission to Richard to repeat his orison (' wherof he dyd like a fole'), 336/5 ;—he is abashed when he sees R., tells Richard he is deliverd, begs his mercy, and tells him to go down from the ladder, 338 ;—he is reproved by R. and Mawgis, 339/19, and slain by R. with his sword Flamberd, 339/26 ;—his body is stripped of his armour, and trussed up on the gallows with the halter round his neck, 340.
- Rohars (Rohart), a son of Foulkes of Morillon, possesses a false heart, 541/1 ;—he conspires with his brother to harm the sons of R., 543/12 ;—being angry for C.'s reproach to his brother, he throws down his gage and offers to fight Aymonet, 545/33 ;—C. tells him he takes a wrong way, and it will be overlate when he shall repent it, 546/1 ;—he is severely wounded and unhorsed by Yonnet, 563/6 ;—he is overthrown by Aymonet, 565/17 ;—Yonnet cuts off one of his arms, and smites him on the bare head, 567/29 ;—he cries for mercy, which he does not obtain, 568/8, but loses a leg, and finally his head, 568/14 ;—his body is drawn at horses' tails and hanged with that of Constans, 569/3.
- Rouncevals, the treason at the battle of, hinted at, 569/18.
- Roussellon, Roussillon, Roussyllon, Duke Rycharde (also called Gerarde) of, had not done the bidding of C., 17/8 ;—comes to help Duke Benes, 39/13 ;—he is informed of the approach of C., against whose host he proceeds, 41/23 ;—he slays an Almayn, and raises his war-cry, 42/7 ;—he slays one of Ogier's men, 42/18 ;—he counsels Nantuell that they should turn back, 43/20, and sends to Duke Benes for aid, 43/28 ;—his nephew is killed by Walleron of Bollon, 43/24 ;—he is overthrown by C., 45/19 ;—he counsels that the fight be renewed on the morrow, 46/15 ;—he adopts Nantuell's advice, and sends messengers to C., lamenting the death of Lohier, and offering their allegiance, 47/1 ;—he recommends that they all take off their 'good gownes,' and go naked before C., crying him mercy, 49/24.
- ROWLANDE OF BRETAGN (nephew of C.), first meets with C., 162/22 ;—he is made a knight, 163/6 ;—he offers to go and raise the siege of Cologne, 163/21 ;—he goes to Cologne, puts the Saracens to rout, and, taking prisoner Escorfawde, brings him back with himself to Paris, 164—166 ; he intercedes for Escorfawde, 166/28 ;—he advises C. to exile R., 182/3 ;—he is put in command of C.'s host, 188/6 ;—he pitches his tent at Balencon, 191/20 ;—he marvels at the strength of Mountalban, 192/1, and says that they will never be able to take it, 192/5 ;—he extols R.'s character, 192/16 ;—he goes hawking, 192/28 ;—he gets a hint of what has been done at Balencon during his absence, 199/29, wherewith he is astounded, 200/12, and calls upon his barons for counsel, and, fearing the wrath of C., offers to go to the Holy Land, but is recomforted by Bishop Turpin, 200/34 ;—he returns to C.'s camp (with a hundred followers all afoot because they had lost their horses), and is so ashamed that he remains hid in Duke Naymes's tent, for he dare look no man in the face, 201/4;—he sharply reproves Ogier, whom he calls a coward, 272/4;—he is 'wonderful wrothe' when he hears Ogier's rebuke, and advances against him to smite him, 273/1;—he is rebuked by Duke Naymes, and advised by C. to keep quiet, 273/12;—he tells Ogier that he shall be glad to meet R. mounted on Bayard, 274/30;—he is informed by Pygwade of the flight of King John, 280/18, and also of the whereabouts of the Four Sons and Mawgis, 280/30;—he thanks Pygwade, and tells him he deserves a great reward, 281/1;—he calls his knights to follow him and tells Ogier to go also, so that he may see the great prowess of R.; 281/4;—he comes to St. Lazare, 'seeking,' he tells the Abbot, 'the falseste traytour of the worlde,' 281/24;—he deals roughly with the Abbot when the latter refuses to yield King John, 282/4;—he enters the cloister, finding King John on his knees before an image of the Virgin, 282/17;—he derides King John for the failure of his treachery, and blindfolding him, places him on a horse with his face to the tail, 282/23, and returns with him and his company to Mountfawcon, 283/33;—he espies the coming of R.'s forces, 292/15, and swears to Ogier that before evening it shall be seen who shall be master, 293/8;—he sets his battle in order, 293/15;—he asks his friends what they think of R.'s battle array, 294/26;—stung to the quick, because of the praise bestowed on R., he rushes against him, 295/19;—he tells R. he cannot accept the proposed terms of peace unless Mawgis is delivered to him, 296/24;—he comes to an agreement with R. for a single combat, and departs to take leave of his fellows, 297/24;—he tells Oliver and the others that R. has required to fight with him 'body to body,' 298/5, but his barons dissuade him from the single combat, 298/14, to which he agrees, 298/22, and shouting Mountjoy St. Denis! he commences the battle at Mountfawcon, 298/28;—he calls on R. to come to single combat, 300/13, the duel forthwith commences, 300/22;—he is unhorsed, 302/13;—in his wrath he would cut off Melantes' head, 302/24, and seeing how Bayard is dealing with Melantes, he turns to smite Bayard, 303/4;—he is mocked by R., 303/12, 29;—he cleaves R.'s shield, 304/4, and gibes back at R., 304/8;—he calls sorrowfully after R., 304/32;—he is withheld from going to the Wood of the Serpent with R. to finish the combat, 305/14;—his folk are discomfited, and all ashamed, 308/4;—he is mocked by Ogier, and runs upon him with his sword, but is stayed by Oliver, 308/10;—he fights with Richard, 308/30, and calls on him to surrender, 309/25;—he brings Richard to C. as a prisoner, 319/12;—he is prayed by C. to go and see Richard hanged, and offered therefor the city of Cologne, 326/8;—he refuses to do the bidding of C., prays the Twelve Peers not to take the charge on them, and threatens to forsake C. and serve under R., 326/14;—he vows to keep his promise to Richard, 332/13;—he attacks R. so fiercely that the latter has to let go of C., 351/5, but being himself attacked by R.'s brothers, he puts himself to flight, 351/24;—he reproaches C., 352/19;—he restrains C. from striking Mawgis, 370/6;—he and the other Peers are awakened by C., 371/19;—he comes to Balencon to take R., 384/10;

<sup>1</sup> With his usual bias, the chronicler has made R. put his sword Flamberd in the sheath, awaiting with his spear only the onslaught of Roland. The kinsmen of R., apparently deeming the contest to be unequal (with the exception of Ogier, who tells them that R. is no child to be made afraid so lightly as they trow), induce Oliver to remonstrate with Roland, who then, 'like as a curteys man,' did as he was told, and 'toke a speere' (pp. 300—302).

—he brings R. into C.'s pavilion, 385/7;—he offers to fight for C. against R., 387/19;—he prepares for the combat, and receives C.'s blessing, 390/2;—he arrives at the 'pintre' of Mountfawcon [here fortuitously printed Mountalban], and meets with R., and after the usual amenities have passed, the fight begins, 390/20, but eventually Roland surrenders to R., because he knows well that R. is in the right, and that he is in the wrong, 393/22;—he is entertained by R. at Mountalban in a princely manner, 394/27;—he is told by R. of C.'s designs against the castle, 396/18, and R. is counselled by him to send to C. stating how honourably he is treated, and that R. is willing to surrender the castle, 396/22;—he is awakened by R., who tells him to assemble the other barons of C., and when they are all come, R. tells them that C. is his prisoner, 403/23, whereat he is amazed, 404/21;—he views C., who had been 'chernd soo harde,' that he cannot be awakened, 405/4;—he marvels at the mansuetude of R., 412/1;—he is released by R., 414/6, and takes his leave of the Lady Clare, 415/5;—he comes before C., 416/5;—he tells C. that Mawgis has gone from Mountalban, 417/14;—he enters the secret way by which R. had gone from Mountalban, and reports the result to C., 445/26;—he counsels C. to make peace, 455/26;—he tells C. that he will not see Richard of Normandy until he makes peace with R., 468/22;—he tells C. that if Duke Richard is hanged, it will be all through his (C.'s) pride, 473/17;—he threatens C. that if the Duke Richard is hanged, he will quit C.'s service, 475/28;—he first spies the preparations for the hanging of Duke Richard, 476/30, and acquaints C. thereof, 476/32;—he supplements Duke Richard of Normandy's appeal to C. to make peace with R., 482/24;—he becomes surety for Yonnet and Aymonet, 546/31;—he is not content when he sees Richard and his folk in arms, 557/4;—he cries out at the traitor Gryffen of Hautebranche, 557/17;—he tells C. that none can beware of traitors, 558/1;—he praises R. and Richard for acting as good knights should do, 558/20.

RYCHARDE, THE YOUNGEST SON OF AYMON, at the court at Paris, 16/24;—is knighted by C., 31/21;—he comes to C.'s court at Paris, 59/17;—he perceives the host of C. coming to Mountaynford, and tells his brother Guycharde, 70/13;—he slays king Yon of St. Omars, 82/25, and captures his horse, 82/26;—he encourages R., 138/1;—he fears that R. is being chased, 179/30;—he is overthrown by Ogier, but quickly rises up again, 197/4;—his heart shakes for fear of betrayal, 228/25, and he rebukes R. for not taking the good advice offered him, 229/4;—he is the first to repent of having doubted R., 230/25;—he flees to the rock Mountbron, 238/22;—he slays many earls and knights, 240/31;—he is wounded by Gerarde of Valcome, whom he forthwith slays outright, 241;—he laments the absence of his brethren, and prays God to succour them, 242;—he is discovered by R., 243/25;—he recovers from his swoon, and counsels R. that they should go to the top of the rock, 244/24;—he asks R. to bind up his belly, so that he may help in the fight, 250/1; he is lifted up by R. to see the coming of Mawgis, 259/26;—he abides at the top of the hill because he could not move, 260/9;—his brothers and Mawgis lament over his evil condition, 276;—he is made whole of his wounds by Mawgis, 277/15, and inquires after Ogier and his folk, 277/32;—he is mounted on a horse, and they all return to Mountalban, 278/14;—he counsels his brothers to beg R. to pardon the Lady Clare, 286/18;—he tells his brethren that they shall do the will of R., 290/23; he fights as valiantly as R., and calls on the latter to give some of his great strokes upon the Frenchmen, 299/16;<sup>1</sup>—he fights with Roland, and is unhorsed, 308/30;—he is attacked by forty Frenchmen all at once, and his horse is killed under him, 309/12;—he is smitten by Humall the Breton, 309/19, and overthrown by the Earl Guydellon from behind, 309/22;—he yields himself to Roland, 309/27, and is set upon 'a mewle,' 310/1;—his servant acquaints R. with the case, 310/8;—he is brought before C. as a prisoner, 318/12;—he is derided by C., whom he sharply answers, 319/18;—he wrestles with C., and they both fall, 320/1;—whilst engaged in mutual recrimination with C., he turns and sees Mawgis, whereon he becomes sure of his life, 320;—he hears C. call separately on each of his peers to hang him, and also their refusal, 324—328;—he thanks the barons for travelling themselves for him, but advises them not to lose the grace of C., 331/18;—he is reproached by Ogier, 331/31;—he pardons Roland, 332/4;—he tells Ogier that he had seen Mawgis 'ryghtnow,' 332/16;—he is delivered to Rypus of Riplemonde, and led forth to execution, 334/4;—he begs Rypus to have pity upon him, 334/32;—he asks for a priest to shrive him, 335/9, and when the priest ('som sayen that he was a bysshop') came, he relates 'many moo synnes than ever he dyd,' and this was 'for to lengthe the tyme,' 335/12;—he receives absolution, 335/20, and asks Rypus for time to say an orison that he 'dyde lerne in his youthe,' 335/30;—he offers up his prayers, and then resigns himself to Rypus, 336;—he is perceived by his brethren, 338/3, and told by Rypus of his release, 338/18;—he is brought down the ladder by R., 339/31;—he puts on the armour of Rypus, 340/7;—he relates the goodness of the barons of France, and begs permission to show himself to Ogier before returning to Mountalban, 341/9;—he goes to the host of C., bearing the banner of Rypus, 342/5, which deceives C. and the barons, 342/14;—he makes himself known to Ogier, and tells him the fate of Rypus, 343/23;—he tells C. who he is, recounting the fate of Rypus, and defying him, 344/16, and they fight each other, 344/30;—he is unhorsed, but quickly aims such a stroke at C. that he kills his horse, 345/3;—he sounds his horn, and his brothers come to his succour, 345/20;—he cuts the cords of C.'s pavilion, making it to fall down, 354/27;—he is angry with R. for returning C.'s golden eagle, 379/13;—he counsels R. to hang C. forthwith, and offers to do the job himself at once, 402/16, but afterwards counsels that R. should do his own will in the matter, 403/15;—bewailing the departure of Mawgis, he would have slain C., but is restrained therefrom by R., 406/20;—he admonishes C. to be more circumspect in his language, 408/15;—he considers R. to be mad and working great folly in releasing C., 412/5;—he retorts upon R. that he should have made peace with C., when the latter was their prisoner, 421/24;—he points out to R. how much better they had fared if his counsel had been followed, and grieves over their present distress, 422/20;—he tells R. that he will not have his horse slain for food, because it is R.'s great pride that has brought them to their present plight, 427/15;—but being rebuked by Aymonet, he consents, and his horse is slain and 'ful savourly' eaten, 428, and he is willing to yield up his own flesh if it would comfort R., 429;—he tells R. that now he speaks like a knight, and that he will slay more than a hundred of C.'s men, because C. 'is

<sup>1</sup> Reynawde had apparently been dealing small strokes like those of the 'lityll Rycharde,' because he did not wish to be thought more of might than Richard, that is, in the choice, sly humour of the text, 'Reynawde faughte not for to loke the better upon hym' (i. e. Richard).

- not mannered like a gentryllman,' 447/32 ;—he makes a prisoner of Richard Duke of Normandy, 455/3 ;—he counsels R. to proceed to Paris, the better to know C.'s intention, and whether any wrong has been done to R.'s sons, 548/14 ;—he goes with his followers to the Isle of Our Lady, 555/10 ;—he is suspected of treachery by C., 556/1 ;—he disarms himself and followers, and coming to C., makes him honourable reverence, 558/31 ;—he shows C. how Griffen of Hautebranche would have wronged his nephews, and vows that he will neve: suffer them to be wronged, 559/7 ;—his grief at the departure of R., 574/24.
- Ryne (Rhine), the body of R. is cast into the river, 581/34 ;—the fishes of the, bear up the body of R., 582/31 ;—it seems to be afire owing to the miraculous light about it, 583/3.
- Salamon, King, the fair, serves C. with the cup, 38/11, 61/5.
- Saliene (also spelt Galiene), the 'love' of C., whom he wedded on the same day that he was crowned King of France, 327/5.
- Savary, a knight, advises Lohier to deal gently with Duke Benes, 21/31.
- Sawmore (Saumur), the Four Sons arrive at, 62/30.
- Sernoble, taken by C.'s army, 192/8.
- Serpent, the Wood of the, whither King John proposes to betake himself after the failure of his treachery, 279/24 ;—R. is on his way to, when he meets King John, 305/19 ;—the secret way between Mountalban and, is discovered to R., 438/16.
- Seveyne, Sayne, Hernyer of, promises C., on conditions, to yield him the Four Sons prisoners within a month, 90/1 ;—his request is granted, 90/8, and he proceeds to put his treacherous scheme in operation, 90/22 ;—he reaches Mountaynforde, and, pleading that he is pursued by C., is quickly admitted, 90/31 ;—he is made right welcome by R., 91/30, and tells lies about the condition of C.'s host, 92/1 ;—after supper, he is 'well and honestly brought to bed,' 92/22, but, 'as the false Judas,' he slept not, 92/24, and arising, he lets down the drawbridge, and slays the watchman, 92/30 ;—he lets in Guyon of Bourgoyne, 93/1, and then his treachery is made known to R., 93/24 ;—he sharply attacks R. and his brethren, who are in the pit, 95/5 ;—he is made prisoner, and dire retribution is taken on him as a traitor, 96—97.
- Simon of Puyll, the King of Palermo, sees R. arrive, makes great cheer with him, and tells him of Barbas, 525 ;—he thanks R., and offers him all his possessions as a reward, 529/19, and after honourably feasting and entertaining R., he takes leave of him, 530/16.
- Simon, Sir, a knight, gives Duke Benes good counsel, 20/10.
- Soysson (Soissons), the Four Sons arrive at, 63/34.
- Soyssons, the battle in the valley of, between Earl Guenes and Duke Benes, 52—58.
- Spayne, Dyssers of, joins C. at Paris, 186/28.
- Spayne (Spain), was apparently then accounted a wealthy country, 170/22.
- St. Germaine of the meadowes, near Paris, 34/28 ;—burial of Lohier at, 35/26 ;—Constans and Rohars watch in the church of, the night before the fight, 552/6.
- St. Gyle Tarasoon, conquered by Borgons, 132/31.
- St. James in Gales (Galicia), C. goes on a pilgrimage to, 156/14.
- St. John the Baptist, C.'s court at Paris on the feast of, 51/17.
- St. Lazare, the Abbey of, in the Wood of the Serpent, where King John proposes to take up his residence as a monk, 279/27 ;—the Abbot of, makes King John a monk, 281/23 ;—Roland and Oliver arrive at, where

- they are welcomed by the Abbot, 281/32, who is dealt savagely with by Roland, and the Prior also by Oliver, 282/4, and he and all his monks run away, leaving King John to his fate, 282/13.
- St. Marcell, where the treacherous barons ambush themselves, 556/16.
- St. Mychaell, Mount, R. is in a hurry to go to, naked in his 'smalle lynen clothes,' 220/9.
- St. Nycolas, the chapel of, at Mountalban, 221/33, 223/33.
- St. Omars, King Yon of, overthrows one of R.'s knights, 82/11, but is himself slain by Richard, 82/25.
- St. Peter, the church of, at Cologne, in the building of which R. assisted as a labourer, 576/18.
- St. Quynntyne, Enguerran of, 42/31.
- St. Stevyns church at Jerusalem, 501/33;—Earl Jaffras prevents the Turks from entering Jerusalem by the gate of, 504/20.
- St. Vyctor, near Paris, the jousting at, 32/16;—the church of, where the sons of R. watch the night preceding the fight, 552/6.
- Steuyne, Sir, one of Roussillon's messengers to C., 47/26;—C.'s answer to, 48/17.
- Surry (? Syria), the Barons of, tender their homage to and elect R. for their 'hede captayne,' 508/14;—they are exhorted by Mawgis, and await the onset of Barbas, 512/19.
- Symon, Sir, a knight, slain by Duke Benes, 45/4.
- Talles, the tower (? town) of, 512/32.
- Temple, the, at Jerusalem, 500/4.
- Thiery, Tyery, Thyerry, one of C.'s knights, slain by Alarde, 80/28.
- Tholouse (Toulouse), conquered by Borgons, 132/31.
- Tower of David at Jerusalem, 500/4, where King Thomas is kept prisoner, 519/31;—it is assaulted by R., 521/24.
- Tower of Sayne, where C., R., and the barons go to view the fight between Aymonet and Yonnet and Constans and Rohars, 555/22.
- Troye, Aubrey of, seeks aid of C., 40/30.
- Troye, Hector of, was not worth more than R., 127/28.
- Troye, Pyramus (Priam) of, never had better men to his children than are the Four Sons, 127/19.
- Troyes, the town of, 39/22, besieged by Duke Benes, 40/32;—the battle at, 41 et seq.
- TURFYN (Turpin), the Archbishop of Paris, 32/34;—he joins C. at Paris, 187/13;—is left in charge of Roland's forces at Balencon, 193/1;—he sees three ravens and three 'dawes' flying over Roland's pavilion, which he regards as an evil token, 194/27;—he sees the enemy come, and informs Ogier thereof, 195/2;—he fights furiously with R., 196/16;—he recomforts Roland, 200/29;—he relates to C. the disaster that has overtaken the force of Roland, 201/16;—he tells Roland that the approaching force is that of R., and they will have to fight, 292/21;—praises R. as a good guide, a valiant man, and a worthy captain, 295/13;—C. offers to make him Pope of Rome, if he will take and hang Richard, 325/14, but he refuses, 325/16;—he swears to R. that he has not betrayed him, and that he will live and die with him, 383/26;—he says mass before R.'s sons on the eve of their fight, 552/10;—he celebrates the ceremony of swearing on the sacred relics, 559/35, and gives the benediction to R.'s sons (this was apparently withheld from the sons of Foulkes), 560/20.

Valcome, Gerarde of, cousin of Foulkes of Moryllon, grieving over the death of Foulkes, perceives Richard, whom he so wounds that 'the guttes come oute of the body into his lappe,' 241, and he is immediately thereafter slain by Richard, 241/32.

Valery, the lordship of, given to R. by King John, 150/20.

Valoys (Valois), Berenger of, is requested by C. forthwith to hang Richard, but politely refuses, 324/1.

Vaucoulores, the plain of, the spot appointed by C. and King John for the betrayal of the Four Sons, 212/5;—the Sons depart for, clad in scarlet, mounted on mules, bearing roses in their hands, escorted by the eight earls, and singing by the way, 224, 225;—they arrive at, and description of the place, 227/15;—the great battle at, 228—270.

Vydelon, one of C.'s barons, 104/5.

Vylaunche, the name of Roland's horse, 394/2.

Water, Sir, a knight in attendance on the Lady Clare, 144/4.

Water, Sir, a knight of Duke Benes, counsels him to submit to C., 26/10.

Wylliam the Englysse (William the Englishman), at C.'s court, 59/12.

Ymes, one of Simon of Puyll's knights, 526/6.

Yonnet, the younger son of R., is spurned by R. in his anger at King John's treachery, 285/5;—he asks R. why he tarries from slaying Bayard, 437/11;—he promises R. to behave to his brother as a younger son should behave, 538/27;—he arrives at the palace of C. at Paris, 540/18;—he receives a knife from C., and on going to his place, accidentally shoves Constans with his elbow, 544/26;—he reproves Constans for his unseemly language, tells him that he lies, and defies him, throwing down his gage, 545/3;—he is knighted by C., 547/24;—he gives Rohars a stroke so that the sword entered his head a finger deep, 563/8;—he unhorses Rohars, and himself dismounts, 563/16;<sup>1</sup>—he will not call his brother to help him to slay Rohars, 567/13;—he cuts an arm off from Rohars, 567/29, and calls on him to acknowledge that R. was no traitor, 567/32;—he smites him on the bare head with the pomel of his sword, 568/5;—he cuts off one of his legs, again calls on him to confess, and finally smites off his head, 568/14;—Ardeyn is given by R. to, 570/19;—he takes his way there, and is received with homage, 571/8.

Yves, Sir, slain by the Saracens, 16/16.

<sup>1</sup> No names are given to the horses; but, like Bayard, Yonnet's horse runs after that of Rohars, and would have strangled it, at which C. begins to laugh, 563/22.

The Publications for 1872-85 (one guinea each year) are:—

49.	An Old English Miscellany, containing a Bestiary, Kentish Sermons, Proverbs of Alfred, and Religious Poems of the 13th cent., ed. from the MSS. by the Rev. R. Morris, LL.D.	10s.	1872
50.	King Alfred's West-Saxon Version of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. H. Sweet, M.A.	Part II. 10s.	"
51.	The Life of St Juliana, 2 versions, A.D. 1230, with translations; ed. T. O. Cockayne & E. Brook.	2s.	"
52.	Palladius on Husbandry, englished ab. 1420 A.D., ed. Rev. Barton Lodge, M.A.	Part I. 10s.	"
53.	Old-English Homilies, Series II, and three Hymns to the Virgin and God, 13th-century, with the music to two of them, in old and modern notation; ed. Rev. R. Morris, LL.D.	8s.	1873
54.	The Vision of Piers Plowman, Text C: Richard the Redeles by William, the author of the Vision ) and The Crowned King; Part III., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.	18s.	"
55.	Generydes, a Romance, ed. ab. 1440 A.D., W. Aldis Wright, M.A.	Part I. 3s.	"
56.	The Gest Hystoriale of the Destruction of Troy, in alliterative verse; ed. by D. Donaldson, Esq., and the late Rev. G. A. Panton.	Part II. 10s. 6d.	1874
57.	The Early English Version of the "Cursor Mundi": in four Texts, edited by the Rev. R. Morris, M.A., LL.D.	Part I, with 2 photolithographic facsimiles. 10s. 6d.	"
58.	The Blickling Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. R. Morris, LL.D.	Part I. 8s.	"
59.	The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part II. 15s.	1875
60.	Mediacycuns on the Soper of Our Lorde (by Robert of Brunne), edited by J. M. Cowper.	2s. 6d.	"
61.	The Romance and Prophecies of Thomas of Erceuldoune, from 5 MSS.; ed. Dr. J. A. H. Murray.	10s. 6d.	"
62.	The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part III. 15s.	1876
63.	The Blickling Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part II. 7s.	"
64.	Francis Thynne's Embleames and Epigrams, A.D. 1600, ed. F. J. Furnivall.	7s.	"
65.	Be Domes Denge (Bede's De Die Judicii ), &c., ed. J. R. Lumby, B.D.	2s.	"
66.	The "Cursor Mundi," in four Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part IV, with 2 autotypes. 10s.	1877
67.	Notes on Piers Plowman, by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.	Part I. 21s.	"
68.	The "Cursor Mundi," in 4 Texts, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part V. 25s.	1878
69.	Adam Davie's 5 Dreams about Edward II., &c., ed. P. J. Furnivall, M.A.	5s.	"
70.	Generydes, a Romance, ed. W. Aldis Wright, M.A.	Part II. 4s.	"
71.	The Lay Folks Mass-Book, four texts, ed. Rev. Canon Simmons.	25s.	1879
72.	Palladius on Husbandry, englished ab. 1420 A.D., Part II. Ed. S. J. Hertrage, B.A.	15s.	"
73.	The Blickling Homilies, 971 A.D., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	Part III. 10s.	1880
74.	English Works of Wyclif, hitherto unprinted, ed. P. D. Matthew, Esq.	20s.	"
75.	Catholicon Anglicum, an early English Dictionary, from Lord Monson's MS. A.D. 1483, ed., with Introduction & Notes, by S. J. Hertrage, B.A.; and with a Preface by H. B. Wheatley.	20s.	1881
76.	Aelfric's Metrical Lives of Saints, in MS. Cott. Jul. E. 7., ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A.	Part I. 10s.	"
77.	Beowulf, the unique MS. autotyped and translated, edited by Prof. Zupitza, Ph.D.	25s.	1882
78.	The Fifty Earliest English Wills in the Court of Probate, 1387-1439, ed. by F. J. Furnivall, M.A.	7s.	"
79.	King Alfred's Orosius, from Lord Tollenache's 9th century MS., Part I, ed. H. Sweet, M.A.	13s.	1883
	Extra Volume. Facsimile of the Epinal Glossary, 8th cent., ed. H. Sweet, M.A.	15s.	"
80.	The Early-English Life of St. Katherine and its Latin Original, ed. Dr. Emenkel.	12s.	1884
81.	Piers Plowman: Notes, Glossary, &c. Part IV, completing the work, ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A.	18s.	"
82.	Aelfric's Metrical Lives of Saints, MS. Cott. Jul. E. 7., ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, M.A., LL.D.	Part II. 12s.	1885
83.	The Oldest English Texts, Charters, &c., ed. H. Sweet, M.A.	20s.	"

EXTRA SERIES.

The Publications for 1867-1878 (one guinea each year) are:—

I.	William of Palerne; or, William and the Werwolf. Re-edited by Prof. Skeat, Lit.D.	13s.	1867
II.	Early English Pronunciation, with especial Reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S.	Part I. 10s.	"
III.	Caxton's Book of Curtesye, in Three Versions. Ed. F. J. Furnivall.	5s.	1868
IV.	Havelok the Dane. Re-edited by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.	10s.	"
V.	Chaucer's Boethius. Edited from the two best MSS. by Rev. Dr. R. Morris.	12s.	"
VI.	Cheveiers Assaigne. Re-edited from the unique MS. by H. H. Gibbs, Esq., M.A.	3s.	"
VII.	Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S.	Part II. 10s.	1869
VIII.	Queene Elizabethes Achademy, &c. Ed. F. J. Furnivall. Essays on early Italian and German Books of Courtesy, by W. M. Rossetti and Dr. E. Oswald.	13s.	"
IX.	Awdley's Fraternity of Vacabondes, Harman's Caveat, &c. Ed. E. Viles & F. J. Furnivall.	7s. 6d.	"
X.	Andrew Boorde's Introduction of Knowledge, 1547, Dyetary of Helth, 1542, Barnes in Defence of the Bere, 1542-3. Ed. F. J. Furnivall.	18s.	1870
XI.	Barbour's Bruce, Part I. Ed. from MSS. and editions, by Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.	12s.	"
XII.	England in Henry VIII's Time: a Dialogue between Cardinal Pole & Lupset, by Thom. Starkey, Chaplain to Henry VIII. Ed. J. M. Cowper.	Part II. 12s. (Part I. is No. XXXII. 1878, 8s.)	1871
XIII.	A Supplicacyon of the Beggars, by Simon Fish, 1528-9 A.D., ed. F. J. Furnivall; with A Supplicacyon to our Moste Soueraigne Lorde: A Supplicacyon of the Poore Commons; and The Decaie of England by the Great Multitude of Sheep, ed. by J. M. Cowper, Esq.	6s.	"
XIV.	Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, Esq., F.R.S.	Part III. 10s.	"
XV.	Robert Crowley's Thirty-One Epigrams, Voyce of the Last Trumpet, Way to Wealth , &c. 1550-1 A.D., edited by J. M. Cowper, Esq.	12s.	1872
XVI.	Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe. Ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A., LL.D.	6s.	"
XVII.	The Complaynt of Scotlande, 1549 A.D., with 4 Tracts 1542-48, ed. Dr. Murray.	Part I. 10s.	"
XVIII.	The Complaynt of Scotlande, 1549 A.D., ed. Dr. Murray.	Part II. 8s.	1873
XIX.	Oure Ladyes Myroure, A.D. 1530, ed. Rev. J. H. Blunt, M.A.	24s.	"
XX.	Lonelich's History of the Holy Grail ab. 1450 A.D., ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.	Part I. 8s.	1874
XXI.	Barbour's Bruce, Part II., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A.	4s.	"
XXII.	Henry Brinklow's Complaynt of Rodervyck Mors (ab. 1512); and The Lamentacyon of a Christian against the Citie of London, made by Roderigo Mors, A.D. 1545. Ed. J. M. Cowper.	9s.	"
XXIII.	Early English Pronunciation, by A. J. Ellis, F.R.S.	Part IV. 10s.	"
XXIV.	Lonelich's History of the Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.	Part II. 10s.	1875
XXV.	Guy of Warwick, 15th-century Version, ed. Prof. Zupitza.	Part I. 20s.	"
XXVI.	Guy of Warwick, 15th-century Version, ed. Prof. Zupitza.	Part II. 14s.	1876
XXVII.	Bp. Fisher's English Works (died 1535), ed. by Prof. J. E. R. Mayor.	Part I, the Text. 16s.	"
XXVIII.	Lonelich's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.	Part III. 10s.	1877
XXIX.	Barbour's Bruce, Part III., ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A., LL.D.	21s.	"
XXX.	Lonelich's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.	Part IV. 15s.	1878
XXI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXIV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXVI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXVII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXVIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXIX.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXX.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXIV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXVI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXVII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXVIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XXXIX.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XL.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLIV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLV.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLVI.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLVII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLVIII.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
XLIX.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"
L.	The Alliterative Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Rev. W. W. Skeat, Esq.	6s.	"

Early English Text Society.

The Subscription, which constitutes membership, is £1 1s. a year [and £1 1s. (Large Paper, £2 12s. 6d.) additional for the EXTRA SERIES], due in advance on the 1st of JANUARY, and should be paid either to the Society's Account at the Head Office of the Union Bank, Princess Street, London, E.C., or by Cheque, Postal Order, or Money-Order (made payable at the Chief Office, London) to the Hon. Secretary, W. A. DALZIEL, Esq., 67, Victoria Rd., Finsbury Park, London, N., and crossed 'Union Bank.' (United-States Subscribers must pay for postage 1s. 4d. a year extra for the Original Series, and 1s. a year for the Extra Series.) The Society's Texts are also sold separately at the prices put after them in the Lists.

ORIGINAL SERIES.

The Publications for 1886 are:—

84. Additional Analogs to 'The Wright's Chase Wife,' by W. A. Clouston. 1s.
85. The Three Kings of Cologne. 2 English Texts, and 1 Latin, ed. Dr. C. Horstmann. 17s.
86. Prose Lives of Female Saints, 16th cent., edited from a unique MS. by Dr. C. Horstmann. 12s.

The Publications for 1887 will be chosen from—

88. Early English Verse Lives of Saints. Standard Collection, Laud MS., ed. Dr. C. Horstmann. [At Press.
Supplementary Early English Lives of Saints, ed. Dr. C. Horstmann.
Cursor Mundi, Part VI. Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris. [Part printed.
The Lay Folks' Catechism, by Archbp. Thoresby, ed. Canon Simmons and F. D. Matthew. [Text printed.
Sir David Lyndesay's Works. Part VI. [At Press.
Thomas Robinson's Life and Death of Mary Magdalene, ab. 1620 A.D., ed. O. Sommer. [At Press
Q. Elizabeth's Translations, from Boetius, &c., edited from the unique MS. by Walford D. Selby. [At Press Treatise on the Virtues, ab. 1200 A.D., edited from the unique MS.
Early English Deeds and Documents, from unique MSS., ed. Dr. Lorenz Morsbach.
Merlin, Part IV., containing Preface, Index, and Glossary. Edited by H. B. Wheatley.
Beowulf, a critical Text, &c., ed. Prof. Zupitza, with Dissertations by Prof. Müllenhoff.
Pilgrimage of the Lyf of Manhode, in the Northern Dialect, ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A.
Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. W. Aldis Wright, M.A., Ph.D.
Early English Homilies, 13th century, ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.
Tas Rulo of St. Benet: 5 Texts, Anglo-Saxon, Early English, Caxton, &c., ed. Rev. Dr. R. Morris.

EXTRA SERIES.

The Publications for 1886 and 1887 will be chosen from—

- Charlemagne Romances:—Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part IV. [At Press.
Turrent of Portyngale, from the unique MS. in the Chetham Library, Manchester, ed. E. Adam, Ph.D.
Bp Fisher's English Works, Pt. II, with Life and Letters, ed. Rev. Ronald Bayne, B.A. [At Press.
A Dialogue against the Fever Pestilence, 1575. By W. Bullein. Ed. A. H. & Mark Bullen. [At Press.
Sir Bevis of Hampton, ed. Dr. E. Kölbner. Part II.
Another Alliterative Romance of Alexander, ed. Rev. Prof. Skeat, LL.D., and J. H. Hesselis, M.A. [At Press Hoccleve's Minor Poems, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. [At Press.
Hoccleve's Complaint, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D.

Preparing:—

- Barbour's Bruce, ed. Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat. Part IV.
Lonefish's Holy Grail, ed. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Ph.D. Part V.
The Destruction of Jerusalem, Text A, edited from the MSS. by Dr. Kopka.

The Publications for the years 1879 to 1885 (one guinea each year):—

- |   |      |      |
|---|------|------|
| XXXIII. Gesta Romanorum (enlighted ab. 1440), ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A.                         | 15s. | 1879 |
| XXXIV. The Charlemagne Romances:—1. Sir Ferumbras, from Ashm. MS. 33, ed. S. J. Hertridge.      | 15s. | ..   |
| XXXV. Charlemagne Romances:—2. The Siege of Melayne, Sir Otuell, &c., ed. S. J. Hertridge.      | 12s. | 1880 |
| XXXVI. Charlemagne Romances:—3. Lyf of Charles the Grete, Pt. I., ed. S. J. Hertridge.          | 16s. | ..   |
| XXXVII. Charlemagne Romances:—4. Lyf of Charles the Grete, Pt. II., ed. S. J. Hertridge.        | 15s. | 1881 |
| XXXVIII. Charlemagne Romances:—5. The Sowdone of Babylone, ed. Dr. Hautknecht.                  | 15s. | ..   |
| XXXIX. Charlemagne Romances:—6. Rauf Colyair, Boland, Otuel, &c., ed. S. J. Hertridge, B.A.     | 15s. | 1882 |
| XL. Charlemagne Romances:—7. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part I.      | 15s. | ..   |
| XLI. Charlemagne Romances:—8. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part II.    | 15s. | 1883 |
| XLII. Guy of Warwick: 2 texts (Auchinleck MS. and Caius MS.), ed. Prof. Zupitza. Part I.        | 15s. | ..   |
| XLIII. Charlemagne Romances:—9. Huon of Burdeux, by Lord Berners, ed. S. L. Lee, B.A. Part III. | 15s. | 1884 |
| XLIV. Charlemagne Romances:—10. The Four Sons of Aymon, ed. Miss Octavia Richardson. Part I.    | 15s. | ..   |
| XLV. Charlemagne Romances:—11. The Four Sons of Aymon, ed. Miss O. Richardson. Part II.         | 20s. | 1885 |
| XLVI. Sir Bevis of Hampton, from the Auchinleck and other MSS., ed. Dr. E. Kölbner. Part I.     | 10s. | ..   |

...

3 2044 021 209 416

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.
A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.
Please return promptly.

~~DEC 20 '52 H~~

~~DEC 20 '52 H~~

~~AUG 11 '58 H~~

WIDENER
SEP 10 1994
JUL 15 1994
BOOKS
CANCELLED

371621

MAY '73 H

BOOKS
OCT 25 1979
OCT 3 1978

6567734

